From then on it was Ratan Tata who spearheaded the promotional drive. The group chipped in with $ 3.5 million through their European associates and other sources, making up the biggest chunk of the $ 10 million that Elxsi initially raised. Says B. Kumar, who is vice-president (engineering): "The Tatas were the first big investors. In fact, once they had invested the local venture capitalists also started flocking in. That's how that crowd always works."

As one of the major financial supporters, Ratan Tata was given a position on Elxsi's governing board, and over the last five years he has wielded a great deal of influence in terms of the company's product positioning and strategy. He attends each quarterly meeting, and as Kumar puts it, "is very much a respected voice and plays a close role."

Today, Elxsi has in its System 6400 a product that is an acknowledged success, with a unique architecture and modular design. Amdahl himself terms it "practical as well as elegant", and it allows Elxsi to compete with Digital and IBM computers in a wide range of markets. But Elxsi was strapped for cash, Trilogy had it, and the corporate marriage a few weeks ago has been among the attention-grabbing mergers in an industry and a period that has seen countless corporate link-ups in California's glamorous Bay area. For although Elxsi lost $ 7 million last year, it broke even in the second half of the year, and now it gets access to Trilogy's semiconductor technology and can also dig deep into Trilogy's pockets. Says Thomas: "Their $ 80 million reserves will be spent just on Elxsi—on marketing and manufacturing our machine."

Although the details of the merger between Elxsi and Trilogy are yet to be worked out and the governmental formalities not yet completed, the merger promises a great deal: Trilogy's wafer-scale integration technology will be used to further enhance the capability of the Elxsi machine. This, as computer buffs would guess, is where Amdahl's famed skills will come into play. For after the problems with Trilogy's own ambitious venture, Amdahl once again has a computer to work on which competes with IBM in at least some portions of the market. "What Gene is very good at," acknowledges Thomas, "is building an architecturally very high performance machine, and I think he is looking forward to being involved with a new architecture."

There is the obvious question: will the dilution of the Tata shareholding consequent to the merger with Trilogy and the presence of Amdahl's towering personality serve to reduce the Indian presence in the new company? "No," says Amdahl, "I don't see why the Indian connection should fade. There are people with extremely fine qualifications in India and I think we would like to acquire quality input from wherever it is good."

If anything, the Indian connection should strengthen. For one thing, Amdahl and Ratan Tata are said to "get along famously". For another, Elxsi is getting ready to move its Asian software operations into India from Singapore. An independent company, Tata-Elxsi, had been spun off in 1982 to provide a regional marketing and manufacturing base for Elxsi computers in Singapore, with Ratan Tata as the company's chairman. And although Elxsi machines began selling barely a year ago, Tata-Elxsi has already installed three systems each in Australia and Singapore. Elxsi has already bagged orders from the Tata Consultancy Services (TCS) and the Oil and Natural Gas Commission in India.

Now that TCS is acquiring an Elxsi computer, Thomas is interested in setting up a joint venture for software development with TCS, while Indian engineers at NELCO, another Tata company, are working on the electro-magnetical design for a lower cost system that Elxsi wishes to develop. Currently, an Elxsi machine would begin at around $ 500,000. If NELCO engineers can help develop a computer that sells for $ 350,000, it would certainly open up many new and very lucrative markets in Asia and Australia. So a path-breaking venture could flower in several new ways.

Thomas is clear about the gains that accrue to India in a venture of this sort: "With Elxsi, the Tatas saw a unique opportunity to participate in a small company and get full access to its technology in the real sense of the term, and to use its financial and administrative voice in Elxsi to transfer know-how to India." Adds Kumar: "India can get technology up front by investing capital in the development of new companies, because with that kind of leverage you can do much more than by going to an established company and trying to get them to set something up."

That may not always be the best course of action. As Professor William A. Stoever, a visiting fellow at Princeton University, says: "I would be leery of such an approach for a country in India's situation because it is a high-risk strategy." But at the moment, it certainly looks as if the Tata experiment in getting into Silicon Valley on the ground floor is about to pay dividends.

—ROHINI NILEKANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you think these two are mismatched...

Stop polluted power from playing havoc with your NC or CNC machines and computers. And with your productivity, performance and profits. Order a KEC power conditioner immediately.

State-of-the-art NCs, CNCs or computer systems need state-of-the-art clean power to function. And perform in top form.

Voltage and frequency fluctuations, brownouts and blackouts..... they occur so often and so regularly in every part of the country, we have begun to take them for granted and have learnt to live with them. Unfortunately, highly sensitive machines like NCs and CNCs cannot survive the onslaughts of polluted power.

The enemy within

All industry is going the way of NCs and CNCs to increase productivity, flexibility and efficiency. However, polluted power sabotages all these objectives.

How?

Polluted power leads to a disastrous chain reaction. Voltage fluctuations damage the solid state devices in the NCs and CNCs while high frequency noise signals in the power system can be misread by the microprocessors and cause malfunctions.

If an NC or CNC is programmed to do, let's say 55 operations on a job, and a power fluctuation or breakdown occurs at the 37th, in many cases the machine has to go back to square one and repeat every operation till the 37th operation. If you compute what your factory is losing merely in terms of down time in a year, the figures will be staggering. The figures become even more alarming when expensive materials are being handled and rejection costs go up substantially.

The worst, of course, is that polluted power not only undermines the performance of these expensive

OUR PRODUCT RANGE ■ AC Machines–Motors upto 3000 kW (4000 HP); Motorised Gear Units–0.25 kW to 22 kW; Generators upto 15 ■ Machine Tool Drive Systems ■ Defence Equipment ■ Transformers upto 220 kV class, 50 MVA, Power Frequency HV Testing Systems Tube Welders, Mechanical Comparators, Electronic Gauges, Fixturing Systems.

BRANCH/REGIONAL OFFICES ● BANGALORE: 19/1, III Cross, C.S.I. Compound, Pin-560 027, Tel: 223964, 223961 ● BOMBAY: 302, F ● CALCUTTA: Azimaganj House, 7 Camac Street, Pin-700 017, Tel: 448808, 434056 ● MADRAS: 751, Mount Road, Pin-600 002, Tel: 814 Commercial Centre, Near Dinesh Hall, Ashram Road, Pin-380 009, Tel: 406810 ● BHOPAL: Gangwani Complex, 112, Bank Street, Berasia Pin-641 002, Tel: 35712 ● ERNAKULAM: 35/2263A, Tharakan Building, M.G. Road, Ravipuram, Cochin, Pin-682 016, Tel: 30431 ● JAIPUR Institute Road, Deccan Gymkhana, Pin-411 004, Tel: 54606 ● RANCHI: 304/C, Ashok Nagar, P.O. Argora, Pin-834 002, Tel: 26607 ● RAIPUR Seethammadhara North Extension, Pin-530 013, Tel: 63944

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Imagine your state-of-the-art NC and CNC machines driven by an unreliable and polluted power system.

...chines, it systematically reduces their life.

What will a KEC rotary power conditioner do?

First of all, however polluted your power supply, a KEC power conditioner will clean it up completely. It will hold frequency and voltage constant at the desired value. Now with a pollution-free power supply, down-time is brought down dramatically. Remember, each NC or CNC can have a separate power conditioner or a bank of NCs and CNCs could share one single system. So you see, a power conditioner pays for itself in a short time. And increases the longevity of your NCs and CNCs while maintaining peak performance levels.

Why don't you write to us? Or better still, call us. Our engineers will be over within days and in consultation with you will decide upon the specific power conditioner or cluster of power conditioners you need.

Once you've got a KEC power conditioner, everything will be hunky-dory with your NC and CNC machines and you'll wonder how you ever managed without it.

Kirloskar

Converting energy to serve the millions

KIRLOSKAR ELECTRIC CO. LTD
P.B. 5555, Malleswaram West, Bangalore 560 055

Pratibha-KEC-85-23. A.

...C Motors and Generators upto 750 kW (1000 HP) ■ Machine based Systems ■ No-Break Sets upto 400 kVA; Ward Leonard Sets upto 500 kW ...ating Generators and Equipment ■ Power sources and Electronic Control Systems for Industrial Drives—RF Induction Heaters, Induction

...tion Chambers, 3rd Floor, Shivsagar Estate, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Pin-400 018, Tel: 4926186, 4926165, 4926112, 4926105 ...W DELHI: 3rd Floor, Kundan House, 16, Nehru Place, Pin-110 019 Tel: 6419357, 6411576 • AHMEDABAD: 7-12, 1st Floor, Vishal ...-492 001, Tel: 76704 • BHUBANESWAR: 38, Satyanagar, Pin-751 007, Tel: 54056 • COIMBATORE: 31, Kannuswamy Road, R.S. Puram, ...shath Marg, New Colony, Pin-302 001, Tel: 65003 • KANPUR: B-10, Sarvodaya Nagar, Pin-208 005, Tel: 242544 • PUNE: 891 Bhandarkar ...Colony, Pin-492 001 • SECUNDERABAD: 338 Rashtrapathi Road, Pin-500 003, Tel: 820274 • VISAKHAPATNAM: MIG-8,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"People like me have sweated to make this company what it is. I give the company 80 per cent of its business, yet I am not allowed to hold a single share."

ASHOK B. CHOUDHURY
chief agent

"Ashok Choudhury has been paid handsome commissions and been honoured for his work. Before he joined us, he was a lowly official. Today, he makes lakhs."

SUNIL K. ROY
managing director

PEERLESS

Power Tussle

FATE might achieve what the country's financial policemen failed to do. The Reserve Bank of India (RBI), the West Bengal Government and the General Insurance Corporation (GIC), have tried in vain to bring Peerless General Finance and Investment Company to a grinding halt, by charging that the company has been breaking the country's laws and cheating its depositors (INDIA TODAY, April 30, 1983). But the Peerless juggernaut kept rolling. With its last managing director, the canny Bhudeb Kanti Roy at the helm, the company succeeded in side-stepping every pitfall.

But Roy died two months ago, and in his wake the company that seemed unstoppable is now riven by a bitter struggle for the succession that could succeed in doing what the RBI, the state Government and the GIC have failed to do. Ranged against each other are Sunil K. Roy, brother of the late managing director, and Ashok B. Choudhury, chief agent who leads thousands of the company's rebellious field officers, owner of the Ityadi group of publications and an aspirant to the Peerless boardroom. Just as much as Choudhury would like to get in through the door, Roy is determined to keep him out. For at stake is the control of a company that has assets of about Rs 600 crore.

Choudhury stakes his claim in no uncertain terms: "When I joined this company in 1969, the face value of its total business was only about Rs 7 crore. Today, it has grown to Rs 3,000 crore. People like me have sweated to make this company what it is. I give the company 80 per cent of its business, yet I am not allowed to hold a single share."

Sunil Roy, now acting managing director, clearly feels that Choudhury and others like him are overstepping themselves. Roy and other members of his family control most of the company's shares, and the family obviously intends to retain complete control. So without commenting directly on Choudhury's ambitions, Roy tries to put him in his place: "The company has been more than fair to him. He has been paid handsome commissions and been honoured for his work. Before he joined us, he was a lowly official. Today, he makes lakhs."

On the face of it, nothing can force Roy to give Choudhury a place on the board against his will. But Choudhury controls the agents who bring in the little golden eggs for Peerless.

Choudhury has begun to turn on the heat, first by demanding that the company be made a public limited entity with its shares quoted on the stock-market, and then by asking the Government to nominate two directors on the Peerless board—a move that can only enrage Roy since the Government has for some years been trying to find a chink in the Peerless armour. Choudhury has also sought to gain wider support for his own claims to office by demanding that Peerless raise the rate of interest on its deposits, and that it put an end to the controversial practice of confiscating deposits when a depositor defaults in the initial year of a deposit scheme.

Taking the battle further into the Roy camp, Choudhury assumed the leadership of the Peerless Field Officers Association last month and turned it into an agitational organisation. The police were called in to deal with the agitators, Roy's attitude hardened, and Choudhury fumed: "For the first time in the history of the organisation, the police were called in to deal with field officers and I too was taken to court, where the management described me as a goonda."

Finally, at a public meeting last month, Choudhury issued the threat of starting a new company and walking off with the Peerless agents. Roy offered to start negotiations on Choudhury's demands, an offer which received an instant response when Choudhury said he was postponing the agitation.

If that signals a truce, the key question remains whether Choudhury will eventually get his coveted place on the Peerless board. The indications are that Roy may stop short of offering this, knowing as he does that the field agents will be reluctant about giving up their fat commissions (going up to 82 per cent of the initial deposits of a subscriber) in order to join an unproven venture floated by Choudhury. But Choudhury himself will have his hands strengthened by even partial concessions wrested from Roy. So while the eventual outcome remains a question mark, the only lesson that can be drawn at this stage is contained in the old adage about people in glasshouses not throwing stones.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's a Video Camera!
It's a Video Recorder!
It's a Monitor!

It's JVC's VideoMovie

VHS C

From the inventors of the VHS system here's yet another epoch-making technological break-through... VHS VideoMovie.

The VideoMovie is a Video Camera, Video Recorder and a Monitor, all in one compact single unit. And it weighs only 1.9 kgs.

It is the only compact video camera which is not only capable of live recording but also of instant playback through the camera viewfinder/monitor.

Moreover you can connect your VideoMovie directly to a T.V. and view your recording without using your VCR.

All that you do is just drop in a compact cassette, shoot like you would with a home movie camera and see the results in the electronic Viewfinder/Monitor or on your T.V.

All together now!

GR-C1

Another innovation in the JVC tradition

JVC

ONIDA

JVC Authorised Service Centres in India

NEW DELHI MONICA ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 630740, 638293, 631351
BOMBAY MIRC ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 6049358, 6322218
CALCUTTA MONICA ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 261841
MADRAS MIRC ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD.
COCHIN BIONIX TEL. 39422, 31595

JVC Authorised Distributors in the Middle East

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES OASIS ENTERPRISES DUBAI TEL. 435323/24, 422078/88
SAUDI ARABIA SAID EL-AJOU TRADING CORP. TEL. JEDDAH. 6606456 RIYADH. 4039853, AL-KHOBAR. 8641347, MAKKAH. 5742214
SULTANATE OF OMAN JUSBANI STORES, MUTTRAH. TEL. 772407, 734587, SALALAH. 460251
KUWAIT AL-ALAMIAH ELECTRONICS. TEL. 414140, 414141, 414142, SALIMIYAH. 615299
QATAR NASIB BIN ABDULLAH & MOHD. SIDDIQ TRADING CO. DOHA. TEL. 321486, 321487
BAHRAIN GAJRIA ELECTRONICS W.L.L. TEL. 253453, 258396

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why veil your colours when you can be temptingly different

Colours are meant to show whether they are walls or furniture or sanitaryware. You don't buy furniture that fades into your walls. So why do it in your bathroom ?

By blending the colour of your sanitaryware with the colour of your bathroom walls ... you are losing out on their beauty.

Now you have the option of using sanitaryware that contrasts beautifully with your walls. Cera—sanitaryware that comes in 30 marvellous shades, to give your bathroom endless mindblowing combinations.

CERA
VITREOUS

Madhusudan Ceramics
'Ankur Building'
Near Dinbai Tower
Mirzapur Road
Ahmedabad 380 001

Cera-sanitaryware to colour your fancies.

CERA

Props. : Madhusudan Vegetable Products Company Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Shilpi 2 CERA 26/84

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Now who'd want to hurl a stone at such a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, they might.

Some of your neighbours for instance. Who may have seen your new ONIDA. And envied its classy, futuristic looks, the most astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DISTINCTIVELY HYATT.

The Regency Club at Hyatt Regency Delhi is our way of showing the business traveller how very special he is.

This distinguished 'hotel within a hotel' concept spans the entire 6th floor. Where the elevator stops only when you use your personal club key!

As a Regency Club guest you are entitled to services that exceed even the Hyatt hallmark of excellence. A warm welcome and express check-in just for you. 60 deluxe rooms and 5 elegant suites to choose from. A special escort up to your private floor. Personalised stationery, the finest toiletries, fruit and flowers that are always fresh. Personal attention from the Club's gracious concierge. Complimentary breakfast, cocktails with hors d' oeuvres everyday. Even a private lounge, conference room — and so much more.

Everytime you stay at the Regency Club you'll discover another reason why Hyatt is the international business traveller's hotel — worldwide.

You'll agree a touch of distinction does make real business sense. Don't you WISH YOU WERE HERE℠

HYATT REGENCY® DELHI

INDIA

Reservations : Call the hotel 609911, Telex: 031-4579, 031-61512 HYT IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNION CARBIDE

Job Problems

IT WAS one eventuality that should have caught nobody unawares. The day after the gas leak from the Union Carbide factory in Bhopal, then chief minister Arjun Singh had declared that there was no question of the factory opening again. On December 14, the state Government refused to renew its licence. On April 11, the Carbide management applied for permission to close the factory and gave three months' notice. And yet when the closure became a reality last fortnight, the knotty problem of finding jobs for the factory's 628 workers was no nearer a solution.

Apart from a handful of skilled operators who have taken up jobs in C.J. Gelatine, the rest of the workers are jobless. In India, that is not often a fate deserving of special sympathy. But for the Carbide workers, contented inhabitants of a high-wage island, the gas leak and its aftermath has been a continuing trauma. Hatim Zariwalla, president of the Union Carbide Workmen's Union, said with a rueful smile: "Right now all we have to look forward to is the day (August 22) when our bonus will be paid." Adds Kishan Prasad, secretary of the union: "Those 45 minutes (when the gas leaked) have changed our lives totally. We have lost our mental peace."

The workers think they are caught between a heartless management and an indifferent government. The Carbide management has offered them compensation as per the letter of the law (15 days' salary for every year of service) but they have all refused to accept it. Prasad, who pointed out that the workers had been inhaling for the last five years the deadly methyl iso-cyanate which killed thousands, explained: "We think the company is not doing its moral duty."

Their complaints against the Government are more varied. To start with, they contest the validity of Section 25 (0) of the Industrial Disputes Act under which the Government has allowed Carbide to close the unit. They have even filed a writ in the high court at Jabalpur on this but they realise that the closure of the unit is a fait accompli; no government would, for the sake of their jobs, earn the people's wrath by reopening the factory. They are more upset with the Government for not doing enough to get them jobs. Arjun Singh, they say, did nothing in the three months that he was in power other than get them registered in the employment exchange.

Carbide effigies: knotty problem

Even current Chief Minister Motilal Vora took up the problem seriously only after the closure. Now a bureau has been formed, comprising four secretaries to the state Government, which is entrusted with finding jobs for the workers. The setting up of the bureau has certainly expedited matters. By last fortnight, the bureau had offered jobs to over 200 workers, according to Hrishikesh Mishra, special secretary (labour).

The problem is the workers think the jobs are not good enough. Carbide used to pay them exceptionally well. After overtime some sweepers were known to gross over Rs 2,000. In comparison, the Madhya Pradesh Housing Board had offered to take 22 people as khalasis and peons on a basic pay starting at Rs 450. In Carbide they were designated helpers and paid Rs 1,200.

Mishra felt, with some justification, that the workers had yet to reconcile themselves to the realities of the situation. The workers, he said, were more busy trying to prevent the Government from agreeing to the closure. All the same, he maintained, every single one of the 612 workers who had registered with the Government had been offered at least one job each. But the workers were too fussy: the J.K. Raymond cement factory, for instance, offered jobs in the range of Rs 1,400-1,600 for 32 people but the workers refused to accept them because it meant going to Bilaspur. "I can only take the horse to the water, I can't force it to drink it," said Mishra.

"The Carbide workers should realise that there will be some problems in their invading any other organisation," he added. In the Madhya Pradesh Electricity Board, which had offered jobs to 31 people, for instance, the management was reluctant to take them because there was an agitation brewing among daily workers against taking outsiders for vacancies which they would otherwise have filled.

On its part, the Carbide management is being typically hard-headed. Sheo Mitra, the personnel manager at the plant, told INDIA TODAY: "We could not have offered compensation beyond the law. In any case, we were not approached for a negotiated settlement by the workers on this issue." Asked if Carbide did not feel that it was morally bound to go beyond the letter of law, Mitra pointed out that Carbide had suggested several alternatives for providing jobs, like offering to run the closed battery unit of the J.K. group, but the state Government, for reasons unknown, had not shown any keenness to associate itself with Carbide.

At fortnight's end, there was little to relieve the workers' gloom. Government officials said that compensation was not a closed issue but there were no positive signals from the Carbide management. Representatives of the employees met with the management in Bombay on July 25 but the demand for better compensation fell on barren grounds because of "diverse pressures on resources", said management sources. Union office bearers said they now hope "to get justice from New Delhi". The workers cannot afford to lose hope; what they do realise, however, is that their days of relative affluence in Carbide are over for good.

—AJAY KUMAR in Bhopal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMPARE OUR QUALITY
COMPARE OUR PRICE

WHY PAY MORE

WHEN YOU CAN BUY A GENUINE HERO BIKE FOR BETTER PERFORMANCE AT ECONOMICAL PRICE!

HERO

THE ONLY ONE IN ASIA & EUROPE PRODUCING OVER 20,00,000

(TWO MILLION)

BICYCLES IN A SINGLE YEAR

Whichever way you look at it, Hero has an edge over any other bicycle in the Indian market. In quality, in economy, in durability, in range.

The sturdy frame and fork; the bright handle bar, durable chainwheel, crank & rims; the noiseless freewheel for effortless pedalling and the streamlined look. You just can't get better value for your money.

Thirty years of expertise has gone to prove that India's largest selling bicycle is also India's best bicycle. Ask any of the happy owners who rides it.

HERO

With Saddle and Chain cover as Original Equipment

HERO CYCLES PRIVATE LIMITED
LUDHIANA

Sole Selling Agents : MUNJAL SALES CORPORATION, LUDHIANA

HC-NP-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Ruling on Aid

WIDOWS, flood victims and other distressed citizenry now have a rival in Gujarat: the Gujarat Government. For, unthinkable as it sounds, the state Government has taken Rs 10 crore from the Chief Minister's Relief Fund. The reason is the same that flood victims would use to qualify for disbursements: a desperate need for money.

That unlikely development typifies the economic havoc that has been wrought in the country's once most ambitiously aspiring state by five months of seemingly endless caste and communal strife. The state Government has been reduced to near penury by large losses of tax revenue following from an economic standstill: sales tax losses alone total Rs 75 crore. The state road transport corporation has had more than 120 of its buses burnt and 2,000 damaged. In Ahmedabad alone, the withdrawal of buses from many routes has brought the daily income down from Rs 4 lakh to Rs 25,000. The Ahmedabad Municipal Corporation has lost Rs 4 crore by way of octroi revenue because truckers refused to bring their vehicles into the strife-torn city and off-loaded outside the city limits, and did not have money recently to pay its employees' salaries.

That is only the beginning of the toll. Losses to trade and industry have piled up to a staggering Rs 2,200 crore, and by mid-July as many as 1,579 shops and industrial units had been burnt or destroyed. And of the 12,000 powerlooms in Ahmedabad and Dholka, only 20 per cent have been working, while areas with large concentrations of powerlooms—like Rakhial, Bapunagar and Saraspur—have undergone curfew every second day.

The stories of individual losses are heart-rending. Chhotubhai Patel, an electronics goods dealer who set up shop a second time after his establishment was burnt by rampaging mobs in mid-March, says: "My sales have plummeted from Rs 75,000 a day to Rs 5,000.

Closed shops in Ahmedabad: heavy losses

"My sales have plummeted from Rs 75,000 a day to Rs 5,000. People are too scared to stir out."

CHHOTUBHAI PATEL
electronics goods dealer

"We used to sell goods worth Rs 1,200 daily. Now we are lucky if we do Rs 200."

HASMUKH KAMDAR
manager, handicrafts and leather goods shop

People are too scared to stir out." Adds Hasmukh Kamdar, manager of Charmshilp and Polyvastra Kendra which sells handicrafts and leather goods on Ahmedabad's Relief Road: "We used to sell goods worth about Rs 1,200 daily. Now we are lucky if we do Rs 200." Relief Road in fact underwent curfew for 59 days between March and June.

Madan Pandurang Lokhande, a tailor in Bapunagar, has found that his work orders have been reduced by 90 per cent, while Madhubhai Panchal, a lathe operator in Khodiarnagar on the eastern periphery of Ahmedabad, has not been able to buy raw material because payments for work already done are held up. And M.I. Mohammed Umar of Bapunagar, who took a loan to buy an autorickshaw after the textile mill in which he worked closed down in 1984, now finds that tragedy has struck him again: in May his house was burnt down, and since more than half the city is under intermittent curfew his earnings have dropped steeply: there simply aren't enough people on the roads wanting to take autorickshaws.

But even these stories of individual hardship pale in comparison with the crisis caused by the stoppage of work by banks in the state. The cheque clearing houses kept closing down for long intervals, and by the end of June the outstanding cheques that had piled up totalled a staggering Rs 1,800 crore. Worse, two weeks before that the banks began refusing to accept cheques altogether as they did not want to take the responsibility of looking after a mounting pile of cheques waiting for clearance.

Quite apart from the loss of revenue and income, there has been enormous and unprecedented damage to economic assets like houses, shops, industrial units and public buses. The state Government estimates that these losses alone amount to Rs 1,227 crore.

And the state economy is likely to get leaner. For as noted economist D.T. Lakdawala, director of the Sardar Patel Institute of Social and Economic Research, said: "The industry will recover from its losses in two or three years. But if the agitation leaves a legacy of caste and class war behind, investors will stop flocking to the state." For industrially-aspiring Gujarat, that is a fate which could be worse than having to live with the roster system.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Our speed of response gives you the edge.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Speed of response that is almost a conditioned reflex. To help translate strategic decisions into a competitive advantage.

That's what it takes to give you the edge.
And HongkongBank has it.
Isn't it time we talked?

HongkongBank

The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation

Bombay Calcutta New Delhi
Madras Visakhapatnam
Merchant Banking Division Bombay
The British Bank of the Middle East Bombay

Your financial edge,
the world over.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NIPPON DENRO ISPAT LIMITED

A Rs. 14.5 crore project implemented in just 11 months

That's proven performance

And that's not all.....

- Technical know how and plant from world renowned NIPPON DENRO MANUFACTURING CO. LTD., JAPAN.
- Trial runs commenced — commercial production in August, 1985.
- High Technology Plant with Continuous Computerised Controls and fast line speed.
- Thin gauge Galvanized Plain and Corrugated Sheets — 100% import substitute.
- Assured Market.
- 80CC and Wealth Tax benefits for Investors
- Listing in Stock Exchanges at Calcutta, Bombay and Delhi.

August 19, 1984 — the foundation stone of India's first project to manufacture Galvanized Steel Sheet of thin gauge, was laid by Union Minister for Steel and Mines at Kalmeshwar, Nagpur. And in July, 1985, the sprawling Rs.14.5 crore project started trial runs. In a short span of just eleven months, NIPPON DENRO ISPAT LIMITED the dynamic new company, promoted by Shri M.L. Mittal and his associates, implemented this project.

The Plant will manufacture 35,000 tonnes per annum of Galvanized Steel Sheets of thinner gauge for the first time in India with the latest technology from the renowned NIPPON DENRO of Japan. Equipped with fully computerised controls and monitoring systems, the plant will manufacture Plain and Corrugated Galvanized Steel Sheets/Coils. Commercial production is slated in August, 1985 and the products, presently being imported, will have a ready market.

Soon, Nippon Denro Ispat Limited will offer to the public 19,50,000 Equity Shares of Rs.10 each for cash at par. An opportunity for you to share the rewards of this dynamic company poised for a tremendous growth.

NIPPON DENRO ISPAT LIMITED

Regd. Office : 33A Jawaharlal Nehru Road, Calcutta 700 071.

Issue Opens on 12th August, 1985

Managers to the Issue

STATE BANK OF INDIA
Merchant Banking Division

Standard Chartered
Standard Chartered Bank
Merchant Banking Division

Advisors to the Issue

J. M. FINANCIAL & INVESTMENT CONSULTANCY SERVICES PVT. LTD.
Merchant Banking Division

Dynamism .... from day one

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NALCO

In the Red

WHEN large industrial projects get constructed, chimneys are supposed to go up and—if you are lucky—project costs come down. In the case of the National Aluminium Company (NALCO), quite the reverse has turned out to be true: chimneys come down and project costs go up. And how!

In Orissa's Angul area, 160 km from Bhubaneswar, Engineers India and Flakt India had been supervising and building a chimney for NALCO as part of a massive pollution control unit attached to the aluminium smelter complex. But one windy night last month the massive 10-storey concrete chimney came crashing down.

Meanwhile, if any reverberations were felt in Delhi, they concerned the soaring cost of the project, from the initial figure of Rs 1,242 crore to nearly Rs2,500 crore. Slightly over half this increase is because of cost escalations. The scandalous part of the story is that a good chunk of the cost increase follows from design changes, project modifications and plain slipshod work. For instance, the aluminium smelter pot shells had defects in their original design, and the contractors had to break several of the shells, each weighing 27 tonnes, after the design defects were spotted. To add to the headaches, one of the companies fabricating the pot shells went bankrupt (for reasons unconnected with NALCO). NALCO is now looking for new shell fabricators.

Judging from its experience with the collapsed chimney, NALCO might well want to look for new consultants as well, because—as NALCO has now discovered—the chimney's design was "too limiting", it did not have any allowance for extra stress, and the few vents near its base proved too weak to take the load of the entire structure. Investigations are still under way as to how much loss was incurred, and what exactly happened, but NALCO engineers have little doubt that the fault lies with Flakt India and Engineers India. But no penal action has been contemplated so far.

There are other problems too. The 720 mw power unit attached to the project, and being handled by Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd (BHEL), has had to be scaled down to 600 mw, its cost has almost doubled, and the power plant itself has had to be modified to take care of load fluctuations and the possibility of sudden shutdowns of the smelter—factors that should have been taken into account at the start.

The chimney that fell while costs soared

The end result is that NALCO is almost certain to end up as a loss-incurring unit, when it is commissioned—well behind schedule. Even if the company achieves full capacity utilisation of 2.18 lakh tonnes, the capital cost alone of the company's aluminium will be over Rs 10,000 per tonne, against the current selling price of Rs 18,405. And since half the alumina that NALCO produces is supposed to be exported (to pay for the foreign exchange loans of Rs 1,200 crore), it is now almost certain that the exports too will have to be at a loss.

"A good part of the cost increase is because of modifications and changes in the scope of the project."

K.V.B. PANTULU
NALCO managing director

While the Planning Commission now chews over the prospect of having to sink more money into the project to make good on the investments already made, NALCO officials in Orissa offer a variety of excuses for what has happened, and liberally distribute the blame on all the other companies associated with the project. Thus, S.D. Choudharia, a smelter expert who joined NALCO after a 10-year stint in aluminium plant construction in West Asia, said Engineers India had made some major mistakes while doing the detailed designs. Also, the detailed engineering work showed that the original cost estimates, made on a rough basis by Engineers India and the French firm Aluminium Pechiney, had been excessively conservative. And NALCO Managing Director K.V.B. Pantulu said: "A good part of the cost increase is because of modifications and changes in the scope of the project." Finally, Deputy General Manager S.S. Agarwal said in relation to the chimney collapse: "If our consultants and contractors are going to let us down like this, there is very little that we can do."

The smelter unit was originally expected to cost Rs 410 crore, a figure that has now been hiked to Rs 720 crore. With barely half the work on the smelter completed, further cost increases are certain. Meanwhile, the alumina unit at Dhamanjodi was initially slated to cost Rs 336.6 crore. The latest cost estimate is Rs 675.8 crore—an incredible escalation of more than 100 per cent. Finally, the power plant cost has also nearly doubled to Rs 763.3 crore despite a scaling down in size from 720 mw to 600 mw. The irony of this is that BHEL had bagged the contract in the first place because it quoted the lowest price in response to a global tender.

The choice before the Planning Commission now is not a very happy one. NALCO, promoted five years ago as an export-oriented project that would be the largest aluminium producer in the country, is now almost certain to end up in the red, like its sister unit in the public sector, Bharat Aluminium. Yet, the fresh capital requirements will have to be provided for the project. Either way, the money is more than likely to go up in smoke through a reconstructed chimney spout.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE in Bhubaneswar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXCHANGE RACKET

The Money Changers

THE BUSY Ansari Road near the Agripada municipal market in Bombay, with its rows of dingy business premises, gives the unsuspecting passer-by little indication that it is a key address for several large and medium-sized companies in the country. And certainly, no one would have guessed that this unprepossessing area was the nerve-centre of a major foreign exchange racket involving illegal transactions that government tax sleuths estimate at a staggering Rs 1,200 crore.

Over a dozen officials from the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence (DRI) finally unearthed the scandal last month following a raid on some business premises on Ansari Road. In a carefully prepared operation that involved sealing possible escape routes and mapping the layouts of the buildings involved before effecting the crackdown, the sleuths arrested a handful of operators and seized coded documents. These are likely to hold up for public view the illegal transactions of over 50 companies.

Officials in Delhi are chary of revealing the identity of the companies until investigations are completed, but those involved include six or seven shipping companies, three prominent producers of consumer electronics goods, some important diamond merchants, one jute company, a couple of engineering goods manufacturers and export houses, some non-resident Indians and local agents of multinational corporations, including representatives of companies dealing in aviation and defence equipment.

If and when the full facts finally surface, many reputations are certain to tarnish badly. And early reports indicate this quite clearly. For instance, the arrest of Akbar alias Shankar Bhai led to the seizure of documents showing that the company concerned had regular foreign exchange dealings, pointing to an annual turnover of Rs 34.60 crore. Another arrest, of one Jamaluddin, led to confession of an annual turnover of Rs 70 crore. And in a third case, involving Razak Haji Mohammed Buya, one transaction alone involved Rs 6 crore.

Altogether, 13 people were arrested, of whom five were subsequently detained under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Act (COFEPOSA). Ten of them, according to the DRI charge-sheet, were generating surplus foreign exchange by under-invoicing exports and over-invoicing imports.

This breakthrough, the biggest ever into the foreign exchange racketeering network, also yielded valuable information on the unique modus operandi employed to funnel foreign exchange into and out of the country. Documentary evidence revealed that the business involved using no fewer than 10,000 codes comprising names of birds, animals and even buildings in Bombay, Singapore, London and New York. A small piece of paper discovered in a pocket notebook contained details of deals worth over Rs 15 crore.

One operator confessed that after receiving cash in rupees in Bombay, he would allot a specific code and serial number to his client. These details would then be conveyed to the foreign exchange supplier abroad, who would, in turn, hand over the foreign exchange. Another option was to hand over a business letter with a handwritten code number marked in a corner of the letter-head. Investigation indicated that the premium charged for converting rupees into foreign exchange abroad varied from 10 to 15 per cent, sometimes more. Some companies, for example, had bought US dollars at Rs 16.50 per dollar, against the official rate of barely Rs 12. Most of the money was then remitted to Singapore, Hong Kong and London.

Officials have also discovered that much of the foreign exchange racketeering was conducted using remittances from Indians in the Gulf to relatives back home. The companies involved would buy foreign exchange from Indian workers in the Gulf, and provide rupees to their relatives in India. Indeed, the last few months have seen a downtrend in foreign exchange remittances through normal banking channels. The Finance Ministry is convinced that this is partly because of the flourishing racket in foreign exchange. But the most interesting aspect is the discovery that the principal clients of the racketeers are leading companies with offices abroad.

Following these disclosures, the Finance Ministry has stepped up its campaign against illegal movement of foreign exchange. The Government has also established a new agency called the Central Economic Intelligence Bureau to coordinate the activities of all the investigating agencies. The bureau will provide back-up information to the tax authorities and to begin with, will concentrate on illegal foreign exchange transactions. Meanwhile, similar cases of foreign exchange racketeering unearthed in the last three years are being scrutinised once again for possible leads and punitive action. As it stands, no penalties seem to have been imposed. Whether the story is going to be different this time around will only be known when the Government finally takes action against the large companies that patronised those arrested last month.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DUNLOP INTRODUCES THE NEW PROFESSIONAL

Tough. Uncompromising. On the fast track. A new breed that's going places. A new generation with professional drive.

For this new professional, Dunlop has a new car tyre. The Dunlop Olympus Nylon.

It's got resilience. A strong nylon casing to take the roughest going.

It's got staying power. With a premium depth tread that goes a long way.

It's got style. A tread pattern designed for better grip.

Olympus. It's the new professional. Made by Dunlop for people with standards like yours.

New

DUNLOP

OLYMPUS

Nylon Car Tyre

Because professional standards demand the best

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection,

DIL-5915

If you fly Cathay Pacific to Hong Kong this

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Stretch it.

With the terrific little Hong Kong Bargain Book.

An amazing Cathay Pacific-Hong Kong Tourist Association offer designed to make that delightful shopper's paradise even more a bargain.

It's a booklet containing 50 discount coupons which you get along with your Cathay Pacific airline ticket.

Each coupon entitles you to up to 25% discounts at a variety of establishments. In fact, you get two discount coupons for each outlet.

Some of the participants include Indian shops, restaurants, jewellery stores, Island cruises and fun places like the fabulous Ocean Park.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ong this is what you can do with your US $500

Of course, you shouldn't forget some of the extras of flying Cathay Pacific.
Like the delicious cuisine, a connoisseur's choice of liquid refreshments and a charming crew to look after you.
All great fun.
And that isn't stretching it.

Arrive in better shape

CATHAY PACIFIC
The Swire Group

Hong Kong Tourist Association

For further information, contact Cathay Pacific or your Travel Agent. Bargain Book offer valid only for passengers travelling from Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/CX/4065a

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If the eyelashes of the news-reader are clearly visible

it must be Solidaire !

Yes, a claim Solidaire alone can claim. With confidence. Since it has won acclaim from its proud owners. Leading to make more and more people buy Solidaire. For its picture clarity, perfect colour and the right contrast.

And to judge the picture quality, you must do it when the news is being telecast. Because it's live and the news-reader faces the TV camera under proper lighting. It means there's no chance of bad focussing. Now watch the same on different TVs and compare it with Solidaire. On a Solidaire TV you can see every minute detail like the eyelashes of the news-reader. And all in the right, natural tones.

Such picture sharpness in Solidaire is the result of using error-free components from ITT & Preh, West Germany. For instance, components like the LOT, Electronic Tuner, Colour ICs, SMPS etc used in Solidaire are among the most advanced designs in the world.

Solidaire ● COLOUR
-that seldom fails!

Model Courtesy:
Gitanjali Iyer, Newsreader, Delhi Doordarshan

Indigo-DB-841

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMERCIAL credit conditions continued to increase last fortnight, money supply growth remained well under control. The sluggish growth in the foreign trade sector is a cause for concern, since exports declined last month. The boom in share prices continued, and gold prices also began to show some signs of increasing. All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of the last six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale prices dropped by 0.1 per cent last fortnight, reinforcing the recent stability in prices. Inflation seems most unlikely this year.

After a sharp increase immediately following the budget, consumer prices went up by only 0.3 per cent last month.

In spite of a large increase in Reserve Bank credit to the Government—money supply remains under control.

Further indications of a loosening credit policy were evident last fortnight as commercial credit rose by 0.8 per cent.

Both imports and exports fell sharply last month. With imports dropping by a greater amount.

An increase of 0.5 per cent last month continued the uncertain trend in foreign exchange reserves, which have been fluctuating considerably.

A record rise of 12.7 per cent last fortnight reinforced the current stock-market boom—major contributors were shipping stocks.

After a short period of incertainty, gold prices shoot up again last fortnight by 2.1 per cent—well above the current long-term trend.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Items with maximum growth in June 1985

	% Growth
Bananas	30.32
Raw Hides	24.96
Aviation spirit	15.91
Tapioca	14.65
Turmeric	14.27
Khandsari	6.30
Fish	5.85
Maize	5.83
Eggs	5.27
Ceramic Tiles	5.21
Sugar	4.10
Cashew Nuts	3.83
Bajra	3.90
Soda Ash	3.64
Cement	2.76
Power-Driven Pumps	2.73
Meat	2.65
Trucks	2.63
Electricity	1.98
Coir Yarn	1.88
Handloom & Powerloom Textiles	1.74
Crude & Natural Gas	1.27
Radio T.V.	1.25
Coir Fibre	1.24
Paper	1.24
Wheat	1.16
Electrical Motors	1.15
Gram	1.13
Mining Machinery	1.05
Rails	1.02
Bolts & Nuts	1.02
Coffee	0.88
Machine Tools	0.88
Transformers	0.86
Gur	0.86
Limestone	0.85
Cotton Yarn	0.83
Pig Iron	0.82
Kerosene	0.81
Silk & Artificial Fabrics	0.80
Industrial Instruments	0.79
Mill Cotton Cloth	0.57
Hides	0.55
Tobacco	0.53
Rice	0.53
sugarcane	0.51
Cars	0.51

Of the 139 important series considered, 58 with a weight of 39.2 accelerated while 81 with a weight of 47.4 decelerated.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1985	1984
Coal Thousand Tonnes, June	532.8	483.0
Cement Thousand Tonnes, June	255.0	244.3
Crude Petroleum Thousand Tonnes, June	2262	2252
Fertiliser Thousand Tonnes, June	429	367
Thermal Plant Load Factor, June	52.7	47.5

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WIPRO

We are a rapidly growing corporation in the consumer products, fluid power and information technology business providing quality products and service to our customers. Our growth plan offers you opportunities to grow on the strength of your professional/managerial contribution.

WE OFFER YOU AN OPPORTUNITY TO BE PART OF THE NETWORKING THAT INSPIRES OUR R&D PROFESSIONALS

Ample availability of computer development systems tools, test equipments and CAD facility.

Informal atmosphere and open door policy which fosters growth.

Attractive compensation & benefit programme commensurate with experience.

Library with leading international computer publications.

Advanced projects covering computer hardware, operating system, compilers, communications, graphics, CAD/CAM....

Accelerated progression for exceptional performers.

Facility for creative research projects

Opportunity for training abroad and job rotation.

Assistance to pursue professional course, subsidy for purchase of technical books....

Please write to the Personnel Manager, Wipro Information Technology Ltd., 88, M.G. Road, Bangalore-1.

WIPRO R&D ... WHERE CREATIVITY AND TECHNOLOGY JOIN HANDS

CLOSE TO THE CUSTOMER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Fresh Gains

EQUITY shares are back into a bullish phase, with the downward trend in prices in early July proving as brief as had been expected (INDIA TODAY, July 31). Shares notched up fresh gains from the middle of last month, moving up every day of the following week, and such leaders as Tata Ordinary, Tata Locomotive, Century and Hindustan Motors rose to yet new peaks. Clearly, the stock-market's optimism will not be dimmed, and prices fell briefly last fortnight only as a reaction to fresh curbs imposed by the authorities in terms of exceptionally heavy trading margins.

If the players on the market respond to the Government that 'works faster' by sending scrip prices rising faster too, the reasons are understandable. The Government has announced several concessions for industry in the last few months, and more are expected. For instance, a new industrial policy statement has been promised during the monsoon session of Parliament, and a tax policy statement is expected next month. Both are clearly expected to help industry since the Government is likely to use the statements to outline steps that will increase the pace of industrial development. Also, the rain gods continue to be kind, and the monsoon has revived after a brief lull. Finally, the announcement of a settlement of the Punjab problem can only send the shares of Punjab-based companies heavenward.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Over and above all this, the corporate news has been good. The captains of industry are full of hope, as typified by the statements of the chairmen of both TISCO and TELCO in recent weeks. Companies continue to announce plans for modernisation and diversification, underpinning the general mood of optimism and enthusiasm. TELCO in fact could not restrain itself from making the announcement of an agreement with Honda for producing cars, for it had been stated earlier that an announcement would only be made at the annual shareholders' meeting in mid-August. Even some sick textile companies have announced improved working results. Century Spinning, meanwhile, has now disclosed its intention to diversify into the production of acrylic fibre, thus strengthening its position in textiles.

Inevitably, then, there is a never-before effervescence on the stock-market, and an infectious ebullience of spirit. But the question must be raised as to when share prices will dip again, as they did in early July. The bullish run of the past fortnight was partly a result of the fact that the bears had been virtually banished from the market by bulls who manoeuvred favourable contango charges for carrying contracts over from one settlement period to the next. But the indications now are that the bears will not stay in hiding for long.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1985 HIGH	1985 LOW	CLOSE 18.7.85	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	53.00	29.00	52.00	4.50 +
Associated Cement	592.00	385.00	574.00	1.00 +
Atlas Copco	70.00	37.50	61.00	2.00 –
Associated Bearings	645.00	425.00	640.00	20.00 +
Bajaj Auto	1820.00	855.00	1750.00	75.00 +
Ballarpur	51.00	45.00	51.00	3.00 +
Baroda Rayon	420.00	281.00	394.00	16.00 +
Bata India	88.10	48.00	78.00	2.00 –
Bayer	470.00	305.00	455.00	30.00 +
Best & Crompton	115.00	61.00	107.00	3.00 –
Bharat Forge	95.00	35.50	82.00	2.00 +
Blow Plast	71.00	36.50	58.00	1.00 +
Blue Star	75.00	33.00	70.00	nil
Bombay Dyeing	147.00	66.00	125.00	2.00 +
Brooke Bond	82.00	47.50	80.25	9.25 +
Ceat Tyres	270.00	180.00	270.00	10.00 +
Century Spinning	1095.00	810.00	1085.00	105.00 +
Chloride India	91.00	56.90	88.50	2.50 +
Cinrgia	70.00	32.25	70.00	16.50 +
Colgate	318.00	147.00	185.00	3.00 –
Cyanamid	90.00	33.00	65.00	2.00 –
DCM	62.00	18.00	49.50	2.50 –
Dunlop	38.60	22.30	35.25	2.25 +
Elecon	103.00	54.00	92.00	2.00 +
Escorts	95.00	49.87	91.00	3.00 +
Finolex Cables	41.00	23.00	34.00	1.00 +
Food Specialities	215.00	86.00	197.50	7.50 +
Garware Nylon	62.00	24.50	47.00	5.00 +
Glaxo	68.00	24.00	60.00	4.00 +
Gujarat St Fertilisers	770.00	537.00	720.00	25.00 +
Gwalior Rayon	66.00	53.75	62.00	nil
Hindustan Lever	122.00	51.25	109.00	4.00 +
Hindustan Motors	72.00	37.50	70.00	7.50 +
Indian Dyestuff	375.00	267.50	355.00	15.00 –
Indian Explosives	69.50	33.00	66.00	6.00 +
Indian Hotels	130.00	76.00	125.00	2.50 +
Indian Organic	109.00	50.50	109.00	10.00 +
Indian Rayon	98.00	66.00	89.00	3.00 –
Indrol	210.00	90.50	207.50	27.50 +
Ingersoll-Rand	315.00	162.00	302.50	2.50 +
ITC	49.50	29.00	46.30	2.80 +
J K Synthetics	90.00	52.75	90.00	9.00 +
Kinetic Engineering	355.00	128.00	330.00	25.00 +
Kirloskar Oil	38.00	23.00	29.00	1.00 –
Lakme	172.50	74.00	165.00	40.00 +
Larsen & Toubro	165.00	72.00	165.00	20.00 +
Lipton	58.00	26.50	58.00	3.00 +
Lohia Machines	75.00	42.00	70.00	10.00 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	84.00	48.00	78.00	6.00 +
Motor Industries	660.00	321.25	660.00	60.00 +
National Organic	550.00	240.00	470.00	5.00 –
Nirlon	59.00	37.75	59.00	4.00 +
Peico Electronics	94.50	38.40	94.50	14.50 +
Premier Auto	560.00	322.00	552.00	37.00 +
Ranbaxy	127.50	49.00	110.00	5.00 –
Raymond	116.50	59.00	110.00	9.00 +
Reckitt & Colman	95.00	57.00	85.00	5.00 –
Reliance Industries	231.00	120.00	228.00	18.00 +
Sandoz	82.00	31.00	75.00	2.00 +
Shriram Fibres	77.50	34.00	62.50	4.50 –
SPIC	120.00	43.50	117.00	10.00 +
Tata Steel	995.00	381.00	988.00	98.00 +
Telco	930.00	409.00	925.00	85.00 +
Vulcan Laval	125.00	64.00	115.00	2.50 +
Zuari Agro	91.00	46.00	79.10	1.10 +
20th Century Leasing	84.00	31.50	62.00	3.00 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.6650	8.5451
Austria	Schilling	100	59.8547	58.6896
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.3552	33.3001
Bangladesh	Taka	100	45.6601	45.5903
Canada	Dollar	1	9.1870	8.8438
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.1652	1.1511
Egypt	Pound	1	15.1122	15.0922
France	Franc	1	1.3698	1.3449
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5528	1.5357
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1307	1.1223
Iran	Rial	100	13.8293	13.7113
Italy	Lira	100	0.6330	0.6281
Japan	Yen	100	5.0597	4.9991
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7793	0.7780
Kuwait	Dinar	1	41.3713	41.1217
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8788	4.8236
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.8013	0.7917
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6517	0.6410
Netherlands	Guilder	1	3.7194	3.6712
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7881	0.7819
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.4607	5.4001
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0713	0.0708
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4519	0.4490
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.4376	1.4198
Switzerland	Franc	1	5.0903	5.0292
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7113	0.7092
Thailand	Baht	100	45.9928	45.6320
UK	Pound	1	16.8491	16.6972
USA	Dollar	1	12.1650	12.0550
UAE	Dirham	1	3.4013	3.2713
USSR	Rouble	1	15.0129	14.9328
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	4.1778	4.1299

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Ltd, New Delhi, and quoted between the Banks on 22.7.85.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A KNOTTED ITALIAN FAVOURITE.

From the House of Intercraft. For Trade enquiries contact: General Manager, Old Village Industries Limited, 16A, Phase II, Industrial Area, Naraina, New Delhi.
Available at: Inter-Shoppes- Bombay, Delhi and Bangalore, and all FU's dealers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ANOTHER KNOTTED ITALIAN FAVOURITE.

The unmistakable Italian lines that have made it one of the hottest-selling styles in the world.

Intermezzo Executive shirts.
A matter of taste.

INTERMEZZO

Enterprise/IS/22

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAINI SHIPPING CO.

Voyage into Oblivion

Over a month after Nitya Nanak and Nitya Ram, two sister cargo ships belonging to the same shipping company, disappeared simultaneously in the Bay of Bengal without trace, the element of mystery and intrigue surrounding the case has only increased. Till last fortnight, there were still no definite clues as to the disappearance of the ships with their entire crew but maritime experts are convinced of foul play as are the families of the missing seamen. Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA investigated the facts in Madras and Bombay. His report:

IN A FIRST floor flat of an old mansion in the Parsi Colony in Dadar a family congregates every evening. Most of the time E.A. Karkaria, his wife and many relations sit in glum silence in eternal wait for a phone call. Over a month after Nitya Nanak, a merchant vessel on which their son was a second engineer, disappeared off Trincomalee in the Bay of Bengal all that binds them to hope is three vague telephone calls, each saying in hushed tones that the ship has been hijacked.

The Karkarias have recorded the third call and play the tape repeatedly on their stereo system. By far the only intelligible whispers appear towards the end of ten-minute noise, static and sounds akin to machine-gun bursts. "The ship has been hijacked." says the mysterious caller and refuses to respond to all queries from the Karkarias. "Could it be a hoax?" ask the Karkarias expectantly. And they obviously do not want no for an answer.

"I am confident my husband is alive. He will come back. There is no evidence of the ship sinking. All I have is this hope."

Diana Komal and (inset) a photograph of her with her husband before his disappearance

A few kilometres away in a much smaller apartment buried in a far corner of Parel, young Diana Komal also wants nothing but good news. The wife of the second engineer on Nitya Ram, the second merchant vessel of the Maini Shipping Company reported missing since June 21, is expecting her second child in September. "I am confident my husband is alive. He will come back. There is no evidence of the ship sinking. All I have is this hope. How can anyone take it away?" she asks, her gaze repeatedly shifting to the framed picture of her husband on the drawing-room table.

In Juhu Veena Puri, the wife of Captain Krishna Dev Puri, the master of MV Nitya Nanak, is the most optimistic of the lot. "I saw my husband on a disaster-hit ship in Greece. He was so cool. I am confident he is alive," she says and reassuringly mentions how every astrologer she consults says the crewmen are alive and held prisoner somewhere. But there are clouds of despair in the eyes of Prabha Sharma, the wife of L.K. Sharma, the master of Nitya Ram. "They even fished out the Jumbo black box. Can't they conduct proper investigations here and tell us convincingly what happened. This uncertainty is so terrible."

The uncertainty, in fact, is murderous. Five weeks after Nitya Nanak, carrying 5,000 tonnes of salt from Kandla to Calcutta and her sister ship Nitya Ram bringing coal from Calcutta to Tuticorin disappeared in the Bay of Bengal on June 21, the families of their 44 crew members are not sure what happened. No bodies, wreckage or oil slick has been found.

The ships disappeared without a distress signal. As a matter of fact the last message from Nitya Nanak, which mentioned leakage in one of the aft holds, landed at the owners' desk through another ship which picked it up along the way. Nitya Ram lost contact shortly after sending a message saying all was fine and that it was reaching Tuticorin on the morning of June 25.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The government agencies now say they presume the ships are lost. But they cannot say how and where. "Two ships of the same company, disappearing at the same time in the same area, it all leaves a little doubt," says Union Shipping and Transport Secretary P.P. Nayyar. He has already asked the shipping attache in the Indian High Commission in London to get in touch with the International Maritime Investigation Bureau, the reputed shipping fraud investigating agency.

Veteran sailors in the navy, coastguard and merchant marine point out that ships have tremendous resilience and do not disappear like snowflakes in fair weather. They talk in terms of piracy, fraud and mystery and point out, as evidence, the obviously callous manner in which the shipowners, Maini Shipping Company Private Limited (see box) reacted to the disappearance of the ships. The owners contacted the Government six days after the ships lost contact and did it through cursory letters that did not even give the speed and the last known position of the ships. On the other hand, they did not even care to inform the families of the crew members who suddenly woke up to the disaster on the morning of

MV Nitya Nanak (far left); and MV Nitya Ram (below): strange disappearance

H.S. MAINI

Rock Bottom

IN A WAY, the Maini Shipping Company can claim to have given Indian shipping its five most eventful weeks beginning with June 21 when contact was lost with Nitya Nanak and Nitya Ram, its vessels in the Bay of Bengal.

While the search had barely begun for the missing ships, the third vessel, MV Nitya Angad which had just been released from arrest in Dubai for carrying rotten onions, ran into rough weather and suffered damage. It is now looking for repair facilities in Bahrain. Of the remaining two ships, Nitya Arjun was rammed by MV Nitya Nidhi, a large Shipping Corporation of India vessel, in Tuticorin, and is undergoing major salvage and repairs. And the last, Nitya Amar last week sent a radio message to Maini saying

HEMANT PITHIWA

Maini: bad luck?

"shipping green seas". A day later it was reported to be sinking off Cochin.

That is a strange record for Maini, who is one of the few Indian sailors with an Extra Master certificate. It is known that Nitya Anand, the first ship he purchased after breaking out on his own, also sank in high seas. "Do you believe in luck?" Maini now asks cryptically trying to explain away his disastrous record.

He is also at pains to point out that in the recession-ridden shipping industry his is one of the three companies to be making profits. His balance sheet shows reserves of Rs 1.09 crore against an equity of Rs 5 lakh "which too accrued mainly because of bonus shares."

The key to his survival obviously lay in insurance reducing. But the reduction was only to the tune of Rs 10 lakh each in the case of Nitya Ram, insured for Rs 1.4 crore, and Nitya Nanak insured for Rs 95 lakh. Incidentally, Nanak is valued at Re 1 in his balance sheet due to depreciation.

Maini denies all suggestions of over-insurance and bad maintenance of his ships. "We are professionals," he says and argues that a ship does not have to be goodlooking to be seaworthy. "We have done nothing wrong. Let the International Maritime Investigation Bureau prove it," he asserts. Here his defence is obviously the certificates of seaworthiness given by Bureau Veritas, the international classifying society of merchant shipping and the Indian Shipping Ministry.

But last fortnight there were indications that Bureau Veritas was panicking. On July 21, a telex message landed at the desk of P.M. Warriar, officer in charge at the Bureau's Bombay office. It said that under instructions from its Paris office the Bureau had withdrawn class on MV Nitya Angad, Maini's vessel that sailed from Dubai to Kuwait via Damam without carrying out adequate repairs.

Normally the Bureau would have had no great reason to hide such a message. But now its officials are most bashful about it. "Please do not ask me which ship it pertains to. Under our rules all dealings between us and shipowners are confidential," pleaded Warriar. The Bureau had also certified Nanak and Ram and there are widespread allegations that the ships were not seaworthy.

Maini could argue that he is not responsible for the competence of the classifying agency and as long as he had the certificates he could not be questioned. But, read with his company's recent record, it may not suffice in itself and the investigators are likely to ask him searching questions.

A decade back, when he launched his firm, he decided to name all his vessels after Swami Nityanand and one of the Sikh Gurus. Today, with his fleet on the rocks and business in doldrums, he will need all their accumulated blessings to keep his head above the water.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I'll pick Remington every time!"

Available in English and 12 Indian languages

The successful secretary knows there's no substitute for Remington reliability

REMINGTON Troublefree typewriters since 1876

CLARION C-RRS-1

Available from Remington offices at:
Calcutta ◻ Patna ◻ Guwahati ◻ Bhubaneswar ◻ Ranchi ◻ Allahabad ◻ Bombay ◻ Pune ◻ Nagpur ◻ Ahmedabad ◻ Bhopal
Delhi ◻ Chandigarh ◻ Amritsar ◻ Jaipur ◻ Kanpur ◻ Lucknow ◻ Meerut ◻ Dehradun ◻ Madras ◻ Tiruchirapalli ◻ Bangalore
Ernakulam ◻ Visakhapatnam ◻ Hyderabad

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

July 4 when Indian Express reported the disappearance of the ships.

The search could thus begin only on June 27, almost a week after the ships lost contact and predictably proved futile. On the 27th, as the Coast Guard was first asked to look for Nitya Ram and Nanak, it alerted all its vessels in the seas south of Madras. Recalls Lieutenant Commander R.E. Balasubrahmanyan, the Coast Guard district commander at Madras: "On that day the home minister was at Rameswaram and there were many ships in the area. We alerted them all." This continued for three days as three vessels each from the Coast Guard and the Navy scoured the seas at random in the absence of any firm indication of the search area.

During the next four days, the vessels were joined by an Islander aircraft of the navy carrying out seven-hour search sorties every day, looking at the general area between Madras and Point Calimere (see map). Coast Guard and navy spokesmen say they were all along handicapped by the lack of correct coordinates since the shipowners had given them no idea of the last known positions of their vessels.

It was only at 7 p.m. on July 2 that the Bombay-based nautical advisor to the Government of India gave an indication of the search area. Immediately the Navy extended the scope of the search flying in two of its Ilyushin IL-38 aircraft from its base in Goa. This is one of the world's most effective maritime reconnaissance and search aircraft, in the same league as the British Nimrod, and has a radar scan that easily envelopes over 60 square kilometres of the sea at one time. For three days the Ilyushins, joined by the Islanders and a Coast Guard Fokker Friendship scanned the entire region where the ships could possibly have reached. On the sixth, in fact, an Ilyushin also flew right down to the Sri Lanka coast with no sign of the ships, a piece of wreckage, or even an oil slick. "The search parties did not even find a chappal. I do not know how two ships of the same company in the same waters could disappear like that. It is most incredible, unprecedented and we are perplexed," says Director-General of Shipping Niti Bhushan Chakravarti and adds in the same incredulous vein: "A ship does not fall out of the sky like an aircraft. It takes at least half-an-hour sinking. It has an instrument called the autokey which should, on its own, transmit the distress signal."

"I saw my husband on a disaster-hit ship in Greece, he was so cool. I am confident he is alive."

VEENA PURI,
wife of K.D. Puri, master of Nitya Nanak

Chakravarti and his aides are, however, not able to guess with any degree of confidence what could indeed have happened to the ships. Chakravarti points out that ships have disappeared without trace in the past. There is the example of MV Kairali, a Kerala Government vessel which disappeared between Djibouti and Goa in the Arabian Sea. But Chakravarti himself explains that, saying Kairali was lost in extremely bad weather and was carrying a load of iron ore, an extremely hazardous cargo in the sense that it makes vessels list and capsize in rough seas. Similar is the case of the Shipping Corporation of India's much bigger MV Chandragupta which sank without trace in the North Pacific. The ship sent distress signals while battling with 70-foot waves. Its fate was finally sealed as the foodgrain it was carrying absorbed water, germinated and expanded, tearing open the hatches.

Both Nitya Nanak and Ram faced no such conditions. According to Coast Guard and naval officials, the waves in the waters where the ships were likely to be sailing were no more than six to 12 feet high "which such ships should be able to negotiate easily." Moreover, Nitya Ram was carrying coal which, according to Chakravarti, is good cargo since it leaves plenty of air spaces and thus adds to stability and buoyancy. Even the Nitya Nanak cargo of salt is not considered particularly hazardous.

Officials as well as informed sources in shipping circles, however, ask many inconvenient questions. They say, for example, that while it is plausible for a small ship to disappear in mid-ocean without trace, it is unlikely to happen just 90 miles from the coast. "That too when the ships happen to be traversing a coastal route which happens to be a veritable shipping highway," wonders a navy officer. Also, sources point out that all these merchant vessels have hydrostatic lifeboats which break out on their own the moment the ship begins to sink. These are virtually unsinkable. Also, even more than the fact of disappearance without trace, they question how the two ships disappeared without a distress signal. Asks Pheroze Ardeshar Zaveri, a veteran marine engineer from Mazagaon Dock whose son Yezdi was the third engineer on Nitya Nanak: "Tell me how can it happen that six radios should at once lose contact with the world?"

Yet, all this is still conjecture and the point on which the shipowner is being faulted and questioned is the apparently cavalier approach with which he treated the disappearance. "Normally when a ship loses contact for even 24 hours owners constantly keep ringing us up. We are not even able to sleep. But in this case there was no such urgency," says Commander Rama Rao, in charge of the Coast Guard establishment for the whole Madras region. Similarly S.D. Batra, principal officer of the Mercantile Marine Department at Madras, points out that he was informed of the loss of contact with Nitya Nanak on June 26 through a letter left outside his office by a peon of a Madras-based company that happens to represent Maini Shipping Company. No one contacted him or even rang him up and it was only after getting the letter that he sent for Captain Samad, the Maini Shipping operations manager, who happened to be in Madras then. Says he: "When your ships get lost you do not write letters." The owners followed it up with another routine letter on June 27 in which they mentioned the loss of contact with Nitya Ram as well.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Worse, officials in Batra's department and in Bombay point out that the company did not give any information regarding the likely position or speed of the ships, making it impossible for them to organise effective search so many days after a likely disaster. Said an official: "After we pestered them repeatedly, all they said was about six knots. Now how casual can you get where the lives of 44 men are involved." It is this kind of evidence which has now prompted the Ministry of Shipping to examine the possibility of registering a case of causing death by negligence against the owners.

However, H.S. Maini, the owner, offers an explanation for everything with aplomb. He says he has the copy of a satellite picture of the area showing cloud formation and offers a hypothesis. Says he: "Maybe, after Nanak began to take water, its master called the master of Ram for help and while they were heading towards each other a cloudburst took place." Dwelling on the same theory further he argues: "And it is possible that while they were heading for each other in such rough weather they collided with each other and sank." More than anything else this argument gets the families of the sailors wild. "My husband was an able master. So was Captain Puri," says Prabha Sharma and asserts angrily, "it is an insult to our poor husbands that they, like kindergarten children accosted each other, had a collision and sank."

The other wives and parents are just as angry. "Our children were working with Maini and he did not even care to inform us of the ships' disappearance. He should have at least come to us to say what happened," complains R.P. Sharma, a TELCO executive whose son Rajesh Sharma was the second engineer on Nitya Nanak, and adds in visible fury: "Now if he comes to this house I will throw him out of the window." Now even Maini admits that "we slipped up in informing the families" but he has no great remorse on that. "The prime minister of India owns Air-India. Tell me how many victims' families has he visited after the Air-India crash?" he brazenly asks. This kind of attitude has obviously left the families extremely bitter. Said Diana Komal: "I met him and asked him why he had not informed me of the disappearance for over two weeks and he said, 'it would not have helped. You are crying now, you would have cried then'."

"Can't they conduct investigations and tell us what happened. This uncertainty is terrible."

PRABHA SHARMA
wife of L.K. Sharma, master of Nitya Ram

"Tell me how can it happen that six radios should at once lose contact with the world?"

PHEROZE ZAVERI
father of Yezdi third engineer Nitya Nanak

It is a combination of this anger and eternal human optimism that has now got the families to organise themselves into a kind of a group for approaching the prime minister and the Shipping Ministry. Last fortnight, they even took a deputation to the chairman of the New India Assurance Company, Maini's insurers, asking them to go slow on the insurance claim. "I told them they do not know where their ships are. How can they talk of compensation and claims," says Pheroze Zaveri who leads the group.

In this web of arguments, hopes and despair, there is still no conclusive clue as to the fate of the ships and crew. The Mercantile Marine Department has already given Maini a certificate that the ships are presumed lost with all the crew-members. But few people in shipping believe that could be.

While all the relatives believe that the ships have been hijacked to some place along Jaffna they have no more to show for it than astrologers' promises and the tape-recording of a vague phone call which could even be a cruel hoax. Veteran sailors, however, do not discount other possibilities. They point to the example of Greece where old ships are often scuttled to make insurance claims. They point out that the general area where the ships disappeared is close to the routes leading to Singapore which has a market for old ships and, farther away, to Taiwan which has the world's biggest ship-breaking industry. But all these theories fail to explain what could have happened to the crew. "The world is too small a place for 44 people to hide. And what is the incentive for them to do so? It looks as if by some freak coincidence both the ships sank at the same time," says Director-General of Shipping Chakravarti.

But people higher up, even in the shipping industry do not seem to agree. They would wait for the opinion of the International Maritime Investigation Bureau. Said a Shipping Ministry spokesman: "Even if we do not ultimately discover a fraud there the case will lead to far-reaching changes in the Maritime Shipping Act, for it is legal loopholes that allow unseaworthy ships to collect class certificates and go round risking lives." The ministry has already set up a group to suggest changes and if it leads to far-reaching improvements the 44 sailors' families would not have suffered in vain.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Madras and Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HIMACHAL

Here's How to Plan a Perfect Trek

Come to Lahaul.....a trekkers paradise

Lakes at 14,000',ft. grand Himalayan passes, Towering peaks in their silvery glory and many treks to choose from—take your pick.

1. Keylong to Chamba via Udeypur 11 Days
2. Manali to Keylong via Chandratal and Baralacha 11 Days
3. Keylong to Padam over Shingola 10 Days
4. Keylong to Zanskar via Baralacha 10 Days

For these make Manali your base—where you can also hire equipment and get expert advise at the Mountaineering Institute. Enroute, you will find some rest houses/huts to help you along

MONAL – State Bird of Himachal

Trekking essentials

Tent, Sleeping Bag, Rucksack, Warm Jacket, Boots/ Warm Socks, Jeans, Thick Pullover, Water Bottle, Stove, First Aid Kit, Tinned food, High Energy foods like Chocolates and raisins etc.

Where hospitality is a way of life

HIMACHAL TOURISM

For more information please write to the Commissioner Tourism, Himachal Pradesh, Shimla-171001 Tel: 2028, 3136 or Contact H.P. Tourist Offices at:
Delhi: Chanderlok Building, Janpath, New Delhi-110001. Tel: 345320
Bombay: 36. World Trade Centre, Cuffee Parade, Bombay-400005
Tel: 219191/284.
Calcutta: 25, Camac Street, Camac Road, Calcutta. Tel: 446847.
Madras: 28, C-in-C. Madras-600015. Tel: 812955.
Chandigarh: 17, Sect., Chandigarh Tel: 26494.

ASTIKA H.T. 121

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

UNITED IND

A permanent base on the moon.

Colonists living in modules brought from Earth, protected from cosmic rays by a six-foot cover of lunar dust.

Lunar labs processing lunar soil into cement. Glass. Metal.

Collector satellites, beaming solar energy down to Earth.

Gravity free factories manufacturing goods in space.

2007 AD.
It's closer than we think.

As space age technology forges ahead, United India keeps pace.

Supporting unchartered ventures into space. Helping the nation move from the experimental INSAT 1A to INSAT 1B, India's first successful telecommunications and weather satellite.

Adapting to needs as they evolve. Stepping out beyond the beaten track with the assurance of security. Fostering the spirit of adventure.

So that you can dream of conquering new worlds. Of pushing back frontiers, further and further.

So that you can work on making your dreams come alive. Keeping your feet on the ground while you reach for the stars.

United India will be there tomorrow.

Watching, guarding, anticipating.

Whatever. Wherever.

UNITED INDIA INSURANCE CO. LTD.

We'll be there.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CABARETS

Flooring the Show

SCANTILY-CLAD women gyrating suggestively before predominantly male and largely drunk audiences to the tune of an enthusiastic if off-key band are quite the rage in Kerala. But sex, like politics, attracts its fair share of controversy in this southern state and the rapid spread of nude and semi-nude floor shows in liquor bars and five-star hotels has prompted a motley assemblage of feminists, Christian crusaders and Islamic fundamentalists to demand an end to what is seen as an insult to Indian womanhood. However, for every action there is an opposite reaction, and agitated cabaret dancers are pulling up their G-strings and readying for a battle to defend their flourishing but now threatened livelihood.

> "We will fight to the finish and agitate before the state secretariat if we are put out of work."
>
> LAILA
> cabaret dancer

The issue snowballed in the wake of a ban on the staging of cabaret shows in three hotels in the temple town of Trichur following pressure exerted by the powerful Catholic bishop of Trichur and disruptions caused to similar shows in Calicut. It led cabaret bar owners to hold a hurriedly-convened conference in Cochin last fortnight to debate ways and means to counter the mounting challenge to their trade. However, there appeared little reason to panic. A judgement by a Kalpetta court last year, on a petition against the opening of a bar-cum-cabaret in the district headquarters, allowed shows "provided they did not inv nudity". And in Cochin, a high c judgement debarred a police officer f moving against floor shows being st in hotels and bars. In fact, so long as t was no nudity, artistes and customer not come into close contact and no li was served during shows, the bar own had a cast-iron case.

Says an exasperated Home Mini Vayalar Ravi: "Policemen are hel because as per court rulings, they conduct raids only when the shows obscene." But the law is not the bikini that owners of cabaret bars hid hind. They have also acquired enorm political clout since the business tock 12 years ago with the inauguration of first such shows in Queens Hotel in C cut. Said K.S. Sreekumar, owner

Cabaret dancers (from left) Mum Leena and Laila: up in arms

Photographs by C. RATHEES

Queens: "Ov were conve competition of the hotels rolving eve crowds went prompting s ring in eve trip-tease ac prominent crowd loves dances and nobody will depend on re

The econ pretty reveal dancer work Vegetable and liquor. Add to t Rs 3,000 per or "dadas" to some custom capacity of 7 sion is Rs 30 g the festival liquor and b normally high costs Rs 30. I Rs 15,000 a stands to ma to fill lakh d crowd. Said the best far called the "T cents the caba a gold-mine. tainment tax enormous an only reason are in Kerala

While M discontinue raids and p complain of h per month a and politicia help nobody

This is p counts a lot partner in a c another offic private firm the unholy women pro feminist Sug "Cabaret in against our cost," she sa by picketing drum which shows. Th action by h acts being st

However

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Queens: "Overnight thatched tea-shops were converted into cabaret joints and competition became so intense that some of the hotels were staging live sex shows involving even lesbian acts." Predictably, crowds went wild over the performances prompting some floor show managers to bring in even minor girls to engage in strip-tease acts with male dancers. Said a prominent cabaret bar owner: "The crowd loves only crude and titillating dances and if we cannot provide them nobody will come for the show. We depend on repeat audiences."

The economics of the cabaret are also pretty revealing. The monthly salary of a dancer works out to about Rs 2,000 plus free food and boarding for her and a guardian. Add to that a band which would cost Rs 3,000 per month and a few bouncers or "dadas" to handle excitable or troublesome customers. Each hall has a seating capacity of 70-80 and the rate of admission is Rs 30 going as high as Rs 60 during the festival season. Then there is the liquor and beer revenue which is uniformly high since just one bottle of beer costs Rs 30. In short, on an investment of Rs 15,000 a month, a cabaret owner stands to make a phenomenal Rs 75,000 to Rs 1 lakh depending on the area and the crowd. Said Mohan, who was running the best family restaurant in Cochin called the "Tandoor" before he also got into the cabaret bandwagon: "Cabaret is a gold-mine. There is no sales tax or entertainment tax and the income from it is enormous and mind-boggling. That is the only reason why it is spreading like wildfire in Kerala."

While Mohan had to subsequently discontinue the shows following police raids and public outcry, other owners complain of having to shell out Rs 25,000 per month as hush money to the police and politicians because without police help nobody can run a cabaret in Kerala.

This is precisely where political clout counts a lot. A state minister's son is a partner in a cabaret joint in Cochin while another officer left his lucrative job with a private firm to start his own cabaret joint. The unholy mix of politics, business and women prompted social worker and feminist Sugatha Kumari to cry full stop. "Cabaret insults womanhood and it is against our culture. We will stop it at any cost," she said and suited action to words by picketing the Dwarak Hotel in Trivandrum which had just started staging floor shows. This followed more physical action by her followers against cabaret acts being staged in Calicut and Cochin.

However, cabaret dancers reacted with alarm. Said Laila, a cabaret dancer in the Dwarak Hotel who is planning to form an association to lead the fight against Sugatha: "We will fight to the finish. We will agitate before the state secretariat if we are put out of work." Her militant reaction was understandable. Most of the dancers are unlettered and this is perhaps the only kind of job where their lack of literacy does not count. Said another dancer Leena: "Please ask Sugatha Kumari to get me a decent job that will get me Rs 2,000 a month with my qualifications—I have never even attended kindergarten."

> "Cabaret insults womanhood and it is against our culture. We will stop it at any cost."
>
> SUGATHA KUMARI
> Feminist

The 1,600-odd girls who perform all over Kerala are based in Kodambakkam in Madras and get work through agents. Says Laila: "The difference between us: and Silk Smitha is that millions see her dancing with a G-string on the screen while we do it in front of about 50 people." Even the bandboys are apprehensive. Says Ravichandran, a crooner: "Most of us bandboys are graduates and since we could not get any other job we had no choice but to take this up." Sugatha Kumari has promised to give them "big jobs" but has not gone beyond that vague assurance.

HARI

Sugatha Kumari and picketers at Hotel Dwarak: making it hot Fear over the gathering storm has largely prompted the formation of an All-India Cabaret Defence Committee headed by an advocate K. Sasidharan and K. Premchandran, the general secretary. The committee represents about 500 cabaret dancers in Kerala, Karnataka and Maharashtra and intends to fight their case legally and in public forums. In fact, Sasidharan has gone on record to state that if the dancers had violated any laws governing public decency, it was up to government agencies to take proper action. Individuals and voluntary institutions could not take the law into their own hands. "It would not be correct to character assassinate this art on the assumption that in some hotels some artistes are performing in a vulgar way."

Meanwhile, the pressure on Chief Minister K. Karunakaran and Home Minister Ravi is increasing with church and social workers demanding a decision on the spreading menance. Sugatha Kumari has already more demonstrations planned out leading Ravi to chuckle: "I hope the cabaret girls do not gherao me in front of the secretariat." Whether that expresses a fear or a secret wish, it looks like Laila and her G-string-clad sisters are finally going to make their debut fairly soon in the hallowed state secretariat.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Get away from a grey world

Fetid surroundings . . .
concrete jungles . . .
hazardous wastes.
Pollution that could strangle with its poisonous coils.
Hardly the place you wanted . . .
to start in . . . to grow in.

As an industrialist, you can opt for a better environment. To begin with, when you think of putting up a new factory . . .
why go into thickly industrialized locations ?

Gujarat has several industrial locations with all the facilities of the big townships without the attendant crowding.
Besides being close enough to major markets. The Industries Department, the Gujarat Industrial Corporations and the Gujarat Pollution Control Board can give you a choice of several attractive alternative locations.

Give this a clear thought.

Gujarat Pollution Control Board
Old Assembly Building, Sector 17, Gandhinagar 382 017.
Tel Nos : 2756, 2095, 2096.

Shilpi 2 GPCB 9/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LAKSHMI KANT JHA

Pushing for Reform

FOR A man who might be expected to wield the big broom, he couldn't on the face of it be a more unlikely candidate. In a government led by a man barely in his forties, he is already into his seventies. In an environment in which the keyword is action, he has held no executive post in several years. Where new blood is sought to rejuvenate tired old systems of government, he's a man who has been at the top of precisely that government on and off for more than two decades.

Yet the appointment last fortnight of L. K. Jha, 71, as advisor to the prime minister for administrative reform had an inevitability to it. Jha spent three years as head of the Economic Administrative Reforms Commission (EARC) which produced a large number of reports on diverse subjects. He has been principal secretary to Lal Bahadur Shastri when he was prime minister, governor of the Reserve Bank of India, ambassador to the United States, governor of Jammu and Kashmir, and has served in several international positions including the Willy Brandt Commission which in the '70s looked afresh at the problems of global development.

Such a range of administrative experience has given him insights into the working of bureaucracies which few can match. More important, his ideas seem to be very much in line with the outlook that has come to prevail in North Block and South Block. "There's now a new wind, the buzzword is liberalisation," he says approvingly.

A few days after his appointment last fortnight, he spoke to INDIA TODAY. Excerpts from the interview:

On his appointment:

Administrative reforms either hurt someone, dislocate work or call for more effort and administrators don't necessarily like this. There is a streak of conservatism in them and the compulsions for change are voiced much more outside the administration than inside it. Between things as they are and things as reformers like to see them, there is an obvious point of conflict and often this takes a political decision to overcome. My appointment indicates that the prime minister wants reforms. He is interested enough in administration to want to make those critical decisions to push reform.

On the working of government:

In internal working, the Government needs reforms of a different kind. For example, how a case or file is handled. If you have a clear-cut set of principles which can be applied at relatively junior levels, if the principles are clear enough, then accountability is possible. This requires clarity. With us, there has been a trend of treating each case on merit, so no one can say yes or no without having sufficient authority. This means everything goes up to ministers, as no one below is willing to say anything definite. Why? There is mistrust of officials among politicians and some decisions, let's face it, are politically motivated, influenced by political considerations so that politicians want to see them.

BHAWAN SINGH

On delays in government:

The system at present is that a file will go to, say, five concerned ministries which means it will be passed up to five ministers and a bunch of divergent views will come in which can then be resolved only in the Cabinet! Now, while the power to say yes is limited to the top, the power to delay or ask silly questions is widespread, because officers are expected to say something. What is the poor bureaucrat to say, he can't give a red signal or a green, he's forever on amber.

On Corruption:

When I met him, the prime minister said he was very worried about the problem of corruption.

I look at corruption in two broad categories. First, the one who pays benefits more than the fellow who receives. Second, the man who is entitled to something but has to pay to get it. There are two types of remedy. To stop speed money you must stop delays. If the income tax officer has to make a refund but is asking for a bribe, then a computer can easily keep track of refunds issued and delays, and throw out instances where refunds are not being made and ask the officer why not.

In clearances, the laws should be clear and should be applied not by the Government but by people who can be held responsible for them. In making building plans conform to the municipal laws, well, if the laws are clear enough, why should not registered architects certify that they do. If the certification is found to be wrong, they can lose their registration. Why should the Government take the responsibility for saying yes or no, for certifying something. The Government must frame clear laws, and then enforce them. This will help simplify laws and administration, and will change people's attitudes.

On the problem of overstaffing of government:

You can't retrench in the Government, but you can allow for wastage and staff properly in new departments. My answer is that instead of clerks have more teachers. I would say, transfer employment from non-productive to productive uses.

On the fate of his EARC reports:

I found secretaries sympathetic; the difficulties were at the level of ministers because my reports meant that decisions would have to be taken lower down or would simply not come to government.

On his approach to the job:

I propose to go into how the secretariat functions, work methods, consultation process, how files go up and down, controls and regulations and the work of agencies that deal with the public. I want to avoid writing reports. Instead, I want to focus on areas of reform which would be possible to implement on their own. I'm not sure if it is an achievable task.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you think you don't yet, we have one that ha to make you think twic

Accountants can draft financial statements.

Travel agents can process requests within seconds.

Architects can study scale models.

Printing firms can get typesetting done directly, reducing costs.

All secretaries can edit, rewrite, rephrase letters.

Recruitment agencies can store applications.

Whatever your business or profession or passion, once you read about the Chi², our new computer, you won't need to think twice about buying it.

Chi²: The best reason first

People say the Chi² is as easy to use as a telephone. All we'd say is it's simple because it's advanced.

Chi²: 5,000 reasons more

Besides, the Chi² is IBM PC/XT 'compatible'. That word simply means it is capable of running over 5,000 programs created for the IBM PC/XT, the world's largest selling Personal Computer.

Which means it can increase efficiency, cut down costs, save time and put the future at your fingertips. In 12 different ways shown above, and in nearly 4988 ways more.

Chi²: Ready to grow with you

And in case these readymade programs don't suit you, we'll help to devise some more specially for you.

Then there's something even more special: a computer more powerful than the Chi² PC.

The Chi² PC/XT.

And because IBM PC software grows with the times, the Chi² will be useful for years.

So all you need to do now is give us a reason to keep the Chi² ready for y make a call to our office.

SPECIFICATIONS

Microprocessor: 16 Bit, Intel 8088

Memory: 256 KByte RAM

Storage Capacity: 360 KByte × 2 5¼" floppy (Chi²PC)
360 KByte on 5¼" floppy, plus MByte hard disk (Chi²PC/XT)

Printer: 132 column dot-matrix p with near letter quality

Colour Graphics: Fully supported

Manufactured by Minicomp Pvt.

CIL PC 8 2536

Marketed and Serviced by

CHOWGULE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

The new force in office equipment

Bakhtawar, 4th floor, Nariman Point, Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...eed a computer ...,001 reasons

Ad agencies can chalk out media plans.

Administrators can compare actuals with forecasts.

Executives can get three-dimensional graph charts.

Stockbrokers can evaluate investment options.

Public hospitals can store case histories.

Magazine publishers can use it in circulation depts.

* Pronounced CHAI SQUARE

So simple because it's so advanced.

IBM is the Registered Trade Mark of International Business Machines Corporation

...5182 • Allahabad Bank Bldg., 17 Parliament Street, New Delhi 110 001. Tel: 310325, 310426, 310227.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

brings you a complete range of energy-efficient Industrial Luminaires.

Engineered for high efficiency and designed to suit any high, medium or low bay application as well as different atmospheres like high ambient temperature/humidity in rolling and textile mills, corrosive vapours in fertiliser and chemical plants, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:

Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

FICCI's Message: Insist on purity and right weight.

Heros' BE-780 A

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAHUA ROYCHOWDHURY

Mysterious Death

IT WAS an end similar in all but one thing to the tear-jerkers in which she had acted—its illogicality. Mahua Roychowdhury, 32, the reigning queen of the Bengali screen, who died last fortnight in a Calcutta hospital after battling for 10 days against third-degree burns, created an even bigger splash in her death than at any time in her successful career. Police doubt if she could have suffered burns due to the bursting of an oil-stove, as testified to by her husband and later on by herself. And the suicide theory—however tempting—falls flat on its face due to lack of tangible information regarding the possible motive for such an action.

By far the busiest actress in the Bengali film industry, Mahua had 15, or nearly a third of the total number of Bengali films, riding on her shoulders at the time of her death. She had almost all by herself put the Bengali cinema on a come-back trail with Lal Golap in 1983 and Shatru, last year's runaway success which grossed a whopping Rs 90 lakh on a modest investment of Rs 6 lakh. Her performance in respected movie director Tapan Sinha's television film, Aadmi Aur Aurat, telecast in June, won her critical acclaim—a gain that corrected her reputation of merely filling the box-offices coffers. Suicide would have been too unthinkable a turn of event in the middle of such a steep and dramatic ascent.

According to the statement of her husband Tilak Chakravarty, Mahua had returned with him from a party at the next-door flat of film director Anjan Chowdhury (the maker of Shatru) around July 12-13 midnight when the accident happened. Mahua, said Chakravarty, had lighted the stove when it suddenly burst, engulfing her in fire. However, the version did not square with the fact that the stove had been found intact by the police later on. There wasn't a drop of kerosene oil in it whereas doctors at the emergency ward of Calcutta Medical Research Institute, a private hospital near Mahua's home at Behala in the outskirts of Calcutta, said that she stank of kerosene when she was brought there.

Mahua Roychowdhury and (bottom) her funeral: reopened case

GOUTAM CHATTERJEE

However, the Criminal Investigation Department (CID) of the West Bengal Police closed the case on July 18 after Mahua had herself given a statement that the fire had been accidentally caused. Significantly, she did not mention any explosion. But, goaded by the noise made in the local media and persistent doubts expressed by some members of the film industry who knew the actress closely, the state police reopened the case shortly after her death. One of the first things they did was to interrogate afresh Chakravarty, 38, and Mahua's ex-dancer father, Nilanjan Roychowdhury, who lived with his married daughter and, with his son-in-law, managed her finances. A CID official told INDIA TODAY that one of Mahua's several joint accounts kept in banks with her husband and father was closed at her bidding only four days before the incident.

Mahua's seven-year-old son, Tamal, is still too dazed to speak. Her friend, starlet Ratna Ghoshal, who spent sleepless nights at the hospital ever since Mahua was admitted, said nothing beyond her conviction that "it was a plain and simple accident". But police claim they have cracked some witnesses who have admitted that Mahua and Tilak had drunk a lot that evening, and that the fire incident was in fact preceded by a bout of drunken brawling in the presence of the father, the child and their two domestic helpers. One investigator hinted that heavy kitchen utensils were used by the couple against each other. This claim was prima facie supported by two pieces of evidence: the post mortem revealed marks of haematoma under Mahua's eye and on her back, suggesting that she had been badly bruised; and Tilak had a badly sprained ankle which he said he had got while trying to rescue his wife.

Police say they have also dug up evidence of a chronic cycle of depression and alcoholism in Mahua's personal life, caused reportedly, by her fling with a producer in Bangladesh and resentment at being kept on a short leash by her husband and father, the manager-duo. Nilanjan, for that matter, was totally de-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kirloskarvadi

Some of the most fierce fluid handling battles are fought and won from these grounds. These contests have not been with Indian manufacturers alone, but often with global contenders.

Kirloskar Brothers Ltd., (KBL) competed with the Japanese, the Germans and the British to supply Butterfly Valves for the Bhatsai Water Supply Project - A World Bank aided project. And won !

The gold went to KBL when it designed and developed the 8UP2MC boiler feed booster pump for Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd., for their 210 MW Thermal Power Stations located throughout the country. The design was intensively tested for its ability to stand thermal shocks in simulated conditions in fields the customers specified.

104 electrically operated sluice valves in the size range of 50 mm to 1200 mm were installed in various pumping systems handling make up raw water, cooling water for furnaces, mill scale laden water and hot compressed air. A keenly contested battle in which KBL romped home with the order from Bhilai Steel Plant.

It is this engineering strength that has earned KBL the position of the leader in fluid handling. And it is innovative stamina that will keep it ahead.

Kirloskar

Leaders in fluid handling since 1920

KIRLOSKAR
BROTHERS LIMITED
Udyog Bhavan, Tilak Road, Pune-411 002.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

pendent on his daughter and lived with her, leaving his wife in a cheap and shabby home in the less affluent suburb of Dum Dum. Tilak, who gravitated to films as a child artiste in the 50's, was a subsequent failure in showbusiness and settled for a small job in a bank. "There is no doubt that Mahua was their bread ticket," said a fellow actress who would not go on record but emphatically claimed that it could not have been an accident.

CID officials have also discovered that Mahua had once earlier tried to kill herself. "If we accept it was a case of suicide then everything else falls in place, including her statement which could have been an attempt to cover up the embarrassment," the officials say. Their reasoning is that Mahua was drunk, and overcome by depression after the fight, set herself on fire. As the Special Inspector General of Police (Crime), Rathin Bhattacharjee, explained: "Now it is entirely up to the forensic department to determine whether accidental death can be totally ruled out."

Specialising in plain-as-Jane girl-next-door roles, Mahua neither had the glamour of a Suchitra Sen, Bengal's screen legend, nor the talent of a Madhabi Mukherjee, the most famous of the Satyajit Ray heroines. But she was luckier than perhaps all of them as she could create an empathy with the audience for her sheer ordinariness and got her slot readymade in the most popular of Bengali pot-boilers, the domestic drama. Ironically it was through Suchitra Sen's personal make-up man that Mahua's father, who had been long planning a career in films for his daughter, got her the first screen role—that of a zestful teenager in the famour 1971 chart-buster called Shriman Prithwiraj.

But her career nosedived shortly afterwards and even getting paired with the famed Uttam Kumar could not save her career. She was married to Tilak in 1976 and was cast with him in yet another unsung bomb. And, as recession hit Tollygunj, the nerve centre of the Bengali film industry, Mahua fared no better than others going along with the on a downhill course, except for flashes in the pan like Sheshraksha, Pipasa and Sabitri Satyaban—films that did relatively well in the districts. But she came back with a vengeance in a film called Dadar Kirti, directed by Tarun Mazumdar, the maker of Shriman Prithwiraj. Running for 50 weeks in Calcutta, the film pulled up the moribund Bengali cinema by the boot-straps. Nor did Mahua have to look back again. She bagged the Filmfare best actress award for regional films for her performance in Dadar Kirti.

Financial success in low-budget regional films compares very poorly to success on a national scale, and actors and actresses in Bengali films are often cheaply hired. Even the guru of Bengali cinema Uttam Kumar, never commanded much more than a lakh of rupees in the high noon of his career. Even films in colour are generally made within a budget of around Rs 10 lakh. Despite such daunting circumstances, Mahua could raise her fees pretty fast and to heights that no other Bengali actress has ever reached. She was reported to be demanding, and getting, around a lakh of rupees per film from this year.

Maybe success was first delayed and when it came it did all at a time for Mahua, the daughter of a lower middle class family, in the money-starved Bengali film industry suddenly recovering from its protracted coma. But after having relied so heavily on her, the industry will be hard put to get another pair of crutches to hobble on. "Stars don't grow overnight," said Tarun Mazumdar who should know. But the shattering loss to Tollygunj apart, the mysterious burning to death of Mahua Roychowdhury will remain a taut suspense drama till all the elements in it are properly explained away.

—SUMIT MITRA with INDRANIL BANERJIE in Calcutta

Stills from Mahua's films: critical acclaim

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

long with th
ept for flashe a, Pipasa a at did relativ she came b
m called D Mazumdar, man Prithwi
0 weeks in C pulled up t gali cinema
aps. Nor d to look ba bagged th ctress award for her perf
ar Kirti. success in lo
al films co orly to succe scale, and a sses in Beng cheaply hire of Bengali ci
Kumar, nev much mo
f rupees in th is career. Eve are generall a budget o lakh. Despi
g circumstan ould raise he and to height
Bengali actres
hed. She w e demanding ound a lakh from this yea cess was fir hen it came e for Mahu
f a lower mi
mily, in th
Bengali fil
enly recove tracted com ing relied s
, the industr to get anoth
s to hobble o grow over arun Mazum ld know. Ba g loss
t, the myste to death owdhury w ut suspens e elements
ly explain

with INDRA
ERJIE in Calcu

NTC
Fabrics for all tastes

Poplins, cambrics, drills, denims, rubias, suitings, dhotis, sarees, shirtings — in Pure Cottons and Polyester Blends.

NTC

NATIONAL TEXTILE CORPORATION LIMITED
(A Government of India Undertaking)
8th Floor, Surya Kiran Building,
19, Kasturba Gandhi Marg,
NEW DELHI-110 001.

Interads

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"As silent as its shadow" said an advertisement for Rolls-Royce in 1930. It was no exaggeration.

Great Classics of Motoring presented by Engine Valves Ltd.

The Silver Ghost 1907. The most famous Rolls-Royce of them all. At the end of a 15,000 mile, virtually non-stop trial, the Royal Automobile Club stripped the car. They found no wear measurable by micrometer in the engine, transmission, brakes or steering gear!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Henry Royce, the ...eer. "There's no ...thing as good ...gh ..."

"Whatever is rightly done, however humble, is noble".

The motto of Rolls-Royce, handed down from Henry Royce, the engineering genius behind the ...lls-Royce car has been a living ...ything dictum of the company ...three-quarters of a century.

The first car built by Henry ...yce was a 2-cylinder machine. ...irst ventured on the roads on ...ril 1, 1904 in Manchester. ...speed limit then was 4 mph! ...e car was a revolutionary and ...ent success.

Royce had a car but who was to ...ll it?

The Hon. C.S. Rolls. Adventurous playboy.

Charles Stewart ...olls, the other half ...the legend, was ...enormously ...ealthy aristocrat ...o raced cars ...r a pastime. ...also had a ...dealership. ...was only a matter of time ...ore the two motoring ...thusiasts met.

One drive in the Royce car had ...ls exclaiming "I have found the greatest engineer in the world!".

Soon after, Rolls-Royce Ltd was born.

The Rolls-Royce 10 hp, 15 hp, 20 hp and 30 hp cars that followed were all quiet and beautifully engineered – but no car became as famous as the 40/50 hp Rolls-Royce of 1907. One of them finished in silver was named the Silver Ghost.

The world-famous Rolls-Royce mascot "Spirit of Ecstasy" by Charles Sykes. In the interest of road safety the mascot retracts into a shell on impact.

In 1910, Rolls died in a tragic ballooning accident. Royce fell critically ill soon after. He then moved to France where he continued to design for Rolls-Royce in solitude, till he died in 1933.

One of Henry Royce's carefully guarded legacies is a maxim that remains the cornerstone of the company's engineering philosophy: "The ship is greater than the captain".

Rolls-Royce Revelations

Some extraordinary, some surprising, some well ... just 'British'!

The Rolls-Royce badge. After the death of Royce, the red letters were changed to black.

- Traditionally, the wood panels and trimmings of Rolls-Royce cars are layered with fine veneer of circassian walnut (from the Caucasus mountains). If a wood panel were to get damaged, the owner would merely have to quote reference numbers on the panel, to get a replacement prepared with veneer from the same log(!) as a portion of each of the original logs is kept in storage.
- Steering gears are tortured by smashing them against concrete blocks for 30 hours. If they then ... not meet standard measurements they are rejected.

Phantom III, 1936. 105 mph performance in quiet, unruffled dignity.

- "Squirming Irma" a 200-pound load squirms about on sample seats to check how the seat settles with use. It reproduces the effects of a person moving on the seat one million times.

Phantom VI. 20 feet long weighing more than 3 tonnes. Still available.

- Engineers at Rolls-Royce check bearing noise in assembled engines with a stethoscope.
- While recessed door handles are in vogue, Rolls-Royce still prefer push-button handles on the exterior. Why? So that doormen at upper crust hotels like the Dorchester can open them without fumbling and losing their composure.

Camargue. The most expensive Rolls-Royce Saloon, takes 6 months to produce.

- Rolls-Royce never quotes the horsepower of their cars. All you'll get from them is a terse "sufficient".

"We're building them as slowly as we can"

Rolls-Royce is one of the last bastions of perfectionism and individual attention. In these days of mass manufacture, economies of scale rule the industry.

Maybe one day, the differences between a Rolls-Royce and other premium cars may become very very slim. However, it is unlikely even then, that any other car will ever evoke the same reverential admiration.

World-famous cars use EVL valves

Did you know that EVL valves are used on cars like BMW, Jaguar, Mercedes-Benz, Peugeot and Volvo? EVL, a member of the Rane Group, began operations in 1959, collaborating with Farnborough Engg of UK, makers of ...e famous Tranco valves. EVL exports mainly to UK, USA, Australia, ...ngapore, Malaysia. In India, EVL products are OE on ...ery vehicle ... more recently on the Maruti-Suzuki.

Engine Valves Limited

32, Cathedral Road, Madras 600 086

EVL

OBM 9168

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

Priya: angry young woman

◆ Sunday mornings have become the time to get it all out, to damn the taximen and wham the postmen. The angry young woman is Priya Tendulkar, 27, who as Rajani has become the country's best-known middle-class housewife. But Rajani is no flibbertigibberti woman, she's the whir-stir-get-lost-sir kind of lady sticking her nose— and it's a long one—into everyone else's business, teaching all the mean misters of bureaucracy a tough lesson. Last fortnight, however, Rajani had heated up gas cylinder men to boiling point and driven Bombay taxi drivers right round the bend. Over 1,000 taximen gheraoed Bombay Doordarshan saying Rajani had given them a bad name and demanded a written apology. Said an unperturbed Priya: "I do what I'm asked to do. I'm not involved with the ethics of the role."

◆ She wanted to be a graphics designer but she became, alas, Miss India instead. Since the crown landed on her pretty little head last year, the only thing Juhi Chawla has been drawing are film producers. Next month is Miss India's big debut in a film set on Arabian sands; Sultanat. It has everything you could want from a film—sex, romance, violence—and a little bit more. But the thrills are not cheap. At Rs 2.5 crore, Sultanat is billed as the biggest film of the decade. It has yet another newcomer with an impressive price-tag: Karan Kapoor, so far seen in more suiting-shirtings than almost any other male in the country. At last we'll know what he has up his sleeve. Other biggie-wiggies include Dharmendra, Sridevi, Sunny Deol. But lovely Juhi is unfazed: "It's been rough," she smiles, "but the film has turned out to be very slick."

◆ It's not such a formidable fortress after all: the old office of the new prime minister which is the new office of old Amitabh Bachchan. Pleasant whitewashed walls, olde-world green fencing, sun-dappled roses and the superstar himself driving up in his chocolate Mercedes. Ten days ago Bachchan moved in to his new seat of power at 2-A, Motilal Nehru Marg, soon after which he broke his silence in Parliament. "It took me a while to get acclimatised to political life," he grinned, "and now I find I have less time than ever to myself." He has managed to read most of the books that line his office though: Iacocca, Remembering Kennedy, Karma Cola.

Bachchan: seat of power

HARI OM GULATI

◆ What is green and white and red all over? Why, a blushing Rajiv Gandhi playing billiards of course. Last week, the prime minister decided not to spare the rod when he inaugurated the 25th World Amateur Billiards Championship held in New Delhi under the aegis of Taj Hotels and TISCO. But even more sparkling than his table manners—in his very first inaugural shot, he scored a cannon—was his opening speech that had all present roaring with laughter. "I haven't picked up a cue for 20 years," he beamed and blushed as he recalled his salad days at Cambridge when he had played while the others debated. "Now it's just the reverse," he groaned. Rajiv then compared billiards to politics: "One uses just the right amount of force, not more not less, for the desired results. We hit one ball to hit another... and after one ball is in the pocket you pick it up and bring it back in the game." And so politics, seems, is one ball game—and Rajiv has certainly got his hands full playing it.

Karan Kapoor and Juhi: Arabian nights

Rajiv: prime performance

HARI OM GULATI

Menaka: pet project

◆ Now that it's all over Menaka Gandhi has gone to the dogs—and cows and horses too. The once royal bahu has a very special day—that every second day—that should give her political life something to truly think about—at a neatly-kept, 6-acre hospital for animals that she has started in Raja Gardens in the name of her husband. It had long been her pet project and now she finally has the time to do it. When she arrives, bright and early, at the hospital it is usually with an armful of squeaky animals. "I pick them up on the way, mostly strays or accident victims," she explains patiently, "and we treat them, nurture them and find homes for them." There's Menaka weaning streak at last.

—Compiled by SIMRAN BHAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

back in so politics
all game—rtainly got ying it.

HARI OM G...

pet project

t it's all ov dhi has gone
nd cows
The once ro
ery special da nd day—th er political o truly b eatly-kept.
for animals
ed in Raja ame of her ad long been d now she fi o do it. When nt and early t is usually of squea ick them u tly strays or
" she exp
d we treat t and find h here's Mer
ak at last.

IMRAN BHAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13068
13067
13066
13065

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

The New Breed

With the eighth Lok Sabha in its third session, the performance of the 86 new members of parliament has been under sharp scrutiny. An analysis and interviews with a selected few indicate that they have a refreshingly different approach.

COVER STORY 78

The Rajani Phenomenon

Sponsored programmes on Doordarshan have suddenly come into their own with the massive public reaction to Rajani. The spontaneous, nation-wide approval by the common man has elevated Rajani's status to that of a national heroine.

SPECIAL FEATURE 68

The Odd Job Man

He has been unobtrusively associated with every major political initiative in the last few months, including fire-fighting forays to Nepal and Bangladesh. Almost overnight, P.Shiv Shanker, Rajya Sabha member, has become one of the most powerful men in the country.

PROFILE 65

Village Wiles

Sensational stories regarding the blinding of 60 children in a remote Kashmir village turned out to be something of a hoax. But it was also a unique ploy to focus attention on the problems of a village on the border with Pakistan.

LIVING 128

Revolution on the Road

Numerous new makes of cars, two-wheelers, and trucks are preparing to make their debut on Indian roads. The new generation of vehicles promises to revolutionise the industry with the quantum improvement in economy, power, safety and style.

BUSINESS 100

The Big Break

The World Amateur Billiards Championship in Delhi produced yet another Indian world title-holder in the young and talented Geet Sethi, the third so far. With an Indian also holding the world title in snooker, India exerts a virtual stranglehold on the sport.

SPORTS 136

CONTENTS

COMMENT 14
VOICES 14
INDIANOTES 19
CURRENT EVENTS
Punjab: The Election Question 22
Gujarat: A Land of Scandal 26
Assam: Prospects of Peace 28
Congress(I): Costly Flak 33
Delhi: Extreme Danger 34
Andhra Pradesh:
Leader in Waiting 40
Orissa: Battle Ground 45
Tamil Nadu: Shying Away 46
West Bengal: Allies at War 52
Kerala: Leaky Controversy 54
Kerala: Merger Blues 55
CRIME
Punjab & Sind Bank:
Loans to the Dead 56
Narcotics: Cutting the Conduit 58
PROFILE
P. Shiv Shanker:
The Odd Job Man 65
SPECIAL FEATURE
Doordarshan:
The Rajani Phenomenon 68
COVER STORY
Rajiv's MP's: The New Breed 78
NEIGHBOURS
Sri Lanka: The Fight for Peace 93
TRADE WINDS 97
BUSINESS
Automobiles:
Revolution on the Road 100
Swadeshi Polytex:
Change of Guard 108
SFT: Missing Links 113
Detergents: Clean Winner 115
IPCL: In the Top Bracket 116
Economy Monitor 120
Markets: Still Rising 125
LIVING
Keran: Village Wiles 128
ENVIRONMENT
Rajasthan:
Stream of Destruction 133
SPORTS
World Billiards Championship:
The Big Break 136
HEALTH
Sex: Mounting Myths 139
THE ARTS
Thakazhi Sivasankara Pillai:
Crowning Achievement 140
ARCHITECTURE
Calcutta: Wiping Out History 144
SCIENCE
Dhruva: Nuclear Landmark 148
EYE-CATCHERS 152

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Geometric designs have always been there. Right now they are on top."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The geometry factor in art, introduced by early Egyptian architects and artisans, has had a lasting impact on aesthetic concepts of today.

In fashion, the elements of geometry come as a liberating relief from the dominance of floral patterns. The geometric line becomes the fashionable stripe, the point and circle, a dot, the square, a check. Add to these the cube, zig-zag, diamond and arc and we have a panoply of shapes, simple yet permanent. Since these shapes are fundamental, they allow ground colours to have full play.

"Geometric" is the new story line for Garden-Vareli fabrics — trendy, futuristic...in keeping with the image of the modern woman as a liberated one."

Praful A. Shah, Managing Director, Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd.; Chairman, Vareli Group.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Binatone

51 Cms. Colorama Deluxe.

Introducing the standards by which Indian Colour TVs will be measured for years to come.

Designed by Binatone's in-house R&D teams in London and Japan, the Colorama Deluxe ensures laser sharp picture clarity, true-to-life colour resolution, hi-fi sound reproduction through its unique 4 speaker system and contemporary styling. A marvel of modern technology backed by after-sales service of exacting international standards, i.e. No. 1 in the country.

So, before you buy your colour TV.
See Binatone.Then decide.

Better Buy

Binatone

England Germany Japan Korea Taiwan Hongkong.
Now in India.

Built better to last longer

Manufactured in India by Binatone Electronics Private Limited 58-B, Site IV, Sahibabad Industrial Area, Sahibabad 201008 (UP)

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE
VOLUME X NUMBER 16
FOR THE FORTNIGHT AUGUST 16-31, 1985

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA
AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI SUNIL SETHI
SUMIT MITRA
SHEKHAR GUPTA
RAJU SANTHANAM
PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE RAJ CHENGAPPA
BOMBAY JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
WASHINGTON INDERJIT BADHWAR
LONDON BONNY MUKHERJEE

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

DESIGN CONSULTANT AUROBIND PATEL

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK ANUPAMA GOPAL
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN
SURESH UNNY

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA
ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE ANITA BAVEJA

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT: POST BOX 69. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE. MIDDLE CIRCLE NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A & B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II. NARIMAN POINT. BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152. 2029326. 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY ● 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS. NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841. 312070. 121776. TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● EAGLN CHAMBERS. 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD. MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 87188. 87748. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS ● 74/1 ST. MARKS ROAD. BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448. 579037. 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46 C CHOWRINGEE ROAD. CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398. 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. CALCUTTA ● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

DIPLOMATIC MOVE

Rajiv Gandhi has ingeniously proved his acumen in diplomacy and statesmanship by resolving the Punjab problem ("Breakthrough", August 15). The Punjab imbroglio which was simmering needed an exigent solution and by cooperating with the Government in reaching the settlement, the Akali Dal President, Harchand Singh Longowal, should also be hailed. By granting most of the Akali demands—transferring of Chandigarh to Punjab, sharing of river water, rehabilitation of army deserters and disposal of pending cases—Rajiv Gandhi has considerably appeased the sentiments of the Sikhs. However, the clause providing greater autonomy to the state in the Anandpur Sahib resolution should be relinquished as other states would also demand increased federalism if it is granted to Punjab.

As a mediator, Governor Arjun Singh has done a great job in getting the Akalis to the negotiating table. One tends to think that if the negotiation was made a few months back, then perhaps hundreds of innocent lives could have been saved. But we should now stop thinking of the past and hope that the accord works out successfully.

Bangalore K. CHIDANAND KUMAR

■ Your cover story on the vexed Punjab problem, which eluded a solution due to the rigid posture adopted by the Government and the religious leaders, is another feather in the cap of our prime minister. However, at a time when efforts are being made to assuage the feelings of the Sikhs and the mood is of national reconciliation, your showing the ravaged Akal Takht was highly inappropriate.

New Delhi MANU BHALLA

■ Having achieved what is negotiated for the people of Punjab, Akali Dal, their new caretaker, would now have to exterminate all extremists hiding there and thwart their potentially destructive engineered machinations. Immigration from across the Punjab border would also have to be selective and under constant scrutiny. After all, the peace that has returned here after such a long time has to be durable.

Sagar, Madhya Pradesh SACHIN SAKSENA

INTRIGUING DRAMA

The article on the disappearance of the Nitya Ram and Nitya Nanak ("Voyage into Oblivion", August 15) makes intriguing reading. The whole episode reminds me of the true story that appeared in an American detective magazine. The story revolved around a man who got himself into hot financial waters and tried to collect insurance over his corpse. This owner also seems to think in terms of insurance and it is hoped that the New India Assurance Company will accede to the wishes of the families of the crew to withhold all payments till formalities are complete.

Insurance payments apart the authorities should take strong action against the man for negligence and suppressing information.

Bangalore A. BRITO

■ Your article on the disappearance of the ships highlights the serious shortcomings in the Indian merchant navy, and the callous attitude of the ship owner and the authorities combined show that there is no regard for the men that go down to the sea. It is a well-known practice of the ship owners to try and pass the various surveys by spending as little money as possible with very little regard to the safety aspect, and if someone has the courage to question the safety aspect the person concerned is usually sent on leave and paid no wages. The various authorities are very fast to act upon a crew member but extremely reluctant to do so with a ship owner.

New Delhi CAPT C.M. KHULLER

WINDOW-DRESSING

The frantic face-lift prior to the prime minister's visit to the tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh and Orissa ("Tribal Trail", August 15) placed the state Government squarely in the dock. They reduced his visit to the level of a farce and a fraud. It reminds one of the story in an army unit where the wife of the visiting dignitary tried to pluck a flower, the entire bush came into her hands—the result of last minute window-dressing. The prime minister should proceed on such tours on very short notice, otherwise it deceives the entire purpose.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Lucknow — LT COL S.K. MUSHRAN

DEPRIVED FARMERS

Your cover story on the stock-market ("New Money Spinner", July 31) made interesting reading. The lucid style helped the general reader understand the article easily. The stock-markets have succeeded in attracting the middle class but the farmers, who form such a major part of our population, are still ignorant about the industrial developments. They are totally deprived of the benefits of industrialisation. In the other developed countries they play a major role in the stock-market transactions.

Dharwad, Karnataka — S.N. BHAT

■ Your article has presented only a partial picture. The troubles the upcountry investors face and the cheating the brokers do with tacit support of the stock exchange authorities were ignored.

In December 1982, I bought some cash shares of Ranbaxy from a Delhi broker paying the full amount. When I met the broker in February this year, I was told that no delivery is to be given as the authorities have decided that all pending deliveries of shares be settled on the prevailing rate on March 26, 1984, and yet no payments have been received. As you can see the payments have been delayed by more than a year. On writing to the concerned authorities I was told to collect that amount now. Today I cannot even buy half the original contracted shares and the amount of loss small investors like myself face and the phenomenal profits the brokers get will only embolden them to further cheat the investors.

Sindri, Bihar — K. APPALACHARYULU

■ Your cover story made interesting reading, in that you did touch upon a very important cause of the current "boom" —too much money chasing too few shares.

However, the statement attributed to Amrit Lal Bajaj ("In Japan where shares are quoted at 50 times net post-tax earnings of companies") is very misleading. The price-to-earnings ratio of Japanese blue-chips was 7:7 in 1980, 14:5 in 1981, 13:8 in 1982, 16:2 in 1983 and 14:5 in 1984. Bajaj may have come across one or two companies with such high ratios but they are definitely the exception rather than the rule.

Shares in India are overpriced and seem to be riding on the reality of the "Great Fool Theory" which states: if I am fool enough to buy shares at today's ridiculous prices, there will be an even greater fool who will buy the shares at tomorrow's ridiculous prices.

Bombay — AJIT DAYAL

CONFORMIST PRESS

In your Comment "The Media Message" (July 31) you say "the print media has never before been so approving of the policies and actions of a head of government as it has been with Rajiv these past few months. Praise and approval have been lavish; criticism, where it has been delivered, has been guarded. And yet the media is accused of irresponsibility." I find the implied definition of journalistic responsibility quite unsettling and disturbing. Do you mean that responsibility in journalism is to flatter the Government or its head? If so, I must accuse you of spawning a pretty perverse, and highly irresponsible, definition of journalistic responsibility.

If, as you say, the press has been lavish in its praise and approval of Rajiv Gandhi as the head of the Government, I would say that is irresponsible. The press has been unduly guarded in its criticism of him, that again is irresponsible. In a democracy, for a free press to do either, is to fail in its full duty, which must essentially be adversarial in spirit. In view particularly of the fact that the electronic media, with the widest reach, are the Government's mouthpieces, and the fact that the national opposition is so weak and fragmented, the need for the print media to perform such an adversarial role is all the more great. In these circumstances, a conformist press would be worse than a blinkered or muzzled press.

Bombay — C. ANTONY LOUIS

PRICEY NAME

Apropos the article "Peico: Name Game" (July 31) Savita Kohli deserves kudos for whatever reason had prompted her to probe into something which is most often taken for granted: thinking everything that glitters is gold. Apart from the unpleasant fact that 'Philips' products are manufactured by lesser known firms, what is more than shocking is the exorbitant price the ignorant customers have to pay just for a name, and that too a pilfered one.

Neyyattinkara, Kerala — K.P. MOHAN

■ Savita Kohli has sent a chill down the spine of many a company who will now be answerable to the public. Example: "manufacturers" of bulbs, fluorescent tubes, TV's, and refrigerators. The concept of farming out manufacturing jobs to ancillary industries hangs in the balance.

Mysore — L.A. RAMANATHAN

■ I hope your article serves as an eye-opener for the prospective buyers and a warning to those already engaged in such fraudulent activities.

Surat — KANDARP JANI

HEART-RENDING CASE

Your special feature on the agony of Kalahandi (July 31) was excellent and heart-touching. Kalahandi is perhaps not the only case. There may be several Kalahandis in the country, if not in Bihar itself.

This is the irony of fate: that our leadership is trying to push the country forcefully towards the electronic and space age while the people are forced to sell their children for survival.

Patna — QAMAR BALIGH

■ Your special feature should open the eyes of the higher-ups in the Indian hierarchy. A country, which has eminent personalities forming aid committees to help the starving people of other countries, may now spare a thought for the drought-affected within her own folds. It is the duty of the Government to try and put a little more life into the "living skeletons" of Kalahandi.

Ranchi — SOURABH MISHRA

INCOMPLETE LIST

Benjamin Netanyahu is absolutely correct when he says "Terrorism is a cancer" (July 31). But in his list of "cancerous" states, he has forgotten to add his country's godfather—the US.

New Delhi — BRAJENDRA SINGH

INITIAL PROBLEM

In your cover story "Out in the Wilderness", (January 31) it is reported that K.M. Hooda addressed the gathering at Charan Singh's residence. This is factually incorrect. It may have been R.K. Hooda, who is a Lok Dal (then DMKP) leader from Haryana, who addressed this gathering. I am a Congress(I) man and had nothing to do with it.

Chandigarh — K.M. HOODA

The error is regretted. —Editor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY of March 31, 1983, carried a report captioned "SSB—Out for Blood" by CHAITANYA KALBAG to the effect that my organisation, Sweccha Sevak Bahini, namely, our Volunteer Force, was a well organised paramilitary force which was responsible for all the violence during the fraudulent Assembly election in February, 1983. He also accuses me of being a member of the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangha (RSS). On becoming aware of the report, I instituted a case of defamation against Mr Kalbag and INDIA TODAY in a Guwahati Court. INDIA TODAY applied to the Supreme Court of India for transfer of the case to a court outside Assam. As a result of a settlement reached between us, INDIA TODAY has agreed to publish my article, which is a reply to the report filed by Mr Kalbag.

Mr Kalbag has said that he met me in a darkened room somewhere in Guwahati along with 10 others. This is not true since I have never met Mr Kalbag in a darkened room anywhere, alone or with anyone else. He has also attributed the statement "the Government does not know how to keep us in jail" to me. This statement, when weighed against the fact that I have been detained about 50 times during the last four years, should be enough to show that I could never have said any such thing; for my experience has been that the Government has been quite adept in keeping my friends and me in jail without trial on a number of occasions.

AASU's Volunteer Force, contrary to the aspersions made by Mr Kalbag, is not an underground organisation, and has never functioned as such at any time. It is a force without strength of arms, but is a force with the moral strength of believing in the ideals of Bapuji. Incidentally, though my organisation is known as the Sweccha Sevak Bahini in Assamese and the Volunteer Force in English in Assam, it has never been known as the "SSB". Possibly the mix up is with another force of the same name, the Social Security Bureau, set up by the Government immediately after the Chinese aggression in 1962.

Now, to counter Mr Kalbag's allegation that I am a member of the RSS, let me set the record straight by stating that neither I nor any members of my family have ever been members of that organisation. As a matter of fact, I made a public statement (which was widely reported in the local press) that if Mr Kalbag's allegation was proved to be true, I would resign from the AASU executive. Needless to say, I continue to be a member of the AASU executive even now, and have taken part in a number of negotiation meetings with the Government in that capacity. Mr Kalbag, if he was so sure of his facts, could have taken me up on this issue during all this time. Suffice to say that he has done no such thing.

Mr Kalbag has also made a very serious allegation against my brother Daya Sarma. My brother is now dead, having been brutally killed by migrants from Bangladesh in his own homeland. It is a matter of record that my brother was killed on his own farm in broad daylight by a horde of armed men. Surely my brother had the right to self defence in such a situation.

Mr Kalbag has also alleged that I got employment in the Assam State Electricity Board on the strength of my law degree. Let me again set the record straight by clarifying that I passed my LL.B. examination well after the publication of Mr Kalbag's captioned article.

As a citizen of a democratic country, I am proud of the freedom available to the press in India. How I wish that this freedom is never misused to print inexact and inaccurate statements, for liberty is not meant to be a licence to print and publish anything that comes into the writer's mind.

Guwahati — JOYNATH SARMA

Chaitanya Kalbag replies

MR SARMA's claim that he never met me is incorrect. My notes of the meeting amply contradict this claim.

On March 6, 1983, I met some AASU office-bearers at the Gauhati Medical College and was informed that Mr Sarma had just been released from imprisonment under NSA.

I was taken to the Chenikuthi area in Guwahati and was accompanied by INDIA TODAY photographer Pramod Pushkarna, who took the picture printed in the report.

From my notes it is clear that there were several other people in the darkened living-room of the house where Mr Sarma was staying. They included Dhruba Baisya, publicity secretary of AASU, AASU's Nagen Sarma and the Swechha Sevak Bahini's Deepak Das.

The statement "the Government does not know how to keep us in jail" is authentic and was made by Mr Joynath Sarma. It was Mr Sarma who pointed out that the Jalukbari P.S. case was filed on January 25, 1983, three days before the Assam Executive Magistrate (Temporary Powers) Act was promulgated, thus nullifying his arrest. During the meeting on March 6, 1983, Mr Sarma said: "Yesterday I argued before the CJM (Chief Judicial Magistrate)."

The abbreviation "SSB" was clearly that of the Sweccha Sevak Bahini, the Assamese name for what Mr Sarma calls the "Volunteer Force." I have covered the North-eastern region long enough not to confuse the Bahini with the Government's Social Security Bureau (SSB).

As for the charges about Mr Sarma's links with the RSS, it is well known that the RSS does not maintain membership records. From my conversations with Mr Sarma and other reliable sources in Assam Mr Sarma's denial on this score does not stand up.

The differences in AASU's leadership were so deep that several leading Muslim members led by Nurul Hussain, who led AASU when all its leaders including Prafulla Mahanta and Bhrigu Phukan were in jail, walked out of the organisation.

Furthermore, the Press Trust of India said on April 29, 1983, that AASU had suspended its sub-committee on Volunteer Force. Why suspend a body that Mr Sarma claims was a force "with the moral strength of believing in the ideals of Bapuji"?

I never directly described the Bahini as an underground force. I said "SSB men are trained, say sources, to organise a sustained underground movement..." This clearly shows that the organisation had the capacity to operate underground.

As far as Mr Sarma's claim that the Bahini is "a force without strength of arms", in his petition before the Addl CJM, Kamrup, Guwahati, filed on 21.4.83, Mr Sarma says "the SSB is the volunteer force of the AASU with the avowed object of imparting (sic) physical training to the students..." Mr Sarma has not explained why a social service organisation needs physical training.

The "matter of record" about Mr Sarma's brother Daya Sarma's death is subject to question. Conditions in the Sipajhar area, where he died, were highly disrupted during the 1983 elections. The version of Daya Sarma's death as it appeared in INDIA TODAY was given after making due inquiries and there is no reason to believe otherwise.

Mr Sarma also avoids denying my charge that he was employed in the Assam State Electricity Board because of his ties to chairman Umanath Sarma.

INDIA TODAY's reports on the Assam elections did not reflect a tendency to "publish anything that comes into the writer's mind." In the three major reports I wrote it was shown that the elections were uncalled for, spawned widespread violence and shattered government credibility. No criticism of government and official mistakes was spared. Surely Mr Sarma cannot complain about that? If in the pursuit of truth some unpleasant facts emerge into the cold light of print it is a small price to pay for Bapuji's ideals.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Okay, okay, but how can you take me

ACIL-BC-66/85 B

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

how far me anyway?"

Consider: The Times of India daily offers you excellent coverage with prime English readership in West and North, through its Bombay, Ahmedabad, Delhi and Lucknow Editions. And, through associate agreements, Jaipur and Bangalore as well.

The Economic Times, as India's leading financial daily, gives you the business and professional readership in Bombay, Delhi and Calcutta. The Maharashtra Times gives you Maharashtra and parts of Goa, while the Navbharat Times gives you Delhi and the surrounding North, with the advantage of a substantial Bombay readership. Add to that the national magazines that cover most interest groups, and you'll understand just how far we can take you.

With that kind of a reach, it's no wonder The Times of India Group is the backbone of any media plan.

More for your money.

The Times of India Group of Publications

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I'd never give up my Remington!"

Available in English and 12 Indian languages

The experienced typist knows there's no substitute for Remington reliability

REMINGTON Troublefree typewriters since 1876

CLARION C-RRS-2

Available from Remington offices at:
Calcutta ◻ Patna ◻ Guwahati ◻ Bhubaneswar ◻ Ranchi ◻ Allahabad ◻ Bombay ◻ Pune ◻ Nagpur ◻ Ahmedabad ◻ Bhopal
Delhi ◻ Chandigarh ◻ Amritsar ◻ Jaipur ◻ Kanpur ◻ Lucknow ◻ Meerut ◻ Dehradun ◻ Madras ◻ Tiruchirapalli ◻ Bangalore
Ernakulam ◻ Visakhapatnam ◻ Hyderabad

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rural Waste

THERE is a welcome new stress in the Government and the country on efficiency: efficiency in the use of public money, in industrial operations, in the choice of technologies, in getting the best out of public facilities, and much else. However, most of the emphasis so far has been on only the more modern, urban and industrial sectors of the economy. Although more than 40 per cent of plan investment goes into agriculture, irrigation and social services, far too little attention has been given so far to these sectors to assess the efficiency of public investment, and the social and economic returns on this investment.

Yet this is an area requiring urgent attention, perhaps even more than the admittedly inefficient Indian industry. Close to Rs 100,000 crore will be spent in these sectors in the next five years, and it will be a colossal national waste if it is not ensured that this money is spent well and wisely, to yield proper returns. A recent assessment of the Integrated Rural Development Programme (IRDP) showed enormous wastage and leakages. A study by the National Environmental Engineering Research Institute revealed that 30 per cent of the drinking water facilities created in the rural areas do not work. Another survey in Orissa showed that 40 per cent of hand pumps were out of order. As for another area of increasing national concern, forestry programmes have traditionally been ineffective, so that the forest cover in Gujarat—instead of being the 11 per cent claimed by the state's forestry officials—is actually no more than around 4 per cent. It should be 33 per cent. If these examples are typical, and one assumes an inefficiency factor of around 30 per cent on such programmes, the next five years will see investment of close to Rs 30,000 crore yielding no returns in a country that is still starved of capital.

Sometimes, the efficiency factor is even more glaring. For instance, the difference between a well-planned irrigation system and a badly planned one can be enormous: experts from the Operations Research Group (ORG) who have looked at the success of the Dantiwada irrigation project in Gujarat's Banaskantha district report mustard yields varying from 47 quintals per hectare to over 1,800 quintals, a variation explained primarily by the timely supply of irrigation water: the farmer who got his first watering late did not bother with subsequent waterings, and the crop withered. And in the case of programmes in health and family planning, the efficiency of the delivery system is all-important. The involvement of two voluntary agencies in a family planning effort in the Nilgiris resulted in a dramatic rise in the acceptance of family planning in just five years, the acceptance level going up to 80 per cent, which is more than double the national average. Clearly, the government machinery had failed to deliver the expected goods.

In quite a few cases, the truth is that development activity compounds the problems. Numerous irrigation projects have only resulted in waterlogging of the land because of poor drainage: in the Ukai-Kankrapara area in Gujarat, for instance, 41 per cent of the command area of over one lakh hectares is now prone to waterlogging. And in the field of energy, the seventh plan target of installing more than one lakh bio-gas plants across the country will put a price on animal dung, which will therefore be lost to the poor households that now burn dung as domestic fuel.

These and other instances involve complex issues concerning development strategies, delivery systems, control mechanisms and so on. Nevertheless, there are several down-to-earth lessons to be learnt. The most fundamental of these is that financial outlays by themselves mean nothing. Ways should be found to involve beneficiaries directly in programmes, to minimise the role of petty bureaucrats so as to reduce corruption, and to try and make available the infrastructure with which people can improve their standards of living.

Equally important, political interference or intervention in development programmes tends to make it difficult to keep a proper control of such programmes, leading to lax administration, leakages and eventually a corruption of the system. The best example here is the IRDP. Almost everyone now accepts that this has become a vehicle for an unprecedented scale of funds misappropriation. Also, programme administrators may simply be overloaded with work: one survey in Vadodara district showed that 27 implementing agencies were handling no fewer than 2,300 schemes!

There are some indications that the Government is gradually waking up to these issues. The prime minister spoke recently of recasting the IRDP, and his visits to remote, starvation-ridden tribal areas in Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and elsewhere will have given him a hands-on experience of the failures of numerous government programmes. Perhaps because of this, there is a new mood of confidence in the Ministry of Rural Development, which is pressing for more funds and greater programme priority. This is welcome, but the ministry in particular and the Government as a whole should wake up to the question of leakage and wastage in development programmes in the countryside.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOES A CRITICAL BANK DOCUMENT HAVE TO REACH NEW YORK BY TOMORROW THE LATEST?

DON'T PANIC—CONTACT DHL.

AIRFREIGHT-DHL collects consignments from your desk. And hand-delivers them to any desk in the world—with amazing speed.

Your documents and packages are rushed to their destinations across the globe by 2500 on-board DHL couriers, using 111 airlines. In fact, a DHL courier boards a plane somewhere in the world every seven minutes.

Only DHL International has the worldwide infrastructure to ensure such speed, safety and reliability.

A work force of 11,000 direct employees.

Operations in 635 offices from 146 countries.

Every day, DHL International delivers 56,000 items across the globe. The world's first international courier service is still largest.

We're changing the way the world does business.

AIRFREIGHT DHL WORLDWIDE COURIER

Contact Airfreight Pvt. Ltd. (DHL Courier Services Division) Ahmedabad: 408077, 400211, 400212 Bangalore: 561007 Bombay: Nariman Point: 224190, 230163, 230171, 243519; Ballard Estate: 265761-66; Worli: 4926643, 4926333; Airport: 6121883, 6122057 Ext. 369 Calcutta: 442174, 446279, 448401 Chandigarh: 40400 Cochin: 6163, 69477 Coimbatore: Selvalya Bldg., 8/434-D, Trichy Road; Delhi: Kasturba Gandhi Marg: 3311896, 3318945, 3318948; Nehru Place: 682360; Rajendra Place: Ground Floor, 5, Prabhat Kiran Building; Hyderabad: 225234 Kanpur: 60245, 67954, 60587 Madras: Commander-in-Chief Road: 812169, 812166, 812189, 82330, 810227; Parry's Corner: 512401, 512269; Guindy: 431349 Pune: Dr. Ambedkar Road: 26071, 26073, 28874; Wakadewadi: 54098 Quilon: 3631, 3632 Srinagar: 75540, 71268 Trichy: 32244 Trivandrum: 67231, 65863.

Trikaya AF 2.85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's First Microprocessor Based Electronic PABX. From BPL.

The country's first indigenous Microprocessor based Electronic Private Automatic Branch Exchange [EPABX] comes from BPL – the first Company in the private sector to secure an industrial licence from the Government for the manufacture of EPABX.

BPL's EPABX, field-tested and proven, is working satisfactorily in several locations. Offering upto 237 internal and 64 external lines, it caters to your vital communication needs and boosts all-round productivity, accelerates decision making and controls telephone expenses.

With an experience of nearly 2 decades in electronics and over a decade in communication, BPL is indeed a force to reckon with in these fields. Further, BPL's comprehensive in-house systems and engineering capability has helped integrate computers and communication.

BPL's Power Line Carrier Communication System and Switching Equipment have been performing effectively since 1972, in almost every electricity board in the country. That's not all. BPL's Electronic Private Automatic Exchange which provides voice and data communication has been installed in many reputed Government and Private organisations as well.

Apart from the Electronic PABX, BPL's existing Business Computers, Word Processors and Automatic Plain Paper Copiers provide a single source integrated solution to meet today's office automation requirements.

The Electronic PABX manufacturing facility is supported by seven integrated factories, three R & D units, in-house manufacture of critical components, comprehensive tool rooms and PCB plants.

The Electronic PABX from BPL – The Single Largest Integrated Source of Office Automation Products in India.

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

Computers ● Communication ● Components

Instrumentation (Industrial, Medical & Measurement) ● Office Automation ● Consumer Electronics

Central Marketing Organisation: BPL-Centre, 32, Church Street, Bangalore-560 001. Tel: 52321/2/6. Tlx: 0845-511.
Branch Offices at: Bangalore, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, New Delhi.

BPL 1150

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

The Times of India

● When you actually start sitting in the chair, you start finding all the roadblocks... that are put in your way by your best friends, the bureaucracy.
■ RAJIV GANDHI in The Statesman

● If an emergency should be declared, I will resort to dynamite again. All means are justified in overthrowing a state that turns its back on democratic values.
■ GEORGE FERNANDES in Imprint

● Everyone presumes newsreading is the easiest of all jobs. It isn't. You have to possess iron-control. It is very important to switch off your personal emotions.
■ SALMA SULTAN, TV newsreader, in Savvy

● The real problem now is the racial prejudice that exists in this country... anyone from the tribal area is an outcast. You see the shape of my nose is the stumbling block in India
■ LALDENGA in Sunday

● Rajiv's government has brought in a change. This may be a turning point. If I was thirty years younger, I would not have let Russi (Mody) head TISCO.
■ J.R.D. TATA in Bombay

● He (Jyoti Basu) is a reliable and constructive partner.
■ B.K. BIRLA in Business Standard

● What do you want me to do to make people take me seriously? Wear a placard on my back saying 'I'm an M.A.?' Is that going to make me less frivolous?
■ MOON MOON SEN in Stardust

● I love eating. It's one of my greatest joys. I have at least six meals a day as I get hungry every two hours.
■ SRIDEVI in Cine Blitz

● This surgery has forced me to give up three things I cherished most in life—wine, women and food.
■ SANJEEV KUMAR in Star & Style

● I don't have the feeling about being greatest of all. I don't feel oh! I'm the final word... I just want to function without a thought of getting fruit from what I'm doing... just for the sheer quality of the work.
■ SHABANA AZMI in Showtime

● I like to have the Shafi Inamdar stamp on every character I play... After all when I play Oedipus I decide how he walks or talks. Who knows how he dressed, walked or talked 300 years ago.
■ SHAFI INAMDAR in Eve's Weekly

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you love to be in love with Nature ...

Come close to Nature. Listen to the rhapsody of majestic pinetrees, murmuring brooks and cascades. Laze around in the sylvan splendour of Himachal. With HPTDC taking good care of you with superb facilities, experience a rare kind of happiness.

Kasauli is what idyllic holidays are made of, with enticing isolation. Browse through beautiful Barog, and Parwanoo. The Renuka Lake, with a mini Lion safari, and pilgrim's favourite, Paonta, will charm you.

How to Reach: Delhi-Shimla: By train, video coach or deluxe buses. Convenient bus connections for Chail, Kasauli & Narkanda from Chandigarh and Shimla.

HIMACHAL

FOR ALL SEASONS, ALL REASONS

HOTEL SHIWALIK, PARWANOO

HPTDC offers year-round facilities in terms of accommodation (hotels, loghuts, tourist bungalows, guest houses, etc.), catering and transport.

Avail of conducted tours in Himachal Tourism luxury Coaches/AC Cars.*

Other worth-visiting places of tourist interest in Himachal Pradesh:

Kasauli, Shimla, Sarahan, Mandi, Kullu, Manali, Chamba, Khajjiar, Dalhousie, Dharamsala, Palampur, Joginder Nagar etc.

PINE WOOD HOTEL, BAROG

* Air-conditioned & Super Deluxe Coaches Imported & Indian Cars available for various destinations in Himachal from New Delhi Chandigarh, Shimla, Manali & Dalhousie

... WE"LL MAKE IT AN AFFAIR TO REMEMBER

LOVERS' LANE, CHAIL

For detailed information and reservations, please contact Himachal Tourism Offices at:

NEW DELHI : Chandralok Bldg. 36 Janpath. Tel : 345320. 210-211, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19, Ashok Road.
CALCUTTA : 25 Camac Street. Tel : 446847.
BOMBAY : Shop No. 2, Trade Centre, Arcade World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay-400 055. Tel : 219191/284
MADRAS : 28, Commander-in-Chief Road. Tel : 812955.
CHANDIGARH : S.C.O. 1048-49, Sector 22-B. Tel : 26494.
SHIMLA : Tel : 3311, 4589, 4559.

HIMACHAL TOURISM HTH

Himachal Pradesh Tourism Development Corporation Limited
Ritz Annexe, Shimla-171001.
Phones : 6037, 3977, 5071

Compacta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nothing makes a better impression than a good address.

Holiday Inn*

Bangalore

Opening October, 1985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Located conveniently in the heart of the city. Elegantly landscaped surroundings. Overlooking the lush green expanse of the golf course. 204 beautifully appointed rooms including 10 luxurious suites. Ambience that exudes warmth and personality.

The most modern amenities. Comfortably airconditioned. 4 channel music, telephone, refrigerator, colour TV in each room. In house movies. Excellent conference and banquet facilities. Indian and speciality restaurants offering a choice of exquisite cuisine.

You could relax in the gorgeous swimming pool with flowing underwater cascades. Or, enjoy the exclusive privileges of a health club and a beauty parlour. Or go souvenir hunting in an exclusive shopping arcade featuring the most select buys in town.

Complete Italian marble flooring that gives the hotel an aura of magnificience. Glass capsule elevators that take you on a flight of fantasy. A large coloured glazed atrium for the first time in the country.

Yes, the right address in Bangalore is more than a hotel. It's a unique experience.

Holiday Inn*

Bangalore

Promoted By

Mac Charles (India) Ltd.

28, Sankey Road, Bangalore-560 052.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Anything else would be a compromise.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hawkins

FUTURA

The space-age pressure cooker

6% faster than icrowave

·s, unbelievable though it ay sound, it is true! The awkins test kitchen under- ok a series of comparative oking trials. 19 recipes om soups to desserts, inclu- ng fish, chicken, lamb, ork, beef, rice, pasta and getables, were cooked in ual quantities in a mic- wave oven and in a Haw- ns pressure cooker. In oth cases, the food was sted by an expert panel to isure that it was cooked the same proper extent. ne total average cooking me for these 19 recipes a microwave oven was 5 minutes per recipe and a Hawkins pressure oker, 24 minutes r recipe.

on't believe it? ease write for a oklet showing the tual cooking time for ch of the 19 recipes.

odern Way to Tasty Food cookbook given free with ery Futura contains 119 ternational and 18 Indian sted and tasty recipes. Be international gourmet home!

ew Jewel-grey ATILON® Finish

tura has a beautiful, wel-grey Satilon finish hich will not tarnish and harder than steel. It is tter than stainless steel cause it is stick-resistant d has 13.7 times better ermal conductivity.

ew Greater onvenience tura has a wide mouth d a shallow body for easy oking and cleaning. It s a 6.3 mm heavy base hich stays flat on your ove and is ideal for frying pressure cooking.

Space-age Safety Features

Futura's new and unique safety and convenience feature is the cool, finger-tip control which provides instant, safe steam release after cooking. While cooking, it regulates pressure with greater efficiency than any other pressure cooker.

The Futura lid is pressure-locked from inside like a modern jetliner door. It cannot be forced open while there is pressure inside.

When needed, the safety valve operates automatically under the handle which deflects steam safely.

Good Value for Rs.500*

Futura is made by Hawkins, a name trusted by Indians for 25 years.

25 traditional Hawkins models are also available at lesser cost.

All are guaranteed by Hawkins. Go for the best according to your requirement.

For the address of dealers near you, write to Hawkins Dept. 323, P.O. Box 6481, Bombay 400 016.

* Maximum recommended retail price excluding all taxes for 5 litre capacity. With separators. Rs. 50 extra. ™ Trade Mark. Patent pending. © 1985 Copyright by Pressure Cookers & Appliances Ltd.

46% faster than microwave cooking

Hawkins FUTURA®

The safest, fastest way to tasty food.

everest/85/PCA/275/323

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CATTY TALE

■ Cats are the most mysterious animals on earth. Even the tiniest kitten has a worldly-wise expression on its face and every mouser looks as if it could reveal a lot if only it could speak. Well, Anumon can.

Anumon, according to reports from Kottayam, is a sweet young pet in a middle class household. Anumon is clearly one of the more intelligent members of the cat family, because if its mistress, Sujatha, asks it its name, it will answer in mellifluous Malayalam. The one condition for listeners is that Anumon is shy and will talk only if they stand behind it. It appears to have an extensive vocabulary and first revealed its prowess six months ago when Sujatha kissed it. It said, "umma" (Malayalam for kiss) and "ammamma" (grandmother) and "aana" (elephant). And so, Anumon and Sujatha began carrying on regular conversations.

Nowadays, the lady is greeted in the mornings by the sight of Anumon stretching out on her bed and wishing her a very distinct 'good morning', which would have delighted Professor Higgins no end. And wouldn't the great T.S. Eliot have included Anumon in his Old Possum's Book Of Practical Cats, if he was alive? Meow!

TWO EQUALS ONE!

■ The threat is well-known. Deep in his cellar, a mad scientist peers along a row of tiny beds in which identical babies are bawling. They are the clones of the master-type with whom he will rule the world.

But the mad scientist wouldn't be very happy to learn that mother nature, as always, has beaten him to the draw: in Alleppey, the Govindramans, octogenarian twin brothers, could be the forerunners of a new race.

The Govindramans, like most twins, share quite a few things, but unlike most twins, their love and affinity for each other is astounding. They sleep on a single cot, eat from the same plate and when the time comes to expound words of wisdom, they speak simultaneously causing the unwary to wonder where the echo is from. They even have the same wife, gentle Janaki, who recalls the day when both of them tied a thali on her.

Recently Govindraman and Govindraman fell and injured themselves at the same time, needless to say. Of course, it was a single bed for both in hospital—although some would call that carrying togetherness too far.

BATTLE CRIES

■ The monsoon causes a fair number of ruffled feathers in India, both when it arrives with a bang, as it did in Bombay, and when it doesn't arrive at all, as was the case earlier in Rajasthan. There, in a small town a hundred kilometres from Jaipur, the rains had been conspicuous by their absence for quite some time and the Adivasis were getting a little jittery. At first they blamed it on the winds, then the gods and finally, on human beings.

One fine day, the town was stormed by about 200 Adivasis brandishing fearsome-looking weapons and uttering screechy battle cries guaranteed to put the fear of god into anyone with a heart. They made their unchecked way to most of the bania-owned shops, ransacking the shelves of valuables. Soon however, they were rounded up by the police.

On being asked why they had descended upon the town in an army they replied innocently that it was the banias who had cursed the skies not to let go of the rain and they were only exacting just retribution. The police were not very impressed by this explanation and even less were the aggrieved banias who gave them a bill for a few crores. It never rains but pours.

JOY RIDES

■ Marriage parties travel in all kinds of transport—bullock carts, buses, boats, tractors. But the kulaks of Sawai Madhopur in Rajasthan do it in style—helicopters.

The father of a promising groom of Rajpur Atewa townlet was promised a dowry of Rs 60,000 if he would arrange for a helicopter for the bride and her friends to the groom's house. The bride's father paid the Rs 60,000 only to watch half of that being spent on the betrothal ceremony. The remaining was not enough for the wedding and a helicopter—and the marriage was literally shot down.

But a solution was soon reached: the bride's father agreed to let his second daughter marry into the same family and promised a dowry of Rs 1.40 lakh, in return for a helicopter ride. The groom's father hastily hired one from a Bombay firm. And in no time at all, the elder daughter was flown to her husband's village along with the remaining Rs 30,000. On the return trip, the chopper brought back her younger sister's groom. How's that for high-flying weddings?

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

leave all your Packaging Problems to our brains-

BASF
EXPANDED Styropor® PACKS.

We offer a complete packaging service which includes study of individual packaging problems & their prompt & economical solutions.

BASF–pioneers in foam packaging have solved many a difficult problem and should you have one, can solve yours too.

All you need to do is tell us your problems and we will come back to you promptly with designs, estimates, etc., to give you a pack that is aesthetic, functional and at the same time economical.

What you want is Service. BASF is here to Serve you.

Styropor® is the registered trade mark of BASF Aktiengesellschaft.
Registered users—BASF India Limited.

Styropor is made in India by:-

BASF India Limited

Maybaker House, Sudam Kalu Ahire Marg,
Bombay 400 025.

Branches at:- Ahmedabad • Calcutta • Delhi • Madras.

BASF

BIL/60-L/PREM ASSOCIATES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CALL WELCOMNET

Your direct line to 21 Welcomgroup hotels

Have you found getting a hotel reservation complicated? We'd like to tell you that reservations at Welcomgroup hotels are easy—through Welcomnet.
No matter where you are, or where you want to be. Call Welcomnet.
And finalise your booking in 60 seconds flat!
At any of the 21 Welcomgroup hotels in India, Bhutan and Sri Lanka.

WELCOMNET

Welcomgroup Hotels' Instant Reservation Network.

Delhi	3014127, 3010849
Bombay	221121, 220923
Madras	473691, 479460
Calcutta	249566, 299659
Hyderabad	222222
Bangalore	258030, 28031
Cochin	6351, 6354
Coimbatore	22629
Pune	65719
Ranchi	24900, 23110
Patna	21247
Jamshedpur	23809, 23747
Bhubaneshwar	53668
Vishakhapatnam	63638, 63639

or any Welcomgroup hotel.

ITC-8766A

WELCOMGROUP
Palaces, hotels, resorts, Indovillas

Agra	Mughal Sheraton	Bhavnagar	Nilambag Palace	Hyderabad	Banjara	Madras	Adayar Park
Agra	Mumtaz	Bhutan	Hotel Druk	Jaipur	Mansingh	Madras	Chola Sheraton
Andamans	Bay Island	Bombay	SeaRock	Jodhpur	Umaid Bhawan Palace	New Delhi	Maurya Sheraton
Aurangabad	Rama International	Goa	Cidade de Goa	Kargil	Highlands	Patna	Maurya-Patna
Bangalore	Windsor Manor	Gwalior	Usha Kiran Palace	Khimsar	Royal Castle	Srinagar	Gurkha Houseboats
						Sri Lanka	The Dolphin

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Arjun Singh at the Amritsar communal harmony meet: continuing optimism

PUNJAB

The Election Question

PUNJAB Governor Arjun Singh has succeeded where many others failed—in finding a negotiated settlement to the problem plaguing the state—but he is yet to forge a similar breakthrough on getting the Akalis to agree to hold elections in the state. As Singh sees it, elections to the state Assembly and the installation of a representative government are follow-up steps that logically flow from the Rajiv-Longowal accord. But others clearly do not see it that way. Longowal has yet to speak his mind on the subject and opposition leaders have sounded grave warnings of the threat that an election could pose to peace and communal harmony in the state.

Singh has obviously been encouraged by the popular response that the accord has evoked among a cross-section of Sikhs. A resolution at the well-represented all-party state level communal harmony committee in Amritsar, which the Akalis attended for the first time last fortnight, described the accord as a "victory of the forces of love, rationality and brotherhood." The law and order situation is also significantly better—the last three months have been the most peaceful period in the last four years. Says the Director-General of Police, Kirpal Singh Dhillon, confidently: "We are ready to hold elections any time and are waiting for a signal."

But the opposition parties have severe reservations on the political wisdom of holding elections now. They argue that the heat and din of the electioneering could embolden anti-social elements to rake up emotive and divisive issues like the Operation Bluestar, Mrs Gandhi's assassination and the subsequent bloodbath. In such a situation, the fragile peace might just break. Warned Punjab BJP president Baldev Parkash: "Elections will reopen old wounds which are far from healed...let some more months pass by and there will be a proper climate for elections." CPI(M) politburo member H.S.Surjeet also advised the governor to consolidate the present gains rather than "hurry into elections." Leaders of the CPI(M), CPI, Janata, BJP and Lok Dal told the prime minister at a meeting in New Delhi that they favoured postponement of the polls. Akali leaders Gurcharan Singh Tohra and Parkash Singh Badal, who have yet to welcome the accord, agree. Said Badal: "The heavens will not fall if we do not hold elections right now. The accord does not satisfy the Sikhs and the so-called peace is momentary."

> Handing power to the Akalis is easier said than done. The divisions in the Akali Dal (L) are just as deep as they were when Longowal signed the accord.

Singh disagrees strongly, and with good reason. "Let there be a political process to consolidate the gains. People should not be denied a popular government elected by them," he reasoned at the peace committee meeting which turned into a debate on the pros and cons of holding elections. He shrugged off arguments that terrorists would take advantage of the situation to strike by pointing out that terrorism is an unpleasant fact of life which people will have to learn to live with. Besides, he asked, where was the guarantee that terrorists would not strike if the elections were held later ? Congress(I) circles agreed. Said former foreign minister Swaran Singh: "If the terrorist scare stalls a democratic process, then we have accepted defeat. We must have elections. We must learn to swim against the worst of tides." And in New Delhi, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi told the opposition leaders: "I have always had a feeling that President's rule solves nothing."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

His declaration also underscored the feverish build-up that the state Congress(I) has been going through. Even as three dozen MP's sent by the party high command to gauge party prospects toured the state, aspirants to party tickets did the rounds of party offices in New Delhi and the major towns in Punjab. State Congress(I) chief R.S. Sparrow's statement, "We are only waiting for the Election Commission's announcement", added to the election tempo. Intelligence reports also indicated that polls in September were a feasible proposition.

Partly, the Congress(I)'s keenness stems from the unambiguity about its vote bank. The Congress(I) is clearly banking on the Hindu and Harijan vote with the projected election rhetoric that the Akalis created the Punjab mess. Other parties are not similarly placed. The CPI(M) and CPI, with four and five seats in the now-dissolved 117-member state Assembly, and the BJP, with just one seat, fear they will be left high and dry in case of a polarisation of votes along communal lines, with the Hindus voting for the Congress(I) and the Sikhs, who comprise 61 per cent of the state's population, largely voting for the Akalis.

But the strength of the Congress(I) is also its weakness. As a senior leader put it, in order to bring stability to the state the central party leadership has accepted the fact that the Akalis must be in the saddle. Explained a senior party leader: "This is a political necessity for two reasons. Firstly, the present political climate in the state demands it. Secondly, there is an urgent need to isolate terrorism, which has its links across the border, and this can be done better by bringing the Akalis back to power. The basic aim of the agitation was to capture power and if the Akalis fail this time, the accord will also fail."

Balwant Singh (second from right) after meeting high priests: instant pardon

However, the divisions in the Akali Dal (L), with Longowal on one side and Tohra and Badal on the other, are just as deep as they were when Longowal signed the accord. Charged Badal: "Longowal for the last two years has been ignoring me and my supporters. In order to finish me he had all my MLA's resign from the assembly, thus taking away my status of an opposition leader, and now he is ignoring me." He still continues to label the accord a "total sell-out", conveniently forgetting that he was prepared to accept even less favourable terms a year ago. As for Tohra, it is not a secret that he aspires to become the chief minister. In fact, the ambitions of these politicians have led to some bizarre developments. Both Tohra and Badal first met Longowal's rival Jagdev Singh Talwandi in Patiala to chalk out a common strategy to checkmate Longowal but suspicions of each other's intentions put a damper on the whole meeting. Subsequently, Badal and Tohra did a volte face and met Longowal to work out formulations to fight the elections. Badal stressed that the Akali Dal, which is currenlty split into three factions headed by Longowal, Talwandi and Baba Joginder Singh, must unite to fight the polls. "If we want to win, we must fight unitedly. Otherwise we shall be finished," he argues.

The confusion on elections has been worse confounded by goings-on in Baba Joginder Singh's United Akali Dal and some moves by the high priests. While the Baba told INDIA TODAY: "We shall decide about the elections when these are announced and only God can guide us in our relations with the rival Akali Dal," his general secretary Inderjit Singh Sekhon reportedly issued a statement welcoming the idea of elections. While the suggestion for a five-member parliamentary board to work out the seat adjustments between the two Dals has not found favour, it is believed the United Akali Dal will contest only 15 seats if polls are held—as government sources indicate—either on September 27, 28 or 29. Meanwhile, the high priests have made it clear that if the political leaders fail to unite when the elections are announced, they will issue a hukamnama merging all the Dals and taking over the role of seat allotment to Akali candidates. Said Akal Takht head priest Kirpal Singh: "We are keen for unity and shall play a positive role at an appropriate time." The priests, who were in session in Amritsar last fortnight , also exonerated Akali leader Balwant Singh of the charge that he had written a letter to Mrs. Gandhi in June last year in support of Operation Bluestar. The complaint, filed by the United Akali Dal, was disposed of in record time by getting a written reply from Balwant Singh. "We do not want to create more problems, the panth has already a bag-full of these," said one priest.

While the issue of elections hogged the headlines, the last word had apparently not been said on other matters relating to the accord. Former finance minister and one of the three leaders who met Rajiv, Balwant Singh claimed that "Rajiv and Longowal reached a definite understanding" on the issue of army deserters, Sikhs undergoing trial in special courts in Punjab and Rajasthan and adequate compensation for victims of the Punjab tragedy. Governor Arjun Singh did not deny this but hastened to disclaim: "How can I know what the prime minister and the Akali Dal president discussed in their private meeting ?" But some of the steps have taken the wind out of the criticism of the accord voiced by dissenting Akalis. These include suspension of the martial law trials and recruitment of as many Sikh army deserters as possible into the paramilitary forces. The Central Government is also actively considering financial help for the families of nearly 7,000 deserters.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A committee has also been constituted to review the cases of those arrested from the Golden Temple during the crackdown and now facing trial in special courts in Jodhpur and Ajmer. Officials say that out of 370 less than 40 will ultimately face trial. Hardcore pro-Khalistanis like former minister Sukhjinder Singh and Dal Khalsa leader Harsimran Singh have already been released and have declared their support for the accord. The Punjab Government has withdrawn cases

PUNJAB ACCORD

Behind the scenes

The Rajiv-Longowal accord on Punjab, signed on July 24 in the capital, was preceded by four weeks of behind the scenes negotiations. Few records were maintained of the unfolding events except for a slender bunch of letters, business-like and bereft of emotion, exchanged between the two leaders. Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA visited Chandigarh last fortnight to piece together, from the letters and the scraps of evidence available, a chronicle of the weeks leading to the historic accord. His report:

ARJUN Singh is known to be peripatetic. So no one took notice when, in the weeks following Rajiv Gandhi's return from his US visit on June 18, Singh flew in and out of the capital every few days. There was speculation about fresh initiatives on the vexing Punjab problem but Singh gave nothing away: he met only the prime minister and scrupulously avoided the Punjab Government's officials based in Delhi. Not surprisingly then, very few people were in the know when, on July 2, Rajiv handed Singh a sealed letter addressed to Sant Harchand Singh Longowal, president of the Akali Dal. The same evening, Singh, with the letter safely in his briefcase, flew back to Chandigarh. Within hours, Shankar Narayan, joint secretary to the Punjab governor who had been on Singh's staff since 1980 was driving to Longowal village, 80 km from Chandigarh, to deliver the letter to the Sant.

The 16-line letter was brief and to the point. It read: "Dear Sant Longowalji, you are aware that finding a solution to the problems in Punjab has been one of our foremost concerns. Despite many handicaps, in view of our commitment to bring peace and prosperity to Punjab, we have taken a number of initiatives on the economic, cultural and political fronts to create an atmosphere in which sincere efforts for a solution could be made. It is a matter of satisfaction to us that the Shiromani Akali Dal and you personally have responded positively to these measures and we feel that the stage has now been reached when a formal initiative for a settlement of the outstanding problems can be taken. I would request you, therefore, to come to Delhi at your earliest convenience for a meeting with me so that we could discuss and decide the manner in which further steps are to be taken. You may decide, if you so choose, to bring any other person along with you for the meeting."

For days together, the letter elicited no overt response from the Akali leader. But Singh knew what Longowal needed most at that stage: time. Perhaps no one knew more than Singh—chief minister of Madhya Pradesh when the Akali triumvirate of Parkash Singh Badal, Gurcharan Singh Tohra and Longowal was lodged at Panchmarhi Jail in his state—that the detention of the leaders in the months after 'Operation Bluestar' had brought about a sea-change in both Badal and Tohra. While Longowal remained a moderate leader, Badal and Tohra had toughened in their stance. Singh knew that Longowal would have to hasten slowly if he did not wish to be outflanked by his fire-spewing comrades.

So, hiding the fact of his receiving the letter from the prime minister, Longowal decided to go ahead with his already fixed calendar of events. Accordingly, a convention of all ex-MP's, ex-MLA's, district level office-bearers and jathedars of the against nearly 4,000 facing trial in special courts. Those involved in serious crimes are to be kept in jails, the rest will be freed soon.

Rajiv and Longowal (below), (left) Arjun Singh and (right) Balwant Singh: peace moves

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To absconding Sikh youths, the Government has promised sympathetic consideration. They could present their cases before the deputy commissioners and also the high level committee for fair treatment. A kind of general amnesty is in the offing though the Government has not used that expression. Doubts about the Centre's commitment to the Punjab accord were lessening and whatever decision the Centre finally takes on holding the elections, the next fortnight may well see the accord more strengthened.

—GOBIND THUKRAL in Amritsar

Akali Dal was convened on July 9 at the historic shrine of Anandpur Sahib. Presiding over it, Longowal gave a call for resuming the dharam yudh (holy war) against the Centre from August 20.

A member of the committee was Balwant Singh, industrialist from Jalandhar who had served the Akali ministry as its finance minister, and who was in the know of things. Only a day after the fireworks at Anandpur Sahib, Balwant Singh wrote to Arjun Singh on July 9: "He (Longowal) has desired me to convey through you his warm greetings to the prime minister. He has further desired me to intimate it to you for the information of the prime minister that he will be writing to him in response to his letter on his return from the tour of Rajasthan."

Longowal continued to play with his cards close to his chest. His tour of Delhi, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh in the following days was, therefore, a delicate blend of caution and aggression. On the one hand, he made it clear that he was looking for a settlement within the framework of the Constitution. But on the other hand, he repeated his preconditions for peace, reiterating the familiar theme of the Centre being untrustworthy.

Balwant Singh was not the only one in touch with Arjun Singh: Prithpal Singh Kapoor, a retired principal of Amritsar's Khalsa College and a trusted friend of Longowal, and Attar Singh, a Chandigarh academician also close to the Sant, were constantly carrying messages, tying up loose ends and clearing the deck for a top-level parley. The Rajiv administration was not lacking in reciprocity: as many as 1,700 alleged extremists were released from detention, and it was announced that the special courts to try extremists would not have their term extended. Longowal's negotiators were also told that the scope of the judicial enquiry into the November riots in Delhi would be extended to other areas, as demanded by the Akalis, and the Sikh deserters from the army would also be rehabilitated.

Now the climax was in sight. Longowal, convinced that he was close to clinching peace, finally wrote a letter to Rajiv on July 16. He drafted the letter in Gurumukhi and Kapoor, who took it to Singh, translated it en route into English. The letter read: "It is good of you to have taken note of the efforts of the Shiromani Akali Dal towards a peaceful and just solution of the Punjab problem. Your personal efforts towards finding a solution to this problem and certain measures taken by your government in this regard have generated new hopes in the minds of the people of the country in general and the Sikhs in particular. I wish it were possible for you to take a few more steps in this regard to solve the matters mentioned by me on public platform to enable the Sikh masses to have the feel of your fresh approach. I share your anxiety for an early settlement in the larger interests of the country and the Punjab state. The Shiromani Akali Dal has never failed to respond to the invitations for talks. Accordingly, I accept your invitation. We may meet at a suitable time to carry the dialogue to a successful end."

The "suitable time" was six days away. On July 17, only a day after Arjun Singh had faithfully rendered his same-day courier service and carried Longowal's letter to Rajiv, came a reply from the prime minister. Rajiv wrote: "I welcome your readiness to come to Delhi for talks. It would be appropriate in my view that we meet at 1000 hrs on Tuesday, the 23rd July, 1985."

Characteristically, Longowal hesitated once again. He did not reply quickly to the prime minister. On July 21, prepared to break all protocol, Singh drove down to the house of Balwant Singh at Sector 6 in Chandigarh, where he met Longowal for the first time since becoming the governor of Punjab. Besides Longowal, the other Akali leaders present at Balwant Singh's house included Badal and Tohra.

After hours of hemming and hawing at the meeting, where Singh was also present, Badal and Tohra sourly agreed that Longowal should talk to the prime minister. But Longowal's written acceptance did not arrive till the next day, minutes before Singh was to leave for Delhi. The letter simply read: "I will reach at the appointed time for the meeting on July 23, 1985." With the letter in his pocket, Singh drove to the prime minister's residence. It was evening already. By night, the press announcement was made about the talks next day. The rest is history.

Longowal's letter to the prime minister

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

A Land of Scandal

Barely a month after taking over the troubled state, Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary found himself last fortnight in the throes of a massive land scandal which sullied his promised government with a "clean image" in its first test. The arrest of Popatlal Patel, a prominent Rajkot industrialist accused of land-grab, and subsequent release under pressure from a minister belonging to the same caste also showed that the once all-powerful Patels, who had been overshadowed by the Kshatriyas in the reign of Madhavsinh Solanki, are again reasserting themselves.

It all started when Devender Kumar Sikri, the Rajkot collector, arrested Patel who has grabbed 10,000 sq m of government land (market value: Rs 90 lakh) for his unit, Field Marshall, which manufactures oil engines (annual turnover: Rs 20 crore). Land-grab has been endemic in Rajkot and the civic authorities have found themselves helpless in the face of covert political backing for the offenders. Sikri thought he would circumvent the pressures by arresting Patel under the Prevention of Anti-Social Activities Act, better known as the 'Goonda Act'.

Senior ministers of the Chaudhary Cabinet, led by Health Minister Vallabhai Patel, a close friend of Popatlal Patel, immediately mounted pressure on the chief minister to have Patel released. Vallabhai Patel openly lashed out against the arrest, describing Patel as a "thorough gentleman" and accusing Sikri of ordering the arrest only because the industrialist refused to strike a deal with him. Along with Sushila Sheth, his minister of state, Vallabhai Patel sent a joint letter to Chaudhary demanding action against Sikri for "misusing" the Act and "indulging in corrupt practices". Vallabhai Patel, a powerful farm leader, joined the Congress(I) only this year but has come to command a lot of clout after he prevailed on Shankerbhai Patel to call off the anti-reservation agitation.

His ministerial colleagues were clearly in agreement. Mahant Vijaydasji, president of the Pradesh Congress(I) Committee and minister of agriculture, argued that the Goonda Act should be used only against "habitual" and "professional" offenders. Even Chaudhary said that the Act had not been implemented in its "true spirit". Only Finance Minister Arvind Sanghvi backed Sikri. Sanghvi maintained that there was no difference between a 'habitual' landgrabber and an ordinary landgrabber. Party circles in Rajkot were even more incensed: all 25 Congress(I) corporators wrote to Rajiv Gandhi seeking permission to resign. The upshot of all this pressure was that Popatlal Patel was released within 48 hours.

The hair-splitting and weak rationalisation only made the Government look ridiculous. The Act clearly lays down that a landgrabber can be arrested under it. As BJP corporator Vinod Sheth asked: "Is the government trying to say that if a man grabs 200 sq m five times he is an offender because he does it repeatedly but if he were to grab 10,000 sq m at one go he is not an offender because he has only done it once?" Rajkot's people share the scepticism. Said Ramesh Mavani, a shop owner: "If a poor slum dweller builds a shack on government land he is an offender but when the rich grab thousands of square metres, the Government gets upset." Adds a bitter T.K.Makada, CPI activist: "Thousands of poor people have no place to live and here the Government supports defaulters who have grabbed thousands of acres." But, defending his stand, Vallabhai Patel told INDIA TODAY: "It is true that we would not have been upset over the arrest of a slum dweller for a similar offence, but isn't there a difference between a slum dweller and a man of stature like Popatbhai?"

Patel's illegally constructed factory in Rajkot; collector Sikri (left) with minister Vallabhai Patel

Patel's remarks against Sikri, predictably, resulted in a rift between the bureaucracy and the executive. Several IAS officers demanded that Patel and Sheth publicly apologise to Sikri and the executive committee of the state IAS Officers' Association submitted a memorandum to Chaudhary asking him to clarify the situation to avoid further complications. Sikri himself wrote a letter to Chief Secretary R.V. Chandramouli saying that the minister's charges were baseless and an obvious afterthought.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sikri's critics also alleged that he had discriminated by moving against industrialists but sparing slum lords who had similarly grabbed land. But this criticism lost its edge when he arrested Kana Ahir, a much-feared slum lord and Congress(I) leader. Ahir controls 50-odd slums and was granted the privilege of garlanding Rajiv Gandhi when he came to Rajkot last December. Sikri had collected evidence that Ahir had grabbed 48,880 sq m of government land. Sikri had similarly drawn up a list of 40 city industrialists who have grabbed some 50,000 sq m of land. Popatlal was one of them.

Now, of course, Sikri has drawn back and other detention orders have been stayed. But ironically enough the Patel arrest has had a salutary effect on landgrabbers. The Rajkot Engineering Association has asked its members to surrender land illegally taken and six of the 40 businessmen on Sikri's list have written to Municipal Commissioner C.J. Jose promising to surrender land. Popatlal himself, who refused to comment on the issue when contacted, was making plans to pull down structures he had set up in the land he had grabbed.

The affair has also exposed Patel leaders in the Opposition. Chimanbhai Patel, state Janata chief and leader of the Opposition in the Assembly who loses no opportunity to criticise the Government, joined the chorus of Patel leaders against the arrest. Caste loyalty was not the only consideration behind this show of solidarity. Had Popatlal Patel's release not been secured, many other well-placed Patels would have been arrested in Rajkot.

Chief Minister Chaudhary realises that the affair has only made the Government unpopular and desperate efforts were being made to recover lost ground. Chaudhary dashed to Rajkot where he tried to win over the local press by promising all journalists free trips to anywhere in India. But back in Gandhinagar he accused the media of creating discord between ministers and bureaucrats. Revenue Minister Harsinh Mahida announced that he had asked all collectors to arrest landgrabbers but INDIA TODAY learnt that no such instructions had been issued. On the contrary, some collectors who were planning similar arrests have decided to stay their hands. Former health minister Manoharsinh Jadeja summed up the episode aptly when he said: "The Gujarat Government stands exposed."

—RAMESH MENON in Rajkot

ANTI-RESERVATION STIR

Peace at Last

CALM at long last seems to have returned to Gujarat, after months of trauma and turmoil. Last fortnight was virtually incident free and, with curfew finally lifted from Ahmedabad, it looked as if the nightmare was finally ending. Though tension still prevailed in certain areas in Ahmedabad's walled city, life was rapidly coming back to normal with the army withdrawn and the police given back the charge, shops reopening, students returning to their books and examinations scheduled for later this month.

Chaudhary: clamping down

The Amarsinh Chaudhary Government, which started off well by reaching an accord with the anti-reservationists, has been continuing the good work. The accent is now on tackling Ahmedabad's anti-socials who were taking advantage of the discontent on the reservations issue. Bootleggers were the focus of the police action and a multi-pronged strategy was adopted. On the one hand, a massive crackdown was ordered on them: over 120 bootleggers were arrested and liquor worth over Rs 2.5 lakh seized. The effect of this on the people was stunning in its impact. When they swooped down on a well-known bootlegger, Mohammed Panjabi in Shahpur area of Ahmedabad, over 3,000 onlookers collected to watch in disbelief.

The police also moved to clean its own stables. City Police Commissioner B.K. Jha was told to disband four special prohibition squads in a tacit admission that the squads had been compromised by the bootleggers. The credit for this refreshingly objective look at itself goes to Director-General J.F. Ribeiro. More and more it seems the Centre's decision to send him here was an inspired one.

Communal tension was also being slowly defused as various gangs of anti-socials organised on communal lines were at last tackled by the police. One such gang, using heavy explosives, was responsible for a number of bomb blasts in the city. The police grew suspicious when six youngsters, all in their 20s, were admitted to hospital with their right hands injured. They claimed to be victims of a bomb blast. Interrogations, however, revealed that they were injured while trying to make a bomb.

The anti-reservations agitation is all but over. Dr Gaurang Shah, convenor of the Students' Committee, was still making protesting noises but the stragglers with him hastened to buy peace with the Government on the assurance that more medical and engineering colleges will be opened. But the Government's problems are not over. Government employees protesting the roster system, were still on strike though here too a settlement seemed imminent. The administration's major worry was its inability to unearth illegaly held private arms.

Nor have all social tensions subsided. The anti-reservations agitation, predictably, has united the backward castes and the tribals and last fortnight these sections showed the clout they command by taking out an impressive 1.5 km procession in Baroda warning against any termination of the roster system, shouting "Roster mita sake voh zamane mein dam nahin" (nobody has the courage to lift the roster system).

With total peace imminent, Chaudhary and his officials shifted their attention to reviving the image of the state as an industrial paradise. They realise that the last five months' violence and lawlessness has worried potential investors. But as the Additional Chief Secretary H.K. Khan said: "Gujarat will continue to be an investor's dream. Temporary violence will not kill the traditional Gujarati enterprise. We will soon be back on the road to rapid industrialisation." The words no longer ring hollow.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSAM

Prospects of Peace

THE six-year-old Assam crisis, for all practical purposes, seemed almost resolved last fortnight with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi all but announcing the actual terms of the settlement. Addressing an unprecedented 60,000-strong gathering in Guwahati's George's Field on August 12, the prime minister said that he would be making the happy announcement soon. With that the Assamese finally heaved a sigh of relief. But Rajiv's reassuring speech was not altogether unexpected.

Rajiv's visit to the state came close on the heels of the Centre's talks with the agitation leaders in New Delhi after an undertaking to negotiate without any pre-conditions. To the battle-fatigued All Assam Students Union (AASU) agitationists yearning for a "respectable" solution, the first flush of hope had seemed like sunshine, dimming the memories of slaughter, remorseless parochialism and hysteria hanging like a spectre over the state. "It is a time of opportunity", observed AASU leader Bhrigu Phukan, "and hundreds of people have been coming to us asking to end all this once and for all."

The Centre's truce signals had come like a bolt from the blue to agitation leaders. In Delhi for submitting a memorandum of complaint to the chief election commissioner on the new electoral rolls being prepared, the leaders were surprised by an invitation from the Union home minister. At the meeting the Centre's proposals were an even bigger surprise: the Saikia Ministry would be dissolved if the agitationists agreed to moderate their demands for the deportation of all foreigners who had settled in the state after 1961.

The three agitation leaders present at the talks—AASU's Prafulla Mahanta, Bhrigu Phukan and the All Assam Gana Sangram Parishad (AAGSP) Convenor Biraj Sharma—were almost tempted to finalise the accord, accepting 1967 as the cut-off year for the deportation of foreigners and fresh elections called on the basis of the electoral rolls under preparations.

But back in Guwahati, the three leaders found themselves on the firing line. Dismayed by press reports that they had tentatively agreed to 1971 as the cut-off year, AAGSP hardliners demanded an explanation from the trio. According to state intelligence sources, the negotiators were told to return with a written draft proposal from the Centre during the August 11 meeting and not to commit themselves to any agreement. And as if to reaffirm their militancy the AAGSP executive passed a resolution calling for a 12-hour bandh on Independence Day.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Assam agitation leaders arrive for meeting in Delhi: optimistic mood

Bhrigu Phukan told INDIA TODAY after the stormy AASU-AAGSP meeting on the evening of August 9: "The Centre must make some concessions, otherwise people who are now hoping for a satisfactory solution will be completely frustrated and we cannot be expected to have control over everybody's action." Some people looked forward to the imminent accord. Said Trabin Kumar Gogoi, president of the Asom Jatiadabai Yuba-Chatra Parishad, one of the constituents of AAGSP: "It's only people like me who have had to give up their jobs to devote time for the movement, but so many others have died for the cause and all this time it seemed everything had been in vain. Obviously people can't go on fighting for years—there must be an honourable settlement." Gogoi is looking forward to returning to work. A housewife in Guwahati felt the urgent need for an accord : "What was the agitation for I wonder, we supported the boys thinking they were agitating for the good of the state but nothing happened except people were killed and the prices of everything went up. Now we only hope Rajiv Gandhi will offer the boys something that they can accept."

Last fortnight the Congress(I)'s election pledge understandably assured a solution to the Assam problem and nobody could accuse it of not trying. The manifesto declared that the party was:

- no longer insisting that 1971 be accepted as the cut-off year;
- the Saikia Ministry would be dissolved the moment an accord was forged;
- the Election Commission would ensure that the names of all foreigners were deleted from the voters list maintaining 1971 as the base year.
- it was ready to negotiate with the agitationists on other demands like the withdrawal of repressive measures, release of arrested agitationists etc.

On the face of this, it would appear difficult to understand what more the Assam agitationists could want. But as an AASU member explained sheepishly: "The leaders do not want to give the impression that the six-year-long agitation has not gained anything but token gestures from the Centre." And it does seem a matter of saving face because neither the state nor the Centre had shown any inclination to actually deport anyone detected as foreigner.

Whatever the pronouncement, even Saikia cannot deny that the proposal for the dissolution of the assembly in Assam has been the cruellest cut to Congressmen. "My people remind me that in the worst days of the party they stood by it while their children, friends and relatives were killed. Today all that has changed because they fought and never surrendered," Saikia said.

In a meeting of Congress workers and minority leaders two days before Rajiv Gandhi visited the state and delivered his reassuring speech, Chief Minister Saikia compared himself to a soldier who had to fling himself before death if ordered by his leader. "This is a compromise we have to make for the good of the state and the country," said Saikia accepting his fate as the louder din of distant celebrations sounded over the state.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE in Guwahati

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The tyres we race are the tyres you buy

It's true! The very same tyres that you use on city-roads, are repeatedly tested by MRF on race and rally tracks around the country.

There's a simple reason why. On a race-track a tyre is subjected to severe torture and strain. In just six hours on the track, a tyre goes through more than half its life. Something that would take more than a year on a city road.

Which means we get our test results that much faster. And you get an improved product that much quicker.

It's a testing technique developed by our collaborators B F Goodrich of the USA, people who build tyres for the NASA Space Shuttle Programme.

And since MRF tests city-tyres on the race-track, you can be sure that when we win, you too are winning. With tyres that are setting new standards for grip, handling, mileage, durability and sheer staying power.

At the end of the race, it's over to the MRF technicians... Testing for heat build-up in a tyre with an electronic pyrometer.

The race-track is our laboratory

MRF TYRES

Tyres with Muscle

MRF Tyres are made in technical collaboration with the BF Goodrich Company of U.S.A.

LINTAS-M MRF NCT 17a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ALL-INDIA CAMEL

1982
Reynold D'cruz,
Model English School,
Dombivili, Maharashtra.

1983
Devang Mistry,
Bal Kala Kendra,
Vadodara, Gujarat.

1984 Anup Kumar Bose,
Calcutta Deaf & Dumb School, Calcutta, West Bengal.

?

Your child could be a winner!

It's easy! It's fun!
Rs. 1,50,000 in prizes must be won!
Plus Rs. 1000 Camel Art Award for the best overall entry.

VISION/CPL/3/85

Last date: September 30, 1985.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COLOUR CONTEST '85

Every year, for the last three years, lakhs of children have participated with drawings and paintings... for attractive prizes. In the fun-tastic All India Camel Colour Contests. held at City, State and National levels.

Your child could be a winner. For he is competing with children of his own age, grouped by the classes they are studying in. So we have six groups: from kindergarten to Std. X with a special group for handicapped children.

Encourage your child to draw and paint. The exercise will help him in many ways. Because they call for close co-ordination of hand, eyes and mind, drawing and painting will make his hand more deft, his eyes sure and help him concentrate. All this will make him a better student.

For further details, write to:
Publicity Department,
Camlin Pvt. Ltd.,
Art Material Division,
Camlin House, J.B. Nagar, Andheri (E), Bombay-400 059.

camel colours a child's imagination.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

w who'd want to hurl a stone at h a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, ny might.

ne of your neighbours for instance. o may have seen your new ONIDA. d envied its classy, futuristic looks, the st astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

In case you want more details rush to the nearest Dealer.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

Costly Flak

"We do not understand the figures given by the Government but we do understand that the price of every commodity has increased."

—GIRDHARI LAL VYAS, MP, in the Lok Sabha.

"The price rise is mainly attributable to the increase in the prices of petrol, diesel, fertilisers, pesticides and agricultural products after the presentation of the budget"

—VIRDHI CHANDER JAIN, MP.

"The common man put various questions to us regarding this abnormal price rise and as a member of Parliament we had no reply to their questions."

—MADAN PANDEY, MP

"Poor people are suffering due to collusion of corrupt politicians, government employees and the rich."

MOOL CHAND DAGA, MP (Congress-I)

"Government figures are not near to reality because they relate to the wholesale price and not the retail price."

NIRMAL KUMARI MP (Congress-I)

MEMBERS of Parliament are supposed to echo the voice of the people but over the last two decades this job has increasingly been appropriated by those from the Opposition. No longer: there is growing evidence that ruling party MP's are finally finding their voice. Vyas, Jain and Pandey all belong to the Congress(I) and last fortnight they minced few words as they attacked their own ministers in the Lok Sabha in the course of a discussion on the rise in prices. The target of their attack was, in the main, Union Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh though some of the flak was also directed at the Food and Civil Supplies Minister Rao Birendra Singh.

It all started off at the July 22 eve-of-the-session meeting of the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party. Traditionally this is an occasion where the prime minister and senior ministers acquaint the party MP's with what is expected of them in the session ahead. Fireworks are rarely the order of the day and when Rajiv Gandhi asked Singh to address the MP's on the last item on the agenda—the increase in prices—nobody could have predicted the volcano that erupted. The soft-spoken, conscientious Singh had barely launched into the statistics in support of his contention that there hadn't been a significant price rise when the hall erupted with cries of "we don't want statistics" and "statistics lie". One MP recalled: "There were only a few MP's who were not on their feet shouting. You won't believe this but among those shouting 'we don't want statistics' was Amitabh Bachchan. Even some ministers covertly joined in; (Minister of State for Steel) Natwar Singh was heard telling people 'Shout, shout'."

The result was that even as a dumbfounded Rajiv looked on, Singh was not allowed to continue. Old-timers assert that the only previous time when a Union minister had been heckled in this manner and prevented from speaking at a party parliamentary group meeting was in 1962 when defence minister V.K. Krishna Menon came under attack over the war with China. Sensing the belligerent mood of the MP's, Rajiv promised a special general body meeting of the parliamentary party devoted exclusively to the subject of prices.

As it turned out, one meeting was not sufficient; the ire of the members spilled over to another meeting and even a third was scheduled but had to be put off because of Maken's murder. At the first meeting the budget was the special target. MP's felt that the Government was not sincere about bringing down prices and one particularly acerbic critic, 67-year-old Mool Chand Daga (Pali), accused the Government of trying to "fraud" the people. At the second meeting members pilloried the Government for the inadequacies in the distribution of civil supplies.

It was soon clear that members had not yet exhausted their ammunition. In a two-day discussion on prices in the Lok Sabha, several ruling party MP's criticised the Government in terms that would have done the Opposition proud. Vyas (from Bhilwara), Jain (Barmer) and Pandey (Gorakhpur) were not the only ones who lashed out. Partymen from all parts of the country were critical. Said Y.S. Mahajan (Jalgaon) "There is no doubt that the price rise (in sugar) is due to maladministration." Added Nirmal Kumari Shaktawat (Chittorgarh): "The figures given by the Government are not near to reality because (they) relate to (the) wholesale price and not to the retail price." Noted K.V. Thomas (Ernakulam): "Cloth is one of the major items where the people are cheated." Charged Girdhari Lal Dogra (Udhampur): "The 20-point programme is not being implemented properly." Thundered the venerable Daga: "Poor people of the country are suffering due to the collusion of some corrupt politicians, rich people and government employees."

Strictly speaking, Rao Birendra Singh should have been primarily answerable but party MP's directed the attack on Singh because they feel that it is the budget that set the spiral off. There is always a seasonal price rise before the monsoon. This year MP's feel the budget has made things worse. Singh's response was typically conscientious—he sent off two detailed letters to party MP's, along with charts of price rise over the years and tables of commodities' prices in the last few months, arguing that prices had gone up mainly only of sugar and vegetables and seeking their cooperation in restraining the price increase.

But his reasoned arguments seem to have fallen on deaf ears. The fact is that prices are this year very much under control and there's been no great general price increase in the last three or four years. But sugar has shot up to Rs 12 a kg and some other essentials like vegetable oils which have hit the bulk of the population rather hard. "We curse the Government when the people curse us," explains Vyas. The price debate is obviously destined to register a rise in the days ahead.

—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

DELHI

Extreme Danger

INVESTIGATIONS into the brutal slaying of Congress(I) MP Lalit Maken and his wife Geetanjali in end-July took a dramatic turn last fortnight with the police announcing that Lal Singh, the American mercenary school-trained terrorist wanted in connection with the Air-India jumbo crash was a key suspect in the case. The announcement and photographs of Lal Singh released to the press, came five days after Home Minister S.B. Chavan was grilled in Parliament for the poor state of security in the capital. Agitated opposition leaders had demanded action against the police officials who ordered the securitymen to be withdrawn from the Maken residence a few days before his death.

But the Lal Singh announcement was met predictably with widespread scepticism. The main doubt centred around the improbability of a terrorist wanted by the security forces in the US and Canada, besides the Government of India, evading the massive manhunt and crossing international borders to arrive straight into the lion's den in Delhi where security measures have of late been the tightest ever imposed. It also seemed unlikely that Lal Singh, who has rarely visited India in recent years, was able to quickly mobilise support, get hold of sophisticated arms and efficiently plan the killing of an MP in broad daylight and in a crowded area. Confessed a police officer connected with the case: "It seemed a surprise to us too. For one thing there were no intelligence reports that Lal Singh was in the capital. Moreover the very idea seems bizarre."

But the police were "sticking their necks out", as one official put it, on the basis of an accurate identification by two independent witnesses who had pored over 300 pictures of terrorists and other suspects. Disclosed one police officer: "The identification was initially the reason why we were prompted to publicise Lal Singh's picture. Later, some leads began to work out and we are at least convinced on one thing: the Maken murder is the handiwork of the extremists."

Lal Singh's photograph with possible variations released by the police

The investigators are basing much of their convictions on the several eyewitnesses to the tragedy: Suresh Mullik, a Congress worker who was in the driver's seat awaiting Maken when the assailants shot him and injured his shoulder, obtained a side view of the killers. The other witness is Karan Kapoor whose scooter, used as the get-away vehicle by the killers, was snatched at gunpoint at about 11 p.m. the previous night. The third witness was Dhiraj, Maken's nephew who was trailing behind Maken and who fled when the killers opened fire. Yet another was Maken's servant Islam, 15, who watched the entire drama from his hiding place. The last witness was a mango seller with whom one of the terrorists struck up a nonchalant conversation.

Islam, the servant, who denies that he has seen Lal Singh's picture before, says: "I was taken to the police station and asked to identify the killers from about 50 pictures. I took some time but I was able to spot him (Lal Singh) out." For his age Islam has a remarkably photogenic memory: "He was wearing jeans, a blue self-designed shirt and gum boots that can be zipped up." But what probably clinched the issue for the police is Islam's disclosure that the killer had a scar on his right finger. "That was quite a disclosure," confessed a police official. Lal Singh's police dossier

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

The Hit Men

A DECEPTIVE quiet hangs by day over what was not too long ago a major terrorist arena—the 'Bhindranwale belt' along the border areas of Amritsar and Gurdaspur districts. But come dusk and the undercurrent of tension is far more palpable. Then, heavily armed policemen seem to sprout all over, manning barricades at roads leading to the interior and asking searching questions at the rural police posts. All this is evidence of the massive efforts to trace those extremists who continue to give the authorities the slip and operate with impunity not only in Punjab but other states—having successfully engineered the Delhi bomb blasts and, more recently, been associated with the murder of Congress (I) MP Lalit Maken.

Last fortnight the Punjab Government announced for the first time a series of rewards worth lakhs of rupees for information leading to the capture of 13 of the more prominent terrorists. Photographs and descriptions of some of them were published in the Akali Patrika, the widely-circulated Punjabi daily. The rewards were of Rs 1 lakh each for the capture of five of the extremists and Rs 50,000 each for eight of the others.

But it is not only a small remnant of die-hard terrorists that is worrying the authorities. In the first exhaustive survey of its kind on the number of youths missing in the state, the Government has concluded that as many as 400 cannot be accounted for. Although not all have taken to terrorism, the number of officially listed extremists is as high as 125. This dangerous situation has, however belatedly, led to greater coordination between the police forces in the different states affected and the Union territories of Delhi and Chandigarh.

The suggestion that Maken may have been a victim of terrorists comes at a time when intelligence officials—at least in Punjab—were boasting of having come a shade closer to unravelling the terrorist network. So far the intelligence agencies had only been giving out general information, but now some officials say they have an idea of the terrorist hierarchy and leadership, its organisation and who the professional hit men employed are.

Anok Singh
Amritsar district status: organiser/hit man

Sewa Singh
P.S. Verowal
status: hit man

Not many of the suspected extremists have previous records, although a few lumpen elements and smugglers operating on the Indo-Pak border seem to have joined the extremist bandwagon. Of them only a few—less than 10—are said to be shaping the movement, either independently or in tandem with the others. This hardcore had strong links with Bhindranwale and are tied to many previous offences, and as the rewards announced by the state Government indicate, they are the terrorist kingpins. INDIA TODAY was able to examine the files on some of them. Excerpts:

Sukhdev Singh, 35, resident of Dasuwal in Amritsar district. Status: dangerous. Probably an organiser. Suspected base of operation—Pakistan. Before Operation Bluestar was head of the notorious Babbar Khalsa. Rarely participates directly in terrorist acts but assigns targets to the hit squads. First came into prominence on September 21, 1981, when he and his associates sprayed bullets as they ran along a busy market-place in Amritsar district. He is close to the Akhand Kirtini Jatha run by Amarjit Kaur which clashed on many occasions with the Bhindranwale group and was suspected of organising its own hits. Sukhdev is a key suspect in the attack on an additional superintendent of police in April 1983. Last year a pamphlet purported to have been signed by Sukhdev pasted in Amritsar claimed that he had personally supervised and organised 34 murders in the state. Intelligence reports say he is now in Pakistan.

Anok Singh alias J.S.Kohli alias Inspector alias Karan Singh, 30, resident of Varring Suba Singh, Amritsar. Status: organiser/hit man. Suspected base of operation—Pakistan. An Amirtdhari Sikh and part of Bhindranwale's inner circle. Suspected to be involved in selected killings; involved in Taran Taran shootout in September 1981. After Operation Bluestar involved in attack on the SSP of Ludhiana, clear evidence of involvement in Delhi bomb blasts.

Bhai Kanwar Singh Dhami, resident of Sandra Sodhiah village in Hoshiarpur district. Status: organiser/motivator. Suspected base of operation: Pakistan. Principal motivator for Pak-trained terrorists. Suspected to have been in touch with Pakistan for the past few years. Before Operation Bluestar, background unknown—not connected with Bhindranwale and no known violent activity.

Ex-constables Sewa Singh, Gurnam Singh and Amarjit Singh. Operational status: hit men. Before Bluestar, they were close to Simranjit Singh Mann, former SSP of Faridkot and now in detention in Bharatpur under the National Security Act. Two of the constables suspected to be involved in a shootout in Jalandhar in which an inspector of police was killed. One of them connected with the hijacking of an Indian Airlines aircraft after Bluestar. Sewa Singh is wanted in the Delhi bomb blasts case.

Others: Atinder Pal Singh, a Bhopal-based AISSF volunteer and Sandeep Singh, of Multani village in Bhatinda district.

—RAJU SANTHANAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Our technological superiority has established its credentials for quality and performance.

Here're the overall efficiency facts about our moped duly authenticated by

AUTOMOTIVE RESEARCH ASSOCIATION OF INDIA

(Research Institution of the Automotive Industry with the Ministry of Industry Govt. of India)

FUEL CONSUMPTION AT VARIOUS SPEEDS	20.06 Kms./ph	—100.06 Kms./litre
	29.47 Kms./ph	— 87.39 Kms./litre
	38.78 Kms./ph	— 74.65 Kms./litre
ACCELERATION	0-25 Kms./ph	— 6.5 Seconds
MAXIMUM SPEED	46.39 Kms./ph

Hero-Majestic POPULAR

The quality and performance of Hero-Majestic Moped speak louder than words. More and more discerning riders all over the country are going for a Hero-Majestic for its unquestionable plus points which include maximum fuel economy, power-packed engine for super speed pick-up, minimum maintenance, better braking efficiency, telescopic front suspension and greater load carrying capacity. Its power-packed 2 BHP engine will carry the two of you on any track, in any traffic.
Attractive look in pleasing colours.

MAJESTIC AUTO LIMITED, C-48, Focal Point, Ludhiana-141 010

MAL-NP-189

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

describes him as having a scar on his right hand. Islam says he noticed the scar when the killer asked him for a glass of water which he gladly gave in the belief that it was an official security guard accompanying Maken to Parliament. Besides Islam's testimony, the identification was confirmed by a mango fruit seller present at the spot just outside the gate where the cold-blooded killings took place.

By itself, the killing and the manner in which it was effected suggests professionalism to a remarkable degree. Said one official: "It seems like a copy-book style terrorist hit, perfect in every way. There is no doubt that the killer was professionally trained." According to the police, the killing took place at about 10.23 a.m. Maken's nephew Dhiraj recalls that his mother was buying some fruits near the iron gate outside. Islam, who was helping her in selecting the fruits, remembers that one of the killers, whom he later identified as Lal Singh, was also there talking to the fruit seller. The man had his gun slung across his shoulder and everyone could see it. "We thought he was part of the security staff," he says. Islam remembers only one of the killers. While the fruits were being selected he noticed two others in a two-wheeler scooter but took very little notice of them. The man with the gun helped in selecting the fruits for Dhiraj's mother. He then asked Islam for a glass of water. Says Islam: "I used to be very friendly with these security chaps and even joked with them. I thought to myself this chap seems nice." Islam recalls that the killer drank the water and said "thank you" in English. A few seconds later all hell broke loose.

A few feet away, Maken was coming out of the house with his wife behind him. Dhiraj was to go with them to Parliament. A Congress worker, Balkishen, was waiting for Maken. Says Islam: "I think it was Balkishen's movements that triggered the first shot. The killers noticed that Balkishen was writing something. They must have thought he was noting down the number of their scooter. Actually he was writing down something else in his application." The killer described by Islam as the leader, suddenly unslung his machine-gun and shot Balkishen. Dhiraj recalls: "When I heard the shot I was paralysed. I heard my uncle telling us all to run." Dhiraj ran upstairs and hid. The killers ignored him and started firing at Maken. A bleeding Maken dragged himself inside but he was followed and his body sprayed with a hail of bullets. The other killer had also joined in the firing and Geetanjali was riddled with bullets. As they were making their get-away, Mullik tried to prevent them and was also shot. The two killers got on to the scooter kept running by the third accomplice, and sped off. An old woman in the neighbourhood recalls having seen the killers putting their weapons into a bag and laughing loudly as they fled.

Funeral of the Makens: professional killing

Police investigations have revealed that the weapons used for the killings were a .30 Mauser, a 9 mm pistol or a Sten gun. Police officials say that they are certain about the Mauser which is fitted with a holster and at times has a shoulder strap. These weapons are not easily available and support the police theory of the killers being professionally trained men. Police officers have also virtually ruled out the other theories of inter-union rivalry and political animosity after extensive investigations. Lal Singh's pictures have been flashed to airports and checkpoints and roadblocks put up in all roads leading out of Delhi. The police theory is that the terrorists may still be there trapped somewhere in a safe house. But there are doubts too: "If Lal Singh slipped the net and has come in it would be the easiest thing for him to leave," says one officer.

The Lal Singh element has added a new dimension to the terrorist threat. Admitted an intelligence official: "Even assuming it was not Lal Singh, the fact remains that the Maken killing was done professionally. The bomb blasts in May were planned well but the people used were relations of riot victims." Police officers feel that the professional element seems to have joined the terrorists already operating in the country. The impression now gaining ground after the Delhi bomb blasts is that the capital has become the nerve-centre where terrorist plans are being hatched.

But those investigating the Maken murder were not ruling out the possibility of some men involved in the blast case being involved in the MP's killings too. In the blast case, as many as 57 persons were involved and the police were able to arrest 43 persons including Delhi lawyer Kartar Singh Narang. But Narang was not considered the key man and they listed out and identified 13 prominent extremists who planned the entire operation but stayed in the background. They included Anokh Singh of Varring Suba Singh, ex-constable Sewa Singh and Sukhdev Singh of Babbar Khalsa (see box). In their chargesheet, the police detailed the entire conspiracy and established that the top extremists used to visit the relief camps and talk to victims at length and note down their names and addresses.

In Maken's case, the assumption is that the killers joined the existing group, who are already committed to the terrorist cause. But if the Lal Singh theory does indeed turn out to be correct it does not speak very highly of security at the airports. Besides, if he has been able to slip through the net, the police with the limited resources at their command may not be able to deal effectively with a terrorist allegedly trained in America. As one official pointed out: "Even the home-grown terrorist is proving elusive and the foreign element may be impossible to tackle." And as another added: "We think the Lal Singh lead is correct but in our hearts we are hoping that we are wrong."

—RAJU SANTHANAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One great technology.

A wheel made to perfection needs a bearing that excels in performance. Silent, smooth, durable, dependable. And yes, of the highest precision.

That's where Norma Bearings come in.

Norma Bearings are used as Original Equipment by the two-wheeler industry. Bajaj Auto, Escorts, Kinetic Engineering, Sundaram Clayton, Lohia Machines, Enfield, Maharashtra Scooters, Majestic Auto... A list that reads like a 'who's who'.

Manufactured in collaboration with the world-famous FAG Group of West Germany, Norma Bearings undergo a series of punishing quality control tests all the way. Superior technology and the latest sophisticated equipment ensure precision standards of the highest order.

Norma Bearings. Helping the industry move smoothly.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...deserves another

NORMA Bearings

PRECISION BEARINGS INDIA LIMITED

World-class FAG technology on the move.

Sixth Sense: PBI:3:85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

Leader in Waiting

WHEN the last of the legislators left the Telugu Desam training camp in the backyard of party chief N.T.Rama Rao's Shanti Kuteeram last fortnight, the haggard face of the camp's chief convenor Naravirapalli Chandrababu Naidu brightened up. For the 34-year-old son-in-law of the Andhra Pradesh chief minister, it was a personal achievement since the whole training programme had been his brainchild. Said a beaming Naidu: "The success of the training programme has been greater than expectations. A lady MLA who could not open her mouth at the start of the camp walked away with the third prize in debating on the last day. The training has proved to be very useful and the difference will be seen during the budget session of the Assembly from August 12."

No doubt more voices will be heard from the treasury benches now. As it is, the legislators have sat in session for only 12 days since their election in March. And this, with only one microphone per eight legislators. With a topic of debate as interesting as the budget and a venue as well-equipped with mikes as the new hall inaugurated by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi last fortnight, Naidu's trainees will now have ample opportunity to display their newly-acquired debating skills.

But increasing confidence in their debating skill was not the only purpose of the training scheme. The most important message driven home to party legislators at the training camps was that next to party chief NTR, Naidu is now the most important man in the party set-up. It is rumoured that no party decision can be effected without Naidu's nod of approval. NTR, it is said, has left the headache of running the party to Naidu, while he himself grapples with the problems of the state.

NTR's trust of Naidu was much in evidence in his inaugural and valedictory speeches at the camp where he made special mention of Naidu's efforts. Partymen took the cue from there and started singing Naidu's praises to please their boss. Yet, NTR cannot give Naidu a formal post in the party for fear of the charges of nepotism that will necessarily follow. NTR's dilemma is simple: if someone else is given the post, it may threaten Naidu's power in the party. On the other hand if Naidu is appointed, it may affect NTR's popularity for promoting his son-in-law.

BABJI JANATA

NTR with Naidu: strange dilemma

A safe way out is to make Naidu an equal among equals—one of a pool of secretaries—so that he can continue as the de facto working chief of the party without raising many eyebrows. NTR will have to decide one way or the other before the party holds its mahanadu (convention) in October. And NTR knows this only too well. Still he has had to prolong the suspense so far by keeping the post of general secretary vacant for the last two months. Though Naidu consistently denies any interest in post or office, he is quick to add: "If the circumstances demand and if there is no alternative, I will have to abide by what the party leader asks me to do."

Naidu is an ambitious man and his track record in his six years in politics bears this out. The then Congress minister N. Amarnath Reddy had picked him in 1978 as the Congress(I) candidate from his native Chandragiri constituency in Chittoor district. Barely two years later, he got a seat in T. Anjiah's infamous 'Airbus' cabinet. A year later in 1981, when he was minister for cinematography, he married NTR's third daughter, Bhuvaneswari. His disillusionment with the Congress(I) began when he could not find a place in the ministry of K. Vijaya Bhaskara Reddy.

After he lost the January 1983 election from Chandragiri on a Congress(I) ticket he was one of the first to knock on Telugu Desam's door after the elections. But, the party legislators objected vehemently to any influx from the Congress(I). Naidu had reportedly justified his defection saying: "The Congress(I) has become a laughing stock. I lost even after visiting the constituency once every ten days. My followers feel we should join the Telugu Desam party and so I have to agree. But I am not aspiring for any office." To pacify his men, NTR had said: "I am against nepotism but if a large group from a district wants to join, we should consider it." Though the members were molified, Naidu took the hint and decided to keep a low profile.

It was in the August-September toppling crisis last year that Naidu emerged from the shadows. He kept the party legislators together at a hotel im Mysore, while scuttling all attempts at horse-trading by the supporters of the "usurper chief minister" N. Bhaskara Rao. Since then NTR has come to rely increasingly on his son-in-law, making him his closest aide. Still, both avoid talking to each other in public, even at the training camps.

When talk first began last year of giving Naidu a party post, party general secretary P. Upendra, who was elected to the Rajya Sabha, offered to resign on the one-post-one-man principle. But the party's Vishakhapatnam convention in May 1984 authorised NTR to make the change at an appropriate time. Finally, Upendra and others in the executive bowed out at the end of their two-year term in May this year when the party's constitution was changed to allow NTR to hand-pick his men for the executive.

Now that partymen have started singing Naidu's praises, it should not be difficult for NTR to have Naidu's preeminence finally, and formally, established within the party. And if any charges of nepotism are levelled, he can always point out that power in the country, like family business, passes naturally to the heir apparent.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The first raindrop on my tongue.

To see a rainbow on the dew.

Flowers sway to a breezy song.

Today is mine. Today is new.

*tit bits MOUTH FRESHENER

Kiss-cool breath. Any place. Anytime.

NP Marketed by the National Products, Bangalore.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE LIGHT THAT SHOWS YOU CARE

BETTER LIGHT BETTER SIGHT

Make sure the light is right. No matter where you are, good light reduces eye-strain and increases work-output and efficiency. Sylvania Laxman ensures that its bulbs and tubelights meet the most exacting international quality standards to provide light that's consistent and clear. Backed by Sylvania technology that's lighting up half the world. No wonder Sylvania Laxman makes and sells more incandescent lamps than any other company in India. So ask for it by name—Sylvania Laxman.

SYLVANIA LAXMAN

The name that lights.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

REACT/SL/0365/85

How Bank of India used CitiBanking® to help accelerate diamond exports by 40% a year.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's 13,000 diamond exporters created a US $1.2 billion industry—cutting and polishing miniature diamonds. To help smooth the way, new methods were needed to speed import payments and the reporting of export receipts.

Bank of India, which has played a catalytic role in the promotion of diamond exports, turned to global electronic CitiBanking for the advanced capabilities required.

"We use CitiBanking to transmit import payments electronically and to get electronic confirmation of dollar receipts in New York," explains Pushpa Wagh, Chief Manager of the bank's Opera House Branch in Bombay. "That gives our clients maximum use of credit lines and sets the groundwork for dramatic export growth."

To find out how your Export Department can benefit from the world's most advanced and secure electronically delivered banking services, call the Citibank located near you.

And put the Citi of Tomorrow℠ to work for your company today.

WELCOME TO THE CITI℠

CITIBANK INDIA

IN TUNE WITH THE NATION'S NEEDS.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

©1985 Citibank, N.A. Member FDIC

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SINGAPORE GIRL, YOU PUT A SMILE ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH.

A great way to fly
SINGAPORE AIRLINES

2S85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ORISSA

Battle Ground

THE BATTLEGROUND is an old one, the lush coastal area of Balasore in Orissa, the scene of many a battle in Indian history. The combatants this time, however, are more unevenly matched. On one side is the Central Government which has launched an offensive aimed at acquiring a large chunk of land comprising almost the whole of Baliapal and Bhograi blocks for setting up a national testing range under the Defence Ministry to test newly-developed missiles and rockets. On the other, grimly defending their vulnerable—and valuable—territory, are over one lakh farmers, agriculturists and fishermen who have refused to leave their fertile land despite the promises of adequate compensation and rehabilitation.

Their stubborn resistance is understandable and so is the current dilemma. The fertility of the area makes it a gold-mine in the eyes of the agriculturists. But the area's shallow coastal topography and history of warfare makes it the perfect site for the Rs 3,000-crore testing range. The exact area needed for the purpose is still to be decided. But the Additional District Magistrate, Bansidhar Mahapatra, who is in charge of the acquisition and rehabilitation, said that the Defence Ministry has given a tentative estimate of 115 sq km. This land, which lies along the seashore, covers a total of 132 villages in the Baliapal and Bhograi blocks.

Mahapatra said that a socio-economic survey revealed that over 1,000 families involving 99 villages would have to be shifted from the main project area. Almost all of them are prosperous farmers, the area being rich in cash crops like betel, cashew and coconut. The Bay of Bengal too provides a steady catch of fish to the area's fishermen.

Though the smallest district of the state, Balasore is not only the richest, it has the highest literacy rate of 42.06 per cent for a population of 22.53 lakh. According to Baliapal Panchayat Samiti Chairman Sashadhar Pradhan, the area's income from its cashew and coconut crop alone is close to Rs 15 crore per year. In Baliapal block, 800 betelvines are spread over an area of 1,000 acres. A farmer with a betel crop on just five decimal of land can support a family of 20 with his income. Says Shipati Samant of Chaumukh, who earns Rs 4,000 a month from his eight decimal grapevine: "Nothing can compensate this." As tension built up in the area last fortnight, sarpanches of all the eight panchayats under Baliapal block held a meeting to discuss their strategy and sent a memorandum to Chief Minister J.B. Patnaik and District Collector Ishwar Chandra Das condemning the project that threatened their livelihood. Chief Minister Patnaik told INDIA TODAY: "Yes, we are aware of the situation but we are only doing it in the interest of the nation. At the same time, we have chalked out the best of rehabilitation programmes."

Map by B.K.SHARMA

A village in prosperous Baliapal block: threatened existence

Meanwhile, Defence Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao was apprised of the situation last fortnight by former minister of state for external affairs Samrendra Kundu, who has been actively involved in the resistance against the proposed acquisition. Rao promised to visit the area in the last week of August to see if anything could be done to protect the farmers' and landowners' interests. However, this gave little cause for hope as, according to official sources, the project was in the final stages with only the issue of land left to be finalised. Defence Ministry officials visited the area last month and asked the district authorities to acquire the land as quickly as possible.

But that is not going to be an easy task. The farmers have flatly rejected the rehabilitation plans which include shifting the whole lot of villagers to an industrial area and absorbing them into industry. The farmers, who have known nothing but farming all these years and are quite content with it, dismiss all these plans as far-fetched and useless. Said Sarpanch of Badas, Suresh Kumar Senapati: "We are not opposed to the project as such but nobody wants to leave the area. People would prefer to die rather than surrender their land and property. Nobody believes that the Government would really compensate and rehabilitate them." Dagra Panchayat Sarpanch at Chaumukh Dev Das Hazra echoed this determination. "We are not going to yield an inch of our land, come what may." Said the 26 year old leader.

Though the project was first conceived in 1982-83, it was not announced until August last year. Soon after the announcement, there was a furore over the issue, with the Opposition making much of it in the elections and the Government preferring to remain silent. Just as the inhabitants had begun to believe that the area had been spared, the Government announced its intention to go ahead with the project and stepped up its efforts at convincing the people to move out, using the national interest as their new lever of persuasion. Said District Collector Das: "Persuasion is the only means now. Let the people realise the national importance of this project."

However, Das will need more than psychological persuasion if he wants to succeed. As one farmer argued: "In the name of defending the country, why should the people be uprooted when there are other places available?" Balasore, it appears, is readying for yet another battle in its aggressive history.

—FARZAND AHMED in Balasore

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Shying Away

TAMIL Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran and his ministers lose no opportunity to appear before their public, whether on television, posters and billboards or the screen. But when ordered to appear before courts of law, however, then it is a different story. The courts also are accommodative and grant extension after extension of the deadlines for their appearance. The irony is that it is the chief minister and his colleagues who have filed a plethora of cases (at the last count, 15) against opposition politicians and publications.

Last fortnight this tendency of AIADMK ministers, particularly the chief minister, to file cases and then shy away from the courts was spotlighted for the umpteenth time when the second additional sessions judge in Madras filed a petition before the Madras High Court registrar seeking an extension of time to dispose of three criminal defamation complaints. The cases had been filed by the city public prosecutor on behalf of the chief minister against DMK headquarters secretary Arcot N. Veeraswamy as long ago as 1978. Each complaint was against a speech of Veeraswamy accusing MGR of corruption, and naturally enough the chief minister was cited as the most important prosecution witness in each case.

But though seven long years have passed, the chief minister has yet to grace the witness-box. The examination of all the other prosecution witnesses in all three cases was over by October 18, 1978. The defamation cases have had to be adjourned repeatedly because the chief minister has been too preoccupied with official work to appear in court. And the second additional sessions judge was granting adjournments time and again despite the repeated protests of Veeraswamy and his lawyer.

An infuriated Veeraswamy and his lawyer P. Subramanian finally filed a petition in the Madras High Court in April, 1982, seeking to quash the criminal defamation proceedings in the lower court on the grounds that the most crucial prosecution witness, the chief minister, was just not showing up and allowing himself to be cross-examined. A year later on April 30,1983, Justice M.N. Moorthy of the high court dismissed Veeraswamy's petition but directed the second additional sessions judge to dispose of all the three defamation cases before the end of August that same year. But again, that was not to be. The sessions judge came back to the high court just before the expiry of the deadline and sought an extension of the time limit because the examination of the witnesses could not be completed —in other words the chief minister had not yet made himself available. Justice S.Natarajan of the high court extended the deadline till the end of 1983. Again the sessions court failed to meet the deadline and sought another extension, which too was granted. This process has been going on ever since. One estimate has it that there are two postponements granted every month.

M.G. Ramachandran

C. Ponnaiyan

AIADMK ministers promptly file defamation cases against DMK leaders but then drag their feet when the court calls them to appear in some cases.

M. Karunanidhi

Arcot N. Veeraswamy

A frustrated Veeraswamy said: "MGR does not want to come to court after filing all these criminal cases against us because he is not willing to run the risk of being cross-examined by my advocate. Then he will be exposing himself. I think, and I have said so in my petition before the high court, that the whole game is to harass the people who are being complained against."

The chief minister is certainly not helping his public image any by not coming to court and repudiating the allegations against him, which are serious indeed. Veeraswamy attracted the first defamation complaint by alleging at a public meeting organised by the DMK in Madras on September 25, 1977, that MGR had received a Rs 20 lakh kickback by awarding a Tamil Nadu Water and Drainage Board contract to the Indian Hume Pipe Company of Bombay, which had quoted a figure of Rs 218 lakh in its tender bid, and not to the Karnataka Cement Pipe Company which had quoted Rs 40 lakh less. Veeraswamy even alleged that the chief minister had gone out of his way to sanction an advance of Rs 23 lakh to the Indian Hume Pipe Company to begin the work.

The second defamation complaint was against Veeraswamy's allegation at another public meeting in Madras on April 10, 1978, that MGR had accepted illegal gratification of Rs 10 lakh for awarding a contract for the purchase of some 177 bus chasses for the state-owned Pallavan Transport Corporation. The third complaint was for alleging in the same speech that the chief minister had received an advance of Rs 5 lakh from a company called Omega Cables in return for the company getting a Tamil Nadu Electricity Board contract for the supply of power cables. The DMK leader had alleged that Omega had bagged the contract even though two other tenderers had quoted lower amounts.

The public prosecutor stated in the defamation complaints that all these allegations were "false, mischievous and misleading". In all the cases, he said, the contracts had been awarded by specially constituted committees of the relevant organisations, all of which were autonomous bodies. The chief minister had nothing to do with the awarding of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Haiku. In Japanese, it's a poem. On you, it's a sensation.

HAIKU
SARIS

Haiku from Bombay Dyeing.
An exquisite new collection in crepe de chine, jacquard and georgette.
Soft, flowing lines. Colour themes that rhyme with your good looks.
Inspired by the evocative Japanese art of Haiku verse.
Haiku from Bombay Dyeing. It's pure poetry!

BOM-1899

BOMBAY DYEING

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Breeze

Make the most of it !

With Orient. Soothing, cool air perfectly modulated at the gentlest touch. Orient, the fan you buy once, and it works year after year, silently.

What makes Orient so good ?

Orient technology at its most sophisticated, has created the perfect fan. The superb aerodynamic balance of the blades gives you the maximum breeze. The motor, built sturdily, withstands hours and hours of non-stop running. Double ball bearings ensure the smoothest performance. 30 years have gone into anticipating and meeting your smallest need. Like a trouble-free regulator and electrostatically painted blades that neither chip nor crack. A choice of six models in ceiling fans, seven models in table fans, one pedestal and a bracket model, all available in several colours and styles.

Orient fans are acclaimed in over 25 countries round the world. Orient — the world class way to breeze. Wherever you want to make the most of it.

ORIENT
Built to last

Orient General Industries Limited • Calcutta • Faridabad

CC-OGI-16-85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Novopan creates the perfect setting for your life style

Who says work and pleasure don't mix?
How often has a casual get together resulted in a lucrative business deal. Or a formal dinner turned out to be a real fun party...
Of course you need the right setting.
And create the right mood!

Who can do this better than Novopan?

It's the only prelaminated particle board in the country. Perfectly laminated on both the surfaces.
And just right for your kind of life style.
It is quick to install because it doesn't need planing, cutting and pasting like the old plywood/laminate combinations.
And once its up, it stays on for a long long time.
Without warping, delaminating or getting 'wavy'.
So you don't have to bother about maintenance at all!

Novopan can be used just about everywhere. Panelling, partitions, cabinets, furniture, doors... and anywhere else you fancy!
And should that be outdoors, there's phenol bonded Novopan Exterior specially designed for outdoor applications.

Novopan comes in such attractive colours and a range of wood finishes — teak, rosewood, oak...
It is made in convenient sizes and thicknesses to minimise wastage. And best of all it doesn't send your budget sky rocketing.

In fact, Novopan works out far more economical than those one sided plywood/laminate combinations.

Novopan —
Sets off your life style in the best possible way!

Novopan India Limited
"Suryodaya", 2nd Floor
1-10-60/3, Begumpet
Hyderabad 500 016
Phone: 70128/70129

Now when you do up your home, insist that your furniture maker uses only Novopan Prelaminated Particle Boards.

NOVOPAN®

Swiss style... and good sense!

REGIONAL OFFICES
AHMEDABAD — C/3, Hari Krishna Estate, Narol, Ahmedabad. BANGALORE — Subharama Building, 2nd Floor, 23 Shopsite, Serpentine Road, Kumara Park West, Bangalore 560 021, Phone: 363801. BOMBAY — 317 Tulsiani Chambers, 212 Backbay Reclamation, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Phone: 222380/ 232845/ 232169. CALCUTTA — 10 Dr Lal Mohan Bhattacharjee Road (Near Moula Ali), Calcutta 700 014. Phone: 213354. COCHIN — 30/566-A, Krishnaswamy Cross Road, Cochin 682 018. Phone: 31679. MADRAS — 'Anuraag', 7A Murray's Gate Road, Alwarpet, Madras 600 018. Phone: 453783/454116. NEW DELHI — 901, Hemkunt House, 6 Rajendra Place, New Delhi 110 008. Phone: 5716190/5716589.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

contracts to particular parties and these serious allegations of corruption had caused considerable mental agony to MGR. His arguments are now being thrown back at him. How come, it is being asked, the 'agony' has not prompted MGR to appear in court.

There are nearly a dozen other criminal defamation complaints against DMK politicians and the party's publications like Ethiroli and Murasoli by the public prosecutor on behalf of MGR and other ministers. An interesting story is that of the defamation complaint filed against DMK President M. Karunanidhi by the public prosecutor on December 22, 1979, in the court of the principal sessions judge. The complaint was against Karunanidhi's allegation on different occasions that the chief minister had tried to get a kickback on the state-owned Poompuhar Shipping Corporation's deal for the purchase of a Bulgarian ship. The former managing director of the corporation P.C. Cyriac and the former state transport secretary R. Shanmugam were both examined in court but when it was the turn of the former transport minister, C. Ponnaiyan (who is today the law minister) the public prosecutor filed an application asking that Ponnaiyan's examination should be in camera. The court agreed to it on December 23, 1983, but a couple of weeks later Karunanidhi's advocates challenged the court's grant of permission for the in camera examination. From then on the case has been getting adjourned.

Other AIADMK ministers have also been following the footsteps of their leader in appearing too busy to come to court after launching criminal defamation proceedings to safeguard their honour. But the case that takes the cake is the defamation complaint against Karunanidhi filed for accusing MGR of accepting bribes for granting liquor licences. Karunanidhi said in a public meeting in 1982 that he held the chief minister squarely guilty of corruption as far as the sale of liquor was concerned, and even openly challenged him to initiate defamation procedings against him. The defamation complaint was made, but the case was quietly withdrawn a year ago. All of which gives rise to the suspicion that in the many cases that are still dragging on MGR and his ministers will ultimately back out of courtroom battles. The sooner they do that the sooner a lot of people will be put out of their mental agony.

S.H. VENKATRAMANI

KISHORE ROYCHOUDHARY (The telegraph)

CPI(M) minister A.R. Molla consoling the mother of a victim: gruesome killing

WEST BENGAL

Allies at War

THE SEARCH for Left unity in West Bengal has been a tortuous one and murder has hardly helped matters. The gruesome killing in a remote area of the Sunderbans last fortnight of four CPI(M) workers by a mob led by activists of the Revolutionary Socialist Party (RSP)—a key constituent of the ruling Left Front—has brought to the fore the protracted power struggle underway in rural areas of the state between the two front allies.

Reacting quickly to this murderous incident—the first of its kind—the state Government rushed in armed police contingents to keep the peace among the shaken inhabitants of Chandipur village in South 24 Parganas district and despatched senior ministers of both parties to inquire into the circumstances leading to the clash. But the peace parleys got bogged down in the wake of polemics by the two sides and the CPI(M)'s refusal to withdraw the police case filed against the local RSP leadership. The Left Front Chairman and Secretary of the CPI(M) state committee Saroj Mukherjee angrily pointed out that the workers were holding a meeting to decide on the daily wage rates for the current sowing season when they were suddenly attacked. Added state secretariat member Sailen Dasgupta: "There is no scope for any bilateral talks with the RSP since the police have filed a case in connection with the murder of our party workers." Of the 53 RSP activists named in the first information report, the police have already arrested 10 and a manhunt has been launched for the rest.

The version of the incident put out by State Irrigation Minister Nani Bhattacharya and other RSP leaders who visited the area has only added to the bitterness. He claimed the slain workers were anti-socials who had been harassing the RSP-organised sharecroppers. In a graphic report, Bhattacharya pointed out that three of the four—Bimal Mondal, Fatik Barman and Mritunjoy Mondal—could not possibly have been attending a political meeting since they were wearing informal vests, shorts and canvas shoes. Moreover, no Chandipur residents have mentioned any CPI(M) meeting taking place on that day.

While other CPI(M) leaders made frantic efforts to gloss over the incident as an isolated and unfortunate one, the RSP party organ Ganabarta charged that the CPI(M) is only the latest of a number of other groups which are trying to suppress the sharecroppers' movement in Chandipur. While landlords, moneylenders and the police have been traditional opressors, CPI(M) activists also got into the act when on July 18 they attacked and destroyed houses belonging to poor RSP workers at Manmathnagar in the same district. This was followed by the ransacking of their office in Gosaba town and serious injuries inflicted on Subodh Maiti, a member of the party's district committee. A peace meeting was called by both parties on August 7 to work out their differences but this was pre-empted by an attack on the sharecroppers by antisocials on July 26 culminating in a repeat clash the next day that led to the deaths of the four CPI(M) workers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The conflicting claims apart, it is clear that what really sparked off the clashes is the CPI(M)'s sustained efforts to muscle into South 24 Parganas which is an RSP stronghold. Sanat Kumar Mondal, MP from Joynagar, has been able to consolidate his party's base in the area. The CPI(M), in contrast, has been faring poorly. In fact, in the last Lok Sabha elections the CPI(M) lost one South 24 Parganas seat, Mathurapur, and barely managed to scrape through to get the third seat, Diamond Harbour.

Even more interesting is the fact that it is only the RSP among the parties in the Left Front which has been able to resist a slide in its power base. As compared to the 1982 assembly elections, the Left Front's total votes in the 1982 parliamentary elections declined by 4.22 per cent but the RSP increased its share by a marginal 0.68 per cent though it lost one seat to the Congress(I).

The effort to take over pivotal organisations has led to low-key struggles with other Front partners. Currently, such conflict is evident in Cooch Behar, parts of Jalpaiguri district, Birbhum and Murshidabad—a fact not denied by the CPI(M) party bosses. Peasant leader Benoy Choudhury who is also state land reforms minister candidly told INDIA TODAY: "What Left parties do not see is the necessity of socialist competition and consider themselves to possess national strongholds where they want to keep off other parties because they fear that the others will do a better job for the masses." The struggle for ensuring the rights of the masses is a continuous one he feels. And if that is any indication, it looks like the lush green of Bengal will soon be stained by the politics of blood.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

LEFT FRONT

Left is Right

OF ALL the bizarre accidents of contemporary Indian politics, none is perhaps as curious as the reversal of roles between West Bengal's leadership and the state unit of the Congress (I). While the state Congress (I) leadership last fortnight took up an anti-Centre stance, the state's Marxist Chief Minister Jyoti Basu seemed to have moved closer to the Rajiv Gandhi Government.

State Congress(I) leader Subrata Mukherjee raised not a few eyebrows when he announced that the state unit of the Indian National Trade Union Congress (INTUC), of which he is the chief, would participate in the one day state-wide strike on September 12 in collaboration with the state's Left unions, including the CPI(M)'s Centre for Indian Trade Unions. Among the significant strike demands endorsed by Mukherjee is the one to nationalise the state's ailing jute industry. This is in spite of the Central Commerce Ministry's consistent refusal to take any such step.

Hailing the strike announcement of the state's nine major trade unions as a "historic" decision, Mukherjee criticised the new Central Government's policy of reducing investment in public undertakings. He also deplored the Centre's open door policy towards foreign investments and declared that public sector units should be prevented from retrenching any of their workers or from winding up their operations.

"My sole objective is to put the INTUC on a firm footing..."

SUBRATA MUKHERJEE
state Congress(I) leader

Mukherjee's unilateral decision to collaborate with the Leftists in the state surprised the party high command and the very next day the central INTUC President G. Ramanujan reportedly sought an explanation. Before rushing to New Delhi to explain, Mukherjee told newsmen that his decision had the sanction of the PCC (I) chief Pranab Mukherjee. Mukherjee argued that the decision had been prompted by a desire to uphold the interests of the working class and pointed out that more than 75,000 jute workers had been retrenched. It was absolutely impossible, he said, to be "indifferent to such a grim situation".

In contrast, the Left Front leadership, despite the continued insistence by its trade unions, has not only become lukewarm to the policy of take-over of sick and closed industries but is also openly in favour of denationalising half a dozen units under its control. Moreover, the Jyoti Basu Government has also shown a readiness to allow foreign investment, demonstrating a line of thinking which is remarkably similar to that of the present Central leadership.

While the Marxists' motives for getting closer to the Central leadership are straightforward—confrontation has got them nowhere—Subrata Mukherjee's aims in projecting a mildly anti-Centre stance are more complicated. Mukherjee's critics claim that his recent moves are designed to subtly pressurise the high command to acknowledge him as a "force in his own right". Mukherjee, of course, denies this vehemently: "My sole objective is to put the state INTUC on a firm footing and consolidate the tremendous gains made by us in the last two years."

Yet, it is also true that Mukherjee's isolation within the Congress(I) has never been so complete as it is now. Rumours that his mentor and PCC(I) chief Pranab Mukherjee is on his way out and the rapprochement between his ally Somen Mitra and arch rival Priya Ranjan Das Munshi, have rung alarm bells for Mukherjee. Observers feel the only way he can remain politically afloat is by projecting an independent, albeit a somewhat parochial, image. Mukherjee is evidently counting on a little help from his Marxist friends, including Chief Minister Basu. They flew back together from London last month where they had jointly inaugurated a Bengali book fair. From now on, Mukherjee might just be inaugurating more such joint programmes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

Leaky Controversy

KERALA is one state where hydel projects generate more controversy than power. But there's been nothing quite like the noise that's being raised over the prestigious Edamalayar hydro-electric project near Idduki and the Parappar dam of the Kallada irrigation project near Quilon. The reason: both the irrigation dam and the facilities of the hydro-electric project have sprung leaks and the Government's opponents have begun crying foul.

The timing could not have been more provocative. While the Edamalayar project was supposed to have started production this month, the Kallada dam was due for inauguration by the end of the year. It was proved that both the leaks were due to poor construction and use of sub-standard materials and that the contractors had had the blessings of top political leaders. What made matters worse was the alleged involvement of former electricity minister R. Balakrishna Pillai, who was in charge of the Edamalayar project, and Irrigation Minister M.P. Gangadharan, who holds charge of the Kallada project. And this was not the first time that the two leaders found themselves the target of corruption charges.

The allegations this time came from opposition leader E.K.Nayanar, who pointed out in the Assembly that the contractor of the Edamalayar project was a leader of the Kerala Congress, whose President K.M. Mani now holds the electricity portfolio in addition to finance. He also said that when some engineers of the Kallada dam objected to the way the work was being carried out, they were persecuted and threatened and eventually transferred. It was also alleged that cement meant for the dam was quietly removed from the project site from time to time.

Apparently, the Edamalayar project did not spring a leak overnight. After a trial run of one of the generators recently, a leak had been found in the concrete lining of the power tunnel, about 50 feet from its mouth. Close inspection had showed a tiny, hairline crack in the tunnel's lining. But the leak was too profuse to be plugged by the standard practice of grouting, which involves filling the crack with fluid mortar. The contractor for the power tunnel had sub-contracted the job to P.K. Sajeev, a Kerala Congress leader close to Mani. The principal contractor is said to have just lent his name to the contract since Sajeev did not have the requisite experience to qualify for the contract. Sajeev's taking over the job under a sub-contract was also irregular since a sub-contractor can execute only a part of the works.

C. RATHEES KUMAR

The leaking Kallada dam (top) and Nayanar going inside the Kallada tunnel: corruption charges

Further, it was discovered that the power tunnel had neither steel lining nor reinforced concrete. As a result, the tunnel was vulnerable and prone to leaks. Said a top engineer of the electricity board: "The contractor not only saved time but also a lot of money. Some engineers who pointed out these lapses were transferred from the project site." Work on the project had begun in 1976 and was expected to be commissioned in 1982. The total cost had then been estimated at Rs 23.45 crore. However, progress has been slow for various reasons including strikes, and nearly Rs 82 crore has already been spent on the project. As Nayanar said: "Balakrishna Pillai and the contractor directly took over the supervision of the project and kept out engineers who did not toe their line."

The Opposition has demanded a judicial inquiry but Mani and his partymen are not in favour of it. Said he: "There is no room for anxiety as it is not a serious leak. The leak will be plugged in three months' time. Only the commercial generation of power would have to be postponed." But what Mani missed out was that the loss due to this in monetary terms would be something like Rs 4 crore, not to mention the expenditure on repairs. Remarked Nayanar acidly: "I hope they do not entrust the repairs also to Sajeev."

The story of the Kallada project is not very different. Already Rs 187 crore have gone into the project and the end is nowhere in sight. The first phase, aided by the World Bank, is not expected to be completed before March 1987. And even these should be great expectations going by the rate at which things are progressing since 1961. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was scheduled to commission part of the first phase in September but the plans have again gone awry after last fortnight's leak.

This is only the beginning of the troubles, or so it seems. The leak is not the only defect in the dam. A World Bank team has also detected leakage from some drainage holes in the dam's foundation even with a low water level. Erosion of the foundation is also suspected. The state Public Accounts Committee (PAC) visited the site recently and found several lapses in construction. The PAC said in its report that the leak was basically due to "defects in the masonry." The PAC referred the alleged misappropriation of cement to the Vigilance Department for investigation. Large quantities of cement disproportionate to the requirements were being issued to the contractor, it noted. As Krishnan Kutty, the firebrand Janata MLA, said: "Nearly Rs 80 crore have been spent on Kallada since Gangadharan became the irrigation minister three years ago. The seepage is due to the spurious concrete mix and the police have seized lorry-loads of cement smuggled out of the dam site in the past."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Irrigation Minister Gangadharan told INDIA TODAY: "The seepage seen in Hallida is quite common in masonry dams but with grouting and gunting it can be effectively controlled." Mani has proposed a probe by a member of the Central Water and Power Authority and experts from the state's Engineering Research Station.

But with the projects so far behind schedule, that is hardly going to help matters much. If there is any truth to the allegations, then it will take a lot more than "grouting and gunting" to salvage the mess.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

KERALA

Merger Blues

IN THE last three years there have been many great reunions between political parties in Kerala. First it was the A.K. Antony faction of the Congress(S) which merged with the Congress(I) just after the fall of the E.K. Nayanar ministry. Months later the feuding K.M. Mani and K.C. Joseph group of the Kerala Congress came together, but the most significant reunion took place last fortnight when the Indian Union Muslim League (IUML) and the All India Muslim League (AIML) merged, as expected (INDIA TODAY, August 15), under the banner of the IUML.

A resolution unanimously adopted at the Calicut meeting said that the parties had come together to work for the protection of the best interests of the community and the country in the context of the strong threats and challenges raised against the independence of the Muslim minority. There is little doubt about the strength of the feeling of oneness in the party. For the state's Muslims, this is a heady and memorable moment but the merger promises to pose problems for Chief Minister K. Karunakaran.

For Sulaiman Sait, MP and president of the IUML who has been working behind the scenes for the past few years to patch up differences between the two parties, the merger has been a dream come true. Ironically, the eventual catalyst that brought the IUML and AIML together on one platform was an outside agency. It was the Supreme Court decision allowing maintenance to divorced Muslim women, and the CPI(M)'s decision to lash out at the Muslim divorce laws and the Shariat which literally drove the AIML out of the Left Democratic Front (LDF) and into the embrace of the IUML. Exulted Sait: "The unity of the leagues has taken place by the grace of Allah. It has made us stronger than ever before. Nobody can split us again." Said Kunjalikutty, a young IUML MLA: "Never before has the party been so united. The merger will definitely make it the most powerful party in the state."

Such sentiments have caused worry among other parties in the ruling United Democratic Front (UDF). The IUML now has 18 MLA's, next only to the Congress(I)'s and more than the Kerala Congress' 15. But the Kerala Congress and the IUML both have three representatives in the ministry and the IUML has already given notice that it wants one more. Karunakaran has ruled out a cabinet reshuffle but Sait said ominously: "We need not go to anybody with a begging bowl. We are strong enough to get our just demands."

There could be other complications round the corner for Karunakaran. The former AIML leaders consider him their bitterest foe because they think it was he, who was then the home minister in the Achutha Menon ministry, who had sent them to jail. Besides, there are pinpricks in the relationship between the IUML and the Congress(I) as well. In Malappuram district, clashes between the Congress(I) and IUML sympathisers are almost a daily occurrence. Recently, in Tirur, IUML leaders forced Home Minister Vayalar Ravi (Congress-I) to transfer a sub-inspector who was supporting Congress(I) workers and harassing IUML men.

More alarming, however, are the continuing violent clashes between the CPI(M) and IUML supporters in the Malabar area. The CPI(M) has been holding seminars on the Shariat and going hammer and tongs at the inequities in the Muslim divorce laws. In Parappanangadi in Malappuram district tension prevails following an attack by IUML supporters on a CPI(M) meeting called to explain its stand on the Shariat. In Calicut, the Marxist-led Democratic Women's Association has been organising processions by Muslim women against the Shariat in which, for the first time, even wives of Marxist leaders have also joined. The association has also completed a door-to-door signature campaign among Muslim women urging measures to protect them from the alleged abuses of the Shariat. The Students' Islamic Movement of India has countered with its own processions of women in defence of the Shariat.

Karunakaran and Sait: uneasy partners

The bold stand taken by the CPI(M) has the Congress(I) worried. Till now Karunakaran has maintained a studied silence on the subject but a section of partymen, led by the Calicut district party President, N.P. Moideen, has been putting pressure on the leadership to also come out openly against the Shariat. But state Youth Congress(I) President, Karthikeyan, a Karunakaran protege, feels that the Shariat is a "personal, religious matter for the Muslims". Karunakaran knows that his ministry could fall in a few hours if he says anything against the Shariat. As Sait warned: "We will not allow anybody to play with Muslim personal laws."

It is understandable then if Karunakaran regards the merger with mixed feelings. While the merger has widened the gap between the UDF and the LDF from a tantalising three in the 141-member House to a more comfortable 11 it has hardly lessened the perils in the tightrope walking that Karunakaran has been doing for the last three years. Nothing is ever simple in Kerala's politics.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB & SIND BANK

Loans to the Dead

IT'S NOT an unusual cocktail: a public sector bank, a seemingly respectable bank manager, a potpourri of illiterate villagers—all in a backward rural district. The recipe says the net result should be accelerated economic development. What's been happening instead in Piparia Dhani, some 200 km from Lucknow in Lakhimpur Kheri district, is racketeering on a large scale.

The bank in question is the Punjab and Sind Bank (PSB) whose manager, Daljit Singh Bedi, has been charged with misappropriation of public funds, mistrust and criminal conspiracy. To add a touch of spice, the alleged fraud has to do with such exotica as the prime minister's 20-point programme and the Integrated Rural Development Programme (IRDP) which seeks to direct concessional funding to poor farmers at low interest to enable them to obtain agricultural implements and equipment. The sums involved, Rs 86 lakh, are not impressive, but if the allegations are correct, the modus operandi certainly is.

After all, not many bank managers have been accused of sanctioning loans to the dead. The records of Bedi's bank show that Chhote Shah, Subedar, Gulab Shah and Maqbool Shah, all of Gardaha village, were dead when they were each sanctioned a loan of Rs 9,800 in April 1984 to buy diesel engines. What is more, their 'applications' were accepted even though they were unsigned and the bank issued cheques to a Vibhore Agencies of Mohemmedi village for having supplied the engines. The game was up when notices for repayment of the loans were served on the relatives of the deceased. Understandably, they protested. And the authorities began to look into Bedi's operations.

As investigations later revealed, much of the fraud has to do with less easily detected methods: large sums allegedly loaned to individuals and paid to selected agencies for goods such as agricultural implements and fertilisers purportedly delivered to the individuals. With concessional loans to the poor seen to be an essential part of the development process, it was likely that nobody was going to cross-examine such liberal lending not, that is, until notices for repayment started arriving at the doorsteps of a growing number of befuddled villagers.

Incredibly, several weeks after the authorities found out about the fraud, some farmers continue to be pestered by the bank to repay loans they had never been granted. Partially blind and ailing Jhau, a 70-year-old Harijan of Piparia Dhani, was sanctioned a loan of Rs 9,700—on paper. But Jhau says he applied for no loan and received no implements. What he did receive, however, was a legal notice asking for a refund.

Bedi, PSB manager, has been charged with misappropriation of public funds and criminal conspiracy.

Dhare, 45, a Harijan farmer of Gardha village was last month served with a legal notice by PSB's Piparia Dhani branch to deposit Rs 9,650 along with interest or face eviction from his land. A bare ten kilometres away, Lalloo, 50, is hiding from the PSB's officials seeking repayment of Rs 9,600 which he never got. His neighbour Sultan Khan, who owns just one acre, is in a similar predicament with the bank's advocate directing him to return the money he is said to have borrowed to buy a water pump engine. Unable to find a suitable lawyer who could defend their case and faced with no response to their petitions to the bank, the three sought the help of the police. Said Lalloo, "We can't allow ourselves to be cheated like this. Even if we sell all our land and household goods, we will not be able to repay the loan fully."

Acting on complaints such as this, the police arrested Bedi on February 29, 1985 for cheating and mistrust (Section 420 of the IPC) but the PSB management till last fortnight had not bothered to serve any charge-sheet. In his bail application Bedi, however, asserted that he did not violate any procedures and that he could not be "saddled with any responsibility if the dealer did not supply pumping sets or if no boring was done." But Bedi—who was not available for comment— seems to have godfathers above. He ignored no fewer than six transfer orders in as many months. Early last February, a replacement was ordered out to Piparia Dhani but Bedi took leave, gaining enough time to have the replacement shunted elsewhere. The area office did made some half-hearted attempt to relieve Bedi but all those deputed to take charge returned to the headquarters on the plea that "they are not in a position to take charge." Said a bank official of Lakhimpur, "Bedi's orders were not meant for implementation at all because he was related to a senior bank official." According to the Bank sources Bedi is related to PSB's General Manager Harbhajan Singh who passed several transfer orders. In fact, a deputy general manager protested in writing that Bedi's continuation in Piparia was due to the laxity at the top. He wrote in his letter that "not posting any permanent incumbent" has led to Bedi's continuation as manager though "he has played havoc with the bank funds."

More encouraging was the Union Finance Ministry which ordered the bank

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dhare, a Harijan farmer was served with a legal notice by the bank to pay back a loan he never took or face eviction from his land.

Sultan Khan, who owns one acre, was directed by the bank to return the money he is said to have borrowed to buy a water pump.

Lalloo is hiding from bank officials seeking repayment of Rs 9,600 which he never got. He has now sought the help of the state police.

to submit a detailed report on the branch's activities in January 1985. A Lucknow-based Assistant General Manager, S.C.Vohra, was directed to inspect the branch personally. On March 22, 1985, Vohra sent a detailed 13 page report about the loan distributions made by Bedi under the 20-point programme which includes the IRDP meant for weaker sections. Said the report: "Something very important was noticed from this investigation. The whole matter of advances from this branch revolved around seven-to-eight accounts which are held by dealers in agricultural implements. The transactions in these accounts reveal the whole involvement of the dealers in the supply of goods to farmers which are either bogus, substandard or short supplied."

Tandon Khad Bhandar closed after taking a loan: bogus fronts

The report also confirmed that more than 70 per cent of the 1,000-odd borrowers listed by the bank were either non-existent or had not taken the loans. Not unexpectedly, Bedi is accused of having flouted IRDP rules which say that the bank can release payments only after the district authorities certify that the implements have been delivered; this was not done in majority of the cases. He also failed to take prior permission from the regional headquarters and authorised more advances than justified by his deposits.

Between December 1982 and January 1985, the Piparia Dhani branch's loans shot up to Rs 86.61 lakh from Rs 8.12 lakh while deposits languished at Rs 25 lakh. The money was being credited to farmers as four per cent loans, but was actually paid into the accounts of seven dealers for implements allegedly supplied. In fact, the dealers withdrew the money quickly, and the borrowers never received their equipment. And three of the dealers quickly shut shop after taking the money out of the bank. The implication is obvious: that the dealerships were floated to withdraw money sanctioned as loan from the bank.

As it happens, three of the dealers were joint owners of a firm in partnership with Bedi's wife. The firm, Shahjahanpur Auto Sales (SAS), which sells motor cycles in Shahjahanpur, was allowed to open a bank account in Piparia Dhani in violation of banking rules which forbid bank officials' wives from operating current accounts in their husbands' branches. An investigation of Bedi's wife's account showed that the dealers were transferring money from their individual or corporate accounts into her's. In fact, SAS's account shows a large number of cash entries of huge amounts and investigators are trying to see if there is a link between the withdrawal of money by the dealers and the date of deposits in her account.

Acting on orders from above, the new manager of the branch, Paramjit Singh, in April sought to contact all the 1,000 borrowers listed in the records. By the end of July he had succeeded in reaching only 110, most of whom hadn't a clue about their supposed loans. Reported Vohra: "Unless each and every borrower is personally contacted, it shall not be possible to ascertain how many of the accounts are correct and actually existing because there are so many such cases in whose name the loans have been sanctioned but who do not actually exist." Clearly a tall order--but one that points ominously to the kind of skulduggery that might be going on under the guise of helping the poor. —PRABHU CHAWLA with S.PREMI in Piparia Dhani

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NARCOTICS

Cutting the Conduit

"AT FIRST we were ringside observers, now we are in the ring." This remark by a senior anti-narcotics official accurately illustrates India's predicament as it finds itself drawn inexorably into the vortex of the international narcotics trade. With the country already a major transit point for the international drug pipeline, Indian authorities are now stirring into action. In a whirl of activity which began with the June meetings between US and Indian officials during Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's Washington visit, the Government has at last decided to take immediate and long term action to make it harder for drug traffickers to ply their trade in India. Among the steps being taken are:

► The setting up of multi-agency task forces in Bombay and Delhi with officials drawn from the CBI, Customs, Directorate of Revenue Intelligence and the local police, to combat drug trafficking.

► The setting up of a Central Economic Intelligence Bureau (CEIB) on the lines of the Intelligence Bureau to collect intelligence about and supervise strike action against all kinds of economic offences including drug trafficking.

► Introduction and passage in the current session of Parliament of the Narcotics and Psychotropic Drugs (Prevention) Bill which enhances the punishment for drug related offences and gives greater powers to Customs and Revenue Intelligence authorities.

► Amending the Essential Commodities Act to regulate the production and sale of acetic anhydride, a basic chemical used to convert morphine base into white heroin powder. Banned in all neighbouring countries, but freely available in India, large quantities of this chemical are smuggled across the border to heroin processing laboratories in neighbouring Burma.

► Joint action with the Burmese Government to interdict cross border heroin traffic along the Burmese boundary with Mizoram and Manipur.

► Joint action with the US Drug Enforcement Agency and the State Department's office of International Narcotics Matters (INM), to train and aid Indian agencies involved in drug busting.

All this activity has been prodded by two developments. One is the realisation that in a short time span, India had progressed from being only a transit point for West-bound Pakistani heroin to a minor producer. Recent intelligence reports point to a large increase in the volume of cross-border traffic in opium and heroin and the suspicion that the profits are used to finance insurgencies in the north eastern states. Second, considerable pressure has been applied by the United States to take action to prevent the use of Delhi and Bombay as major staging points for heroin from Pakistan.

During his Washington visit, when Rajiv pressed for US action to curb the activities of US and Canada-based terrorists, the US side, while agreeing with India's request, suggested that India should do something in return to stem the flood of Pakistani heroin flowing to the United States through India. The US Administration reportedly made it clear that it was as concerned and worried about the heroin flow as India was about the activities of US based terrorists.

Things moved fast after the prime minister returned to Delhi. His principal aide, Arun Singh, discussed the problem with the US ambassador, his deputy chief of mission and the Delhi operative of the

BSF patrol with its record haul of 325 kg of heroin in Rajasthan: cracking down

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

US Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA). Pointing out that the number of operatives combating drug trafficking in India was woefully inadequate, the Americans offered training and equipment, and compensation to farmers to give up poppy cultivation, and even suggested that the Indian Government take a leaf out of their book which combines the resources of the DEA, Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), local city police, Customs, and Immigration. Asked by Arun Singh to submit proposals, the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) favoured setting up a new agency, but the Government intends to experiment with two task forces, one each in Delhi and Bombay.

Other connected aspects of the new drug-busting campaign are the move to tighten the laws on use, possession and peddling of dangerous drugs. The Finance Ministry has drafted a comprehensive bill called the Narcotics and Psychotropic Drugs (Prevention) Bill which eliminates the jurisdictional conflict beween the Centre and the states on investigation and prosecution of drug offences. A Finance Ministry official said drafting the bill was a massive task because the concurrence of the states had to be obtained. Though its specific provisions will be unveiled only in Parliament, it is certain that the punishment for drug related offences will be enhanced considerably so as to make it "a real deterrent" to traffickers.

The minister of state for finance admitted as much in Parliament last fortnight in reply to film star Amitabh Bachchan who revealed that drug coated milk lollies sold commonly in Bombay were turning the city's schoolchildren into addicts. Even for such grievous offences, the maximum sentence under the existing law is three years. In the United States a first time offender can get up to 15 years, and the sentence doubles with the subsequent offence.

THE IDEA of setting up the CEIB is to provide a central coordinating authority for all action against economic offenders. "At the moment there is no directional control or guidance by the Centre in cases having inter-state or international ramifications," said a Finance Ministry official. Action is also underway to amend the Essential Commodities Act to ban open sale of acetic anhydride following reports that between January 1983 and May 1984, the Burmese authorities had seized 4,878 litres of the chemical, enough to purify as many kilos of heroin. Possession of acetic anhydride in Burma, Thailand and other countries is considered as serious an offence as possession of heroin.

Curbs on the sale of the chemical will be imposed in West Bengal and the seven north-eastern states from where smuggling is rampant and facilitated by the existence of insurgent organisations. Intelligence reports suggest that acetic anhydride is smuggled into Burma in large quantities through Morey in Manipur and Champhai in Mizoram to Tamu and Tiddim in Burma and taken to the heroin labs on the Thailand and Chinese border. Finished heroin from these labs is then transported back to Imphal and Aizawl from where it goes to Kathmandu, Calcutta and Delhi for onward shipment to the West. Intelligence reports suggest that the MNF charges a 25 per cent 'tax' on the price of the heroin smuggled back in. The Finance Ministry is corresponding with the Burmese Government about joint action to curb this traffic. The Finance Ministry has extended an invitation to the Burmese authorities for discussions on stemming this traffic.

Within the country, the setting up of task forces should help because the CBI, Directorate of Revenue Intelligence (DRI) and Central Bureau of Narcotics (CBN) personnel currently handling anti-narcotics work are too few, too dispersed and often work at cross purposes. The CBI reports to the Home Ministry which is concerned mainly with law and order.

Heroin processing lab discovered in Garoth: money-spinner

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Finance Ministry controls the DRI and CBN and is bothered mainly about revenue dilution and tax evasion. The Ministry of Health and Social Welfare which should really be concerned about the widening ramifications of the drug business is not involved in any way. The CBI narcotics wing argues that India's involvement is going far beyond being just a transit country. This is not appreciated by the CBN as it implies that the CBN's supervision of opium poppy cultivation is slack and that a lot of the opium actually meant for delivery to government-owned morphine factories is getting diverted to clandestine heroin manufacture.

The recent discovery of a two-year-old heroin processing laboratory at Garoth in Madhya Pradesh's poppy growing district of Mandsaur proves the point. This is the third discovered in recent times; the other two were in Lucknow and Varanasi. A DEA official who had set up the decoy buyers said the laboratory was more sophisticated than anything he had seen in Pakistan's North-West Frontier Province, and almost as modern as some of Thailand's heroin labs. The heroin seized from Garoth was sent off to the US for analysis and was found to be 92 per cent pure.

Run allegedly by Tasnim Ahmed Qureshi, 35, a popular ayurvedic doctor in the area, it came into being when Qureshi recognised the enormous profit to be made from refining opium into heroin. Two refining specialists from Varanasi and Ghazipur, where the Government has a facility to refine opium into morphine base, helped to set it up and in due course Qureshi became adept at doing it himself. Interestingly, one of his earliest partners was a 'petty smuggler' of Garoth whose brother was a CBN inspector.

Qureshi was arrested after a dramatic night-time encounter on the road to Udaipur where he was to deliver 5 kg of refined opium to a decoy foreign buyer. A police party led by Jaspal Singh, the head of the CBI narcotics wing rammed into Qureshi's jonga and overpowered him along with an accomplice. The acomplice turned out to be a clerk in the office of the Garoth magistrate, who released the two on bail a few days later.

If this nexus between the grower and the labs is disturbing, the other nexus, with growers across the border is hardly more reassuring. It lies behind the large scale smuggling of opium and heroin from Pakistan to India. One seizure near Barmer in Rajasthan in the third week of July by a Border Security Force (BSF) camel patrol yielded 325 kg of pure heroin, the largest ever seizure in India worth over Rs 16 crore. This was being so brazenly brought across on camel back that the authorities believe they may have stumbled onto a major smuggling route used often in the past. "Nobody is going to risk such a large quantity unless they are pretty sure it will get across," said an official involved in anti-narcotics operations. The heroin smugglers were armed and well equipped. Even after the BSF patrol shot six camels dead and captured three, the drug runners still had enough camels left to escape to Pakistan.

Qureshi (inset); the night-time encounter with the CBI which led to his arrest

Earlier, most clandestine trans-border traffic was across the Punjab border. Villagers who cultivate land right upto the boundary can easily hide opium and heroin in the fields and cross the border with it at night. Increased vigilance on the Punjab border forced smugglers to shift their operations to the long and porous sandy border dividing Rajasthan from the Pakistan province of Sind. This is obvious from the figures. From 1982 to 1984 Rajasthan did not figure in the list of heroin seizures and then suddenly, in the first seven months of 1985, the BSF intercepted over 330 kg in two separate raids. But with the border outposts more than 8 km apart, the Rajasthan border is more difficult to police than the Punjab border where border pickets are only 3.5 km apart. The BSF therefore is thinking of asking the Government for helicopters for aerial reconnaisance. Just as the coast guard's fast patrol launches have made smuggling by sea more difficult, the BSF which patrols the land border could do with some helicopters and some fast jeeps fitted with wireless which the Americans have offered to provide, along with training. Without these aids, it will remain an unequal battle. Smugglers, with their high liquidity and resources, purchase the latest equipment and stay one step ahead of the authorities on both sides of the border. Apart from mobility, the BSF whose peacetime role on the western border is limited to anti-smuggling has asked for permission to add ten batallions each in Rajasthan and Punjab.

Although it isn't clear that offers of US help will be taken up, the potency of the narcotics threat seems to have inaugurated a new sphere of cooperation between US and Indian drug enforcement agencies. There's a new sense of urgency on the Indian side. It is estimated that last year alone as much as 3 tonnes of Pakistani heroin passed through the Indian conduit. It sells on the streets of New York or Miami for one million dollars a kg—a traffic of $3 billion. Profit margins on such volumes are no mean incentive to keep the conduits going. And, as one official says: "It's high time the flow of heroin through India was stopped. It does not take much time for a country to switch from drug peddling to drug consumption". And once narcotics enters the blood of a nation, it is virtually impossible to get it out.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Blue Ahoy!

Carew's
PREMIUM
BLUE RIBAND
LIME JUICE CORDIAL

There's something new coming out of the blue, mates. A fresh new experience. A great new feeling.

It's for all those hearties who like to play it cool. Cordially.

PREMIUM
BLUE RIBAND

Lime Juice Cordial

MARKETED BY Phipson

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Forget everything you know about mattresses

NEW

Kurl-on®

SUPER DELUXE QUILTED MATTRESS

outclasses all others.

In comfort. Support. Elegance.

Kurl-on®

India's No. 1 Mattress

Karnataka Consumer Products Ltd.,
Industry House, 45 Fair Field Road,
Bangalore 560 001. Phone: 76746

MASS/KURL-ON/85

Company Showrooms and Offices:

Phones: • Bangalore 220314/224676 • Cochin 36744 • Madras 810710 • Hyderabad 34560 • Bombay 354385 • New Delhi 772019 • Calcutta 545488.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ion Chennai and eGangotri

Close-up is for close-ups

Singing under the umbrella on a rainy day, sharing smiles. . . sharing good times. And you're confident because you've used Close-up.

Transparent, red Close-up's two super-whiteners leave your teeth their whitest and its special mouthwash keeps your breath its freshest.

So, smile a close-up smile and stay confident, because after all, Close-up is for close-ups.

A quality product by Hindustan Lever.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The Toothpaste and Mouthwash in On

MASS/KURL-ON/85
a 545488.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

While this gentleman is very much at sea level behind his smile is an aircraft flying 25,000 feet high!

That's overnight Skypak service for you!

There are times, often enough, when we do visualize the reassured and smiling face of a customer whose valuable and urgent document is speeding to its destination on time. And it gives us a lot of satisfaction. Especially when we recall his worried, anxious face when he enquired with us whether it was really, physically possible to meet his deadline!

Speed and dependability. That's the essence of any courier service. And our hallmark. TNT Skypak is one of the largest and most trusted courier service companies in the world. With 26000 people on their toes, in 48 countries!

But being large and resourceful doesn't mean we take things for granted. We still depend on basic human qualities like efficiency and accountability. And care. It's your urgency that seems to lend us wings!

SKYPAK

when it's wanted yesterday!

203 Jolly Bhavan No 2, 7 New Marine Lines, Bombay 400 020 Phone: 253703, 294454
Telex: 011 3339 SAI IN

• Ahmedabad: 443053 • Bangalore: 568862 • Baroda: 552285 • Bhubaneshwar 53456/55164 • Bombay: 294454/6320881 • Calcutta: 443532 • Cochin: 69012 • Delhi: 6414830 • Gandhidham: 3414 • Hosur 2373 • Hyderabad: 38237 • Kandla: 7437 • Madras: 474569/ 475091 • Mangalore: 24444 • Mapusa: 2440 • Margao: 2447 • Mysore 24444 • Pune: 54595 • Panjim: 5763 • Ranchi: 20055 • Trivandrum: 65261 • Vasco: 2403 • Visakhapatnam: 62223.

TNT SKYPAK
THE WORLDWIDE COURIERS

Please note: We don't carry non-commercial and personal material.

Avenues: SC 182

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Shiv Shanker in his study: lone ranger

P. SHIV SHANKER

The Odd Job Man

A SHORT distance from the Race Course Road residence of Rajiv Gandhi, and a stone's throw from Indira Gandhi's 1 Safdarjang Road home lives a Congress (I) leader whose importance far exceeds the suffix to his name, Member of Parliament, Rajya Sabha. His deeds rarely attract attention in the media, and he almost never hogs the headlines, but a Union minister in the know of things says: "Today, P. Shiv Shanker is possibly the most powerful man after the Prime Minister, the two Aruns (Singh and Nehru) and M.L.Fotedar."

The minister does not exaggerate. Unobtrusively, as is his wont, Punjala Shiv Shanker, who turned 57 on August 10, has been associated with almost every major political happening in the last three months. He was a member of the Congress(I) teams sent to supervise the changeover in Maharashtra and Gujarat; he sat in with the members of the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs as they thrashed out the Punjab accord with Sant Longowal; and he took a preliminary look at the opposition's memorandum against Haryana Chief Minister Bhajan Lal before it was decided to set up a one-man commission to look into it. His missions have not just been confined to the nation's boundaries; he has been playing an important role in Rajiv's attempt to improve relations with India's neighbours. Following the late June bomb blasts in Kathmandu, he visited Nepal as the prime minister's special envoy last month. And last fortnight he paid a surprisingly well-publicised visit to Bangladesh to convey Rajiv's desire to work out another agreement on sharing the Ganga waters.

His role in all these initiatives, for which he was deputed by Rajiv Gandhi personally, has not always been decisive. In the Punjab accord, for instance, he was identified as one of the hardliners who wanted the Akalis to concede more than they were willing to. Eventually, Rajiv ignored his advice. But in the selection of the Gujarat chief minister to replace Madhavsinh Solanki, Shiv Shanker's acceptance of Solanki's hypothesis that a leader from the backward classes should be preferred went a long way in deciding the issue in favour of Amarsinh Chaudhary in preference to assembly speaker Natwarlal Shah.

Shiv Shankar's change of political fortunes has, in fact, been truly amazing. Eight months ago nobody would have been surprised if his political star had plummeted after his defeat in the general elections. A leading lawyer from Hyderabad, he came in touch with Mrs Gandhi only in 1977, and generated enough confidence in her to become one of her most senior and trusted ministers. But when he failed last December to retain the Medak seat it was expected that he would follow other minister-losers like Mallikarjun and Venkatasubbiah into political oblivion. But the capital watchers missed a crucial signal. In January, when he was not even an MP, he was allotted his present bungalow at 5, Safdarjang Lane. And in April when a Rajya Sabha seat fell vacant in Gujarat, Rajiv preferred to disappoint Solanki supporter Prabodh Raval, the former Gujarat home minister, and chose Shiv Shanker.

He was now out of the shadows. And his name has been prominent in all the speculation about a cabinet reshuffle. The logic was simple: if he was not to be made a minister, why make him an MP? The speculation has proved premature but following his forays as the prime minister's special envoy there is little doubt that Shiv Shanker is Rajiv's man for odd (but important) jobs, which is somewhat surprising considering that the backgrounds of Shiv Shanker and Rajiv's aides could not have been more dissimilar.

The former, with rare exceptions, are from affluent families with public school or foreign university backgrounds. Shiv Shanker was one of nine children of a paan leaf seller of Mamidipally, on the outskirts of Hyderabad. Shiv Shanker remembers that while they did not starve there was never enough to eat. He is a self-made man. He did his B.A. by giving tuitions and his law degree by working as

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New Plans

LIC brings you 'DOUBLE ASSURANCE' plans.

'Jeevan Saathi'

This plan is ideal for working couples. Like the love and loyalty of the marriage bond,

Jeevan Saathi's assurance lasts beyond a lifetime.

On maturity, the basic sum assured, plus bonus, is payable.

If one of the partners expires during the term of the policy, the basic sum assured is paid to the survivor. He/She is not required to pay any further premiums.

The basic sum with profits is once again paid to the surviving partner on maturity, or to his/her nominee if his/her death occurs before maturity.

'Jeevan Mitra'

This plan is specially designed for maximum family security. On maturity, the basic sum with bonuses will be paid to the insured – as in the other endowment assurance policies.

If the insured expires during the policy term, the nominee receives double the sum assured and accrued bonuses.

For a little extra premium, an additional cover against death due to accident is also available.

For further details on these DOUBLE-BENEFIT plans, contact your LIC agent or the nearest LIC office.

योगक्षेमं वहाम्यहम्

Life Insurance Corporation of India

daCunha/LIC/166/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

a clerk in the municipal corporation. And he has always been clear about his goals. It broke his heart in 1975 to quit as a judge in the Andhra Pradesh High Court but when he realised that he would be the chief justice for a few months only, he did not hesitate to quit. The bench's loss was the bar's and later, the Gandhi family's gain.

Why does Rajiv Gandhi find him so useful? For one, he is extremely hard-working. Recalled one civil servant who had worked with him: "In a cabinet not known for men of brilliance or perseverance, Shiv Shanker impressed with his tremendous ability to assimilate prose. You could give him any amount of official papers: he would take the trouble of going through them and getting to the root of the issue." The result was that he often did the work of other ministers. In 1983 when the Central Government set itself on the path of collision with Farooq Abdullah, Shiv Shanker used to frame home minister P.C.Sethi's acid-laden letters to Farooq. Recalled another civil servant who had also worked closely with Shiv Shanker: "There were times when you could find the cabinet secretary, the home secretary and some other senior officials in his office, taking dictation from him."

As can be expected from a lawyer of his accomplishment, he is a skilled negotiator. Bureaucrats still recall the perseverance with which he got the chief ministers of Punjab, Haryana and Rajasthan to agree to the 1981 accord on the Ravi-Beas waters. "He tackled them one by one and he just wore them down," recalls this aide. "Shiv Shanker is a workaholic."

Shiv Shanker also brings a loyalty to any task assigned by the Gandhis that is uncluttered by many doubts. Recalled one minister who was privy to the goings-on in the inner circles before Mrs Gandhi made him the law minister: "We wanted a law minister who would have disposed off Sanjay's cases expeditiously. Our plan worked. Shiv Shanker saw to it that this was done in less than two months." Also, unlike many other ministers, he never let bureaucrats lead him by the nose. Recalled one aide: "He does not trust official's notings. He would always read the papers himself. He never gave trust so he never got it also".

To his superiors, this has made Shiv Shanker invaluable. "If I were Rajiv Gandhi, I would use him exactly the way Rajiv is using him," states a civil servant.

B. NAGESHWARA RAO

In front of Hyderabad house; with Rajiv; and his ancestral home

Another bureaucrat adds: "Shiv Shanker is like a special assistant to the Gandhi family, utterly devoted and multi-talented." But his lack of commitment to a higher cause has also disillusioned many who came into close touch with him. Union Minister of State for Law, Hans Raj Bharadwaj, who introduced him to Mrs Gandhi, was once like a brother to him but now he is known to be very unhappy because he thinks Shiv Shanker could have reformed the judicial system, but chose not to. A bureaucrat who has watched him from close quarters says: "He talks a lot about his commitment to the class of people he comes from but if you were to ask him what he has done for the poor he will not have much to show."

For all his accomplishments, or perhaps because of them, he is not the most popular of men. "It is difficult to get somebody to say a good word for him," says a former colleague. Rare has been the bureaucrat who has got along with him; and many have usually complained about Shiv Shanker's suspicious nature. As one civil servant says: "He suspects the motive of everybody. He does not trust the notings that officials make on files. Since he does not place trust in anybody he does not beget trust."

His rapport with Rajiv, which transcends the normal channels, has also made him vulnerable in an ethos where jealousy is never far behind such proximity. And he knows this. As he studiously tackles government files in his small study lined with pictures of him with Mrs Gandhi, Rajiv and Sanjay, he is conscious that any spotlight on him at this stage, when a Cabinet reshuffle is imminent, can only harm him. His plus point has been that he has avoided being in the limelight. He knows enough about the perils of power: when Mrs Gandhi took the Law portfolio away from him he was not even informed in advance.

Shanker claims to be content in living on an assignment-to-assignment basis. As he says: "My politics is confined to service of the family." But matters are rarely so simple for somebody as talented and as ambitious as he is. He claims to be a technocrat and not a run-of-the-mill politician but bureaucrats recall that as the minister for petroleum and energy he was proud to have four secretaries to the Government reporting to him. The favour-seekers amid the bureaucrats still go to see him even though he is just one of the 560-odd Congress(I) MP's in the capital. In reality he is much else but time alone will tell whether he will remain a lone ranger. Perhaps, given his limitations as a leader it is best that way.

—AJAY KUMAR with AMARNATH K. MENON in Hyderabad

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOORDARSHAN

The Rajani Phenomenon

IT ALL started innocuously enough early this year when the gold rush for television serials on Doordarshan was just beginning. Bombay film director Basu Chatterji (Sara Akash, Rajnigandha, Chotisi Baat, Swami) had an idea for one, even though he'd never clapped his eyes on a television camera in his life. The idea centered around the character of a woman troubleshooter, the kind of female who barges into all kinds of situations where men or angels normally fear to tread. It wasn't an Indian Charlie's Angels nor one of those embarrassingly inane situation comedies of the I Love Lucy variety. The idea was to create a wholly Indian character not merely coping with routinely Indian problems but fighting them and somehow resolving them. It came to him, a half-amazed Chatterji now admits, by observing his own wife and teenage daughter, both independent, strong-willed women who usually end up getting their own way.

But this month, as the serial ended its first instalment of 13 episodes, Chatterji's home-grown troubleshooter Rajani had come a long way from being an alter ego of the women in his family. She had become a household word among the country's estimated 10 million viewers. As a galvaniser of direct action, Rajani, the undaunted middle-class housewife, fighting the daily injustices of urban life, was transformed into both crusader and vanquisher, a sort of knight-in-shining-armour.

Rajani's weekly, Sunday morning battles are tiny but not trivial. The first hint of controversy came in an episode three weeks ago when she discovered that like countless consumers she would have to wait for days to obtain a cooking gas cylinder while those willing to pay an illegal premium could obtain one promptly. Unbeaten, she had the cooking gas agency hauled over the coals by reporting the incident to the police and getting the agent arrested. Fictionalised though the incident was, it was obviously close enough to reality to arouse reaction. Immediately the Bombay-based All India LPG Distributors Federation protested to Doordarshan that their trade had been unjustly maligned. But even as they demanded an apology from the TV network, Rajani sprang back into action the following week in another episode. This time she sought to check harassment by a taxi driver who first refused to take her on a short fare and, when pressurised by a policeman to do so, feigned engine trouble. Determined to beat the cabbie, Rajani headed for the nearest police station. While thousands of viewers in metros rooted for Rajani for winning the commonest no-win situation, next morning 500 irate taxi drivers marched to Doordarshan offices in Bombay demanding an apology for portraying cabbies as "bad characters".

Priya Tendulkar: troubleshooter

RAGHU RAI

But the two episodes of Rajani, coming one after another, had touched a raw nerve in the public psyche. "It triggered off a reaction beyond my wildest dreams," confessed the serial's sedate, white-haired director Basu Chatterji, who has spent his career making middle-of-the-road feature films that have, more often than not, sunk in the box-office quagmire. Last fortnight, it was clear that among sponsored programmes, Rajaini had outstripped all its competitors in popularity, even the durable family drama Hum Log. One TV rating chart in Bombay showed a viewership of about 94 per cent for the programme in July, a substantial increase from its rating of 75 per cent when it started. And even the minister for information & broadcasting had to come on record with a reassurance that Rajani would not be discontinued. "With Rajani, public service television had finally arrived," claimed an enthusiastic Sam Balsara, general manager, Mudra Communications, the production company that floated the serial. "Rajani is not just a phenomenon, it's now become a movement."

The claims of the programme's originators were not unjustified. The protests from institutions Rajani challenged were instantly and clamorously eclipsed by an avalanche of public approbation: Doordarshan's offices were flooded with telephone calls from supporting viewers, and overnight, pressure groups sprouted to cheer Rajani on from escapade to escapade. Whether it was Rajani exposing phoney astrologers or mobilising schoolteachers for a better deal or ticking off an office staff for misusing telephones, she got her way at the end of the 22-minute prime time slot, so that even TV critics were impressed. Said TV columnist Amita Malik: "Rajani as a serial would not have clicked if it did not have a veneer of social criticism. It is no great shakes, artistically or content-wise, and the acting is decidedly wooden. But it is the critical aspect of Rajani that is ringing a bell." In short, Rajani the unraveller of daily hassles,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

civic morality is also a relentless winner. Everyone loved her.

"Rajani is very annoyed that the telephone 298088 is not working for so long," read a recent advertisement in a Calcutta newspaper; indeed, for the city's harrowed citizenry, she seemed briefly to have acquired the stature of an avenging Durga. "If only we had someone like her in real life," lamented 33-year-old Calcutta schoolteacher Swapna Mukherjee. "I'm praying that some young woman will be inspired by her and take up cudgels on our behalf against gas dealers and taxi drivers." K.S.Kulkarni, a well-known consumer activist in Hyderabad and general secretary of the Akhil Bhartiya Grahak Panchayat, pointed out that Rajani's success was due to the absence of any unified consumer protection movement, one reason why it has not led to any collective action outside Bombay. "But the fact that Rajani is challenging institutions on an officially-controlled medium like Doordarshan has kindled a lot of interest in the serial," he said.

In Ahmedabad, Ramesh Joshi, a businessman dealing in typewriters, related how he watched amazed last fortnight as an angry 'Rajani-like' housewife heckled an autorickshaw driver on Nehru Bridge because he was demanding more money than his meter indicated. Says Joshi: "The programme's obviously giving many the courage to fight daily humiliations." In Bombay, the Consumer Guidance Society of India, a voluntary organisation which has for years struggled with its 1,400 members valiantly, and sometimes vainly, to provide redress to the hapless consumer, seized the opportunity at once to deplore the LPG dealers' protest, mobilise college students to write in letters to papers and build up public opinion in favour of Rajani. "We did our little bit, of course," explained Pushpa Motwany, chairperson of the society, "but it wasn't us that brought Rajani's importance to light, it is the frustrations of the public that has made her a heroine. She has become the new Joan of Arc."

Close on the heels of the consumer society's effort came a snap opinion poll carried out by another voluntary public service group known as Hindustani Andolan. The group sent out the two following questions to 5,000 people in Bombay asking for replies in writing:' Do you think the programme Rajani describing the plight of gas consumers in obtaining gas supplies and the harassment of

Rajani with director Chatterji (top); and with gas supplier; and taxi-driver

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Alitalia presents a great new service dedicated to India.

Two Airbus flights a week, Bombay-Rome direct.

The full capacity of our new A300 wide body service is there for passengers originating in India. So you'll have no problems with seat availability... and your reservations can be confirmed immediately. With cool, early morning departures, you'll arrive in Rome just after lunch, in good time for connections to Milan and the rest of Europe. Fly with us any Thursday or Sunday. Relaxing in super Airbus comfort, Alitalia style. All the way.

Alitalia

Alitalia is represented in Bombay, Delhi, Madras, Calcutta, Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Jullundur, Kanpur, Chandigarh, Kathmandu and Colombo.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

taxi-users by cabbies portrays the true state of affairs?' And 'Do you agree with the demand of the taximen's union that Doordarshan should tender an apology to them for showing this programme?'

Within 48 hours of mailing the questionnaire, says Madhu Mehta, national convenor of the Andolan, he received 612 answers; in a week the number of responses was a staggering 6,000; people in certain localities had collected up to 200 signatures in favour of Rajani; and his doorbell at home never stopped ringing on Sunday with people trooping in to uphold the Rajani campaign. Next morning the press took up the story, frontpaging Rajani's doings in detail and Amul dairy products splattered town with hoardings showing a butter-licking Rajani and a fleeing taxi with the query: 'What's yellow on top and all for Rajani?' Even A.L. Quadros, the implacable secretary of the Bombay Taximen's Union who had led the march against Rajani had been momentarily silenced, when business came down by ten per cent after the programme. It was best to have Rajani on the taxi-drivers' side, he reckoned, and was keen that she expose the taximan's plight in a specially-written episode at some later stage.

"Rajani is so inspiring. I feel motivated all the time to do something similar."

BHARATI THAKAR
labour leader, Ahmedabad

Imitation being the best form of flattery, the advertising and film world rapidly caught on: Bombay's film industry papers reported the advent of a film called Inspector Rajani and advertising and market research agencies were avidly discussing introducing Rajani-type characters to reinforce consumer sales. Says Nirmal Goswami, writer and director of Ulka Advertising: "Rajani is succeeding for the reason Woman's World failed. The women on that programme were total strangers to the bulk of the female audience. Rajani is handling the genuine problems of the urban jungle, especially one like Bombay where nothing works without pay-off and gratification." Sociologist Dr Meena Kaushik who heads Quest, the qualitative research wing of MARG (Marketing and Research Group), lucidly analysed what she termed the 'Rajani effect': "Rajani represents the new woman, the new female stereotype who combines the traditional values of the housewife with the more aggressive, championing traits of a working woman," she said. In their research into the 'Rajani effect', Kaushik and her colleague Meera Vasudevan found that reaction to Rajani among women viewers was sharply polarised: they either loved her or hated her but never reacted unequivocally. "She is superwoman for some

PRIYA TENDULKAR

A Star is Born

FOR A 25-year-old, Priya Tendulkar has packed a lot into her life: she attended art school for two years, worked in a printing press, in a bank, as a restaurant hostess in a five-star hotel and as an Air India stewardess. Now she is an actress, not because of any burning desire or commitment but because, like most things in her life, the opportunity fell into her lap accidentally. "All I ever wanted to be was a great painter," says the second of playwright Vijay Tendulkar's three daughters who stumbled into the Rajani role after actress Padmini Kolhapure turned it down due to prior film commitments. "Basu Chatterji met me for a few minutes at the only film party I ever attended, and offered me the part, maybe because I have such a common-looking face. I had a done a few masala Marathi films. I thought this would be a change."

The biggest change Rajani has brought in Priya's life (other than the hundreds of weekly letters that pour in including marriage proposals) is that Hindi film producers are queuing up at her door: she has some nine films in hand, "middle-budget ventures with strong characters", but as for Rajani, she says her role in it is quite incidental and that she makes no suggestions, just goes along and delivers the lines. "But TV has made me realise how far I lived from reality, and how explosively powerful this medium is."

Tendulkar: middle-class messiah

HEMAND PITHWA

Presently, she is one of the busiest if not the most versatile actresses in Bombay, working in theatre, television and films simultaneously. That makes for an 18-hour day, often taken up by travelling to mofussil towns in repertory performances of her father's plays, Anji, Kamla and Kanyadaan. She makes no bones about the fact that she's doing films for the money. "As a child I saw my father struggling in a job all day and writing his plays all night. I don't want to do that. I want to be financially secure when I go back to my painting and writing."

A self-confessed 'Daddy's girl' who regards him as her best friend, she has always been unpredictable, headstrong but without ambition. Her younger sister Tanuja says that all Priya's jobs have been so unexpected that no one at home is really surprised at her becoming an overnight star with Rajani. "We still don't know where to get autographed photographs of her. There's such a demand." As for Priya herself, she says that since school she has somehow managed to pull through life because she's basically sincere. "The only difference is that as a child I used to get caught for not doing what I was told. Now I don't."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

because she victoriously re-enacts those small incidents of their lives where they have failed. And for others she is a pushing virago forcing them to take a stand, arousing fears of rejection if they are not like her," says Vasudevan.

Reactions to the programme among women viewers are, in fact, split along such a line. Bharati Thakar, an Ahmedabad labour leader, admits that ever since she saw a couple of the programme's episodes she can't stop thinking about Rajani. "It's so inspiring," she gushes. "I feel motivated all the time to do something similar."

But there are an equal number of viewers who express scepticism. In the south, for example, few understand Hindi and those that do tend to regard Rajani as yet another Sunday morning entertainment emanating from the Hindi-speaking north. There are others who find the programme naive and unrelated to the larger corruptions of the system, poorly produced and absurdly romantic. In other words, Rajani's actions may be terrific to watch but are impossible to emulate. Says Dr Shalini Bhogale, reader in sociology at Hyderabad's Osmania University: "Rajani is an adult fantasy, simplistic and implausible. Activism isn't spurred by television. Awareness is distinct from arousal. How many husbands are their like Rajani's? And Swapna Mukherjee, the Calcutta schoolteacher who prays for the emergence of real-life Rajanis, concedes that it would be a bit impracticable to become one. "I'd love to be like Rajani but life isn't like they show it. If my gas delivery boy threatened to delay supply unless I paid him five rupees, I'd rather shell out the money than raise Cain."

While the gap between life on TV and real life seemed unbridgeable at one level, there are also those who feel strongly about the nature of the problems Rajani tackles and the institutions she takes on. Om Sharma, a widely admired humour columnist in Rajasthan, is bitingly critical of the programme's slant: "The whole thing is a conspiracy of the haves against the have-nots," he says. "I am not trying to excuse corruption at any level but, have you noticed, that Rajani exposes corruption at the lower levels, the implication being that those at the top are clean. Rajani always succeeds because the higher authority she approaches for redress is always responsive. In reality it is not." Adds N.L. Chowla, member, media advisory committee to the Union Government: "After all, Rajani is just as wishy-washy as the other serials. And like other serials, it is geared to the upper middle class whereas we keep on making tall claims about TV reaching 70 per cent of the population."

"It is the frustrations of the public that have made Rajani a heroine. She has become the new Joan of Arc."

PUSHPA MOTWANY
chairperson, Consumer Guidance Society of India

"The fact that Rajani is challenging institutions on an officially-controlled medium like Doordarshan has kindled a lot of interest."

K.S. KULKARNI
consumer activist, Hyderabad

Rajani's director, in fact, is in a quandary about exactly such deficiencies. The nature of the serial itself, with Rajani solving a problem in each episode, presents difficulties. "The first decision is what sort of things should Rajani take up, moral issues, civic problems or social attitudes," says Basu Chatterji. "Secondly, there is the problem of giving each episode the right tone so as to balance humour with serious concern, and make it authentic without oversimplifying." Last week-end's episode had Rajani lambasting newspaper horoscopes, but the programme was widely considered a bore, its patchy production values aggravated by a rambling scenario, unlikely situations and unlikelier solutions. The reason for this is the tremendous physical pressure under which all TV serials are made (INDIA TODAY, July 15, 1985) with shortages of studios, equipment and scripts. Things became so fraught on Rajani's production schedule last month that director Chatterjee was writing bits of dialogue on paper on his way to the studio while actress Priya Tendulkar was strained enough by the speed of the serial's production to lose 7 kg during the filming of the first 13 episodes (see box).

Still, television being all things to all men, it is not surprising that a simplistic, crudely produced serial which did not set out to be a consciousness-raising exercise has actually done it. Social and political observers are also quick to point out that the reason for the programme's runaway success is that, as basic social and institutional codes break down due to corruption, there are fewer channels of redress left for the common man. "Everybody's personal problem or agony becomes associated with Rajani," says social scientist Meena Kaushik.

But she is also a motivator of protest, however transient. Nirmala, a 48-year-old housewife in lethargic, corruption-ridden Bhubaneswar says that one day she became so moved by Rajani's doings that "I asked my children to protest against the school authorities. They go on charging higher fees without much teaching work. The children said no one could protest in school. I was mad. I said, someone has to be like Rajani and set right wrongs. But later, of course, I simply laughed at my anger."

The serial's cathartic impact may not, after all, be a superficial, fleeting emotion switched off along with the television set. If programmes like Rajani have arrived, then so has meaningful, socially-relevant television that breaks away from its bondage to Government handouts and B-grade Hindi film entertainment. Doordarshan Director-General Harish Khanna admits that "Rajani is being talked because it's based on real problems, not ethereal or speculative ones. I can't say how long it will continue, but I'm sure the model will be continued for a long time to come, leading maybe to other serials along the same line." As behavioural scientist Meera Vasudevan of Quest pointed out, it is not important whether Rajani will stay on or not but characters like her are here to stay and ring in change.

—SUNIL SETHI with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tools that meet the challenge of productivity

WIDIA Hi-Performers

Hi-performance tungsten carbide tools from WIDIA. Tools that cover a wide spectrum of operations—in metal cutting, metal forming and mining applications. Also, tungsten carbide wear parts. In a vast range to suit diverse needs. For improved efficiency and productivity.

Tools that pass through stringent quality assurance tests to meet exacting international standards. Tools that extend the frontiers of hardmetal technology—a result of WIDIA's in-house R&D and a continuous flow of the latest technology from the pioneers, KRUPP WIDIA, West Germany.

Backed by unmatched service. By experts who offer precise solutions to customer problems, and a countrywide sales and service network.

WIDIA—the right tools to meet the challenge of productivity.

WIDIA

Your productivity—our concern

SAA/WIL/1360 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Food, friends and Thums Up.

Artificially flavoured. Contains no fruit juice or fruit pulp.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Happy days are here again...

The refreshing Cola
serve chilled

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Sensation of Suzuki. 0 to 60 in 9 seconds flat!

That's the power of advanced 2-stroke technology.

The surge of power in a sleek, virile body.
The trigger response of 4-speed transmission.
The swift pick-up from 0 to 60 kph in just 9 seconds.
You get it all with the Ind-Suzuki AX 100.
Effortlessly, confidently, securely.
Pulsating, Thrilling. Exciting.
That's the sensation of Suzuki.
Come, feel its dynamic features.

- 100 cc 2-stroke engine output 8.25 bhp at 6500 rpm.
- Reed Valve induction system for high torque at low speeds.
- Electronic ignition system with automatic advance perfect engine timing. No contact breaker points. No adjustments.
- Independent lubrication system. Separate oil pump feeds optimum quantity of oil to match varying engine requirements.

- Fuel efficiency: 65 km/litre.

Unmatched performance and several exclusive features, put the Ind-Suzuki AX 100 in a class all its own.

It incorporates a sophisticated instrument panel with indicating and warning lights; rear view mirrors; turn signal indicators; steering, helmet and fuel tank locks.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

nts.

pump
g

km/litre.
rmance

Suzuki
s own.

ent panel
ors;
tank locks.

A creation of India's most dynamic Indo-Japanese venture.

IND-SUZUKI

IND-SUZUKI

AX 100

Watch it take over the Indian roads.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

THE NEW B

VIJAYANTHIMALA BALI, screen siren in the '60s, and a leading exponent of Bharatanatyam, has demonstrated a new virtuosity by making five speeches in the Lok Sabha on subjects that range from rural education to terrorism. Rangarajan Kumaramangalam, a Madras advocate and fiery labour leader, today participates in deliberations on the future of the electronics industry. Superstar Amitabh Bachchan hasn't yet given up acting, but he is now more concerned with being a conduit between the film industry and government than with what appears on the silver screen. Former hockey olympian Aslam Sher Khan has retired from the field but now spends his time dribbling around vested interests that keep Indian sports moribund. One time police officer Laldu-homa has turned his back on looking after the security of VIPs in Delhi and is now the government's front man in its sensitive negotiations with rebel leader Laldenga. S. Krishnakumar, the Kerala IAS officer who till recently ran a public sector concern, is now studying the larger problems of the government's core industries.

What unites individuals as diverse as these is not merely the fact that they are freshers in the Lok Sabha, eight months into their first foray into legislative politics. Nor even the fact that they were handpicked by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to form the vanguard of his new-look Congress(I), among some 86-odd first time MP's without any legislative experience who stormed their way into the lower House in the wake of Rajiv's astonishing 401-seat victory. As the Eighth Lok Sabha finishes its third—the monsoon—session this fortnight, more than anything else, perhaps, the party is distinguished by a common goal: the making of a different breed of parliamentarians.

Says newcomer Mukul Wasnik, the youngest ever MP who filed his nomination papers eight days after he reached the qualifying age of 25: "We are not here to represent any lobby, we are here to solve problems and we will go to any person who can help us do this." Remarks such as this indicate a new fighting mood, a spirit of enterprise finally giving substance to the generally amorphous role of members of parliament.

The problems are still there: absenteeism, soporific debates, and wasted time. But there is also the germ of a new sense of purposefulness. The budget session, for instance, was marked by the transaction of an impressive volume of business in which the freshers left their indelible mark.

But much more than this is the manifestation of change in the way the new breed of MP's is going about its business. Traditionally, MP's have ranged from the garrulous to the silent sleepers to those who—like Sanjay's legions who came to the Lok Sabha in 1980—generated more noise than business. There were always the great parliamentarians, men like Nath Pai, Ram Manohar Lohia and Jyotirmoy Bosu, who set standards that few have since matched. Each Lok Sabha has had a dozen or so on either side who gave its debates substance and its conduct dignity and meaning. But the greenhorns of the past all too often sat in the sidelines, barely participating in the proceedings, seldom raising the standards of debate.

This time round, the new MP's, according to a long-time Parliament reporter, are "basically very good, very promising. There are some, in fact, who

Khan

Vijayanthimala

Kumaramangalam

Wasnik

Bachchan

Rajiv Gandhi

speak l party r view th viewpo prime sader o
him. K scribed policy a who ha is growi working become that can

CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

W BREED

ke Nath Pai, Jyotirmoy t few have a has had a ho gave its duct dignity orns of the e sidelines, roceedings, f debate. v MP's, ac- iament re- d, very pro- fact, who speak like opposition MP's. They are not party rebels but they put across points of view that are at variance with the official viewpoint." The late Lalit Maken was a prime example of this, a one-man crusader on issues that were important to him. Krishnakumar from Kerala described the Government's agriculture policy as a total failure. The list of those who have been critical of the Government is growing by the day. But they still lack a working knowledge of the rules, how to become effective parliamentarians though that can only improve in time.

Another veteran parliament watcher says that the new breed seems refreshingly free from ideological hang-ups, and unlike the older MP's who come into the well of the Lok Sabha and tend to wander about, chatting here and there, the younger members demonstrate a business-like demeanour which makes a refreshing change. "The younger MP's bow courteously Japanese style, to the speaker when they come in or leave the chamber," he says.

One striking feature common to large platoons of Rajiv's army of beginners is their economic independence, having been launched into parliamentary politics on the safe base of either a profession of private business. They are the opposite of the trademark Indian politician, dhoti-clad, clumsy and prone to living by his wits. Nor are they clones of the Sanjay brigade who muscled onto the centre-stage of the Seventh Lok Sabha by using lung-power and weighty patronage. The new breed of Congress(I) MP's—either in their smartly-cut kurta- pyjamas or more formally attired in Nehru jackets, manners always impeccable, honed at public schools in many cases—are a group apart in India's body politic.

Every Parliament has had it share of newcomers, but they tended to be cast in the traditional mould with some background of politics either by virtue of birth or upbringing or profession. It was Sanjay who heralded the first change, during the 1980 elections, when he was instrumental in admitting over 50 absolute greenhorns into Parliament. Eyebrows were raised even then, but Sanjay's experiment paled into insignificance after the 1984 election when no fewer than one-third of the party's MP's were new faces, including the 88 first time legislators who had—in the words of Harikrishna Shastri, secretary of the CPPI—"never even seen the inside of a panchayat".

The film stars among them form only the thin but glamorous icing on the cake of the professional class that dominates the Rajiv troupe. Some 35 of them came to politics from the corporate ranks or from the government bureaucracy. Still others were, till recently, professional lawyers, doctors, chartered accountants, and engineers. Another 25-odd MP's are feudal chiefs-turned-democrats, scions of ex-monarchs and rising entrepreneurs who form a compact if elite group within the Congress(I) freshers club. Obviously they command, together with some of their more successful colleagues from the professional group, resources that can seldom be matched by MP's of the garden variety. If this was an advantage in their elections, it now promises to serve a wider purpose, in their parliamentary work supplementing the meagre wages provided by Government.

Besides these, the freshers

The Congress(I)'s army of classical dancers, professional managers, trade union leaders, sportsmen...is distinguished by a common goal that their earlier incarnations didn't even hint at: the making of a different breed of parliamentarians.

Bannerjee

Sherwani

Lalduhoma

Sharma

Krishnakumar

Gandhi Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I grew up with Gopi."

"Four years ago my mother tempted me to enter the kitchen, with a Gopi.

Yet today, I'm an expert cook... thanks to the super helpmate I have in Gopi."

"Gopi is all the help I need in my kitchen.

And do you know why?

Gopi offers me the latest technology and three jars with the basic machine — not just one. All at no extra cost.

So only Gopi lets me switch from blending... to dry grinding... to wet grinding to whatever... in seconds. With no hassles, such as fiddling with sharp blades.

Gopi also gives me the widest choice of optional attachments for special jobs. Each self-enclosed.

Come to think of it, Gopi does the work of a food processor, blender, juicer and grinder. Imagine the money I save by not having to buy them individually!

What's more, Gopi's heavy duty motor makes it the best machine for Indian conditions. In fact, I run it as long as I want. And the operating instructions are so easy to follow.

The Gopi machine is so good, you get lifetime free service.

What more could any woman want?

No wonder, with Gopi around I almost feel like a superwoman in the kitchen!"

GOPI
Kitchen Machine

The better looking, better designed kitchen machine with a lifetime free service.

Optional attachments

ist on Gopi by name — buy from authorised dealers only.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

include about 15 "intellectuals" which, in the Indian context, can of course mean anything between a village schoolteacher and an atomic physicist. But many of Rajiv's new finds are indeed teachers of distinction while one of them, Keyur Bhushan, elected from Raipur in Madhya Pradesh, is a recognised Hindi poet. In addition, there are nearly a dozen trade unionists, some of whom had in fact been active in trade union organisations other than the Congress(I)'s pocket organisation—the Indian National Trade Union Congress (INTUC). As a group, their baptism in politics has taken place through militancy and an exposure to the intricacies of industry.

Will the newcomers spell a new era for India's parliamentary culture, bringing both depth and relevance to the business of law-making? Says G.K. Moopanar, general secretary of the All India Congress(I) Committee (AICC-I): "New ideas call for new people. Rajivji has made a beginning towards changes that are far-reaching. The new MP's have not betrayed his confidence."

But the view of the party leadership about the newcomers is ultimately based on close monitoring of their work both within and outside the Parliament. Big brother began his watch from the very inaugural session of the Parliament when, addressing a meeting of the CPP(I), Rajiv directed the newcomers to meticulously submit to the party inter-session reports on progress of work in the constituencies. The exhortation was followed by the despatch of ponderous loads of questionnaire which the beginners were asked to carry back to their constituencies and get answered. On these data, as also on the performance on the floor of the House, rested the rating of the new MP. As Vijayanthimala put it disarmingly: "It is so good to know that somebody is trying to correct you all the time. In dance as well as in politics you tend to take a wrong step if nobody is watching you." The newcomers were among the regulars at the party's orientation course held in January to help set them up as knowledgeable and effective parliamentarians.

Audibility in the Parliament is of course rationed according to the rules of business. But some of the new MP's lucky to have wielded the microphone so far have been headline-grabbers. Kumaramangalam's speech on the ethnic problem in Sri Lanka has been listened to even by the veterans from the Opposition with rapt attention. Last fortnight, as Bachchan was delivering his maiden speech on the anti-narcotics bill, Madhu Dandavate, the redoubtable Janata member, spontaneously lauded him, calling out in the full hearing of the House: "He is always eloquent."

Life in the Parliament, and the capital, has obviously been a new experience for the majority of the new MP's. For the more resourceful among them, the shifting has been relatively free of hitches. But there are many who have been moving around like innocents abroad, striving to feel the ground under their feet in a new environment, rendered particularly tense by the threat from the terrorists. The recent slaying of Lalit Maken, perhaps one of the brightest MP's of the new breed, has cast its shadow on the new tenants of the sarkari flats in the MP districts of North Avenue, South Avenue, Meena Bagh or Lodi Estate—heightened only further by the measured footsteps of the black-uniformed security commandos pacing up and down the quiet, residential avenues. Visitors to some of them are obliged to undergo careful frisking before being admitted.

However, a still more constant occupational hazard for the new MP's has been the unrelenting pressure from their constituencies. Rising levels of expectations of the electorate from its MP's is a relatively new phenomenon, beginning with the massive anti-poverty programmes of the '80s. Men and women from the constituency, particularly the poorer among them, naturally flock to their MP's even if the particular MP hasn't had a long innings in public life. "This is a new experience for many of us," says Krishna Kumar, who actually had to cut back on the expenses for his children's tuition to be able to extend hospitality to "constituency people" swarming into his Delhi home. The North Avenue flat of Mamata Bannerjee is an open house where visitors from Calcutta come with their families and, using her house as base, go to Haridwar and Rishikesh.

For the new MP's in the Congress(I)—cultivated and refined in their outlooks—these are the first tentative contacts with the wide world outside, the world of squalor, poverty and despair. They are learning the hard way. But, as the experience of some of them shows, they are already beginning to make their mark. To show how they are coping, INDIA TODAY profiles some of those who have most successfully made the transition, and are beginning to make an impact.

Aslam Sher Khan, 33 hockey player constituency: Betul

> "I don't think I am the arguing, debating type, but you can score the goal in politics not only by hitting hard but by distributing and passing."

ASLAM SHER KHAN, 33, is taciturn, shy and, as he had always been on the field, crafty. A former full-back in the Indian hockey team at the Munich Olympics in 1972, the Montreal Olympics in 1976 and the captain of the victorious Indian team at the World Cup in 1975, Khan obviously is more comfortable with the stick than the microphone. In fact, he is still waiting for his turn to make his maiden speech in the Lok Sabha. Nor does he have a clearly defined role as a member of the consultative committee attached to the Chemicals and Fertilisers Ministry. "I've never really had much interest in such things," he admits.

But he has nonetheless been playing with remarkable alacrity his chosen role as the government's future sledge-hammer directed at the autonomous sports bodies. However, he had a tough time recently at the election of the Indian Hockey Federation (IHF) in Bangalore where the Congress(I)-sponsored candidate, K.S. Dhillon, was defeated by the wily and resourceful M.A.M. Ramaswamy. But Khan is now ready with a proposal, submitted to the prime minister, for government take-over of all the sports bodies excluding the Cricket Control Board of India. "The bane of Indian sports is the chieftain-spirit prevalent in the sports bodies," he says.

Khan's constituency, Betul, has a large share (40 per cent) of tribal population living in the uplands where water shortage is chronic. So, immediately after his election, Khan began to persuade the authorities at the state capital of Bhopal as well as in Delhi to approve new irrigation schemes. His efforts met with success when two irrigation schemes were started in his constituency with World Bank funding. Thanks to his status as an MP, a low-power television transmitter is coming up at Betul while a 400-line automatic exchange has already been set up. "I don't think I am much of the arguing, debating type", he says, "but you can score the goal in politics not only by hitting hard but by distributing and passing."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Vijayanthimala Bali, 50 dancer constituency: Madras South

> The important thing that acting and dancing teach a person is the sense of perfect timing. This is also the essence of politics.

VIJAYANTHIMALA, with her deeply rouged cheeks and her carefully hidden reading glasses, has delivered five speeches so far on subjects as wide-ranging as rural development and the anti-terrorist bill. Currently a vivacious 50, she zips through the Central Hall of the Parliament many times each day with the exuberance of the village belle that she played in Ganga Jamuna. "The important thing that acting and dancing teach a person," she says sitting in her makeshift home at a suite in the India International Centre, "is the sense of perfect timing, of doing things at a measured pace. This in a curious way is also the essence of politics."

Such pearls of wisdom cascade spontaneously down the lips of the charming MP from the Madras South Lok Sabha constituency, but Vijayanthimala is seldom limited to wisecracks. Between the budget and the monsoon sessions of the Parliament, she and her omnipresent doctor husband undertook trips round four states—Maharashtra, Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka and her native Tamil Nadu—to raise core groups of educated women who would in turn motivate other women to propagate the cause of family planning. In between, she flew down to Delhi, met Mohsina Kidwai, the minister in charge of health and family welfare, and bombarded her with a pithy note which said that the "inverted red triangle" was indeed an archaic and esoteric symbol which meant nothing to village women.

Vijayanthimala is a member of the consultative committee on public grievances, personnel training and art and is the chairperson of the standing committee attached to it. On these forums, she has been stridently championing the cause—among other things—of saving the priceless Indian antiques from getting smuggled out of the country. But her "priority A", as she puts it, "is to do something about family planning, to take the campaign to every doorstep in the villages." She has effectively taken the campaign to her own constituency at least where over 500 women have been drafted to provide counselling to families. "We have begun to talk to the male members, because it is impossible to motivate people for family welfare unless you have got the menfolk on your side. Counselling through women alone is an ancient concept. It must change," she says.

However, Vijayanthimala is not one of those finnicky MP's who would rather stay silent than speak on subjects that do not quite conform to their special aptitudes. So she spoke on the anti-defection bill as her name came up by the draw of lots at the business advisory committee. She also spoke on the anti-narcotics bill last fortnight, besides bringing in a large number of special mentions and over a dozen call-attentions. And how seriously she took her job was manifest in the heaps of files, memoranda, books and letters—mixed up with an occasional book on painting and dances—littered at every conceivable, and inconceivable, corner of her two-room suite. "There is pleasure in working hard", the dancer says with tremendous feeling, "in dance, you slog to get a particular mudra right; in politics, if you work hard, you are bound to see the results influencing the lots of a large number of people."

Rangarajan Kumaramangalam, 33 trade union activist constituency: Salem

> A good parliamentarian, I think, is a Samurai at heart.

For RANGARAJAN KUMARAMANGALAM, 33, president of the All-India NSUI between 1973 and 1975 and a general secretary of the All-India Youth Congress in 1975-76, the smiling and jovial exterior is only the cover for a tough trade union activist who was the president of 84 labour unions when Rajiv Gandhi chose him as the Congress(I) candidate from Salem, the industrial town near Madras. The steel rolling plant at Salem was the brainchild of his father, the late Mohan Kumaramangalam, when he was the Union steel minister between 1971 and 1973. Soon after the senior Kumaramangalam's death in an air crash in Delhi, however, the Salem plant was dumped and, by 1975, the Union Government drove the last nail into its coffin by saying that it would not be viable to upgrade the rolling plant into a proper smelting unit. But, by then, the plant had already hired 12,000 staff and acquired 3,000 acres of land. For the next 10 years, it sat squat in the middle of the town like an irremovable white elephant.

Kumaramangalam's first move as an MP was to approach the Planning Commission with a Rs 600-crore plan to upgrade the Salem plant. But the commission said it had no money. Kumaramangalam's spontaneous next manoeuvre was to meet M.G. Ramachandran, the Tamil Nadu chief minister, and to formulate the elaborate plan for a joint sector steel plant with equity participation from the Centre, the state Government and the private sector. The joint sector plan is now only awaiting a green signal from the Centre.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Intelligent, alert and bubbling with enthusiasm, Kumaramangalam has the mercurial trait of his father sans his dogma and his frenetic suspicion of the private sector. Two years ago, as president of the labour union at the Wimco plant, he sided with the management to end the protracted labour strife and help the company head off a financial crisis caused by onslaught from the unorganised match factories thriving on irregular labour practices and exploitation of child labour. "Labour can survive only when industry survives," he says.

Like other new members of parliament, Kumaramangalam is learning the hard way that being a people's representative can be taxing on the purse strings. Overwhelmed by visitors from his constituency, he soon found that his daily allowance of Rs 75 was vanishing in just providing refreshments and accommodation to his constituents. But he is learning the ropes: recently he managed to get himself allotted a flat for visitors, a facility that is permitted to MP's but for which there is considerable competition for there are only about 80 such apartments available. But finding cash is not really a problem for Kumaramangalam. Hopping into his newly-acquired second Maruti car, he said with a majestic wave of his hand: "I'm of course lucky in the sense that when I am short of funds I can just fly down to Madras High Court, appear for a couple of days, and get back with enough money to keep the pot boiling for a few days more."

A member of the consultative committee on electronics, Rangarajan Kumaramangalam has been constantly hammering away the necessity for preventing India from "going the Singapore way" and for "shunning screw-driver technology". He has spoken on the ethnic problem at Sri Lanka, on the need to amend the State Financial Corporation Act, and on the urgency to convert handlooms into small powerlooms and to put an end to the practice of subsidising inefficiently run looms. "Small is not always beautiful," he quips. But he is indeed a parliamentarian of the classical mould to whom the parries and thrusts on the floor are more important than deliberations in closed committee halls and ministerial chambers. "A good parliamentarian, I think, is a Samurai at heart," he says with a mischievous glint in his eyes.

Mukul Wasnik, 26
student leader constituency: Buldana

> We are not here to represent any lobby, we are here to solve problems, and we will go to any person who can help us do this.

MUKUL WASNIK, 26, who is the present president of the NSUI, is an MBA of Nagpur University who was studying for his law degree and writing his doctoral thesis when the call came. Wasnik, who represents Buldana in the Vidarbha region of Maharashtra, is already regarded as a forceful speaker with a viewpoint of his own. Speaking on the demands of the Education Ministry, Wasnik startled the grey eminences on the treasury benches when he fervently attacked a suggestion from the Government that elections for the students' unions should be done away with. "Elections are an absolute must because they shape the personality of students," he asserts. Even though the Education Ministry reportedly does not approve of his views, most opposition MP's are in agreement with him. In fact, members on the opposition benches clapped all the way during his speech.

As a member of the consultative committee on sports and youth affairs, he is credited with tossing up a string of pithy questions. For instance, he worked out the budget for certain state-organised sports programmes at the block level and the figures turned out to be around Rs 200. "Which sports programme can you hold at a cost of just Rs 200?" he queries. Wasnik is also an ardent supporter of the view that there should be specialised schools right from the fourth standard, and is preparing a note on the subject which is to be circulated among other members of the consultative committee. He speaks a language which is heavy with the hangover of his business management classroom, talking of members of his constituency-level organisation as "personnel" and referring to the business of giving them tasks as "optimum utilisation". But he is a relentless does having already secured from the Maharashtra Government approval for a Rs 1 crore drinking water scheme in his constituency. He is going ahead with a plan to start several vocational centres in the area. "I can't concentrate on all things at a time", he says, "therefore, I want to concentrate on the problems of students." After all, Wasnik is one of the few MP's who are students themselves. And he has a right too to speak on sports.

Amitabh Bachchan, 44
actor
constituency: Allahabad

> The dome of the Parliament is as awe-inspiring as the lens of the camera, a shade more exacting because nobody says 'cut' if you've made a wrong move.

AMITABH BACHCHAN, 44, has struck an unusually low key in the Lok Sabha. But he has put into full use the advantage of being allotted a well-located bungalow on Motilal Nehru Marg where he has already built up a formidable personal secretariat through which he stays in touch with what he describes as his "two constituencies"—Allahabad, and the film industry.

The matinee idol is never in want of worshippers even in his new incarnation. Sheetal, his private secretary, handles over a hundred telephone calls a day

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

while his praetorian guards posted at the gate of the bungalow frisk as many people seeking an audience with Bachchan. The only difference from his days in the show-business is the fact that most of his new callers are not star-struck teenagers but middle class and poor people from Allahabad who had come all the way with their petitions—for jobs, bank loans, or irrigation facilities on their fields.

Four of his six secretaries are detailed for his "Allahabad work", which means processing individual applications, chasing letters written to Uttar Pradesh ministers and departmental officials, and replying to the public. The team has been set up not a moment too soon. Busy with completing the films he is committed to, Bachchan was conspicuous in his constituency by his absence—leading some enterprising electors sympathetic to a rival Congress(I) camp to file a complaint with the police reporting a 'missing MP'! But if that was in the nature of a joke- with a sharp cutting edge—the fact is that Bachchan visited Allahabad for a mere 12 days between his election and last month. He seems to have learned his lesson: "Now that I've moved to Delhi, I plan to be a week-end tripper to Allahabad," he says.

But his chief preoccupation in the past few months has been to "lobby from within" for a rational government approach towards the problems of the mass media—films and television in particular as a member of the consultative committee attached to the Information & Broadcasting Ministry. At the first meeting of the committee, he cornered the Minister of State, V.N.Gadgil, with the argument that the amended Copyright Act aimed at putting an end to video piracy could not be effective unless its enforcement was entrusted to the Centre instead of allowing the state governments to go about it in their present feeble manner. Earlier, at a meeting of the Congress(I) standing committee attached to the I&B Ministry, he took up the economic causes of the film industry and secured a promise from Gadgil that the industry's proposals regarding tax rationalisation would be re-examined. This is a sore point for film producers who have for years been agitating against "turn-over excise"—zero-excise up to the first 12 prints of a film, and steeply climbing rates for subsequent prints. "The Government must not punish popularity. More prints mean more people will see it, and the level of taxation should gradually lessen instead of going up," he argues. No wonder that film producers queue up to meet him at the beginning of every session. In fact, to facilitate matters for them, he is keeping an aide permanently posted in Bombay.

But how does he view his changed role? Does it not vex him to wait for days on end only to get one special mention or a single call-attention approved? Was a membership of the Parliament after all worth all the bother of switching career, changing residence, getting branded as a man of the establishment? "Oh yes", Bachchan says, "the dome of the Parliament is just as awe-inspiring as the lens of the camera that is rolling. The Parliament is only a shade more exacting because nobody here will say 'cut' if you've made a wrong move."

Mamata Bannerjee, 27 political activist constituency: Jadavpur

> The Lok Sabha is a fighting arena; it is no place for exchange of pleasantries.

Another surprise selection of the Congress(I) leadership, 27-year-old MAMATA BANNERJEE, is in the same age-bracket as Wasnik but shows a degree of pugnaciousness which one normally associates only with the boxing ring. After all, she did vanquish the Marxist leader Somnath Chatterjee in his own den, Jadavpur. "Yes, the Lok Sabha is a fighting arena; it is no place for exchange of pleasantries," says this dark and loquacious queen of special mentions—45 so far on matters ranging from industry and education to refugee rehabilitation, civil aviation, law and order, even defence. However, she really excels in her role as the one-woman battering ram of the ruling party against the second largest opposition bloc in the Lok Sabha—the CPM)—which is in power in her home state, West Bengal. Interrupting the Marxist members during their speeches, heckling them with the ire of an enraged prize-fighter, forcibly dragging West Bengal state issues on the floor of the Lok Sabha—Bannerjee is already quite high up on the list of the CPI(M) parliamentary party's bad fairies and is a godsend for Union ministers besieged with demands from the Marxist members belonging to West Bengal.

As a speaker, she has more lung-power than arguments. As an MP from the Jadavpur constituency, beleaguered with uneconomic glass, textile and engineering units, her role may call for more tact and caution than what she is known to possess. That may be the reason why she is getting more or less typed in her bulldozer role. But she is least likely to mellow down. "Somebody has to scream and scream all these five years to draw the attention of the nation to the Marxist misrule in West Bengal. You cannot do that by being nice."

Salim Sherwani, 32 industrialist constituency: Badaun

> I am in Parliament not to take anything away from it but to give to it the best of my ability.

SALIM SHERWANI, 32, had little to complain about before he become an MP: as the owner of Geep batteries, a sugar mill and a string of luxury hotels, his business enterprises notched up a turnover of Rs 40 crore with 5,000 staff in employment. Had he wanted, Sherwani could have been riding high as a businessman, lording over one of the fastest growing industrial groups in Uttar Pradesh—had it not been for an inherited passion for politics. His father, former Congress MP N.R. Sherwani, died last year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A first class graduate in economics from Aligarh Muslim University, Sherwani was given the offer from Rajiv last year to contest from Badaun, a Muslim-dominated constituency in western Uttar Pradesh. Sherwani gratefully accepted the offer. His visage reflecting every inch his aristocratic lineage, Sherwani however brings into the Lok Sabha the underlying concerns of his fellow industrialists: with taxes and government procedures. He is a member of the consultative committee attached to the Finance Ministry. In this capacity, he is now busy drafting a comprehensive note on the growing phenomenon of sickness of industrial units in which he has pulled no punches to put the Government on the dock. "The worst feature of our fiscal policy is that it puts the indigenous industry on the same competitive level with the multinational corporations. We cannot have unfettered competition between the local sector and the foreign sector," Sherwani says.

He is in the Lok Sabha, he says in the lofty manner of his new colleagues, "not to take anything away from it but to give to it the best of my ability". In fact he is still living in his hotel at Sunder Nagar, a posh Delhi colony, while his official residence at South Avenue is being "done up". But his present environment is totally changed from what it was till recently, that of a corporate boss sanitised against political turmoil outside. Seekers of jobs and bank loans from his constituency, particularly those belonging to the minority communities, chase him even to his hotel. "I've begun enjoying it in a way. I don't really have to worry about business. It has been put on auto-pilot. I look only at the monthly financial reports," he says.

Sherwani faithfully visits his constituency at least twice a month. Skirting the Congress(I) organisation, he has set up his own offices managed by professional people at all assembly segments in his constituency. While routine matters go through them, he grapples with the more important of the problems, dealing either with the authorities in Lucknow or in Delhi. Posted on the wall of his office in Badaun is a large map of the constituency, with water supply, irrigation, power and other projects marked neatly by pin-flags. He does not hedge his views on economic development, particularly of Badaun, which, he says, has been marred by "a subsidy culture". MP's normally would lobby for more subsidy. But Sherwani has both the means and the spirit to rile at it in the true Benthamite spirit, saying: "I don't want subsidy for my people. I want more infrastructure to grow so that they can stand on their own legs." His recent move: he offloaded from his hands all recommendatory power to provide bank loans to the needy but scrutinised instead the entire list of loanees to check against unjustifiable loans.

Lalduhoma, 34
former IPS officer constituency: Mizoram

> The Parliament gives one a choice between working in the public eye and working silently. Ideally one should combine both.

LALDUHOMA, before joining the Indian Police Service (IPS) had been the private secretary to Chal Chhunga, the first chief minister of the Union Territory of Mizoram, which he now represents. He was a member of the VIP security cell till January 1984 when Mrs Gandhi called him into her office one day and asked him if he would like to resign his job and join the Congress(I). Lalduhoma, 34, said yes, and was immediately sent to London to talk to rebel leader Laldenga in exile and negotiate his return to New Delhi. He knew Laldenga intimately as he had been the officer entrusterd with his security earlier in the capital.

The quiet diplomacy paid off and Laldenga agreed to return to India for further parleys on the future of his troubled state. Even now, Lalduhoma is the main conduit between the Centre and the charismatic Mizo leader, and their negotiations have entered the final stage.

A member of the estimates committee as well as the consultative committee attached to the Agriculture Ministry, Lalduhoma is a relentless pursuer of the cause that jhum (slash and burn) cultivation, which is distressingly common to the entire north-eastern hill states, must be abolished in the region. He has been cajoling the Centre, for some time, now to initiate several alternative employment schemes, "so that villagers don't have to burn up entire hillsides—spoiling land, ecology, everything". He insists that jhum is "a state of economy" and can be countered only by finding alternative and remunerative employment. Following his persistent petitioning of the Railway Ministry, the Union Government has now granted a Rs 27-crore project that will connect Silchar, the last outpost in the plains before the Mizo hills begin, with Bairabi, the first railhead in Mizoram.

Anand Sharma, 31
youth activist
member, Rajya Sabha

> The Rajya Sabha is really the arena for the blithe spirit of public debate. This is the place from where one can project one's true national concerns.

ANAND SHARMA, 31, is a babe in the wood of the Rajya Sabha, the House of the Elders. His nomination last year, reportedly secured at the direct intervention of Rajiv when he was the party general secretary, got eyebrows arching upwards. Apart from the fact of his youth, the criticism that weighed against him was that he had been defeated in the assembly elections at his home state, Himachal Pradesh, a year earlier. But, on

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INSULATED

TIFFINS

FROM MILTON

Some people use them for carrying lunch to work...

I use it to keep food warm.

I use ours for a late supper.

I take mine for picnics.

I use one while travelling.

And I use mine everywhere!

Mmm... nothing beats the pleasure of a delicious hot meal. And you can get it with Milton Insulated Tiffins. That's because they are specially insulated to keep their contents hotter... longer.

Milton Insulated Tiffins are available in four convenient sizes with tough, resilient bodies that come in a range of attractive, sun-stable colour combinations.

For your homes, Milton has insulated casseroles. To keep chappaties and dishes piping hot for hours. Now the whole family can have a hot meal... together.

MILTON

Part of your everyday life

MILTON PLASTICS: 202/203, Raheja Centre, Nariman Point, Bombay-21. Ph: 244378/244360.

Available at all leading stores

Take One! Gift One!

Milton Insulated Tiffins and Casseroles make ideal gifts or souvenirs for any and every occasion. So do all the products of the Karry Kool Series: Water Jugs, Ice Packs, Ice Pails and Flasks.

MAKHIJA 1430

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

entering the Rajya Sabha. Sharma has silenced his critics by his power of logic and expression and by the depth of research which enlivens almost all of his speeches. Tall, extremely handsome and bearded, Sharma is–as Rajya Sabha veteran M.C.Bhandare put it–"the human Chinese wall, the ultimate defender". His maiden speech during discussion of the Finance Bill last year established his class. He was irrepressible in his defence of the Rs 180,000-crore Seventh Five Year Plan at a time when powerful coteries both within and outside the Government were advocating its pruning down.

A holder of a post-graduate degree in English Literature and a spellbinding orator, Sharma enjoys his stay at the Rajya Sabha where he is free from the worries that election from any constituency would inevitably bring. "The Rajya Sabha is really the arena for the blithe spirit of public debate. This is the place from where one can project one's true national concerns, not limited by local, regional or parochial considerations," he says.

However, Sharma, who was appointed this year president of the All India Youth Congress(I), has his goal clearly set. In his six years as a member of the Upper House, Anand Sharma wants to pursue only one "clear goal"–that of standardising school, college and university education throughout the country. Even last year, he brought a private member's bill which sought to extend the Central schools to all districts of the country. In an information-studded and well delivered speech on the education policy during the budget session this year, he made out a case for not only more and more Central schools but for Central colleges in all districts to be affiliated to Central universities. He pleaded for same books and same curriculum to be followed across the country and more standard books on national history. "The only way to integrate this huge country", he says, "is to standardise education. I am sure it will be a government policy by the time my term in the Rajya Sabha ends".

Sharma, in every way, turns upside down the conventional brash image of the Youth Congress(I)–the organisation which he heads. His Spartan office on the Janpath is just as cleanly maintained as his work-desk, with books and files neatly stacked and a sticker that reads: IT'S NICE TO BE HUMBLE. "The parliament teaches one, among other things, to be humble," he says.

Krishnakumar, 42
former IAS officer constituency: Quilon

> "I had my role as an IAS officer often verging on the political. So nothing is really amiss now if I double as a bureaucrat, sometimes."

KRISHNAKUMAR, 42, is many things rolled into one. Having resigned from the Indian Administrative Service (IAS) in 1980, he is the only retired member of the IAS in the eighth Lok Sabha. He is also the only public sector manager to have stepped into the new Lok Sabha in 1984; his last job was to head Hindustan Latex Limited, the Kerala-based enterprise that makes coloured condoms and other contraceptives. Krishnakumar's own background is also colourful. He is the grandson of the diwan of the former princely state of Travancore where Quilon, his constituency, is located. He is also a first class graduate in mechanical engineering who had done a two-year stint on the Indian Railways.

Though a member of the consultative committee for science and technology, Krishnakumar's heart lies in the management of the public sector and he is keen to bring forth on the floor of the House "my experience of the days at Latex". He refuses to accept that the roles of bureaucrats and politicians are divided into water-tight compartments. "I had my role as an IAS officer often verging on the political. So nothing is really amiss now if I double as a bureaucrat, sometimes." Krishnakumar is burning his midnight oil to write out, for the Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, a blueprint for raising efficiency of the core industries in the public sector. General secretary of the Kerala unit of the Friends' of the Soviet Union, a pink-hued subgroup on the fringes of the Congress(I), he has strong ideological stands on economic issues. "The public sector was created by Panditji as the fountainhead of progress in India. It must have functional autonomy but must be accountable to the public at every stage."

But, beyond his general concerns, Krishnakumar remains deeply rooted to his home state where he served from his probationary days till he rose to become the state industries secretary. He claims to be the only Congress(I) MP from Kerala to have opened a full-fledged constituency office and has, uniquely, divided it up into sub-offices not according to the geographic area but in terms of the occupations and economic standings of the people. "I think it makes sense", says he, "to divide according to the classification of the people whom you are required to serve. You surely don't serve the land and the rivers." A workaholic who browses at the Parliament library for hours on end, he has been up on his feet with 58 questions, including starred, unstarred and supplementaries, in the past few sessions. He spoke on fisheries ("any Keralite is fishery-conscious"), industrial finance, price rise, population control and transport. "Unlike other states", he says with considerable pride, "the electorate in Kerala is highly demanding."

It is doubtful if these ten beginners of the ruling party will be able, either by the weight of their personality or by sheer hard work, to make their presence felt in the Eighth Lok Sabha, due to remain in place right into the 1990s. The present Lok Sabha, as it is obvious, has begun with ar infirmity, having reduced the Opposition to an insignificant one-fifth of the House. Moreover, being ruling party members, these men and women cannot quite hope to make the grade along the more sensational and aggressive route of anti-establishment crusading. But, even for MP's of the ruling party, there are ways of getting into reckoning by coming up with original ideas, by serving the constituencies and the people at large with a spirit of egalitarianism that is not partisan, a concern which is not tainted by obvious self-interest. The extent to which the Congress(I) freshers can carry out these ideals will determine, to a large extent, the rationale of Rajiv's playing Russian roulette with aspirants while choosing candidates for the Lok Sabha elections in December last year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SAVE RS. 39/-

Every fortnight INDIA TODAY gives you the complete perspective on subjects determining the nation's destiny.

Can you afford to miss out?

Here is my annual subscription of Rs. 105/- by Cheque/M.O/D.D
No. _____
Please mail my copy to:
Name _____
Address _____
_____
City _____
State _____
Pin Code _____

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

Mail to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
Thomson Press Building
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007 (HARYANA)

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE HERALD REVIEW

Written Off

"....We have found it unviable to run a magazine which informs rather than entertains. Perhaps the mandarins at Doordarshan are right about what the public wants: not education. But it has been an education for us to watch the world go by and record its movement. This then is no tearful farewell, much less a suicide note."

—Editorial in Herald Review

THERE was no tearful farewell and the weekly Herald Review sank out of view unheralded last fortnight. The 49th and last issue marked the end of a magazine that had begun life less than a year ago. What went wrong? C.P. Chandrasekhar, executive editor, appears a bit foxed at the failure. "It was meant to be a serious magazine by virtue of the subjects it dealt with," he says. "But somehow, we couldn't get ourselves across to the section of readership we were aiming at: people who read the economic dailies."

MUSTAQ AHMED

Hari Kumar (left) and (right) Chandrashekhar: inevitable decision

Looking back, the only remarkable thing about the publication was that it hailed from a well-known group—the Mysore Printers, of Deccan Herald fame. Established in 1948, the group brings out the daily Deccan Herald (circulation: 145,000), the Kannada daily Prajavani (185,000), and Kannada magazines Sudha (150,000) and Mayura (90,000). However, an English tabloid—Evening Herald—has been floundering ever since it appeared about two years ago with circulation down to less than 4,000 copies.

According to 33-year-old K.N. Hari Kumar, executive director of the company and editor-in-chief of the magazine whose family owns the organisation, business and economy were initially taken as the Herald Review's main area of focus. But by the time the magazine actually emerged on the news-stands, it was decided that the primary coverage would include politics—"so intertwined with economics"—too.

The inaugural issue of September 2, 1984, on N.T. Rama Rao's ouster did well, selling about 25,000 copies. But that was it. The Review went into a slide immediately afterwards—except for the occasional issue, like the one on Mrs Gandhi's assassination—and by January 1985, circulation was down to between 6,000 and 8,000 copies. "People were willing to read an issue," says Hari Kumar, "but we couldn't persuade them to buy it a second or third time."

Faced with criticism of the magazine being "too heavy", a little more prominence was given to articles on films and the arts but that failed too and by May sales were down to an inconsequential 2,000 copies. This brought a last ditch attempt to save the Review, primarily through design changes. But except for a brief respite nothing really happened. In fact, a market survey report in April 1985 had warned that the Review was a "dead loss" and that closure was the only way out. The inevitable decision was finally taken in late July.

MUSTAQ AHMED

Said a thoughtful Hari Kumar: "One lesson perhaps is that while a reader may read a serious economic daily, he or she is not as willing to read a serious magazine. We made it a point of dealing with issues, not personalities—that also possibly went against us. Finally, we fell in between two stools. The general public didn't take to it because they found it too heavy, and our target readership possibly turned it down because it looked like a popular magazine." An insider, however, argues that reporting was sometimes slack and there was no attempt ensure readability of articles that dealt with serious subjects.

The group will have to think hard before it tries to go national again.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR in Bangalore

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tands, it coverage interember 2, aster did pies. But to a slide pt for the on Mrs

y Janua-n to be-
"People
ays Hari persuade time."
nagazine promin-lms and by May quential
. This ditch at-

TAQ AHMED

the Rev- through es. But f respite
y hapreport in e Review
ure was ple deci-
y.
ar: "One a reader ly, he or ous ma-dealing that also y, we fell general se they get rea-because ne." An eporting was no articles
.
nk hard
ain.
Bangalore

LIVE LIFE KINGSIZE

The taste that really satisfies

Four Square Kings is specially blended with rich, fine grades of Virginia tobacco, matured under special curing techniques to give you the real taste of kingsize living. And you deserve it. Because anything else would be less.

FOUR SQUARE
KINGS

STATUTORY WARNING
CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

FOUR SQUARE KINGS

FOUR SQUARE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

STATUTORY WARNING : CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Frankly, not everyone can afford a camera like this.
Electronically programmed.
With a 40-pin chip.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Yes, but if you buy it, every picture you get will be your reward.

The MINOLTA Photophone AF-E is one of the newest cameras in the world. The camera you'd choose if you were shopping today in Singapore or Dubai or New York. (The only problem is if you bought it abroad, you could end up paying a lot more for it!)

The MINOLTA Photophone AF-E incorporates the most sophisticated state-of-the-art technology. It uses a computing unit to make it possible for an amateur photographer like you to take pictures without any hassles... and, as important, without any mistakes.

Let's highlight a few of its high-technology advantages.

MINOLTA Auto-Focussing System

The camera has the MINOLTA Infra-red Auto-Focussing System. As you press the shutter, an infra-red beam shoots out from the camera to your subject and returns to a camera sensor that automatically adjusts the focus.

Auto-Exposure Control

As you are taking the picture, a silicon photo-diode cell senses the light conditions... and instantly adjusts the shutter speed and lens opening.

Automatic Switchover Flash

You don't even have to worry about when to switch on the flash. A camera sensor decides when the light is inadequate and automatically fires the flash for you.

Auto-Loading System

Film loading is easy and problem-free. All you do is lay the film across the spool and shut the back of the camera.

Automatic Winding and Rewinding

After each frame, the camera automatically winds the film to the next frame. Auto-winding is so quick that even continuous shooting is no problem. At the end of the roll the camera locks automatically to prevent double exposures. Rewinding is as simple as sliding the rewind switch at the base of the camera.

Frankly, the MINOLTA Photophone AF-E is definitely not a camera for everyone.

But it could very well be the only camera for you.

MINOLTA
PHOTOPHONE

PHOTOPHONE INDUSTRIES INDIA LIMITED
7, Saki Vihar Road, Bombay 400 072

MINOLTA Photophone AF-E

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Ever thought of consulting a doctor about hair loss?

I did!"

It is reassuring to know that the scientific formula of Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer has been tested and approved by a panel of doctors.

It was found that Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer provides all the proteins, vitamins and coenzymes essential for a healthy scalp condition.

Read this research report:

"66.66% of the cases gave excellent and 33.33% gave good result with complete disappearance of dandruff and nearly cent per cent stoppage of hair loss... So, success rate with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer may be stated to be cent per cent."

(Indian Medical Gazette 118 223, 1984)

KEO-KARPIN

HAIR VITALIZER

The proven scientific way to prevent hair loss.

This is not a toilet preparation

Dey's® Care you can trust

CLARION C DMHV-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA

The Fight for Peace

SUDDENLY last fortnight, Thimpu seemed far more remote than it did when representatives of the Sri Lanka Government and their Tamil adversaries met there last month to thrash out a possible solution to the long-simmering crisis. Even as the two sides geared for their second meeting in Bhutan's fairy tale capital last week, it was depressingly evident that the anticipated settlement had come under severe strain and that India's determined efforts to play honest broker were fast running aground. In Colombo, where premier Rajiv Gandhi's first exercise in regional crisis-management was intitially embraced warmly by supporters of the Jayewardene Government as well as opposition circles and the entire diplomatic community, the mood is now one of all-too-familiar scepticism, even among those who gravely agree that Thimpu is Sri Lanka's "last chance" to return to less violent and uncertain times.

Even the mutually agreed ceasefire starting June 18 which held firm for the first fortnight has been frayed badly at the edges since then. Both sides have traded charges of ceasefire violations, but at least on the ground it is the Tamil militants who have been more active than the armed forces and the killings still continue.

Opinion within the ruling United National Party is that it is only the more ideologically-inclined People's Liberation Organisation for Tamil Eelam (PLOT) led by Uma Maheswaran that identified itself with the moderate, parliamentarist Tamil United Liberation Front in its positive response to Indian persuasion on the question of negotiations. Consequently, a large slice of Sinhalese opinion seems convinced that the separatist rebels are planning to move men and materials out of Tamil Nadu. The Tamil groups in Madras are similarly convinced that the Sri Lankans are using the ceasefire as breathing space to stockpile more sophisticated weaponry for a last ditch, do-or-die assault.

The Tamils have adequate cause for their concern. There is the recent visit of a Pakistani military mission and its inevitable follow-up late last month when 200 young Sinhalese and 30 "group leaders" left to receive military training in Pakistan. The group forms the nucleus of the recently announced National Auxiliary Force. Then there are the visits of Athulathmudali to South Korea and Lt General Tissa Weeratunge to China. Above all, there is the recent purchase of new weapons, especially the six Marchetti training aircraft converted into ground attack planes. Jayewardene has also received cabinet approval last fortnight for the new 10,000-strong Auxiliary Force and he has also warned his ministers that development work may be curtailed to support defence spending.

Last week, another spanner was flung into the works when a group of Sinhala-Buddhist hardliners formed a national front to "protect the rights and interests of the majority community at this crucial juncture in its history". The group has ratified a resolution asking the Government not to proceed with the Thimpu talks till conditions conducive to negotiations were created. The timing of the announcement was significant in that it coincided with the visit of India's peripatetic Foreign Secretary Romesh Bhandari to Colombo for talks with President Jayewardene aimed at narrowing down the differences between the two negotiating sides. Significantly, former premier Mrs Bandaranike is a prominent member of the front as is her son, opposition leader Anura Bandaranaike. Presiding over a ceremony to mark Mrs Bandaranaike's 25th year in office, the Mahanyake of Asgiriya, the formidable spokesman of the Mahan Sangha (ranking Buddhist clergy) launched a scathing attack on the Government which, he said, had produced "Sinhalese refugees" in the land of the Sinhalese. Mrs Bandaranaike and the Mahanayake both insisted that any accord must receive a direct mandate through a referendum or a general election.

In Madras, as in Colombo, there is little optimism and much suspicion regarding the next round in Thimpu. Militant spokesmen say that they are returning with the same set of principles they brought up at Thimpu-I for recognition of the Tamil's distinct nationality and traditional homeland and will wait to see what the Sri Lankans have to offer. The Sri Lankan delegation, once again led by the President's brother, Hector Jayewardene, indicated last week that their objective is to get the Tamils to agree to the unit of devolution, which is the District Councils, and then negotiate further on how much or little power the councils will wield. They also say that the Sinhala-Buddhist front was inevitable and they will stand by whatever is agreed on at Thimpu and convince the hardliners to alter their intransigence.

But in the run-up to Thimpu-2, the prospects for a negotiated peace seemed dangerously fragile at best. Forced to operate between the conflicting pressures of an embittered and hostile domestic constituency and an impatient external community consisting of India, the US and western donors, Jayewardene is forced to make haste slowly and cautiously. He is also in no position to accede to India's demand to raise Sri Lankan participation in the talks to a "political level" or meet Indian expectations of a "substantial and meaningful devolution of power". With little room for either side to maneouvre, the chances of a successful conclusion at Thimpu seem to be as thin as the rarified mountain air in the Himalayan kingdom's capital.

—MERVYN DE SILVA in Colombo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In international deals, our speedlink system gives you the edge.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Speedlink. An independent satellite communication system linking a global network covering every financial centre in the world. To offer you perfect co-ordination of multi-currency, multi-bank negotiations for your off-shore loan requirements.

That's what it takes to give you the edge. And HongkongBank has it. Isn't it time we talked?

HongkongBank

The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation

Bombay Calcutta New Delhi
Madras Visakhapatnam
Merchant Banking Division Bombay
The British Bank of the Middle East Bombay

Your financial edge, the world over.

ULKA-HKB-16-D

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NCERT

Invites applications for filling up the following academic posts for the CLASS Project started by the Government of India immediately on purely temporary basis.

1. Professor — 1 post: Qualifications. (a) An eminent scholar with published work of high quality actively engaged in research in the areas of Computer Science/Computer Education/Software Design. Ten years of teaching and/research work Experience of guiding research at doctorate level. OR an outstanding scholar with established reputation who has made significant contribution to knowledge in the above areas. (b) Those who have put in ten years service in research/development/ teaching in the Council of which at least five years should be in the capacity of Reader in the above areas can also apply.

2. Reader — 2 posts: Qualifications. A good academic record with a doctoral degree of equivalent published work. Evidence of being actively engaged in (i) research, or (ii) innovation in teaching methods, or (iii) production of teaching materials in the area of Computer Education. About five years experience of teaching and/or research and/or development provided that at least three of these were as Lecturer or in an equivalant position.

3. Lecturer-2 posts: Qalifications: (a) A Doctorate degree or research work of an equally high standard, and (b) Good academic record with at least second class ('C' in the seven point scale) Master's degree in a relevant subject from an Indian University or an equivalent degree from a foreign university

Provided that if the selection committee is of the view that the research work of a candidate as evident either from his thesis or from his published work is of very high standard it may relax any of the qualifications prescribed in (b) above

Provided further if a candidate possessing a Doctorate degree or equivalent research work is not available or is not considered suitable, a person possessing a good academic record (weightage being given to M.Phil or equivalent degree or research work of quality) may be appointed provided he has done research work for atleast two years or has practical experience in a research and development organisation on the condition that he will have to obtain a Doctorate degree or give evidence of research of high standard within eight years of his appointment, failing which he will not be able to earn future increments until he fulfills these requirements.

JOB REQUIREMENTS FOR THE ABOVE POSTS WILL BE:

1. To provide guidance in the preparation of instructional material, video and video programmes, in micro-computer related areas;
2. To organise and guide workshops for formulation of curriculum for orientation of training programmes for different groups;
3. To provide guidance in the identification of different kinds of softwares in conformity with the objectives of the approved programme;
4. To evolve programes with the Indian script generation facilities;
5. To coordinate activities related to systems design of computer based learning packages;
6. To provide technical guidance for the extension of the existing hardware facilities and to develop programmes demonstrating new education applications of micro-computers;
7. To assist in the development of software standards, specifications suitable to Indian conditions; and
8. To coordinate evaluation of software packages research and development project proposals submitted for consideration.

Scale of Pay and Age Limit as on 1 7 1985

Professor Rs. 1500-60-1800-100-2000-125/2 2500. Below 45 years

Reader: Rs 1200-50-1300-60-1900. Below 40 years

Lecturer: Rs. 700-40-1100-50-1600. Below 35 years.

Note. (a) There is no age limit for the employees of the Council. Age concessions allowed for SC/ST candidates, displaced persons, and ex-servicemen as per Govt. of India instructions. (b) The number of vacancies in each subject is tentative and is liable to change. (c) All employees of the Council can be transferred to any of the establishments of the Council, anywhere in India. (d) If a candidate is found to be of exceptional merit, relaxation of qualifications, experience and age etc., may be made by the Selection Committee at its discretion. (e) Only limited number of candidates ranking high in terms of eligibility criteria will be called for interview by the Council. Therefore, the fact that a candidate possesses the minimum qualifications will not by itself, entitle him to be called for interview.

Application forms can be obtained from the following address by enclosing an unstamped envelope (23 cms x 10 cms) giving name of Post, Serial Number and Advertisement Number. The outer cover should be marked 'Request for application form' Separate applications should be submitted for each post

Those employed in Govt./Semi Govt./Autonomous Organisations should send their applications through proper channel.

Completed application forms alongwith attested copies of certificates etc., and a crossed Indian Postal Order for Rs. 8/ (Rupees two for SC/ST candidates) in favour of the Secretary, NCERT should reach him by 10th September, 1985. (Advertisement No. 116).

विद्यया ऽमृतमश्नुते

एन सी ई आर टी
NCERT

Secretary
National Council of Education Research & Training (NCERT)
Sri Aurobindo Marg
New Delhi-110016 (India)

PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HITACHI HIGH

THE THAPARS are getting ready to take control of Public Display Devices (PDD), a joint sector unit linked to the now problem-ridden Agra group. PDD has on the anvil a project to manufacture colour television picture tubes, using a second-hand plant from Finland. The Thapars plan to bring Hitachi of Japan into the project, either by getting Hitachi to provide new technology or by persuading the Japanese company to vet the quality of the product that will be turned out using the Finnish plant. In addition, the Thapars plan to launch some other projects in collaboration with Hitachi, with the Indian and Japanese groups having reached a broad understanding on future collaboration to tap the Indian market in a variety of fields. Meanwhile, Hitachi is also involved in a bid by the private sector Weston Electroniks to get the Government's permission for manufacturing colour television picture tubes in the country. If both projects materialise, Hitachi will have established a daunting presence in the Indian TV picture tubes market.

PLUGGING THE HOLES

THE NEW long-term fiscal to policy being worked out by the Government is likely to involve reducing the basic rate of tax on company incomes. Simultaneously, however, many of the tax loopholes that are presently built into the system may be done away with, leading to a simplified tax structure. The Government is in favour of this shift because, while the nominal rate of tax on company profits is quite high, many companies in reality get away with low levels of actual tax by using the escape windows. One of the exemptions proposed to be done away with is the investment allowance. As a result, several rapidly-growing companies that have depended heavily on this allowance to finance their expansion are now pleading with the Government against any change in the basic policy on corporate taxation.

EXPANSIVE ESCORTS

THE ESCORTS group is planning new ventures in automobiles and in new agri-businesses. The group is talking to Citroen of France about the possibility of manufacturing cars in India. A final decision depends on government permission. Meanwhile, the group plans to go into the production of hybrid maize and other seeds, in collaboration with two US giants in the business: Dekalb and Calgary Seeds. This project will be located in Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh, where research centres will initially be set up for the basic groundwork. Commercial production will come only after a way is found to get around the land ceiling laws that come in the way of large, commercial farms.

MOTOROLA MOVES

THE US electronics giant Motorola may establish a presence in India soon. The company plans to begin the assembly of computers in India, partly for the export market, and is in the process of negotiating an arrangement with the public sector Semi-Conductor Complex Ltd (SCL) for manufacturing microprocessor chips in the country. SCL is already manufacturing microprocessor chips in collaboration with Rockwell, also of the US, so the Motorola microprocessors will be a second line of manufacture. This new chip is expected to feed the telecommunication market that is expected to open up with the advent of the electronic age in communications.

FLUCTUATING FORTUNES

INDIA now has four companies in Fortune Magazine's list of the 500 largest corporations outside the US, up from three companies last year. The new entrant is Bharat Heavy Electricals, ranking 395th. Two companies have slipped in the rankings: SAIL and Indian Oil. Moving the other way, the Oil and Natural Gas Commission has improved from 191st to 152nd. The ground lost by two of the four companies is accounted for by the rupee's weakness against the dollar. But there is no easy explanation for SAIL being the second largest loser among the 500, with a deficit in 1984 of $ 2.08 lakh. Meanwhile, the State Bank of India remains the lone Indian representative among the 100 largest banks outside the US, but its rank too has slipped, from 59th to 60th.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

MUSCLE FLEXING

DHIRUBHAI Ambani of Reliance Textile Industries is looking at a number of new projects that will establish his company firmly in the petro-chemicals field. Ambani has already got a letter of intent from the Government for manufacturing acrylic fibre, and is now aiming at two more letters of intent for the manufacture of poly-vinyl chloride (PVC) and high-density polyethylene (HDPE). These units are intended to be set up in Gujarat, and are preparatory to Ambani staking a claim for a gas or naphtha cracker unit that the state Government is keen on. Ambani is also talking to the Government about the possibility of joining hands for setting up the Mangalore refinery, which has been put on ice by the Government for lack of investible resources. Reliance has the financial muscle needed to become a partner in such a large venture. But if the company gets these projects, it may give up its claim to the Salempur Rs 500 crore aromatics project.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Ganga, tera paani amrit..."

A song, most definitely, of yesterday. Because today's 'Gangajal' contains sewage, garbage, dangerous industrial wastes, pesticides, dead bodies, bloated carcasses... certainly no 'amrit' this!

The defiling of the Ganga

"Just by bathing in the Ganga does one get immediately purified", says the Brahmapadapurana. Today we've reversed the saying. A dip in the Ganga and you run the risk of cholera, viral hepatitis, amoebic dysentery, bacillary dysentery, polio, typhoid, paratyphoid... you name it! No wonder, cleaning the Ganga has become a giant national challenge.

The Ganga Action Plan

The Centre has drawn up the Ganga Action Plan (GAP) with a ten-member Central Ganga Authority (CGA) whose Chairman is the Prime Minister, Shri Rajiv Gandhi. However, a job of such magnitude cannot be handled by any single body. It needs a concerted effort on the part of governments, municipalities, PWDs, industrialists, and all the people who live on the river's banks in the seven States through which it flows. With nationwide attention being focussed on the problem, already there is a change of attitude. For the first time people are beginning to believe that the Ganga can actually be cleaned.

HGE — equipped for the job

But who will do the actual cleaning-up job? Time for HGE (Hydraulic and General Engineers Ltd.) to take a bow. Of course, no single body can handle such a mammoth operation. But HGE is equipped to play a part in meeting this national challenge. HGE is a subsidiary of Batliboi, leaders in large-scale systems engineering projects. HGE itself is a leader in sewage treatment, trusted by municipalities and PWDs the country over. Jobs completed include large Sewage Treatment Projects for the Madras Metropolitan and Maharashtra Water Supply and Sewerage Boards, Municipal Corporations in Delhi and Bombay.

In Industrial Effluent Treatment, HGE is the only company with turnkey capabilities — right from concept to commissioning. Its ever-growing list of clients includes Maruti Udyog, Gwalior Rayon, Harihar Polyfibres, Corn Products, RCF, National Newsprint and Paper Mills, Parle Products, Bharat Petroleum, Century Spinning, Century Pulp and Paper Mills and several pharmaceutical plants, dairies and sugar mills.

HGE's after-sales service is a by-word in dependability. Very important because the Ganga bank towns already 'boast' of many Sewage Treatment Plants that are shut down due to lack of service or maintenance.

Yes, if cleaning the Ganga has become a national challenge today, HGE is equipped to play a part in meeting this challenge.

HGE BATLIBOI

Hydraulic & General Engineers Ltd.

Subsidiary of:

Batliboi & Co. Ltd.

203 Arun Chambers, J. Dadaji Road, Tardeo, Bombay 400 034.

HGE

- Leaders in Sewage Treatment
- Turnkey Experts in Industrial Effluent Treatment for over 25 years

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CHAITRA-B-BB 231 A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AUTOMOBILES

Revolution on the Road

EIGHT makes of cars, a dozen of two-wheelers; half a dozen of light commercial vehicles and trucks: if all goes well, that should be the crowded scene on Indian roads a few years from now, marking a sea-change from barely a decade ago, when India had to make do with three ageing models of cars and five of two-wheelers.

Suddenly, the new is shouldering aside the old in the streets. The thousands of Marutis, already thumbing their low slung noses at lumbering Ambassadors, are the best emblems of the technological change that is gearing up in a rusty automobile industry. Sleeker, streamlined bodies, lighter, more powerful engines, energy-saving front wheel-drive transmissions, power-assisted steering, automatic-geared two-wheelers, glossier paint: these are a few of the favourite things of western consumers which will soon be available to their Indian counterparts. For a country where all these goodies were to be had only on 'phoren' cars, it is verily a new technological awakening. Says J.M. Vakil, managing director of Premier Automobiles: "We are witnessing the first steps in our drive to catch up with the rest of the world."

The new generation of cars available to Indians means more of everything:

► Economy: the new engines, while delivering more power, achieve this with less fuel. Premier's 118 NE hybrid gives 2 km more per litre than the Padmini, which was upgraded a few months ago, Maruti gives 18 km upwards, and the Citroen model that Escorts hopes to introduce will give more than 20 km.

► Power: The new Mahindra & Mahindra jeep, fitted with a Peugeot engine, can climb a hill twice as steep as the old one could in the same gear. And all the new light trucks have a payload to deadweight ratio of 2:1, almost twice the current industry standard.

► Safety: The Eicher-Mitsubishi vehicle will have dual brakes that are designed to be fail-safe.

► Style: Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company's (TELCO) Honda Accord and the Standard Rover are among the better-styled cars in their class.

At few places is the contrast between old and new so stark as in Premier's factories. At its 38-year-old plant at Kurla, which turns out about 100 Padminis daily, the body shells are pushed around by workers on creaky carts and quite a few of the component sub-assemblies are made without using jigs to hold the assemblies in place: a practice that does not make for accuracy. In contrast, at the company's Rs 34 crore Kalyan plant, the bodies and sub-assemblies will travel around on belting and chains, and all the major assemblies will be put together on jigs (by a worker strength 60 per cent of that in Kurla). Explains K.V. Kini, vice-president (projects): "This factory and the car represent a big step forward for us."

The irony is of course that the 118 NE represents decade-old technology, using the body of the phased out Fiat 124 from Europe and the Nissan A12 engine. In contrast, therefore, TELCO is planning to build the latest model of the Honda Accord introduced in Japan only a few months ago, and a company executive says: "The others are going to start with second-hand stuff. We'll get the best and the latest". But even the "second hand stuff" represents quantum jumps in technology and quality, with other manufacturers choosing more dated models than the Accord because of reliability, lower cost and a host of other reasons. Thus, Mahindra & Mahindra is thinking of making the Peugeot 505 with a diesel engine, Escorts wants to make one lakh tiny Citroens that will be priced on the road at Rs 47,000, and to match TELCO's Accord Standard Products is introducing the top-of-the-range Rover.

In two-wheelers, the scene is as encouraging for the consumer. Kinetic Honda's scooter, a very good-looking Japanese design, is likely to give the Bajaj Auto juggernaut (which makes a scooter a minute) a run for its money. The scooter has several features which Bajaj's models don't: an automatic gear variator is at the top of the list, followed by an automatic fuel tap and choke, a fuel gauge, direct current electrics so that the lights and the horn do not fade when the engine is idling, and push button start. "The Japanese are today the undisputed leaders in scooter technology," asserts Kinetic Honda Managing Director Arun Firodia.

Others agree. Says H.P. Nanda, chairman of Escorts: "There is no comparison between the old motorcycles we make and the new Yamaha model that we will start producing later this year." The existing Rajdoot 175 cc engine develops less than 9 horsepower while the new 100 cc Yamaha engine can give more than 11

Sleeker bodies, more powerful engines, front wheel drive transmissions, power-assisted steering, automatic-geared two-wheelers: these are a few of the things which will soon be available to Indian consumers.

The standard 2,000 (below) and Eicher Canter: style and substance

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

Assembly lines gearing up: new production methods horsepower. It is also 25 per cent lighter than the old one. Part of the improvements are due to major developments in metallurgy: the cylinder head fins in the old motorcycle, for example, are of cast iron, while the new ones are of lighter aluminium.

The consumer is certainly excited by the new vehicles and increased choice. Recently, the Industry Ministry commissioned an independent study of the car market in 1990, and found that without new models, sales of cars in that year would remain roughly the same as now, at about 60,000. With new models, however, the demand would rise to 1,21,000 a year. The 118 NE already has bookings of over a lakh before the factory has even begun regular production.

There is, of course, an unexpected roadblock in the way of an industry revving up for the race to a golden horizon. Last fortnight, the Government decided to put the brakes on the headlong rush for new, foreign technological tie-ups by automobile manufacturers, and ordered a review of the foreign exchange implications of the new developments. But this is unlikely to come in the way of the changes already under way. All the manufacturers of light commercial vehicles and two-wheelers have already got their collaborations approved by the Government, and many car manufacturers have too. Some of the later entrants in the race, like Escorts with its Citroen proposal, may have to clear fresh hurdles before they can join the race.

HOW GEARED up is the Indian automobile industry to absorb and assimilate the new technologies? The Allwyn-Nissan vehicle, has failed to pass the Government's fuel efficiency test. Less unhappily at Bajaj Auto, they are working with lower and still lower tolerances. In the machine tool shed the tolerance level is 50 microns (one millimetre = 1,000 microns); in another section the working tolerances for parts drops to 10 microns, and in the newest portion of the shed the tolerance level is as low as two microns. Says Vijay Bhargava, general manager (projects): "If we have to produce quality products, we have to work at great levels of accuracy."

Other companies too are headed in similar directions. N. Venkatramani, managing director of India Pistons, says: "The weight of our new pistons has been cut by half. All frills have been cut out, and the dimensional requirements are much lower, so that we have to do better tolerancing and strengthen the materials even further." The company is importing new machinery and machine tools and developing new casting techniques. Meanwhile, Subodh Bhargava, president of Eicher Motors, points out that "no trucks on the road today offer much in terms of driver comfort and ease of vehicle-handling, so that driver-fatigue causes many accidents. Our new vehicle will mark a big and revolutionary step forward on this front."

The big question is how successfully the Indian companies will master the new technologies involved. So all eyes at the moment are on Bajaj Auto's neighbour in Pune, TELCO, considered the ablest at adapting new technology to Indian needs. Its collaboration with Daimler Benz lasted 15 years, and for about the same period it has on its own been converting the engine from pre-combustion to direct injection with a 10 per cent im-

Firodia with the Kinetic Honda; and Premier's Kini with the Fiat 118 NE

JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

provement in fuel efficiency, introducing a synchromesh gearbox to cut out double de-clutching, and developing a larger clutch and a larger axle to suit Indian road and usage conditions. With such a record, TELCO executives claim that they can start up the Honda Accord plant in two years, making a fair number of the major components.

To that end, TELCO has already imported one of the latest computer numerically controlled machines: Even as TELCO concentrates on what it calls the manufacturability of the car, others are eagerly looking at Japanese production techniques and shop-floor layouts. Maruti and its one-code-for-all-employees discipline has brought about a sea change in the industry, and DCM-Toyota has also gone wholeheartedly Japanese. It has adopted:

► The Kaizen system, where worker suggestions for improving productivity are considered and accepted. Some of the good ones have even been picked up for use by Toyota in their plants world-wide.

► The Kanban system of production, where a series of signboards above the assembly line, at the end of one stage of work and before the next, signal hold-ups, the need to slow down or speed up because of a downstream logjam or supply shortage. The system regulates output in each stage to the precise level required, so that there is no building up of in-process inventory and clutter. Even ancillary units have to supply in a manner that keeps inventory in the assembly shed down to one day's production: equivalent to the Japanese zero-inventory system.

► The Kidoka system of self-inspection, based on the belief that quality is not inspected but built in. Workers maintain their own charts on the rejection and defect rate, on daily targets and so on, so that they become conscious of the goals to be met.

Elsewhere, Sundaram Abex has just got the Government's clearance for a new eight-year collaboration agreement with the Abex group for the manufacture of asbestos-free brake linings and resin-bonded metallic disc brake pads for the first time in the country. Says the company's Chairman K.Mahesh: "The advantage in doing away with asbestos altogether is that you reduce pollution a great deal. And the use of the new brake pads improves the lifespan of the brake lining by 40 per cent, although the linings will cost 60 per cent more. This is one of several examples that point to higher costs in switching to higher technology and new products (some of the new cars, for instance, will be sold for Rs 1.75 lakh), but Vivek Bharat Ram, executive director of DCM-Toyota, says: "Why should you supply cheap components to the Indian consumer and then ask him to keep replacing it every few months? The effort now is to give him something that will keep going for much longer, even if the initial cost is slightly higher." In any case, the new trucks will offer significant economies in terms of operating cost per tonne/kilometre of fuel consumed.

MARUTI

Costly Lessons

WHEN Brigadier Raj Gurbax Singh got behind the wheel of his Maruti last fortnight in the capital, little did he realise that before the day was out his car would bump into a dog. "The damn dog didn't even get hurt," he told his insurance agent as he submitted the bill for damages to the car: a fantastic Rs 6,000.

Elsewhere in the capital another Maruti driver rammed at an angle into some pipes on the roadside. The bill was more than the price of a new Maruti although the engine and gearbox were undamaged, and the insurance company refused to pay the full amount, leaving him some Rs 15,000 out of pocket.

And in Jaipur, a motorcycle rammed the door of a Maruti components supplier's car. Faced with having to pay Rs 4,500 for a new door, the dismayed owner asked Maruti Udyog for a custom-built car without four doors—and a price discount of Rs 18,000.

As thousands of the 38,000 Maruti car owners nationwide are discovering to their chagrin, getting their cars on the road again after an accident can hit their pockets hard. Last fortnight, one newspaper reported that Maruti car owners have to shell out as much as over Rs 350 for the plastic case of a tail light, which costs the owner of an Ambassador or Fiat a piffling Rs 10 or Rs 15. And those who eventually wind up footing the bills for all this mayhem on the roads—the insurance companies—are hopping mad. Said K.K. Gupta, branch manager of Oriental Insurance, darkly: "Buying a Maruti car is inviting an accident. Our budgeting for this year has been ruined because of the Maruti accidents." Sushil Kumar, senior divisional manager of Oriental Insurance in Delhi, adds that of the 625 claims car owners shot in till July-end, 600 were for Maruti owners. Oriental has shelled out Rs 18 lakh this year to Maruti drivers.

Officials of the state-owned Maruti Udyog readily concede the problem. Managing Director R.C. Bhargava says: "Because these are high performance cars which people are not used to driving, there have been a large number of Maruti accidents." As for the exorbitant prices of spare parts, he says that in the Japanese scheme of things, profits come from spares and not original equipment supply. Spares are priced 20 to 175 per cent more than original car components. But Maruti is asking Suzuki to reduce these premia.

As a sideshow to this brouhaha, last fortnight Maruti owners were loudly sounding off about shortages of parts like locks and plastic hand rests and the poor servicing facilities on tap. Said Vijay Handa, who drives both a Maruti car and van: "You have to wait in a queue for 20 days for your car to be serviced." That complaint may be soon attended to (Maruti Udyog plans on opening a workshop in the capital), but it looks as if the money that Maruti owners save on petrol bills will continue to be spent on over-priced spares.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WATER-JEL®

The Wonder Fire-Escape Device that Protects and Heals

The only escape from fire and chemical burn. It eliminates pain, dehydration and contamination. No grafting is required as foreign materials can be easily removed and hence no disfigurement! Toxicology studies on WATER-JEL confirm that it is completely safe on human body!

Extinguishes fire-any type. It's an escape device, allows you to walk through fire to reach the trapped ones or to the source of fire! You can actually pickup fire!

It's a Food & Drug Administration (USA) approved product as a medical device. Recommended by US Coast Guard. The International Society for Burn injuries .... acclaimed by all as a 'MIRACLE'!

Ideal for emergency fire/heat protection and primary burn therapy. ANY WHERE: Oil & Gas Cos.,Fire depts., Power & Chemical Plants, Police & Emergency vehicles, Commercial facilities, Industrial Plants, Labs, Hospitals, Schools, Camps, Automobiles, Air Crafts, Railways and Ships, Garages, Hotels & restaurants, Mines, Defence depts., and also right in your home.

WATER-JEL® It's a Trilling Resources Ltd. (USA) Patented Product

World's only all-in-one fire fighting and emergency burn-therapy device.

Soon we shall appoint state-wise WATER-JEL dealers. Till then, for more information contact:

WATER-JEL® PRODUCTS
Petrotech Intl., 4-5B Sanjay Society Bldg., Veer Savarkar Marg, Opp. Prabhadevi Post Office, Bombay-400 025. Telex: 11-760 28 JENY IN.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The wide-ranging choice of upgradable and mutually compatible computers from Hinditron helps you to think big and start small.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A totality greater than the sum of its parts

Hinditron's totality of computer system options.

A totality that encompasses both indigenous 16 bit and imported 32 bit computer systems: the state-of-the-art SN series of mini computers, and Digital's world-famous VAX supermini series; in addition to dedicated CAD/CAM work stations, graphic terminals, array processors, modems and many more.

Both SN and VAX computers ensure easy upgradability, compatibility and networking.

DEC's family of supermini computers: from the micro VAX to the VAX 8600

So, in effect what Hinditron offers you is a complete 'family' of computer systems — a family from which you can pick a system exactly your size today, and which can grow at the pace of your tomorrows.

But that's just one reason to buy a computer system from Hinditron...

Complete Solutions from India's Complete Computer Company

Hinditron embodies a group of companies, together spanning the widest spectrum of computer operations in the Indian context: computer marketing and field services, software development and export, consultancy services, training in information technology, Data Centre management... besides process control and communications.

When you buy an SN or a VAX system from Hinditron, you actually get a 'Total Computing Package'.

A complete package of Hinditron's specialised skills, software and support services, custom-tailored to suit your specific needs.

And whether your requirements are commercial, engineering or scientific, Hinditron's totality of infrastructure and expertise can make your information management easy for you.

The Hinditron Totality

You may not need all of it today. Your total computer investments, however, are necessarily long-term.

Move in with someone you can move up with.

SN Manufactured by Essen Electronics

Hinditron Offices:
BOMBAY: Tel: 630 0043/630 0527
□ PUNE: Tel: 64136 □ CALCUTTA: Tel: 447541
□ DELHI: Tel: 641 0380 □ MADRAS: Tel: 454565
□ BANGALORE: Tel: 33139
□ SECUNDERABAD: Tel: 821117

The SN family of mini computers: SN 73, SN 23 + and micro SN

HINDITRON

you may not need all of it today

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Dattaram-HC 12A/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If the eyelashes of the news-reader are clearly visible

it must be Solidaire !

Yes, a claim Solidaire alone can claim. With confidence. Since it has won acclaim from its proud owners. Leading to make more and more people buy Solidaire. For its picture clarity, perfect colour and the right contrast.

And to judge the picture quality, you must do it when the news is being telecast. Because it's live and the news-reader faces the TV camera under proper lighting. It means there's no chance of bad focussing. Now watch the same on different TVs and compare it with Solidaire. On a Solidaire TV you can see every minute detail like the eyelashes of the news-reader. And all in the right, natural tones.

Such picture sharpness in Solidaire is the result of using error-free components from ITT & Preh, West Germany. For instance, components like the LOT, Electronic Tuner, Colour ICs, SMPS etc used in Solidaire are among the most advanced designs in the world.

Solidaire ● COLOUR
-that seldom fails!

Model Courtesy:
Gitanjali Iyer, Newsreader, Delhi Doordarshan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"In the old climate of stagnation, not many component manufacturers would have been brave enough to risk their necks with fresh investment."

PRAN TALWAR,
ACMA president

Everything, however, is not hunky-dory at the beginning of the great Indian automobile shake-up. The weaknesses of the industry are glaring and probably the most glaring is the ancillaries. Premier complains of the uneven quality of ball bearings, Mahindra & Mahindra recounts how it can't get good pistons from one of the largest manufacturers for their new Peugeot diesel engine (like all new engines, it is faster—doing 4,500 revolutions per minute (rpm) against the old jeep engine's 3,000 rpm. Another piston manufacturer has asked them to increase the tolerance limits.

A two wheeler manufacturer says that foundries in India are so obsolete that the rejection rate for castings goes up to an enormous 15 per cent during the monsoon season. And Lohia Machines, which is trying to set up its ancillary base in Uttar Pradesh, has more headaches. The scooter stand, just a bent steel tube, is sometimes an inch or two short, so that the scooter is unstable. When questioned, the supplier retorted that this should hardly matter when potholes on the roads are three inches deep. Also, most rubber parts crumbled in an ozone solution in five hours instead of the stipulated 48, and bulbs tested for 100 hours don't last even 20. Says B. de Souza, executive vice-president (manufacturing): "You can't get even a simple door lock of the right quality."

The tussle between the automobile and the ancillary maunufacturers has developed into a full-scale war. A document prepared by the Automotive Component Manufacturers Association of India (ACMA) some time ago listed 52 components which vehicle manufacturers said were not made in India yet. These include carburettors and electronic ignition systems, precision forgings and castings, pneumatic suspensions for trucks, magnetos and shock absorbers in two and three-wheelers and even sealed-beam head lamps and halogen bulbs. ACMA replies to this list with a longer one where it appears that the capability either exists or will exist in most areas in a few short years. Pran Talwar, ACMA's president, points out that there was no need for ancillary units to upgrade their technology when for years the vehicle manufacturers had been puttered along with decades-old engineering. "In a climate of stagnation, not many component manufacturers would have been brave enough to risk their necks."

The components sector is slated to invest nearly Rs 1,000 crore in the course of the next five years, and company after company is tying up with Japanese or European counterparts to get the latest in technology. Bharat Gears is setting up a Rs 10 crore project for steering gear assemblies in association with Koyo of Japan and is developing gears for Maruti. Says Managing Director Surinder Kapur: "The blame for the stagnation must lie with the manufacturers also. For years we haven't been asked for the kinds of volumes that would have made investment profitable."

ALSO, the component suppliers still do not get the kind of production volumes required for low-cost production. As one of them put it: "We are asked to make a few thousand parts for each of several companies that make vehicles in different shapes and sizes. Allwyn-Nissan requires one kind of component, Matador another, Standard Motors a third, and DCM-Toyota a fourth. Yet not one of them has volumes large enough to make the component supplier's life easy."

Relations between the Indian and Japanese partners are also not all that they should be. There has been plenty of friction between Suzuki and the suppliers of components for the Maruti, for instance. Ancillary units also complain: "The Japanese vehicle manufacturers and their Indian counterparts don't give us proper drawings, which in any case are almost always in Japanese, so that we can't even read them. And they don't seem interested in our being able to understand their drawings." K.Mahesh, chairman of Sundaram Abex, adds: "The Japanese companies want to take the components to Japan for testing. They don't want the testing to be done in India. We don't think this is the right way for them to go about it." Other units complain of parts being rejected by the Japanese on flimsy grounds, allegedly because the Japanese want to keep supplying their own components for as long as possible.

"The Japanese companies want to take the components to Japan for testing. They don't want the testing to be done in India. We don't think that is the way to go about it."

K. MAHESH,
chairman of Sundaram Abex

When and how well these kinds of problems will be overcome remains to be seen. With the Japanese sitting in many companies and handing out decisions on which parts are of acceptable quality and which are not, the process of indigenising the new models might take longer than expected. And given the fractured nature of the market, with small orders for individual truck suppliers, the economies of scale may not be available even in the future. Most industrialists in the business talk in terms of Indian costs staying at one-and-a-half to twice the Japanese levels, so that exports can remain by and large a pipe dream. Also, if compromises are eventually made on quality, the consumer may not finally get the kind of quality that the association of prized foreign brand names implies.

The challenge matches up to the opportunity. But the transition has started, and will continue. Says Vakil of Premier: "In a few years there will be more models, more power, more fuel economy. It will be a buyer's market, not a seller's market." Adds Rahul Bajaj: "The shake-up is welcome since it will lead to more efficient and quality-conscious production methods. Clearly, Indian automobile manufacturers have an exciting but not entirely painless drive ahead of them

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SWADESHI POLYTEX

Change of Guard

HE LEANS back in the plush, leather-bound sofa in the corporate office of the company he fought so bitterly to control, and says with a sigh of contentment: "God has been kind to us." Rajaram Jaipuria, newly crowned king of Swadeshi Polytex, certainly has every reason to be satisfied. Almost a decade after he launched his bid to wrest control of the company from his foster brother, Sitaram, and after several stormy shareholders' meetings, innumerable courtroom battles, endless behind-the-scenes manoeuvring and the untimely death two months ago of Sitaram, Rajaram is finally in the driver's seat of the Rs 73 crore company.

The votes polled at a shareholders' meeting two months ago had taken interminably long to tabulate. But when the results were announced last fortnight, Rajaram and his cohorts got close to 50 per cent of the votes, while Sitaram and his candidates bagged some 42 per cent. With that, the latter's nominees to the company board were taken by Rajaram and his nominees.

This dramatic change of guard had all the ingredients of a corporate coup, with allies turning into foes and former foes becoming new-found friends. And even as the new board moved quickly to appoint a three-man standing committee that would monitor the company's working, drama developed on other fronts: five of the company's eight vice-presidents and two of the four junior vice-presidents were getting ready to write out their resignation letters.

While the battle that led to this succession of entries and exits was fought between Rajaram and Sitaram, the key to the outcome lay with the two 'seconds': the financial institutions (with a 16 per cent shareholding) and Mahendra Swarup, managing director of Paharpur Cooling Towers, who with his companies and associates controlled 15 per cent.

Till last year, both the institutions and Swarup had backed Sitaram, which left little hope for Rajaram since he controlled only 34 per cent of the shares, most of them in the name of his company, Swadeshi Cotton Mills. Then, last September, the institutions decided to switch support to Rajaram—a controversial move that has never been adequately explained. That decision became even more curious when, at the shareholders' meeting in May, the institutions switched their support back to Sitaram. The only reason that insiders attribute for this rather odd behaviour is the change of government in New Delhi.

But while the institutions were walking back into Sitaram's corner of the ring, Rajaram produced the neat trick that finally saw him emerge the winner. He struck a management-sharing deal with Swarup, and their combined voting power of 49 per cent proved unbeatable. Sitaram, in contrast, is believed to have controlled only 9 per cent of the company's shares. So even though 12,000 small shareholders pitched in on his side with their 17 per cent shareholding, and the financial institutions chipped in with a further 16 per cent, he ended up in the loser's corner with no more than 42 per cent of the total votes.

There are indications that Swarup, who had been steadily increasing his shareholding in the strife-torn company, initially approached Sitaram for a management-sharing deal in return for his continued shareholding support, which Sitaram rebuffed. Swarup then approached Rajaram, who, however, denies that any deal was struck: "Swarup took a calculated view of the situation and decided that his well-being was more assured by supporting me." But Swarup himself tells it differently: "We were sleeping investors. Seeing the infighting and noticing that Swadeshi Polytex shares were quoted much lower than shares of competing firms, we decided to get into the act to protect our investment."

Around last April, a month before the crucial shareholders' meeting, Swarup says that he came to an understanding with Rajaram, promising the votes in return for four places on the 12-member board: the same number as Rajaram himself has (the remaining

HARI OM GULATI

"Swarup took a calculated view of the situation and decided that his well-being was more assured by supporting me."

RAJARAM JAIPURIA

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"Seeing the infighting and noticing that Swadeshi Polytex shares were quoted much lower than shares of competing firms, we decided to get into the act to protect our investment."

MAHENDRA SWARUP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I thought Superlac would just transform our walls...

...but look what it's done to my husband."

It was real magic. The dull walls suddenly sprang to life. The patchy surface gave way to a smooth, beautiful look. The pretty pastels made our house so inviting, so good to live in. 44 exciting shades to try out new decor ideas with.

Like Corn. Horizon Blue. And easy to keep spotlessly clean. Even the children can do it with a little soap and water. No stains. No damp. It was wonderful!

"What was even more wonderful was the effect it had on my husband. He was a changed man. Bringing me flowers. Buying up the market. I've even heard him humming in the bathroom. Honestly, I never imagined what a plastic emulsion like Superlac could do to our lives."

That's Superlac. An extraordinary paint made by one of the leading paint companies in the country today. People who've been perfecting the art of paint making over the years. The Shalimar people.

Try Superlac. And just watch your world change!

SUPERLAC

Acrylic Plastic Emulsion

Shalimar Paints

Wall time favourites

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SPL-5882

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In this world of cables
WE HAVE THEM ALL!

There is a UNISTAR cable for every industrial application. UNISTAR cables are manufactured incorporating the world's most sophisticated technology with assured quality based on the most advanced quality control and R&D available in India. UNISTAR – the widest range of Cables in India.

UNIVERSAL CABLES LIMITED

P.O. Birla Vikas, Satna-485 005 (M.P.)
Tel. 2551, 2552, 2708 □ Telex No. 0766-202

BOMBAY: Industry House, 159 Churchgate Reclamation, Bombay-400 020.
Tel. 202 6340, 202 8019, 202 3170.

BANGALORE: 5, Palace Cross Road, Bangalore-560 020. Tel. 362674, 368179.

CALCUTTA: 27-B, Camac Street, Calcutta 700 016. Tel. 44-4351.

MADRAS: 20, Greams Road, 1st Floor, P.B. No. 737, Madras-600 006.
Tel. 472427, 477551.

NEW DELHI: UCO Bank Building, Parliament Street, New Delhi-110 001.
Tel: 384851, 382750.

unistar®

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ASP/BATA-2/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For computer systems that fit your requirements

Talk to us.

Whether your scale is big or small, your needs simple or complex. ORG specializes in computer systems that fit your specific requirements.

We keep your budget in mind. Develop software or select from our range of application packages. Match a system from our wide range of indigenous micro and mini computers or imported systems. And give you the kind of support you would expect.

A total service in computing.

Let ORG's experience of 25 years help you to get the maximum from your investment.

ORG SYSTEMS – the proven computer

Computer division – Ambalal Sarabhai Enterprises Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

four are with the financial institutions). The understanding also stipulated that neither party would try to upstage the other through a takeover bid, and that Swarup would not increase his shareholding in Swadeshi Polytex beyond the 34 per cent figure at which Rajaram has promised he would freeze his own shareholding.

With Sitaram Jaipuria having died of a heart attack two months ago, the real loser in this bitter game of corporate musical chairs is his son, 31-year-old Ashok Jaipuria. Ashok started his working life in Swadeshi, then left to start his own firm, Cosmo Films, and returned to the board briefly, only to be ousted now. He says he will "wait and watch" further developments, and points out that Rajaram's management record in Swadeshi Cotton Mills (whose textile mills are now run by the Government) does not promise an extremely rosy future for Swadeshi Polytex.

In fact, Ashok and his father Sitaram had tried to neutralise Rajaram's power in the company completely by getting the UP Government to acquire ownership of the shares in Swadeshi Polytex that are owned by Swadeshi Cotton Mills—on the ground that these shares had been pledged to the Uttar Pradesh Government and were under receivership. Since most of Rajaram's stake in Swadeshi Polytex is through these shares, such a move would have removed him from the scene quite effectively, but the Uttar Pradesh Government failed to oblige—a reluctance to act that Ashok finds mystifying since the dividends on the shares continue to go to Rajaram.

Ashok also points out that the company's Rs 21 crore project for doubling the production capacity of polyester yarn from 6,100 tonnes has been held up because of legal proceedings initiated by Rajaram, and says that this has meant heavy losses to the company in terms of unclaimed tax allowances and profits foregone. But the new members of the company board argue that the project, now estimated to cost Rs 24 crore, will be implemented this year, and Rajaram promises that "Profits will be at least 50 per cent higher than last year's level."

The immediate future will tell which of these two scenarios is the right one. But one thing is certain: if Rajaram fails to deliver the goods, there could be more boardroom drama in Swadeshi Polytex in the months ahead.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

SFT

Missing Links

IT WAS hailed as the antidote to the sloth in Indian telecommunications, a computer-based system that would see telegrams speeding from one corner of the land to the other, unrestrained by human hands. Far from hurrying things up, the store and forward telegraph (SFT) system, a computerised grid that the Department of Telecommunications began to install in 1982, has blown a fuse. Several fuses, in fact, to judge from the reaction of exasperated telegraph operators and traffic officers who are up in arms against the system and demanding the introduction of more sophisticated and versatile equipment.

The SFT system: outmoded

Why? Because SFT failed to live up to its promise. Its operators complain that it breaks down almost every other day. Each month more than 5,000 telegraphic messages are lost and no fewer than 70 per cent of the messages handled each day get incorrectly routed.

None of this should, of course, have happened. Made by the Electronics Corporation of India Ltd (ECIL), each SFT system can store thousands of words in its memory, sift telegrams by priority, route them to their destinations and shoot them out at ten times the speed of a teleprinter operator. With all this capability packed into it, the network should have been a boon to a system that copes with some 75 million telegrams a year. Since the first SFT link up between Hyderabad and Madras three years ago, it now spans about 250 outlying stations through 23 independent but linked SFT's. But it's already outmoded.

By today's standards, it has a primitive microprocessor, and its data base and memory are not adequate to handle the rapid step-up in traffic, particularly at peak flow. It can handle 300 telegrams per hour against 8,000 of most modern equipment, and can feed into 15 teleprinters compared with 1,000 that is now possible. Former general manager of the Tamil Nadu telecom circle and one of those responsible for originally bringing out the SFT, U.D.N. Rao, concedes the point. Says he: "The popularity of the SFT is posing new problems. There are traffic bottlenecks in the metros and we will inevitably have to use systems with a larger handling capacity."

The fly in this ointment is that, while everyone agrees that a better system is needed, the communications ministry and the Delhi-based Telecommunications Research Centre (TRC) sharply differ on whether it should be home-made or imported. Argues TRC Additional Director J.L. Gupta: "It will take about 18 months to develop a system with the requisite facilities and this has to be considered before deciding on supporting an indigenous effort or going in for import." ECIL officials, however, point out that they have already supplied systems of higher capability to the Defence Ministry and the Overseas Communications Service.

Meanwhile, with this two-year row unresolved, the communications ministry has given a letter of intent for 40 more SFT systems to ECIL, which is the whipping boy in all this and now stands accused of supplying ineffective systems. But ECIL officials are quick to riposte that the Government wanted a low-cost system quickly—the present SFT's cost Rs 6-10 lakh—and the company could have provided a better system at a cost of Rs 1 crore cheaper than Rs 2.5 crore to Rs 3 crore for imported systems, had it so wanted. Says P. Appajirao, ECIL's technical manager, computer group: "We went by a need-based approach. The ministry wanted a low-cost system as anything involving over Rs 1 crore required cabinet approval and may have meant more time." And, as long as a decision isn't made, time is what telegrams will continue to take.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Every time there is a surge in the power line - Should there be a surge in your expenses too?

MEI HT power control equipment offer protection from overloads and low voltages to save downtime losses and expensive equipment repairs

Keeping overloads strictly at bay is an entire range of MEI HT power control equipment. Industries in every sphere today rely on MEI to save their equipment from damage and from heavy downtime losses. MEI have invested their equipment with nearly 40 years of experience, expertise and excellence. A quality confirmed by leading Test Houses in India.

Take a Look at our HT range

Low Oil Circuit Breakers
33 kV—T 52/2E
11 kV and 22 kV—GUD

Bulk Oil Circuit Breakers and Kiosks

Upto 350 MVA—11 kV

Bulk Oil Fuse Switches and Load Break Switches

ALL MEI HT equipment are type certified by CPRI—Bhopal

Mysore Electrical Industries Ltd.
P.B. No. 2221 Tumkur Road
Bangalore-560 022.

MEI Professionals in power protection.

Dattaram/MEI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DETERGENTS

Clean Winner

"Nirma, Nirma, Nirma, washing powder Nirma"

The jingle of words. The jingle of coins. And Karsandas Khodidas Patel, 42, is laughing all the way to the bank. As well he might, because households all over India are buying up the washing powder he makes, named after his daughter, all 1,80,000 tonnes of it. And still Karsanbhai claims that he is falling short of demand by 10 per cent. For the chemist who started out 16 years ago from a 12 sq yard room in Khokra near Ahmedabad, producing just 24 tonnes of the powder that year, it is a dream come true. Today, he is far and away the country's biggest producer of washing powders.

Last fortnight, the Government took note of Patel's triumph in the classic manner by slapping a 15 per cent excise duty on small-scale detergent manufacturers from this month, a move expected to net the Central Government Rs 37.8 crore. It is difficult to imagine Nirma, which commands a turnover of Rs 100 crore, as being small-scale, but the fact remains that Patel churns out his product without the use of electric power, using the services of 2,000 people (mostly poor tribals) at his four factories at Vatva spread over 47,000 sq yards, keeping overheads low.

The excise duty has once again brought to life the controversy whether the organised sector, led by the giant Hindustan Lever Ltd, makers of Surf and Sunlight detergent powders, had sought to cut the small-scale sector down to size. Patel argues that the organised sector, growing at about 15 per cent annually, cannot stomach the success of his powder, which has leaped at an annual rate of 40 per cent. "Nonsense," says Shunu Sen, Lever's vice-president, marketing. "Surf and Nirma don't fall in the same category. One is a scientifically formulated detergent powder meant exclusively for clothes. The other belongs to a segment of the detergent powder industry which is a basic washing powder."

But the fact remains that Nirma's astounding success has given Lever cause for concern. Its Surf which sold 24,000 tonnes in 1984 and is said to command two-thirds of the market for the organised sector detergents, is growing at a rate which Sen says "is not less than the growth rate of the sector, or 15 per cent." However, Surf at Rs 22 a kg costs three times as much as Nirma. Realising this, Lever in recent months has introduced Lalitaji on television to emphasise the fact that Surf gives more value for money. Sen says that the campaign is "biting".

More concrete measures to counteract Nirma were taken two years ago, by introducing Sunlight powder, costing Rs 14 a kg, which has so far not been much of a success—it sold 24,000 tonnes last year. Sen admits that "we are still trying to find a niche for it." Part of Lever's dilemma is that Sunlight might cut into Surf's sales. However, Patel himself sees Sunlight as a possible competitor in the years to come.

ZAVERILAL MEHTA

The Nirma factory at Vatva and (inset) Patel: gearing up

In the next few years, there is no doubt that competition is going to be fiercer than it already is. Three years ago Nirma and Lever got into a scrap over alleged underhand tactics used by Lever to undermine Nirma with the housewife. This time round, Nirma officials charge Lever with spreading the word, in Punjab for instance, that Nirma is harmful for the skin because it uses too much caustic soda although Nirma uses only soda ash. Patel says: "A psychological block among consumers is being created that Nirma is required in much more quantities to clean the same amount of clothes. Just a spoonful is enough." He points to the tests done by the Chem Med Analytical Laboratories, Bombay, which showed that skin irritation caused by Nirma was much less than that caused by Surf!

Lever executives pooh-pooh this, emphasising repeatedly that Surf and Nirma just do not cater to the same market. Sen claims that Lever research shows that housewives in more than half the households covered in one survey, far from preferring Surf to Nirma or vice versa, ended up buying both kinds of powders; the one for the best clothes and the other for general washing up. He asserts vehemently that Surf is a far superior product because it has ingredients apart from the detergent Linear Alkyl Benzene (LAB) which softens the water, ensures that the dirt stays off. He also says that excessive use of soda ash—Nirma contains 55 per cent while Surf contains 10 per cent—could be harmful. Incidentally, the new Sunlight powder contains twice as much soda ash as Surf.

The battle is on and Patel is gearing up to maintain his supremacy. He is thinking of switching over to a powered unit for mixing the powder, thus saving 5 per cent on costs. Says Pramod Patel, who is in charge of the Nirma chemical works in Vatva: "If we have to pay excise we must mechanise, otherwise we will suffer." Patel also plans to start a research and development section this year to look into projects for the manufacture of toilet soaps, detergent cakes and toothpaste. The man who stayed on top by being little Nirma is effectively four companies, kept that way to avoid coming into the large-scale sector, is hence getting set for the big time.

The secret of Patel's success is that he saw a huge market for cheap washing powders while the big guns failed to. The prices of soap-making oils have risen 50 per cent in the last five years and that is the reason why the laundry soap market is growing only at about 2 per cent a year—even poor quality laundry soap costs Rs 10 a kg. For the last decade and more, Karsanbhai Patel has been the leader in the detergent drive and if his past record is anything to go by, he is going to be out there in front for some time to come. —JAGANNATH DUBASHI and RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IPCL

In the Top Bracket

WHICH public sector company earns almost as much profits as Reliance Textiles, and has a profits-to-sales ratio that is as good as that of the private sector star? Answer: the Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Ltd (IPCL) at Vadodara.

Which company has bigger investment plans than Reliance? Again, the answer is IPCL. And like Reliance, IPCL is going to pay for its projects with its own and borrowed funds—without going to the Government for succour, as virtually every other public sector company does.

Finally, which public sector company can come close to Reliance in its record of capacity utilisation, achieving more than 100 per cent in some of its plants? You guessed it: IPCL again.

Yet little has been written about IPCL, while reams have been written about Reliance. And IPCL Chairman S. Ganguly is sore. "This company is going to climb heights that others will envy. Yet people write only about Dhirubhai Ambani."

He has a point. For though bigger public sector giants like the Indian Oil Corporation and the Oil and Natural Gas Commission make far more money than IPCL, and have bigger investment projects on their plate, there is one crucial difference: the other profitable behemoths function in monopoly situations and enjoy administered prices. In contrast, as Ganguly points out, "We have to compete in the market-place with private companies, and against imports on the open general licence (OGL)."

The competition between IPCL and Reliance is about to intensify, with Ambani (Reliance's bustling chairman) planning to move into some of IPCL's market strongholds: linear alkyl benzene and mono-ethylene glycol (both raw materials for detergents), acrylic fibre and polyvinyl chloride (PVC). But even Ambani will envy IPCL's track record: its initial Rs 28 crore investment in an aromatics plant in the early 1970s got a payback in just three years, and the subsequent investment of Rs 351 crore in a series of downstream projects got a payback in five years. The irony here is that IPCL undertook this investment in downstream units only because the Tatas, Lalbhais, Amins and Kilachands backed out of the licences they had been given. If IPCL had not stepped into the breach, its 'mother unit' (which cracks naphtha into its molecular components at 850 degrees celsius) would have had no market.

Despite all this, the last time that IPCL got budgetary support from the Government was way back in 1978. Yet the company is now flush with funds: it has repaid its loans ahead of schedule, and is sitting on Rs 44 crore in cash and bank balances. And over the next five years, a company with assets worth less than Rs 500 crore will be undertaking fresh investments of a staggering Rs 1,385 crore (most of it on a new gas cracker complex at Nagothane, Maharashtra's Raigad district). Of this, no less than Rs 625 crore will be generated internally by the company, and the rest will come as loans from a variety of sources, and through the issue of debentures. Undaunted by this mammoth task that lies ahead, Chairman Ganguly is already talking of taking on "a fresh batch of projects after the existing ones are complete in five years".

There are riders, of course, to this success story in public enterprise. For ...

IPCL is now flush with funds: it is sitting on Rs 44 crore; and over the next five years, a company with assets worth less than Rs 500 crore will be undertaking fresh investments of a staggering Rs 1,385 crore.

(Left) Ganguly: financial muscle; (below) the IPCL plant: creditable record

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...ing, till last year IPCL never paid the government any dividend on its massive share capital of Rs 186 crore; so, unlike Reliance, no profits were diverted to keep the shareholders unhappy. For another, it has not always been successful in implementing its projects on schedule. The company's directors attribute the delays to a variety of external factors, but Chairman Ganguly is frank enough to admit that the past record on project implementation needs to be improved upon. Reliance comes out particularly well in this context because of its record of implementing huge projects in a short span. IPCL has a good defence here: Ambani, company officials argue, goes in for project decisions even before he gets government approvals, and he does not waste time on indigenous suppliers, preferring package jobs on equipment from abroad.

But IPCL is capable of matching Ambani in its will to get things done. Early this year, the Planning Commission told the company that the Government did not have the money to invest in the Rs 1,200-crore gas cracker complex. Undaunted, the board of directors met and decided to go ahead with the project with their own funds as much as possible, and worked out a solution: roughly one-fifth of the project cost would be spent after the plant was commissioned, and the rest of the money the company would find on its own, or borrow from a variety of sources, including the World Bank, the domestic financial institutions and the banks. So, while the Planning Commission had told IPCL that its Seventh Five-Year Plan outlay would be only Rs 580 crore, IPCL has decided to go ahead with an investment programme totalling Rs 1,385 crore. Officials in Vadodara fight shy of any suggestion that the implementation of the gas cracker complex implies in any sense a cocking of one's snook at the government, but there is little doubt that the company would have had a relatively empty programme if it had sat back and accepted the Planning Commission's decision on finances.

The result is that IPCL will remain for the next decade the dominant company in the whole field of polymers: polypropylene, polyethylene, etc. Also, because of expansion and modernisation programmes that are being undertaken at Vadodara, IPCL will remain the single biggest supplier of a whole range of other chemical products, though it will face increasing competition from new entrants like the venerable Reliance Textile Industries, and perhaps others like Hindustan Lever and DCM. And the financial projections show that even at the end of the massive investment programme that is now under way, the company will have plenty of financial cushion left in its debt-equity ratio to undertake still more borrowings.

AT THE corporation's sprawling complex outside Vadodara, however, officials don't always talk in terms of financial muscle, awesome as it is. They focus, instead, on the company's safety record. The chemical industry in the United States has an accident rate involving worker absenteeism of 4.89. The average for India is 7.5. At IPCL, the figure is no more than 1.02.

The officials also talk of being responsible for ushering the plastics age in India: introducing polyethylene lining for irrigation canals and ponds to prevent water seepage, replacing milk bottles with cheaper plastic packaging, using PVC pipes for the water-economising method of drip irrigation in the semi-arid areas of Karnataka and Gujarat, encouraging the tyre industry to use synthetic rubber, ushering in the era of synthetic detergents as a substitute for washing soap, getting the Food Corporation to store its grain under polyethylene sheets, and much else. IPCL Marketing Director Hasmukh Shah calls this the concept selling of plasticulture. And he is right when he says that "when IPCL went into production a decade ago, the market for our products simply did not exist. We had to develop the market, introduce new applications." The company has certainly succeeded, for IPCL's products—a variety of esoteric items like ethylenes, acrylonitriles xylenes, polypropylene, polybutadiene rubber, mono-ethylene glycol and surfactants of various sorts (derived from naphtha supplied by the neighbouring Koyali oil refinery)—are now used in pharmaceuticals, pesticides, footwear, and paints, apart from polyester yarn, tyres, all manner of packaging items, and much else.

There is also every evidence at Vadodara of IPCL being a purposeful organisation that knows what it is about. Conscious of the fact that it spends Rs 30 lakh every day on fuel and power, the company has launched a major energy saving programme which has already resulted in savings of a handsome Rs 22 crore over the last five years, with bigger savings to come. And the difficult business of staying abreast of technologies in a field where new developments take place every two or three years is being attempted with some success: the polypropylene unit in Maharashtra, for instance, is going to involve using absolutely the latest technology, three steps ahead of that used in the existing polypropylene plant at Vadodara. Officials say only two plants of its kind now exist elsewhere in the world, and the use of the new technology involves substantial cost economies.

Ganguly is therefore right when he says that "IPCL has tremendous inner strength, in its financial capability, in its technical abilities, and in the quality of its staff". It has problems too, of course, like groupism at the top, the limited salaries it pays to its highly trained research staff, and the struggles that are inevitable in the effort to improve on its past project implementation record. But in the final analysis, the Tatas, Kilachands, Amins and Lalbhais must be kicking themselves in the shins for not taking up the projects that IPCL eventually did, to become the successful public sector enterprise it is today.

—T.N. NINAN in Vadodara

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"You mean all these industries come to Thermax for solutions? And that Thermax presents them with technological breakthroughs?"

That's the Thermax Chemical Division for you.

Yes, the Chemical Division of Thermax is a ready source which a lot of industries tap for quick solutions.

And if the Division does not have a ready-made solution to offer, then the R&D Cell meets the challenge, and most often comes up with a technological breakthrough.

Let's take a look at the different industries that have benefited by the Division's technological breakthroughs.

Oil Industry — Oil-soluble demulsifiers from Thermax have superior purification capabilities as compared to water-soluble demulsifiers. Several refineries are reaping the benefits of improved levels of purification.

Thermax has also developed a 'pour point depressant' for better mobility of crude oil in pipelines, specifically suited to the high-wax oil produced from Bombay High.

Coal Washeries — The Thermax polyelectrolyte, TULSEPARS GA-40, has been used successfully in coal benefication. And only 100 to 150 gm of resin (costing about Rs. 12) is required to separate one tonne of high-quality coal!

Steel Plants — The Bhilai Steel Plant uses alum as a clarification agent for the recycled water from their blast furnaces. But the problem with alum is that it forms a heavy sludge. Thermax developed a coagulant aid which reduces the sludge, thereby facilitating its easy disposal.

Sugar Industry — Thermax, in conjunction with the Appropriate Technology Transfer Centre, Lucknow, has developed a process using ion exchange resins, for increasing the yield of sugar from molasses in the Khandsari industry. Based on this, work is in progress to produce liquid sugar for Hindustan Antibiotics. Application work on the use of Reverse Osmosis in sugar production is on, in collaboration with the Gujarat Industrial Investment Corporation.

Pharmaceutical Industry — Thermax developed, for the first time in India, special resins for use in the recovery of antibiotics like Streptomycin from fermented broth. Thermax has also developed resins for use in slow-release drugs.

Thermal Plants — The Tarapur Atomic Power Station needed nuclear grade resins for

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

water treatment. Thermax was the first to indigenously develop these resins.

The Chemical Division's product range offers solutions to a host of industries. Let's take a quick look at the range.

An at-a-glance view of the product range

Our products include the TULSION range of macroporous and gel ion exchange resins for removal of dissolved ionic impurities from water or other solvents. These resins are manufactured in collaboration with Sybron Chemicals Inc., U.S.A. We also manufacture TULSEPARS anionic polyelectrolyte, CAT-FLOC-T cationic polyelectrolyte, made in collaboration with Calgon Corporation, U.S.A., and MAXTREAT non-chromate and chromate-based chemical dosing formulations for cooling water systems.

We introduced in India ECONOMIX, a fireside combustion deposit cleaning agent, which increases boiler efficiency, while saving effort and maintenance costs. This is made in collaboration with Chalbar Ltd., U.K.

We also make oil well chemicals, which include speciality chemicals like the 'pour point depressant', which improves the mobility of crude oil; oil-soluble demulsifiers for oil-water separation; scale inhibitors for water flooding in oil wells; and polyelectrolyte-based deoilers.

And we recently developed a handy test kit for water testing in process industries and in boilers.

The Chemical Division in a capsule

Our problem-solving approach and proven abilities have earned us a great deal of goodwill. Even companies not using Thermax systems or products approach the Division for guidance. And we also undertake to train employees of our clients.

The Division continuously monitors the performance of all products sold. Ours is an improvement-oriented approach, with a constant effort to better product performance. For instance, our entire range of ion exchange resins has been upgraded recently.

The Chemical Division of Thermax not only stands tall on our own strengths but also forms an integral part of Thermax's activities. It enables the Company to offer you, across our different divisions, a comprehensive package of services.

THERMAX

THERMAX PRIVATE LIMITED

CHEMICAL DIVISION

97-E, General Block, Bhosari, Pune 411 026

SALES OFFICES: Bombay • Calcutta • New Delhi • Madras • Ahmedabad • Bangalore • Bhopal • Hyderabad

Thermax Chemical Division – Making our chemistry work for you.

Rediffusion/T/4015a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WITH wholesale prices recording almost no change last fortnight, there appears to be no cause for concern on the price front. Industrial production, however, declined last month caused by a drop in manufacturing. The power situation, however, showed a marked improvement in June. The share and bullion markets were relatively steady last fortnight, while money and credit trends saw no major upheaval. All data are seasonally adjusted. The current trend is computed on the basis of the past six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend 6.2% p.a.

Wholesale prices remained stable. Price increases in food products and manufactures were offset by declines in textiles and primary articles.

Industrial Production Index

1970 = 100

Current Trend 4.5% p.a.

Industrial production declined by 0.5 per cent in May owing to a fall in manufacturing, which offset gains in the power and mining sector.

Manufacturing Output Index

1970 = 100

Current Trend 7.6% p.a.

Manufactures dropped by 1.4 per cent last month, owing mainly to sharp drops in textiles and machinery.

Money Supply (M3)

Rs. Crore

Current Trend 11.2% p.a.

Money supply stayed on trend last fortnight with a 1.1 per cent increase due to an increase in commercial bank credit to the Government.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs. Crore

Current Trend 16.8 p.a.

Bank credit to firms was relatively tight with an increase of 0.4 per cent, well below the long term trend.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend 76.9%

The share market went up by 0.5 per cent. Electrical machinery and jute textiles saw a lot of action on the upswing.

Power Generation

Million KWH

Current Trend 11.8% p.a.

Power generation jumped 2.5 per cent in June, following the onset of the monsoon and consequent impressive gains in hydel generation.

Closing Gold Prices

Rs per 10 GMS

Current Trend 18.9% p.a.

Bullion recorded a modest increase of 0.2 per cent last fortnight, well below the long term trend.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Items with maximum growth in March 1985

	% Growth
Synthetic Rubber	93.02
Grain Mill Products	83.83
Cosmetics	73.04
Machine Tools	38.41
Dairy Products	33.12
Dye	27.57
Insecticides & Pesticides	25.16
Handloom & Powerloom Machienry	21.31
Bakery Products	19.04
Rubber Footwear	17.08
Iron & Steel	16.31
Drugs & Pharmaceuticals	14.76
Explosives	14.56
Paper Machinery	14.01
Hand Tools	13.96
Cement Machinery	11.77
Iron & Steel Structurals	11.41
Footwear	10.86
Tobacco Manufacture	10.46
Railway Locomotives	10.05
Electrical Fans	9.819
Matches	8.980
Confectionery	7.320
Ferro-Alloys	7.180
Petroleum & Coal	7.170
Mining & Quarrying	7.040
Earth Moving Machinery	6.770
Beverage	5.770
Power Driven Pumps	5.370
Synthetic Resins & Plastics	5.050
Watches & Clocks	4.340
Man Made Fibre	4.000
Automobiles Ancillaries	2.960
Chinaware	2.820
Razor Blades	2.760
Salt	2.520
Electric Light & Power	2.380
Sewing & Knitting Machines	2.150
Surgical Products	1.960
Linolium	1.730
Paper	1.350
Non Ferrous Industries	1.3000
Electrical Motors	0.840
Industrial Instruments	0.760
Vanaspati	0.470
Hallow Ware	0.410
Refractories	0.020

Of 119 series considered 53 with a weight of 51.1 accelerated while 66 with a weight of 43.4 decelerated

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1985	1984
Saleable Steel Thousand Tonnes, June	533	483
Petroleum Refinery Products Thousand Tonnes, June	3392	2759
Electricity Generated Million KWH, June	13365	12344
Rail Movements Net Tonne Kilometres, June	14723	13151
Call Money Rate Percentage, June	10.0%	9.92%

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DUNLOP INTRODUCES THE NEW PROFESSIONAL

Tough. Uncompromising. On the fast track. A new breed that's going places. A new generation with professional drive.

For this new professional, Dunlop has a new car tyre. The Dunlop Olympus Nylon.

It's got resilience. A strong nylon casing to take the roughest going.

It's got staying power. With a premium depth tread that goes a long way.

It's got style. A tread pattern designed for better grip.

Olympus. It's the new professional. Made by Dunlop for people with standards like yours.

New

DUNLOP

OLYMPUS

Nylon Car Tyre

Because professional standards demand the best

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri

If you fly Cathay Pacific to Hong Kong is

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Stretch it.

With the terrific little Hong Kong Bargain Book.

An amazing Cathay Pacific-Hong Kong Tourist Association offer designed to make that delightf shopper's paradise even mo a bargain.

It's a booklet containing discount coupons which y get along with your Cathay Pacific airline ticket.

Each coupon entitles you to up to 25% discou at a variety of establishments. In fact, you get discount coupons for each outlet.

Some of the participants include Indian shops, restaurants, jewellery stores, Island cruises and fun places like the fabulous Ocean Park.

course, you ong Cathay
e the delicio
d refresh
fter you.
great fun.
that isn't st

Arri
bea

ATHA

ther informa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kong is what you can do with your US $500.

ng Kong cific-Hong ation offer at delight even mo

ntaining ns which ur Cathay

% discou you get an shop uises an rk.

ourse, you shouldn't forget some of the extras
ying Cathay Pacific.
e the delicious cuisine, a connoisseur's choice cold refreshments and a charming crew to ister you.
great fun.
that isn't stretching it.

Arrive in better shape

CATHAY PACIFIC
The Swire Group

Hong Kong Tourist Association

further information, contact Cathay Pacific or your Travel Agent. Bargain Book offer valid only for passengers travelling from Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/CX/4065a

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another Great Idea.

VHS FVH D720 PAL/MESECAM

In 1937, a man named Avery Fisher had a great idea. He would introduce the world's very first high fidelity system. That idea and others that followed—video as well as audio—began a tradition of great ideas that still continues today at Fisher, the company he founded.

One great example: the VHS video cassette recorder shown above. It features a specially-developed, hybrid integrated circuit just one-tenth the size of a conventional IC. Plus a micron-precision video head, a product of Fisher's own fully-integrated manufacturing system.

Together, they provide Fisher video recorders with such extraordinarily high picture quality in virtually every playback mode—forward/reverse picture search, slow/quick motion and still/frame-by-frame—that it must be seen to be believed. With the addition of an 8-button, 11-function infrared remote control, you've got a system that ranks second to none.

One name is setting the standards for the "Audio-Video Age": Fisher. Don't you settle for less. Get yourself a great idea. Get yourself a Fisher.

CFM2110SR. More viewing picture with a flat, square-shaped 21-inch picture tube on this 16-system color TV with stereo sound and remote control.

FVH P720. Video playback in five different modes with this front-loading PAL-system video with 9-day programmable timer.

CFM 2610SR. See it bigger and hear it better with this 26-inch, 16-system color TV with stereo sound.

FVH-M540. A video that puts the world at your fingertips with 4-system recording and playback and 11-function infrared remote control.

FISHER

The first name in high fidelity.

BPL-INDIA Fisher products can be serviced at these local authorised service centres: • Bangalore: Phone: 220266; Cable-Phisilab; Telex-0845-511; • Calcutta: Phone: 431916; Telex-021-2390 • Bombay: Phone: 4940384; Telex-011-73789; • Cochin: Phone: 39422; • New Delhi: Phone: 6411037; Telex-031-2692 • Madras: Phone: 74810; Cable-Phisilab; Telex-041-6507 • Palghat: Phone: 3241; Telex-0853-

Fisher products are available wherever you go:
Saudi Arabia: Al-Oumi Trading Centre, P.O. Box 2211, Al-Khobar TEL 8646801 Kuwait: Radio House Co., P.O. Box 1001, Safat Kuwait TEL 419123 U.A.E.: Paragon International Co. Dubai, P.O. Box 8771 TEL 231566, Abu Dhabi, P.O. Box 555 TEL 213577 Bahrain: Zayani Electronics, P.O. Box 1395, Manama TEL 259672 Qatar: Hamad & Mohamed Al-Futtaim, P.O. Box 1427, Doha TEL 416147 Sultanate of Oman: Oman Marketing & Services Co., P.O. Box 5734, Ruwi TEL 701180 Lebanon: Hiba Trading Co., P.O. Box 7859, Beirut TEL 78173 Egypt: Futainasr Trading Co., S.A.E., P.O. Box 59,5 Zaki St., Cairo TEL 748488 Yemen Arab Republic: Salem Mohamed Shammakh, P.O. Box 3372, Hodeidah TEL 78173 Singapore: Fisher Electronics (Singapore) Pte., Ltd., Inchcape House, Singapore St. Anthony's Consolidated Ltd., 516, Sri Sangaraja Mawatha, P.O. Box 951, Colombo 10 TEL 24261 Hong Kong: Fisher Electric (Hong Kong) Ltd., Wing On House, Central, Hong Kong TEL 5-286565 U.S.A.: Fisher Corporation, Chatsworth, Calif. TEL 213-673-4204 TEL 4751894 Canada: Fisher Canada, Toronto, Ontario TEL 416-421-8344 U.K.: Fisher Sales (U.K.), Watford Hertfordshire TEL (0923) 31974 West Germany: "Fisher Hi-Fi" Europa Vertriebs-Ges. München TEL (089) 4145-0

FI-IN-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Still Rising

THE MARKET's optimism seems to recognise no limits, for shares continued their breathless climb up the charts last fortnight. Led by Century Spinning, Associated Bearings, Premier Automobiles and a host of lesser lights, the market notched up fresh gains at a time when it seemed that a break in the momentum was imminent. After all, the stock market authorities had tried once again to dampen the brokers' unrestrained enthusiasm by imposing heavy margins on shares in both the forward and cash lists. Yet, the bulls continue to run way ahead.

The power of the bullish operators was in fact more than fully evident last fortnight in the manner in which they forced the market authorities to reduce the margins that had been imposed in late July. Within two weeks of this drastic step, when the brokers had to put down 40 per cent margins on their purchases the bulls forced the authorities to reduce these margins to 20 per cent on cash-paid shares and 30 per cent on forward shares. The bulls had, of course, wanted the margins to be no more than 3 per cent, but this was clearly well beyond reach. Nevertheless, there is little doubt that the stock market is still in the hands of those who would like to drive share prices even higher.

Chart by B.R. Sharma

The reduction in margins in early August had the desired effect, and fresh gains were notched up on most counters. The bears did make their presence felt by pushing down the prices of shares like ACC, Larsen & Toubro and Tata Engineering—all three favourites of the last few months—but this amounted to swimming against the tide. And there was no mistaking the broad undertone of optimism that continued to influence the market.

Nevertheless, investors must watch the industrial trends carefully. For one thing, while a dozen corporate giants are taking advantage of the government's liberalised policies and planning an investment of no less than Rs 3,000 crore, these investments will take time to actually materialise. For another, the government's decision to broadband industrial licences in a number of areas has not yet resulted in any follow-up action. Also, the government's decision last fortnight to call for a review of the technical collaborations proposed by automobile manufacturers, and to keep applications in the cold store while the review is completed, points to the kind of pitfalls that lie ahead. In short, change in Indian industry is likely to come slower than many anticipate. So, while it may pay dividends to hitch one's investment bandwagon to the bulls that are setting the pace just now, investors with a long-term view must weigh their options carefully lest they end up making their purchases when the market is at or near its peak.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1985 HIGH	1985 LOW	CLOSE 6.8.85	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	58.00	29.00	57.00	5.00 +
Associated Cement	610.00	385.00	560.00	14.00 –
Atul Copper	70.00	37.50	63.00	2.00 +
Associated Bearings	685.00	425.00	682.50	42.50 +
Bajaj Auto	2000.00	855.00	1825.00	175.00 +
Balmer	64.00	45.00	64.00	13.00 +
Birla Rayon	440.00	281.00	435.00	41.00 +
Bata India	88.10	48.00	84.50	6.50 +
Bihar	480.00	305.00	445.00	10.00 –
Bom & Cosmopolitan	115.00	61.00	105.00	2.00 –
Bharat Forge	85.00	35.50	79.00	3.00 –
Blue Star	71.00	36.50	65.00	7.00 +
Bombay Dyeing	75.00	33.00	75.00	5.00 +
Bombay Burmah	188.00	66.00	124.00	1.00 –
Big Tyres	83.00	47.50	75.50	4.75 –
Century Spinning	275.00	180.00	275.00	5.00 +
Colgate India	1310.00	810.00	1210.00	225.00 +
Dalmia	91.00	56.00	80.00	2.50 –
Dyes	85.00	32.25	76.00	5.00 +
Dyestuff	370.00	147.00	185.00	nil
[illegible]	80.00	33.00	70.00	5.00 +
[illegible]	83.00	16.00	63.00	12.50 +
[illegible]	45.00	22.30	45.00	6.75 +
[illegible]	102.00	54.00	96.00	3.00 +
[illegible]	102.00	48.27	95.00	8.00 +
[illegible]	215.00	85.00	185.00	2.50 –
[illegible]	70.00	26.50	46.00	1.00 –
[illegible]	32.00	24.00	27.00	7.00 +
[illegible]	32.00	14.25	29.50	1.75 +
Grasim Rayon	810.00	387.00	785.00	45.00 –
Hindustan Lever	90.00	50.75	70.00	14.00 +
Hindustan Motors	130.00	91.00	108.00	1.00 –
[illegible]	84.00	37.00	77.00	3.00 +
Indian Dyestuff	390.00	267.50	340.00	15.00 –
Indian Explosives	72.50	33.00	72.50	6.50 +
Indian Hotels	135.00	76.00	100.00	25.00 –
Indian Organic	124.00	50.50	112.00	3.00 +
Indian Rayon	119.00	66.00	106.00	17.00 +
Indrol	250.00	90.50	225.00	17.50 +
Ingersoll-Rand	360.00	162.00	340.00	37.50 +
ITC	65.50	29.00	65.50	19.20 +
J K Synthetics	106.00	52.75	103.00	13.00 +
Kinetic Engineering	380.00	128.00	350.00	20.00 +
Kirloskar Oil	38.00	23.00	28.00	nil
Lakme	200.00	74.00	175.00	10.00 +
Larsen & Toubro	175.00	72.00	160.00	5.00 –
Lipton	58.50	25.50	53.00	5.00 –
Lohia Machines	85.00	42.00	70.00	nil
Mahindra & Mahindra	102.00	48.00	86.00	8.00 +
Motor Industries	670.00	321.25	650.00	10.00 –
National Organic	550.00	240.00	480.00	10.00 –
Nirlon	70.00	37.75	56.00	2.00 –
Peico Electronics	88.00	38.40	96.00	1.50 +
Premier Auto	645.00	322.00	610.00	58.00 +
Ranbaxy	127.50	49.00	107.50	3.00 –
Raymond	120.00	56.00	101.00	8.00 –
Reckitt & Colman	95.00	57.00	80.00	5.00 –
Reliance Industries	252.00	120.00	236.00	7.00 +
Sandoz	82.00	31.00	73.00	2.00 –
Shriram Fibres	61.00	34.00	61.00	10.50 +
SPIC	137.00	43.50	121.00	3.00 +
Tata Steel	1130.00	380.00	1060.00	72.00 +
Telco	1030.00	435.00	820.00	5.00 –
Vulcan Laval	125.00	64.00	115.00	nil
Zenith Steel	71.00	32.00	77.00	4.00 +
20th Century Leasing	84.00	31.50	66.00	3.00 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.6805	8.5684
Austria	Schilling	100	60.9539	60.2707
Bahrain	Dinar	1	31.8432	31.7917
Bangladesh	Taka	100	44.2013	43.9128
Canada	Dollar	1	8.8849	8.8212
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.1847	1.1738
Egypt	Pound	1	14.5732	14.4981
France	Franc	1	1.4027	1.3926
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5556	1.5423
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.0817	1.0137
Iran	Rial	100	13.3582	13.1297
Italy	Lira	100	0.6217	0.6201
Japan	Yen	100	5.0859	5.0432
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7420	0.7411
Kuwait	Dinar	1	39.6017	39.5917
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.9146	4.8684
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.7817	0.7803
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6497	0.6455
Netherlands	Guilder	1	3.8129	3.7768
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7817	0.7609
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.4864	5.4441
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0720	0.0713
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4510	0.4503
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.4438	1.4302
Switzerland	Franc	1	5.1443	5.1337
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7130	0.7119
Thailand	Baht	100	45.2817	45.1919
UK	Pound	1	16.4148	16.2972
USA	Dollar	1	12.1850	12.090
UAE	Dirham	1	3.2917	3.2817
USSR	Rouble	1	14.7072	14.6583
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	4.2614	4.2507

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Ltd. New Delhi, and quoted between the Banks on 9.8.85.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I'm supposed to watch my cholesterol level—at 34 ?! Does this mean I have to change my whole lifestyle ?"

No, you don't. With Ranbaxy's Garlic Pearls.

Taken regularly, Ranbaxy's Garlic Pearls help to reduce your high cholesterol level. Because they contain pure garlic oil, extracted from the richest varieties of garlic. And garlic has been recognised by Ayurveda, and now by modern medical science, to have great curative properties.

However, garlic loses its beneficial properties in cooking. And raw garlic has to be chewed thoroughly for the oil to be absorbed by your system. Swallowing does not help. Moreover, you have to chew about 10 cloves of garlic daily to get the required amount of garlic oil. And that can be quite unpleasant. That's why you need Ranbaxy's Garlic Pearls—purest garlic oil without the smell.

Ranbaxy's Garlic Pearls also help in relieving gas and indigestion, easing joint pains, preventing coughs and colds from recurring.

Just two Ranbaxy's Garlic Pearls twice a day keep you in good health.

RANBAXY'S
GARLIC PEARLS

All the cures that natu
put in garlic—
without the smell.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It is 20 years....
when the first SENDZIMIR mill came to India at BRALCO-DEVIDAYAL

Pioneering the thin guage technique of rolling Copper and Brass in India.

Bralco has produced over 50,000 tonnes of top quality thin strips since 1964 and the Automobile Radiator and Ancillary Industry alone has been supplied with 20,000 tonnes. In 1964, organised Radiator manufacturers numbered 10, using thick guage or imported strips. Today there are more than 40 units which are being supplied with totally indigenously rolled thin strips by us.

Not only Automobile Radiator and Ancillary Industry but also manufacturers of XLPE cables, lamp caps, clocks, fountain pens, electronic components, telecommunication components and switch gear specify Bralco quality.

Bralco means superiority in reliability, consistency and quality in Copper and Brass thin guage strips to the most exacting standards.

Radiator Strips upto 0.05 mm

BRALCO-manufacturers of non ferrous strips since 1919.

tumus

tt

offers to Transformer, Switchgear, Electronics and Instrumentation Industry.

AMA-TE-35X

Laminations: For transformers upto 100 MVA ratings. They can be mitred, holed, V-notched and tip cut as per the customer's requirements.

Strip Wound Cores: All types of Strip Wound Cores viz. Toroidal or Ring Cores, and Rectangular Cores as well as 'C' & 'E' Cores in matched pairs for transformers, switchgear and the electronics industry.

Stampings: Various sizes, E & I shapes, J's, U's, etc. and Fan Stampings.

Manufactured in one of the most modern plants in the country under strict quality control.

TUMUS ELECTRIC CORPN. LTD.,
P.B. 42, Rani Baug, Rewa-486 001 (M.P.).

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERAN

Village Wiles

KERAN exists on the edge of nowhere. A sleepy village 165 km north-west of Srinagar, Keran's wooden hovels are strung out along the banks of the Kishen Ganga river which forms a natural no man's land between India and Pakistan Occupied Kashmir (POK). Placed by fate and circumstance on the Line of Actual Control, Keran's 9,000-odd inhabitants live a remote and ragged existence and to get to it means braving bone-chilling winds and razor-edged mountain paths across the Farkian Pass (9,000 ft). For six months of the year in winter, the village is completely cut off from the rest of the world when the pass is choked with snow and the narrow little paths are blocked by avalanches and uprooted pines.

In 1947, when Pakistan stormed the state, Keran was sliced in half and gradually the river changed its course to form a natural boundary between the village and its dismembered limbs on the other side. By the time it is late afternoon elsewhere in the state, Keran is already shrouded in a thick, suffocating blanket of darkness. Last fortnight, however, thanks literally to a blinding flash of inspiration on the part of local leaders, Keran suddenly emerged from the shadows into the flashbulbs of publicity as a local Srinagar daily, Srinagar Times, banner-headlined the sensational story that more than 60 children had been blinded. The paper also carried extensive photographs of a dozen of the supposedly blinded children.

The story predictably created a storm in the state and a panicked administration immediately rushed a medical team to the area and set up an emergency medical camp. However, the doctors discovered that the locals had deliberately fed the story to the press and the children examined were found to be suffering [illegible] congenital cataract. "They never [illegible] ported their ailments to the doc[illegible] has been posted here for the la[illegible] years," said Dr M.A.Shawl, who [illegible] medical team. The doctors found [illegible] children had developed refractive [illegible] which could be easily removed [illegible] gery and the use of corrective gla[illegible] as Rehmatullah, a retired teac[illegible] plained: "Having been brought up [illegible] isolated border town, we people a[illegible] shy and superstitious to make pub[illegible] diseases of our children."

Though the event was revea[illegible] what it was, a mere publicity stu[illegible] locals did manage to achieve their [illegible] tive to focus public and official att[illegible] on their miserable existence. Is[illegible] and ignorance have turned the [illegible] into a miasma of misery. Tubercul[illegible] eye disease is rampant and 33 ch[illegible] died in 1981 due to measles and diar[illegible] Poverty adds its own bit to the scen[illegible] children look like beggars, clothed [illegible] and grime while the elders hudd[illegible] gether in superstitious sullenness, [illegible] tered at the valueless hand that fate [illegible]

Photographs by RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

be suffering
hey never to the doc for the la hawl, who tors found d refractive removed w rective glas etired teach brought we people a to make pub n."

was reve ublicity stu
chieve their d official att xistence. I turned the . Tuberculo
t and 33 ch sles and diar
it to the scen ars, clothed elders hud sullenness, and that fate

dealt them.
there is, of course, a fly in that sad
a reason for Keran's sudden, lunge for exposure. "The other as the locals enviously refer to their across the river, is what it is all about. Whether by delibdesign on the part of the Pakistan ment or pure circumstance, in the of the poor villagers of Keran, the river represents the dividing line heaven and hell. "Look at that road sir, look at the spacious dak and the houses and the regular and then look at us," says Khan, a local contractor who the story about children being in the press after he lost a badly-government contract.

the opposite village is clearly and so is the partial truth of Khan's plea. Bedford buses adorned brightly-coloured advertisements down the serpentine main road at regular hourly intervals, ferry-villagers and the land of their greener on the other side

ing passengers to Muzaffarabad, the capital of POK, 75 km away. The dak bungalow with its spacious rooms looks large and well-maintained and the double-storied wooden houses scattered over the Neelam Valley, as the area is known, are better than the dingy hovels on the Indian side. At night, when Keran is clothed in depressing darkness, the bright lights of the dak bungalow powered from a generator are like a beckoning beacon. But if envy is the sole criteria, then it is misplaced.

The residents of the Neelam Valley are fortunate and isolated symbols of Pakistan's Gulf boom. Virtually every family has a minimum of one member working in the Gulf and the result is the conspicuous prosperity that has become a confusing cancer slowly eating away at the inhabitants of the less fortunate village of Keran.

There are other stories that add acid to the bile: one about a young infant who was handed across the river by his mother to her sister who lives in POK and two hours later he was handed back, having been expertly treated "over there" by the doctors. "Had it been here, it would have taken us two days to reach the hospital in Srinagar," says the narrator. However, as T.S.Mehta, the area development officer cautions: "All that glitters is not gold. The blinding episode that has been given a dramatic twist would land all of them in jail had they tried that across the river." But to the wretched of Keran, they are already prisoners of the darkness in their minds, and all they can see through the iron bars of their daily existence is the grass growing increasingly greener on the other side of the river.

—DILIP BOBB with
GHULAM NABI KHAYAL in Keran

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kirloskarvadi

Here you find facilities that no other pump manufacturer in India has : the Hydraulic Research Centre, the Non - destructive Testing Lab and Pump Testing Labs. The comprehensive range of facilities for prototype performance test, ultrasonic test, dye penetrant test, radiography, vibration analysis, noise level test and sump model test of pumps discharging up to 10,000 litres per second and at heads up to 550 metres using prime movers of ratings of up to 1850 kW.

Little wonder, then, that Kirloskar Brothers Ltd. (KBL) was entrusted with the building, testing and supplying of the largest indigenously designed splitcase pumps for the Deokali Irrigation Project in Uttar Pradesh. Each pump discharges 4250 litres per second at a head of 17.5 metres and uses a 900 kW motor.

Proven design, performance and quality won KBL the entire assignments from the Atomic Energy Board, National Thermal Power Corp., Bhabha Atomic Research Centre, ONGC and Engineers India Ltd.

It is this engineering strength that has earned KBL the position of the leader in fluid handling. And it is innovative stamina that will keep it ahead.

Kirloskar

Leaders in fluid handling since 1920

KIRLOSKAR BROTHERS LIMITED
Udyog Bhavan, Tilak Road, Pune-411 002.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

India's total annual cement capacity : 38,000,000 tonnes

Major cement plants in India have drawn on the comprehensive construction services of L&T's Construction Group. They include Mysore Cements Ltd., India Cements Limited, Tamil Nadu Cements Corporation Ltd., Cement Corporation of India, Andhra Cements Limited, Raasi Cement Limited, Satna Cement Plant Expansion and Durga Cement.

For L&T's cement plant in Maharashtra, the largest single kiln unit in India, ECC carried out the entire construction on a turnkey basis.

Current assignments include construction services for Raymond Cements and Modi Cements Ltd.

ECC's capabilities cover:

- Layout planning, design, construction of massive foundations, silos, preheater buildings, conveyor galleries, underground cable tunnels, long span storage structures...
- Fabrication and erection of steel structures, erection of heavy equipment and machinery, piping...
- Design and installation of entire electrical systems...

LARSEN & TOUBRO LIMITED

ECC—CONSTRUCTION GROUP

P.O. Box 979, Madras 600 089
P.O. Box 278, Bombay 400 038
P.O. Box 9010, Calcutta 700 071
P.O. Box 6223, New Delhi 110 015

L&T/ADV Dept. ECC 403 | 2 H

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJASTHAN

Stream of Destruction

THE RIVER, if it can be called that, is a stream of dark liquid of the kind that overflows city drains after heavy monsoon showers. But the Bandi river runs through no monsoon-deluged urban sprawl. It was once, not all that many years ago, a fresh water stream which brought much-needed sustenance for the fields that sat on its banks. Today it spreads destruction as it travels: the black muck it transports is industrial effluent from some 700 textile processing units in the vicinity. And it spells disaster for the residents of riverine villages in Rajasthan's Pali district. It presents the classic case of industrial success being accompanied by a serious problem of pollution.

Consider the twin villages of Jaitpur, about 20 km downstream of Pali, on one bank of the Bandi, and Gadwada on the opposite bank. The only irrigated fields in these villages are the ones along the Bandi. Wells were sunk to lift water for the crops, mainly wheat and a form of mustard, but residents weren't ever warned about the effluent. When, over time, the well water turned into a coloured liquid—the effect of dyes in the effluent discharged into the river—the farmers stopped drinking it but continued to irrigate their fields with it. Sure enough, in the course of a few seasons those crops either failed or their yields dropped, in some cases to half of what they used to be.

One farmer who suffered is Jaitpur's Lakshman Ram. He stares dismayed at his barren fields and says: "I don't know when this land will grow anything of worth again." Adds Gangadan, the tall, young sarpanch of the Gadwada panchayat that includes Jaitpur: "Many people along the Bandi grew fruits and vegetables on the river bed but that time is past now. Not even grass grows any longer. Pollution has reached us in the last three to four years. Several wells in these two villages have been more or less deserted."

Map by B.K. SHARMA

The Bandi river spreads destruction as it travels; the black muck it transports spells disaster for the riverine villages of Rajasthan's Pali district.

Jaitpur and Gadwada are typical of the larger problem. District Collector P.K. Deb reels off troubling statistics: "About 20 villages along the Bandi have been affected. While water in 104 wells shows traces of pollution, in another 116, it is not fit for even irrigation, let alone drinking. Some effects of pollution can be seen as far as 50 km from Pali town and an estimated 5,300 hectares of cultivable land on the Bandi's banks have either turned barren or now produce reduced yields."

Deb has tried hard to cope with the problem, but he faces an uphill task. It is estimated that when the textile processing units run at full capacity, the daily discharge of effluents into the Bandi river is in the region of 12 million litres—the payload of 1,200 tankers. Dissolved solids are a parameter for measuring the absorbed waste in water and suspended solids for unabsorbed waste. Two kinds of organisms in the water, aerobes and protozoa, require dissolved oxygen in the water to attack the waste and make it harmless. If the waste is too large in quantity, the oxygen becomes inadequate and the protozoa and aerobes begin to die off. And so does life in the river.

Not surprisingly, then, Deb says the area's livestock population appears to be affected by skin, gastric and waterborne diseases. He adds that there have been reports of the death of 150 head of cattle but these have been impossible to confirm. Villagers believe that their health too has suffered, but nobody has done any systematic study and this also cannot be confirmed. Alarming information comes from the state's Ground Water Department which has found that since 1978, ground water pollution has increased by 15 km down the river. Ground water also flows in the same direction as river water. Explains an official: "Ground water and aquifer pollution is slow in coming but once it does, it is exceedingly hard to get rid of." Because the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LAKSHMAN RAM farmer
Jaitpur village,
Pali district

"I don't know when this land will grow anything of worth again."

GANGADAN
sarpanch, Gadwada
panchayat Jaitpur

"Not even grass grows any longer. Pollution has reached us in the last four years."

Bandi is dry most of the year, the effluent is never diluted. The result: ground water pollution along the Bandi threatens to move into river Luni which the Bandi joins about 40 km from Pali.

Before the Water (Prevention and Control of Pollution) Act came into force in 1974, scant attention was paid to pollution. The Rajasthan State Industrial Development and Investment Corporation (RIICO) developed two industrial areas in Pali in the early '70s. From the first dyeing unit in 1962, the number has swelled to about 700 units today with a 20,000 work-force and a turnover of over Rs 100 crore—and business is still growing. While there is only one large textile manufacturing plant, most of the factories are processing units which undertake one or more of the processes from mercerising to bleaching, dyeing, printing, stentering and calendering. The entire economy of this prosperous town (population: 110,000) rests on this industry.

Unfortunately, most of these units were set up with no provision for effluent treatment. Indeed, many of the units were erected haphazardly in the centre of the town. When the legislation was finally passed, an area called the Mandiya Industrial Estate was developed so that units within the town could be shifted there. But that didn't happen as planned. While some entrepreneurs did move out, others started new units but continued to operate their old units too. Today, there are no fewer than 295 units within the municipal area.

These units add to the degree of alkalinity in the effluent. The high alkalinity comes essentially from a process called mercerising—used to heighten the lustre and strength of the cloth—in which the cloth is dipped under tension in a concentrated solution of alkali.

As early as 1976, RIICO decided to have an effluent treatment plant at Mandiya with a capacity of 4.50 million litres of effluent per day—and it expected textile unit owners in Mandiya to pay the cost of setting it up. By the time the plant became operational in 1983, the entrepreneurs ended up paying six times more than what had been asked for earlier. Even so, the Rs 50-lakh plant was to prove a disaster. It costs about Rs 1 crore a year to run and runs at 25 per cent capacity because entrepreneurs refuse to pay its running cost. The running costs are higher than anticipated because, ironically enough, the Bombay textile strike led entrepreneurs to set up a large number of mercerising units. And mercerisation increases the alkalinity of the effluent requiring large quantities—14 tonnes per day—of sulphuric acid to neutralise it. Complains a RIICO official in Jaipur: "There were few mercerising units at the outset but now there are about 100 of them. How could we have anticipated that?"

"The truth is that RIICO officials never bothered to take samples of effluent or even talk to us before setting up the plant."

M.L. THANVI
president, Rajasthan Textile Hand Processors Association

"That explanation is nonsense," snaps M.L. Thanvi, president of the Pali-based Rajasthan Textile Hand Processors Association. "The truth is that RIICO officials never bothered to take samples of effluent or even talk to us before setting up the plant. If they had bothered so much as to read our project reports submitted to them, they would have found that most entrepreneurs planned to go in for mercerising sooner or later."

However, even presuming that it had functioned successfully, the plant would have reduced, not solved the problem of pollution. It caters only to the 300-odd units in Mandiya.

Belatedly, the authorities are beginning to take notice. RIICO is no longer allotting plots to textile units. And the Rajasthan State Board for Prevention and Control of Water Pollution has filed cases against 66 textile units for discharging untreated effluents. While this action has undoubtedly put entrepreneurs under pressure to fall in line, the board has made limited attempts to actually help solve the problem.

The units are so small that the ultimate solution can come only from combined treatment for all factories on a cooperative basis. Deb feels that the first step would be to shift all mercerising units to a single area so that their waste water can be collected at one point. A caustic deposit plant would not only get rid of the alkalinity but the caustic that recovered would to some extent cover the cost of running the plant. Meanwhile, the price to pay for fouling ground water keeps rising relentlessly.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR in Pali

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hawkins Introduces

The Anti-Pressure Cooker

Preparation Pressure

Pressure cookers reduce cooking time but not the preparation for cooking. Washing, sorting and cleaning, peeling and trimming, cutting and chopping, weighing and measuring, preparing masalas and frying before cooking, all take their own time. Preparation time on average is almost five times more (see table).

It is preparation before cooking that puts pressure on you, at a time when you are busiest — in the evening when your husband is home from work and the children from school.

Item	Preparation time in minutes	Pressure cooking time in minutes	Preparation time compared with cooking time
Peas n' Potato Curry	68	7	9.7 times
Mutton Curry	90	15	6.0 times
Chola Dal	33	7	4.7 times
Channa Dal Pulav	35	7	5.0 times
Rice n' Milk Kheer	20	14	1.4 times
Average	49	10	4.9 times

How to Remove Pressure

Hawkins, the pressure cooker people, now offer a wonderful new product to remove the pressure of cooking preparation. This anti-pressure cooker is the Simmermatic.

The Simmermatic is an electric cooker that slowly simmers your food at a level you choose and set on the automatic control. For example, Peas n' Potato Curry can be cooked in any number of hours from 3 to 10 hours; Mutton Curry in 3 to 8 hours; and Chola Dal in 3 to 7 hours.

You need not worry about costs as one hour's cooking costs 6 paise in electricity consumption.

Max. recommended retail price excluding taxes. ®Trade Mark. Patent Pending. © Copyright by Pressure Cookers & Appliances Ltd.

Prepare at Leisure

Suppose you are free at 2 pm and want to serve dinner at 8 pm, choose a dish (out of 107 in the Simmermatic cookbook) that can be cooked in 5 hours. Spend a leisurely one hour preparing your dish. Load it in the Simmermatic at 3 pm, setting the automatic control at the position which will have the dish ready by 8 pm. Almost all dishes need no stirring. The Simmermatic cooks perfectly safely unattended.

When your family comes home in the evening you can spend time with them. Shifting of your dinner time by an hour or so should make no difference as the Simmermatic has a 'Keep Warm' setting also.

Serve with Pleasure

Cooking in the Simmermatic produces excellent, tasty food, like the traditional taste of dishes prepared by grandmothers over slow fires! And you are sure of the best hygiene and nutrition as your food is not re-heated nor kept after preparation without immediate cooking.

Cook two dishes at a time in the Simmermatic by using Hawkins separators.

Good Value for Rs.999*

For addresses of dealers in towns other than those listed below, write to: Hawkins Dept. 143, P.O. Box No. 6481, Bombay 400 016.

SIMMERMATIC™

It takes the pressure off you.

AMRITSAR: Puri Battery Store, Partap Bazar. BANGALORE: Pots and Pans, 11 Brigade Road. BOMBAY: Akbarallys, Fountain. Bharat Stores, 33 Bhavani Shankar Road, Dadar. CHANDIGARH: Union Agencies, Sector 17E. DELHI: Vandana, P.P.M. Market, Meston Road. JALANDHAR: Romesh Chander Mitter Paul, Bazar Sheikhan. KANPUR: M.K. Traders, 58/45 Birhana Road • MADRAS: Galada Agencies, Pondy Bazar. VIJAYAWADA: Sonovision Electricals.

everest/84/PCA/625-143

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WORLD BILLIARD'S CHAMPIONSHIP

The Big Break

IN AN age when youth, speed and aggressiveness, even violence, are the singular symbols of sport, it is the ultimate anachronism, as if a time warp has transported the gathering back into the genteel, effete world of the Victorian era. The players are attired in starched white shirts, bow ties and waistcoats and their average age bears perilous proximity to 50. Instead of the grunts and epithets and crowd-screaming that provides the background music for modern sport, there is a sepulchral silence, interrupted politely by the click of crystallate balls or the soft scrape of chalk against a leather tip. Even the playing surface is muted with dark green baize and the players softshoe around the table as if they were in the Vatican. No other game provides a monotony so hypnotic, the same sequence of gentle shots played over and over again as the score inches up in agonising slowness. For the uninitiated, billiards is about as exciting as watching grass grow.

But is there also a muffled message in the fact that it is the only game in which India has figured prominently and consistently at the top in recent years? Last fortnight, the country produced its third world amateur billiards champion in the form of the dashing and debonair Geet Sethi, the 24-year-old prodigy who, playing in his first world championship, beat the legendary Australian Bob Marshall, 50 years his senior, to win the 25th World Amateur Billiards Championship held in the chandeliered convention hall of a Delhi five star hotel. Sethi becomes not only the youngest player to win the title but the only unseeded player to ever do so and also the only one to win the world title on his debut.

But more than Sethi's sensational win was the fact that there were three Indians among the four semi-finalists, reaffirming the dubious stranglehold that India currently exercises on the sport. The other two were Michael Ferreira, three time's world champion and defender of the title, and Subhas Aggarwal, the Kapil Dev of Indian billiards. Sethi disdainfully demolished Ferreira and Aggarwal en route to the final, heralding the arrival of yet another Indian on the international billiards scene and one who, in comparison to the rest, is virtually still a baby.

Sethi with the trophy: triumphant debut

But the tragic reality is that it is a dominance which is deceptive. Billiards is one of international sport's endangered species. In fact, the word 'international' is a misnomer. Like cricket, it is only by a handful of Commonwealth c like Britain, Australia, New Z Malta, Sri Lanka, Pakistan an And, apart from India, billiards ha a back pew to the more visually a and faster game of snooker player same surface but with a variety oured balls instead of the pair of w one red ball employed in billia because of the similarity in the two and the fact that snooker offers more lucrative pickings in prize and is extensively televised, most class billiard players have switch giance to professional snooker. One example is Om Aggarwal, the champion who won the World A Snooker title in 1984 and promptly pro. The new champ, Geet Sethi, tially a snooker player, had already fied, and got his professional licence the International Snooker Federatio asked them to delay his nomina after the World Snooker Champi next November. Says R.K. Viss patriarch of Indian billiards' snooker comes to India then could face the problems it has in countries."

Even the fact that Delhi has host to the World Billiards Champ twice in the last four years is because there are very few countr international billiard organisation ing to host the meet because of the spectator-response and the inor time and expense required to championship—last fortnight's Delhi stretched to 13 d was subsidised finan the Government, th where the tourn staged and the play commodated, and on Tata Companies (Gee happens to be emplo Tata Oil Mills). The es cost of the champions around Rs 10 lakh nately for the org spectator response w whelming, inspiring ions of a revival of th But as Ferriera says the reason is that we many world cham titles won by the starting with Wilson

The other reaso most clubs and a n schools and colleges still boast of billiard Subhas Aggarwal, th

Sethi in play: supernatural cool

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the East, learnt the game at his local club in Bombay where he came under the patronage of India's first world champion, Wilson Jones who had himself taught the game in a billiards parlour during his house in Pune. Michael Ferreira started playing at his school, St Paul's in Darjeeling. Geet Sethi started displaying his phenomenal talents at the Gujarat Sports Club in Ahmedabad. Of late however, the trends have been moving the other way. In British pubs and American saloons, billiard tables have been replaced by the smaller, American-style pool tables. "Snooker has definitely put billiards out of the running," says nonagenarian Bob Marshall who won one of four World Billiard Championships a quarter century before Geet Sethi was even born. Without taking away from the obvious talents of Ferriera and Aggarwal, that is perhaps also the reason why India continues to be the last bastion of billiards.

The result, as was evidenced last fortnight, is that it is probably the only modern sport with the possible exception of chess where three generations of players can be seen in the same competition. Indeed, apart from the three Indians and Marshall, who emerged from a 22-year hibernation for this particular championship, the rest of the field was sparse and only refitting a world championship with the top players having joined the professional ranks. Sethi, the new Boris Becker of billiards, plans to make a bid for a rare double—the world amateur snooker title in Blackpool this November, after which he too will join the ranks of the professionals, though he told INDIA TODAY that he was keeping his options open.

But however hollow the victory, Sethi is the stuff of superstars. Modest and unassuming, he turns into a nerveless killer when he stalks the table. In each of his matches against Ferreira, Aggarwal and Marshall, he trailed by large margins but kept his supernatural cool to eventually and systematically destroy his opponents. Said Marshall after the final: "Geet has exceptional talent. To win at 24 is unique. I did not even play in my first world championship till I was 26." Adds Vissanji, now in his 70s, who has watched every championship played except for one: "It was a triumph of temperament. Playing in your first world championship has pressures of its own." Sethi undoubtedly has all the attributes of a great champion, style, temperament, ambition, self-control and an astonishing range of strokes. He has also learnt his billiards at the feet, or rather the hands, of the masters. In Ahmedabad, he was under the wing of Satish Mohan, the losing finalist in the 1973 world championship. Sethi later received vital tips from Jones and later, Ferreira who has no regrets about being beaten by an unseeded upstart. "The best man won," he shrugged.

Sethi has also been encouraged by his parents, though not at the cost of his education. He is an MBA from the Indian Institute of Management in Ahmedabad and shifted to Bombay for a year when he joined Tata Oil Mills. He then returned to Ahmedabad though his parents have moved to Lucknow where the elder Sethi has a bakery business. Sethi first hit the news spots when he won the junior national title in 1981 and then went on to win both the junior and senior titles before hitting a slump when he joined the Asian circuit. By last year, he had obviously come to terms with his game and formed a unique partnership with Om Aggarwal, Sanjay Sawant and Prem Farid who pooled their money to play on the English snooker circuit and shared whatever prize money they won. The experience obviously was invaluable for Sethi. He won the Pontis Amateur Title, which earned him the right to turn professional, then came back to win the national snooker title. Says Om Aggarwal: "I am happy that Geet has joined the world champions club. Nobody could have deserved it more."

As a professional, the sky is the limit as far as financial earnings are concerned. Having become a top-ranked player, Sethi can command an appearance fee for every tournament he plays in. Accordingly, even if Sethi does not win a single tournament, he can still earn around £10,000 (Rs 1,70,000) a year in appearance money alone. If he does, however, win a major snooker tournament the prize money can be in the region of £15,000 (Rs 2,50,000). Either way, Sethi has a luminous future ahead of him and regardless of the sport, India has an exciting new world champion in a period when world titles are getting fewer and further between.

—DILIP BOBB with P.V.J.KAR

Photo by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Marshall: stretched to the limit

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

avanti
handlooms

Chanderi's weightlessness is the stuff of dreams

VISIT
avanti handlooms

1. : 8, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19, Ashok Road, NEW DELHI
2. : M.I. Road, JAIPUR,
3. : 314, Lamington Road, BOMBAY,
4. : 507, M.G. Road, opp. Kothari Market, INDORE,
5. : 26-27, Kshirsagar Shopping Complex, UJJAIN,
6. : 1-2, Guru Tegbahadur Complex, New Market, BHOPAL

MADHYA PRADESH STATE
TEXTILE CORPORATION LIMITED
(A Govt. of Madhya Pradesh undertaking)
"GANGOTRI COMPLEX", T.T. NAGAR, BHOPAL
Post Box No. 344, PHONES : 64926, TELEGRAM : TEXCORP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mounting Myths

FOR A people who produced the Kamasutra and Khajuraho, the average Indian still remains surprisingly ignorant in matters sexual. That, at any rate, is the opinion of Bombay sexologist Dr Prakash Kothari, who believes that Indians conform to a condition which the raffish Khushwant Singh once described as "sex on the mind, fear in the heart". Not much is known about the results of Khushwant's research into the subject, but Kothari, a medical doctor with a doctorate in sexology, is a specialist who will be presiding over the 7th world congress of sexology in New Delhi in November. He has spent several years investigating myths about sexual relations and practices. After lengthy interviews with 1,000 men and 1,000 women aged 15 to 80, Kothari came up with a list of myths among Indians that would be comic if it did not denote a serious problem.

Kothari's findings include such popular misconceptions as: sexual intercourse with the female on top prevents pregnancy; sex education in schools and colleges may lead to an increase in unwanted pregnancies; a man with a large penis is sexually more gratifying than a man who is poorly endowed; masturbation is harmful and excessive indulgence leads to sexual inadequacy and that intercourse with a virgin cures venereal disease.

Of all aspects of sex, masturbation seems to be the most misunderstood. Each and every person interviewed—male and female—believed that masturbation is harmful. Medical graduates and para medics, who constituted 20 percent of those interviewed and should have known better, proved as ignorant as the rest. They shared such misconceptions as:

- one drop of semen is equivalent to 40 drops of blood and replenishment requires a lot of nourishing food;
- wet dreams (nocturnal emissions) indicate a sexual disorder;
- deficiency of sperm affects a man's sexual potency.

These fallacies, Kothari discovered, exist more in the male than in the female mind, but the surprising revelation of the survey is that even college-educated men and between 60 to 80 percent of males in the medical profession believe in them. Only one medical college in the whole country—the GS medical college in Bombay—has a department of sexual medicine and the remaining medical students are just not taught about the psycho-physiology and psycho-pathology of sex and sexual dysfunction. The resulting ignorance, Kothari feels, is the the product of an environment in which people imagine they know everything about sex once they have learned about the reproductive organs. "This is akin to saying that as soon as one is able to read musical notations, one is ready to sit down and play the piano. Most sex education is from the street where misinformation is abundant, and fantasies get confused with facts".

Dr Kothari: exposing ignorance

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

To distinguish fact from fantasy, Kothari says he took special care to phrase his questions as colloquially as possible. He did this after discovering that a bland question like: 'Are you reaching orgasm?' would get a straight 'yes' or 'no' answer without the person understanding the meaning of the word orgasm. Kothari says he found that this question had to be phrased differently for different women. A Gujarati woman would understand only when asked "tamne sukh male che?" (are you getting happiness?). What is 'sukh' for the Gujarati woman becomes 'samadhan' for the Maharashtrian, 'santosh' (contentment) for the North Indian, 'shanti' for the Sindhi and 'trupti' or 'santrupti' for the Tamil or Telugu woman.

This woefully inadequate knowledge also affects the success of the family planning programme in India. Sterilisation and vasectomy operations, Kothari says, are not successful mainly because of the fear of post-operative sexual inadequacy. For instance, it is widely believed that the quantity of semen gets reduced after vastectomy.

Regarding the popular myths, Kothari says masturbation is beneficial and should be considered normal activity. "It protects society against men with a powerful sexual passion. If suppressed, the number of cases of sexual crimes may increase enormously. In my opinion nervous effects of masturbation only occur if a person stops masturbating." Similarly, he says the popular connection between virginity and chastity needs to be broken. "There are virgins who are not chaste and chaste individuals who are not virgins. A woman need not bleed the first time. I have seen plenty of marriages on the rocks due to this misconception".

Nor does menopause mean an end to an active sexual life as is widely believed. Says he: "The view that sex after sixty is not possible needs to be changed". Kothari also cautions against advertisements of sex tonics and aphrodisiacs by quacks, saying there are no genuine products. The so-called effects are mainly psychological. In other words, misconceptions can lead to, well, miss conceptions. —RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THAKAZHI SIVASANKARA PILLAI

Crowning Achievement

HIS REALM is the shrunken and scarred underbelly of society, where the underprivileged and life's losers huddle together for false comfort—the landless serf, the weary worker and the impoverished fisherman. They are his subjects and his reign over them has been supreme and unquestioned. But only now, in the twilight of his enormously productive years, has Thakazhi Sivasankara Pillai, 73, the grand old man of Malayalam literature been finally crowned king. Last fortnight, Pillai received the most coveted literary laurel in the land, the Jnanpith Award for 1984.

It is a measure of the boundless and legendary humility of the man that the announcement of the award surprised no one but himself. "It is a matter of great satisfaction for me to win the greatest literary award in the country. I hope the Jnanpith will make me more humble than ever before," he said almost apologetically. And yet it is this characteristic humility and compassion that has earned him the reputation of one of the most sensitive and perceptive writers in the Indian language. Thakazhi's entire literary journey has been as a chronicler of the social struggles and sorrows of the lower classes in his native Kerala. But there is a stark and stunning universality in his protagonists, be they peasants or poachers. From his most famous Chemmeen (The Shrimp) to the most recent Kayar (Coir), each of his 35 novels and 500 short stories bears testimony to this. Acknowledges Dr K.M. George, chairman of the Jnanpith advisory committee for Malayalam: "Thakazhi's fertile imagination is adept in weaving stories of the underdog who has been insulted, humiliated and abandoned and through his intimate grasp of social realities he makes a passionate plea for social change."

Born in 1912 into a feudal landowning Nair family in Thakazhi, a village in Kerala's rice-bowl Kuttanad, the writer acquired his insight and sensitivity from his circumstances and surroundings in his impressionable years. It was in this village that the leftist movement in the state gained ground in the early '50s when the communists began organising underpaid and landless labourers.

Thakazhi with wife Katha after winning the Jnanpith award: still humble Says well-known novelist and former bureaucrat Malayatoor Ramakrishnan, who looks on Thakazhi as his mentor: "He has always been a spokesman of the working class and his novels bring out the class struggle prevailing at that time." As a lawyer at the Ambalapuzha mofussil court, Thakazhi found himself in regular contact with the people he was to later write about with such eloquent passion: poor fishermen, bonded labourers and rich landlords. He was moved by the plight of the downtrodden and the injustice that abounded. His genuine indignation and sympathy found expression in his writings and was to dictate his themes for a long time to come—the pathos in his stories and his fervent message of

But it was also a message of interpretations—change in change in the system and most im change in literary expression. Thakazhi is credited with havi Malayalam literature from its s traditional mould by adopting, alo his contemporaries, Neo-realis other trends. Though his initial showed the pronounced influ Maupassant and Che gradually developed distinctive style and

His literary style however, go down we some critics. Noted yalam critic Professor nan Nair still mainta language is not Tha strong point. "I would consider him the g Malayalam writer be Pottekat and Kuttyp have command over the guage while Thakazh guage is rustic," he say also admits that his sto the social conscience.

Literary criticism his is a simple, lucid sty the common man whom he writes can identify with it. His u plicated technique he the genre of the Mala novel a new dimension of this was the sens success of his very first Puthumalar (New Flow collection of short published in 1934. Th followed by equally successful nov Prathipalam (Reward), Thottiyude (The Scavenger's Son), Patitha (Fallen Lotus) and Randidangha Measures of Paddy).

It was Randidanghazi that esta him as a major novelist. The no plores the root of the relationship b the exploiter and the exploited, th owners and the bonded labourers, gh the interweave of his character nies, Thakazhi laid bare the cri shame of this age-old relationship calls it his favourite novel. Anoth tivating novel from his pen is Ear (Rungs of the Ladder) which h background the state secretariat erstwhile state of Travancore. Set 50, the novel deals with politic tunists who kick the very ladder to climb to positions of power.

However, it was Chemmeen,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the fishing community of Kerala, ought him the Sahitya Akademi in 1956 and world-wide fame. Not it was translated into more than guages all over the world and the film made on it by noted Ramu Kariyat went on to win the t's gold medal and major awards as well. The novel was a moving entation of the trials and tribula- of fishermen trapped in the net of ances. Though the is the love-lorn life of a fisherwoman, the per- e expands to take in le social context.

others rate Kayar as e resistance. It is the of a community unfold- through six generations centuries with over a nd characters living their chequered lives on pages. Dr V.K. Nara- Menon, Thakazhi's En- translator, writes in the to this book: "I have come across an Indian of Kayar's dimension; breadth of vision and its profound insight into the life people who rise with dig- even after being caught the wheels of time and ge." In fact, it was Kayar decided the Jnanpith in selecting him for the and his second this year. ntry, he was awarded Padma Bhushan.

Thakazhi writes without notes and takes his own time writing. In fact, his magnum opus Kayar took 20 years to complete before it was finally published in 1980. Says Thakazhi: "I have a specific idea of the life I want to depict. But I myself do not know what would be the end of the novel." He says he is committed to the common man and it is his problems that he wants to portray.

The novelist with admirers

"Being a farmer myself, I know the difficulties of the peasants," he says. His lifestyle too reflects this identification with his ordinary, everyday characters. He admits that he was influenced by Karl Marx in his initial years, but gradually the Marxism gave way to Gandhism. He says he has outgrown ideological commitments, but still thinks in terms of Gandhian philosophy.

At the same time, the realism in his writings has become increasingly tempered with romanticism. Confesses Thakazhi: "The Kuttanad that I used to know has changed and the working class has become more affluent." Which is why, perhaps, he has now focused on the middle class. He is now working on a novel set in this milieu and it promises to be different from all his earlier works.

In keeping with his simplicity, he attributes his success to his wife, Kamalakshi, whom he fondly calls Katha. It was she who inspired him to write and who looked after him as he laboured at his desk. As Katha herself says: "His dedication to his work has got him the award." At 73, Thakazhi has no more ambitions but to continue knitting his tapestries of life and death and injustice, enriched and made unique in the hands of a master weaver.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

EXTRACT

"Do you know why the sea goes dark sometimes ? That is when the anger of the goddess of the sea is roused. Then she would destroy everything. At other times she would give her children everything. There is gold in the sea, child, gold," Chakki said.

"Purity is the great thing. Purity. The strength and the wealth of the fisherman lie in the purity of his wife."

"Some Kochumuthalais with neither character nor decency defile the seafront. Low-caste women come from inland to help at the curing yard and sift the fish. They do not understand the purity of the seafront. They are not the daughters of the sea goddess. But it is the fisherfolk who pay for their deeds."

...Then with the utmost seriousness Chakki gave her daughter forewarning. "You are no longer a girl, but in the full bloom of your youth. Kochumuthalalis and young reckless fishermen with neither morals nor character will stare at your bare breasts and eye with lecherous eyes."

Karuthamma shuddered. That was exactly what happened in the shadow of the boat. Karuthamma's aversion for what happened was perhaps something she had inherited. If anyone stared at her bare breasts, it was not befitting the honour of the daughters of the sea goddess.

"My child, you must not be the cause of the ruin of the seafront."

—from Chemmeen (1962)

This wide-open sea contains ev- thing, my child. Everything. Why do think all the men who go out there come back safely ? It is because of the women at home who live clean lives. Otherwise the currents in the sea will overpower them up. The lives of the men are in the hands of the women on shore," Chakki continued.

It was not the first time that Karuthamma had heard those senti- ments. Wherever four fisherwomen gathered, one heard the very words. But was it wrong to have laughed at Pareekutti ? She had not yet been married with the life of a fisherman. When she had such a life to guard, she should guard it with the greatest care. She knew how it had to be done. No one need teach a fisherwoman that.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

USHA MARTIN

No.1 in wire ropes.

And that's just part of the story.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The story began in 1960 when Usha Martin entered into a collaboration with Martin Black of U.K. This marked a major step for the manufacture of steel wires and wire ropes in the country.

Since then, Usha Martin has come a long way. It has grown into a large diversified engineering conglomerate with an annual turnover exceeding Rs. 5,800 lacs.

Today, in addition to steel wires and wire ropes, Usha Martin also manufactures a wide range of wire rods and wire drawing and allied machines incorporating the latest technologies from world leaders.

Wires and Wire Ropes Division, Ranchi

Established in 1962, the Division manufactures the widest range of steel wires and wire ropes in the country. The fact that its products are well established in over 30 countries — speaks for itself.

Few facilities have such wide ranging capabilities under one roof in the world today.

Special Products Division, Ranchi

This Division manufactures PRE-STRETCHED WIRE ROPES in collaboration with Bruntons (Musselburgh) p.l.c. of U.K. to meet the country's defence requirements.

Stemming from the special demand of the Second Hooghly Bridge at Calcutta, manufacturing facilities for PARALLEL WIRE STAY CABLES were established for the first time in India in collaboration with BBR Ltd. and Stahlton AG of Switzerland and Simonbuild Ltd. of U.K.

Machinery Division, Bangalore

This Division commenced manufacture of wire drawing and allied machines in collaboration with Marshall Richards Barcro, U.K. in 1975. It supplied a major portion of the plant required for the Company's joint ventures in Yugoslavia and Thailand.

Recent collaborations with De Angelli of Italy and Hi Draw Engineering Ltd. of U.K. will enable this Divison to manufacture equipment incorporating state-of-the-art technology.

Wire Rod Mill, Jamshedpur

Set up in 1979 with an annual installed capacity of 50,000 metric tonnes, this was the country's first rolling mill with controlled cooling facilities and an entirely automatic process for handling billets, cooling and coiling. Subsequently, it entered into collaboration with Ovako Ay Ab of Finland. Its wide range includes wire rods of cold heading quality steel and stainless steel wire rods.

COMPANIES PROMOTED BY USHA MARTIN

- Usha Alloys & Steels Ltd.
- Usha Breco Ltd.
  — in collaboration with British Ropeway Co. Ltd., U.K.
- Usha Ismal Ltd.
  — in collaboration with CCL Systems Ltd., U.K.

JOINT VENTURES ABROAD

- Unis Usha Steel Ropes Factory, Yugoslavia
- Usha Siam Steel Industries Ltd., Thailand

100% Export Oriented Unit, Ranchi

To cater to the country's offshore operations and increasing overseas demand, this unit is being set up to manufacture 3000 metric tonnes per annum of CABLE LAID SLINGS, CUSTOM-BUILT LARGE DIAMETER WIRE ROPES and STRANDS. It is scheduled to commence operations by the end of the current year.

Technical excellence has undoubtedly played a major role in Usha Martin's success. Yet, this would not have been possible without the dedicated efforts of a team of professionals and skilled workers operating in a cordial environment with uninterrupted operations sustained through captive power.

The quest for growth continues. To meet the challenges of the coming decade, Usha Martin is currently implementing a major scheme of modernisation at an estimated cost of Rs. 1,200 lacs. The future, thus, holds promise of further growth and prosperity.

USHA MARTIN INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Regd. Office: 14, Princep Street Calcutta 700 072

It pays to go with the leader.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by

CALCUTTA

Wiping Out History

The General Post Office (above) (right from top) the high court, C Collectorate and Metcalfe Hi slated for demolition

CALCUTTA: the name is not calculated to bring on visions of urban grandeur and beauty. And indeed, from its unplanned beginnings to its far from orderly present, the city has always showed a chaotic juxtaposition of the rural and the grandly urban, prompting the English visitor Lord Valencia to remark, circa 1800, that "Calcutta is a village of palaces." The village has endured, but the palatial buildings of the city's heyday as the political and commercial capital of British India seem destined to vanish. A number of the architectural landmarks that survived decay in the city's heart, Dalhousie Square (hence renamed Benoy-Badal-Dinesh Bag) are now proposed to be partially or completely demolished to make way for high-rise structures.

Last fortnight, the state Public Works Department Secretary S.M.Murshed disclosed that the state Government was even planning to pull down a portion of the Calcutta High Court, one of the oldest court buildings in Asia, to create office space for its burgeoning number of functionaries. Meanwhile the Public Works Department is going full steam with its plan to demolish all but the facade of Dalhousie Square's oldest office building, the Calcutta Collectorate, to house a 14-storey office complex. The Central Posts and Telegraphs Department has equally grandiose plans: the rear of the old Imperial General Post Office which dominates Dalhousie Square with its silver dome and majestic neo-classical columns is to be completely demolished for the usual multi-storeyed story.

With that, a unique skyline that could make a strong claim to beauty seems set to more closely approximate the reality on the ground. And these proposals, the city's conservationists suspect, may just be the precursors of many more growing in the secrecy of government fi first phase of Calcutta's developm place along the Laal Dighi—late Dalhousie Square—and by d this area, says the ex-curator of t toria Memorial and president of t ety for the Preservation of Archi terials and Monuments of C Nishith Ray, the city's architectur tessence would be lost. As it is, su state governments have not bot preserve even such historic build St John's Church, which dates b couple of decades of the city's foun Charnock's death.

Fuelling the conservationists the future of Dalhousie Square is that most of the property in belongs either to the state or Government. Both are desperate space in the heart of Calcutta's district. Most of the state Gove 600-odd secretariat employees stance, are housed in Writers' which on paper has 50 square feet for every employee. But much of this space is in the form of corridors, staircases and a meeting hall, so that many lower level employees wind up having to sit on benches in the corridors.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There is no refuting the pressing need for governmental and other office space. But what many concerned conservationists wish to demonstrate is that need is not necessarily antagonistic to conservation of the city's architectural masterpieces. R.M.Kapoor, director of the Times of India Research Foundation's Urban Studies Centre argues that a more rational use of the existing space in the area could mitigate the shortage. He has a strong point. At present the historic Metcalfe Hall and adjoining buildings on a three-acre site on Church Lane, which was once the old Imperial Library is being used as nothing more than a stationary dump.

"Nothing can justify the low-priority use of such magnificent old buildings in the heart of the city," says Kapoor. But the instances of just such inefficient use are legion. The former Government Press at Kiron Shankar Roy Road is being used to store government publications, while the old Currency Building has been walled up internally to create godown space and tiny office cubicles. Another case is that of the 10-acre property in the Posta Bazaar area, the Old Mint, currently being used as a silver refinery.

By shifting low priority users and erecting a few new buildings, feels Kapoor, the space shortage could be easily overcome. That proper redevelopment of the area is possible was shown recently by the Calcutta Port Trust's decision to demolish the unused jetties and warehouses on Strand Road. The free land will now be used for expanding the circular railway and building a new north-south expressway, while the surplus land will be used to put up a few office buildings.

The Central Government's bureaucrats seem to have seen the wisdom of this argument. The more daunting task seems to be to convince the state's Public Works Minister, Jatin Chakraborty, who is notorious for his antipathy towards anything that smacks of excessive cultural sensitivity. He first shot into prominence by banning pop singer Usha Uthup from performing in a government-controlled hall. He has also been replacing statues of the colonial era with those of revolutionaries. And if these statues commissioned by him are anything to go by, beauty is not guaranteed victory in the battle to preserve Calcutta's architectural heritage.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you think compute
we have one that's as ea
And just as indispensab

The Chi² is on your desk.
You switch on 'Power'.

You unwrap a diskette.
Looks like a 45 rpm record.

Instantly, the screen's covered with rows and columns.

You type in 'Years' and 'Sales', and punch in relevant figures.

The Chi², our new computer.

If you can dial a telephone number, you can use it.

And once you do, you realise just how indispensable it is.

Suddenly, the Chi² puts you completely in charge of your growth and your future: it's at your fingertips.

And as we've shown above, all you need to do with them is touch the keys a few times.

Chi²: It's benign but it's powerful

Though the Chi² makes computing look like child's play, it's got the guts to match bigger and costlier systems.

Because, besides other things, the Chi² is IBM PC 'compatible'. Which means, like the world's largest selling personal computer, it can run over 5,000 tried and trusted programs.

That means you can use it in 5,000 different ways.

Chi²: Ready to grow with you

And in case these readymade programs don't suit you, we'll help to devise some more specially for you.

Then there's something even more special:

The Chi² PC/XT.

A computer as simple, as advanced, but with a higher storage capacity to begin with.

And because IBM PC software grows with the times, the Chi² PC and PC/XT will be useful for years.

So all you need to do now is telephone call. To our office.

SPECIFICATIONS

Microprocessor: 16 Bit, Intel 8

Memory: 256 KByte RAM

Storage Capacity: 360 KByte on 5¼" floppy (Chi²PC)
360 KByte on 5¼" floppy, F
10 MByte hard disk (Chi²PC

Printer: 132 column dot-ma with near letter quality

Colour Graphics: Fully supp

Manufactured by Minicomp

CIL PC 7 2536

Marketed and Serviced by

CIL CHOWGULE INDUSTRIES LIMITED
The new force in office equipment

Bakhtawar, 4th floor, Nariman Point, B

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

complicated, use as a telephone.

Suddenly, the screen is alive By itself! "Today's date?"

You type in the date and name of program: 'SC'.

One more key and the printer has printed it out for you!

Congratulations! You've done hours of work... in minutes!

* Pronounced CHAI SQUARE

So simple because it's so advanced.

IBM is the Registered Trade Mark of International Business Machines Corporation

Allahabad Bank Bldg., 17 Parliament Street, New Delhi 110 001. Tel: 310325, 310426, 310227.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dhruva reactor block: indigenous e

DHRUVA

Nuclear Landmark

IT WAS just two days after the 40th anniversary of the dropping of the first atomic bomb on Hiroshima. On August 8, at 2.42 a.m. India's first completely indigenous nuclear reactor, the 100 MW Dhruva went critical. Exulted Raja Ramanna, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, on hearing the news in Delhi: "The scientists have achieved a major landmark in the country's atomic energy programme." Dhruva, he claimed, would be the largest research reactor in the world. Besides providing a better understanding of nuclear power plant operations, necessary in view of plans for 500 MW reactors in the country's energy future, Dhruva will also provide radioisotopes that will have uses in industry and bio-technology.

But that is not all that Dhruva implies. The reactor will be able to produce some 30 kg of weaponsgrade plutonium a year, assuming that it works at full capacity. This, by rough calculations would be good for up to 4 to 5 nuclear bombs—if India chose to use it all to make them. And since Dhruva is completely Indian-made it is not subject to regulation by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). In contrast, the fuel used for the Pokhran explosion in 1974 is believed to have come from the Cirus reactor built with Canadian help. As a result Canada broke all nuclear ties with India.

Officials are, however, tending to downplay this aspect of Dhurva. A senior scientist involved with the construction of the reactor said Dhruva would provide only about twice the amount of plutonium that Cirus produces, and added that all of it would be used for research purposes. And said K. Subrahmanyam of the Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis: "The talk about bombs is beside the point whether bombs are made or not is a political decision. The plutonium from Dhruva will be important, however, as starter fuel for the 500 MW fast breeder reactor envisaged for the future."

But the salient difference between Dhruva and the five other reactors at Trombay: Apsara, Cirus, Zerlina, Purnima I and Purnima II—all built with British or Canadian assistance—is that "it has been totally conceived, designed and built by our own engineers and has given us fresh confidence in our capabilities, " says Bhaba Atomic Research Centre (BARC) Director P.K. Iyengar. "Technical features have been modified by our experience with the nuclear power programme, as in the fuelling machines and in separating the moderator from the coolant for better safety. It has added features such as the ability to make fuels for the 500 MW reactors. "

Besides its priority role as a testing ground for the larger reactors of future, Dhruva is expected to increa the production of the isotopes Iod 131, Chromium-51 and Molybden 99, which are useful in medical diag sis and therapy. It will also help prod isotopes like Iodine-125 which are pr ently imported. For the pure scientis BARC the reactor will help in fund mental research with its neutron be which sustain the fission chain in reactor core.

Like all thermal nuclear reacto Dhruva is fuelled by natural urani which in turn will produce plutonium the fuel for the second-generation breeder reactors. But it will take tim do that. The first of the fast bree reactors is nearing commissioning Kalpakkam near Madras, and initi the spent fuel from the Rajast Atomic Power Station will be re cessed at the special plant at Tarap plutonium and used in Kalpakkam.

When it was code-named R-5 1975 the plan was to commiss Dhruva as the fifth reactor at Tromb But Purnima II , which uses Urani 233 as fuel was commissioned earlier is intended to match the long-ra programme in which thorium is to converted into Uranium 233 and use fast breeder reactors. In spite of Dhruva's delay has been useful as scientists have been insisting on ma mum safety in plant operations. separation of the moderator and coolant by design changes was one step to maximise safety.

Although the Rs 75 crore spen Dhruva is quite a large sum, Iye emphasised that it was still economic as buying one of a similar kind on t international market would cost mo than $ 200 million (Rs 243.2 crore)

Another important feature hi lighted by the building of the reactor w the capability of the engineering ind try. While many major compone were made in-house at the central wo shops of the BARC, the fuelling machi came from the Walchand Industries Larsen & Toubro and the heat exche ers from Bharat Heavy Electricals The commissioning of Dhruva is dawn of a new era of research that help determine whether the new MW reactors will perform better at turn of the century than the Tara Rajasthan and Madras atomic po stations of today.

—AMARNATH K. ME

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The New India range of assurance covers

1. Personal Accident
2. Hospitalisation & Medical Expenses
3. Domestic Package Policy
4. All Risks Insurance
5. Burglary & House Breaking
6. Fire Insurance
7. Combined Fire & Theft
8. Passenger Flight
9. Public Liability
10. Carrier's Liability
11. Bullock Cart
12. Pump Set
13. Pedal Cycle
14. Horse
15. Engineering Insurance
16. Professional Indemnity
17. Workmen's Compensation
18. Multi Perils
19. Fidelity Guarantee
20. Plate Glass
21. Business Interruption
22. Cash in Transit
23. Marine

and many more.

ate can push us over the edge . . . anyday, anytime. re you protected?

Nasty Luck has a habit of playing tricks on the unsuspecting. Thriving business is left in ruins when fires through it. The headlines in papers scream about plant and equipment damaged by rioting strikers. Dread, disbelievingly, that a well-established business has been brought to the brink of ruin by the fraudulent practices of its key executives.

You think these things always happen to others. Never to you. But it could. And when you least expect it. Leaving you completely shattered . . . physically and financially.

Wouldn't it be wiser to protect yourself against the unexpected? New India offers the widest range of covers against every contingency. And the premiums cost a tiny fraction of the total value of the security being offered.

A little foresight shown today can give you all the protection you need for the future. Don't delay. Call or write to your nearest New India office. We'll be glad to give you complete details.

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE
A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India.

So much security. For so little.

Contour Ads-NIA-1002/83

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Can you spot the woven sacks made from PIL's Hostalen® ? It's a raincoat for the farmer.

The farmer's lot is a hard one. A daily battle with the elements and pests. For, once he has wrested from the soil his daily bread, he has to protect it from spoilage.

For that he needs help. Help in the form of products that are inexpensive, durable and versatile in application.

PIL's Hostalen—there's the applications

Perhaps nothing has prov instrumental in bettering farmers' lot than products from Hostalen. They've fo applications which hadn't occurred to us!!

Woven sacks made from Hostalen were first introd hardy packaging material fertilizers. But farmers so endless uses for it. Durin monsoons, it's opened u as make-shift umbrellas

We're helping protect man and hel

CC-0. Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

e farmer.

n—there's n
ns
g has prov
n bettering an products
They've fo hich hadn't l made from first introd
g material farmers so or it. Durin opened u umbrellas

...place against pests...

...sheaths for the roofs of ...es. In winter, it's used as ...ing material. After harvest, ...to store grains safely from ...rodents....

...th film made from ...er During sowing time, ...lay it under the soil to ...oisture at root level. After ...it is used to construct ...oof grain silos.

...egions, irrigation canals ...th film made from Hostalen ...loss of water through ...(often as much as 40%).

While, around the country, pipes made from Hostalen have proved their superiority over conventional materials in irrigation and as sprinkler systems.

It all goes to show there's no end to the applications of a good product.

PIL—better ideas for a better life

As in agriculture, so also in other vital fields, we're improving the quality of life. Through superior products. And the know-how gained in 20 years of grappling with complex problems.

PIL POLYOLEFINS INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Mafatlal Centre, Nariman Point
Bombay 400 021

Hostalen® is the registered trademark of Hoechst AG, West Germany

PIL—Technology for a better life

CHAITRA-B-PIL-616(3)

helongings

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ The first birds chirped in their nests, the sun rose gently over the city of Madras and 18-year-old Ravi Kiran placed himself before the gottuvadyam—a large veena-like instrument—at the Padmanabhaswamy Temple in Adyar. The next day, as the city again yawned and stretched itself to life, Ravi was still there—playing on, possessed by some divine inspiration. During the magical 24 hours, as hundreds of people found themselves drawn to the temple, Ravi did not get up even once, eating and drinking nothing except three sips of milk. "I did not do this as a challenge or to create a record. It was done purely as a rendition to God and out of an inner call," said Ravi who already has a doctorate in music and will participate in the Festival of India in France in September. Ravi has always been a wonder kid: at two, he could identify all the 72 ragas in Carnatic music; at five, he gave his first public performance as a vocalist and at eight, he picked up the gottuvadyam, one of the few people alive who know how to play the ancient instrument.

Ravi playing the gottuvadyam: record-breaking devotion

Sushma: Benegal's new find

◆ It was a crowded cocktail party but he spotted her at once, in the corner, behind the clutch of Bombay's glamorous admen, nimbly holding on to her glass. "Wonderful," muttered Shyam Benegal and walked right up to Sushma Prakash. A few hors d'oeuvres later, Sushma had been signed on to play the central role in Benegal's latest film Trikal. Set in balmy Goa, it deals with pre-liberation attitudes and customs and Sushma plays Ana, the granddaughter of Leela Naidu. "I knew I could face the cameras," said the fresh, young heroine who's also done a bit-role in Govind Nihalani's Aaghat. Now, Sushma may feel great to have found a grandma like lovely Leela, but if she looks closely at her palm, she may find something even more exciting: the strong line of success that most of Benegal's discoveries have.

◆ Smita Patil and Raj Babbar—the husband of another woman—got married. Tut, tut. Smita Patil and Raj Babbar got married two years ago. Tut, Tut, tut. Well, as a wise man said: "Polygamy is having one spouse too many, monogamy is the same." Last month, Raj and Smita however decided to drop the pretence and bare all. "A lot of things are not easy to understand," said brave new bride Smita in a magazine interview, ripping the shroud off her five-year-long secret affair. "Besides, I'm not worried about society's hostile glance." While their marital status has changed, nothing else has—Raj and Smita continue to be full-time st part-time partners and m amazing of all, with magnanimous consent Raj's other wife Nadira. S he simply: "I fell in love w both of them and marr them." After all, a spouse the spice of life.

Raj and Smita: the reception after the wedding

◆ What does a rich, beau ful and famous American —not to mention 24 and gle—do when she goes holiday to the exotic ea Well, Kerry Kenned daughter of the late Bobb brother of the famous JFK, a rived in India last month an did something no foreigne has done in centuries. S rolled up her jeans, wave away the limousines an hopped on to a mule—a then she hardshipped it rig through the ancient Mugh route around Kashmir whe the remains of Jehangir buried. That done, curi Kerry craved for more. S got Rajeev Sethi and his A troupe to take her to the rem test of villages where she i isted on seeing it like it w warts and all. Said Sethi: was totally offbeat, noth tourists do."

—Compiled by SIMRAN BHARG

Kerry: fantastic voyage

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

j and Smita w e full-time st ctners and m all, with s consent vife Nadira. S fell in love w n and marr
all, a spouse
e.

es a rich, bea us American g
tion 24 and s en she goes
he exotic ea
ry Kenned
the late Bobb famous JFK, a last month a g no foreigne centuries. S r jeans, wave imousines a astic voyage

a mule—a shipped it rig ncient Mugh Kashmir whe of Jehangir done, curi for more. S hi and his A her to the re
where she g it like it w
Said Sethi
ffbeat, noth

MRAN BHARG

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13072
13071
13070
13069

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

पुस्तकालय
गुरुकुल कांगड़ी विश्वविद्यालय,
हरिद्वार
आगत संख्या INDIA TODAY SEPT 15
पुस्तक-वितरण की तिथि नीचे अंकित है। इस तिथि सहित २० वें दिन तक यह पुस्तकालय में वापिस आ जानी चाहिए। अन्यथा १० पैसे के हिसाब से विलम्ब दण्ड लगेगा।
9 Pm 10-4-9-85
32
3/9/85
9 pm to 9.9.85
77
5-9-85
9 pm to 11-9-85
153
10/9/85

13072
13071
13070
13069 ace am, coming close on ab accord, brought gh the trouble-torn ition is likely to pres-ems as foreigners are

.....42

kistan border has danger zone—with over for training and India for smuggling
ian intelligence has
of its slumber.

.....74

Bouquets and Brickbats

Finance Minister V.P. Singh is at the centre of several converging storms over the massive tax raids, the post-budget price rise, his inaccessibility and much else. Undeterred, he is stirring up new storms, and enjoying the prospect. An exclusive report on his style.

BUSINESS 94

The Celebrity Sell

Cricketers plugging motorcycles, editors sporting suitings, television news-readers on their breakfast tastes: celebrity advertising is making new waves in everything from cigarettes to ghee. A detailed report on the new eye-catching trends in marketing.

BUSINESS 108

VOICES.....14
INDIANOTES.....19
COVER STORY
Punjab: Return to Uncertainty 22
CURRENT EVENTS
Assam: Celebration for Peace 42
National Anthem:
Jana Gana Mana 46
Kerala: Point of no Return 51
Alleppey: Storm at Sea 52
Uttar Pradesh: Gift-Wrapped 57
Gujarat: Back to Work 58
Youth Congress(I):
Indecent Exposure 60
Bihar: Isolation Ward 61
Tamil Nadu:
The Waiting Game.....63
Rajasthan: Bigamy Blues.....71
SPECIAL FEATURE
Infiltrators: A Quiet Invasion.....74
SPECIAL REPORT
Rachpal Singh:
Diary of an Extremist 82
LIVING
Squatters: Battle of the Budge 84
TRADE WINDS.....93
BUSINESS
Finance Minister:
Bouquets and Brickbats 94
Hegde & Golay:
Running Out of Time 98
Businesspeak: M.S. Gujral 99
Marble Industry:
Polished Performance..... 100
Kerala: Costly Error 105
Stock Market: Scrip Scrap 106
Advertising: The Celebrity Sell 108
Seventh Plan:
Hope on the Horizon 112
The Economy Monitor 115
The Markets: Turning Tide 119
NEIGHBOURS
Sri Lanka: Tough Talk 120
LAW
Muslim Personal Law:
Controversial Verdict.....128
MEDICINE
Thalassaemia:
The Doomed Children 131
ARCHAEOLOGY
Andhra Pradesh: A Rich Find 137
HEALTH
Neurology: The Better Brain 143
LIFE-STYLE
Merchant Navy: A Sea of Sorrow 146
ENVIRONMENT
Citizen's Report:
Saving the Good Earth 150
EYE-CATCHERS.....156

Cover Photograph by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In Maharashtra's arid tracts; in Nepal's hilly regions; in Kerala's backwater islands... Hostalen® pipe Life without clean drinking water. For millions of people in isolated hamlets, it's been a grim, unchangeable reality. Till PIL stepped in with a solution. Light, flexible, corrosion-resistant Hostalen pipes.

Unconventional problems

In Buldhana, Maharashtra, drough set off a calamitous scarcity of potable water. Then, within a mat of a few days a network of Hostal pipes was laid to rush precious water to parched mouths.

For thousands of villagers in Nep every day was a tiring trek up the hill for a pail of drinking water. T Hostalen pipelines were laid from atop the hill down to the valley.

We're putting water on tap for thi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridw

Chennai and eGangotri

are helping slake the thirst of parched mouths.

In the backwater islands of Kerala, it was a case of water, water everywhere but not a drop to drink. Till a solution was engineered: a Hostalen pipeline laid on the undulating lagoon beds.

Special problems need Hostalen solutions

In these, and innumerable other cases, PIL solved problems that would have been insurmountable by conventional methods. Hostalen pipes enabled the projects to be executed in less time and at less cost than if conventional piping material had been used.

PIL—better ideas for a better life

As in water supply, so also in other vital fields, we're improving the quality of life. Through superior products. And the know-how gained in 20 years of grappling with complex problems.

POLYOLEFINS INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Mafatlal Centre, Nariman Point
Bombay 400 021

Hostalen® is the registered trademark of Hoechst AG, West Germany

PIL—Technology for a better life

sty millions

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Without a shade of doubt we could get your bathroom to reveal its true colours

Vibrant Cera sanitaryware in 30 fascinating colours to give you endless combinations for your bathroom

Cera... sanitaryware to colour your fancies

CERA
VITREOUS

Madhusudan Ceramics

'Ankur Building', Near Dinbai Tower, Mirzapur Road, Ahmedabad 380 001.

Shilpi-2 MC-1/84

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME X NUMBER 17
FOR THE FORTNIGHT SEPTEMBER 1–15, 1985

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT NEW DELHI RAMINDAR SINGH
SUNIL SETHI
SUMIT MITRA
SHEKHAR GUPTA
RAJU SANTHANAM
PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE RAJ CHENGAPPA
BOMBAY JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
WASHINGTON INDERJIT BADHWAR
LONDON BONNY MUKHERJEE

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

DESIGN CONSULTANT AUROBIND PATEL

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK ANUPAMA GOPAL
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN
SURESH UNNY

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA
ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE ANITA BAVEJA

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS:INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE. MIDDLE CIRCLE. NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A & B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER R. NARIMAN POINT. BOMBAY-400021. PHONE:2026152. 2029326. 2029415. TELEX 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY ● 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS. NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841. 312070. 121776. TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● FAGUN CHAMBERS. 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD. MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 87188. 87748. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS ● 74/1 ST. MARKS ROAD. BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448. 579037. 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46 C CHOWRINGHEE ROAD. CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398. 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. CALCUTTA ● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

LIKE most things that have been around for a while, magazines have personalities, identities that readers come to recognise, to feel comfortable with and, ultimately, empathise with. INDIA TODAY, which has been in existence almost ten years, has evolved its own personality over the years. The key word is 'evolved', for readers will agree that in this decade there have been ongoing changes even though the basic identity of the journal—as a newsmagazine—has remained constant. Such evolution is as important to a periodical's life and growth as maturity is to human beings. But just as maturity adds to personality, so does evolution to the character of a magazine. Thus, readers of INDIA TODAY will not see comic strips or horoscopes or features on cooking in it. What they will see are new news features which diversify the scope of the magazine and give its coverage bigger dimensions.

To do a better job of projecting visuals and photographs, INDIA TODAY has been employing more and more colour in its editorial pages. With this issue, it introduces two new regular features. Capitalook will take the reader behind the scenes in New Delhi, to the corridors of power and shed light on processes, events and personalities that otherwise remain out of the public gaze. In every alternate issue, Businesspeak will project the views of a leading business figure on issues of public interest, particularly those which deal with industry, business and the economy.

Forthcoming issues will present two other occasional features. Changing Scene will look at how institutions and people in the public view have evolved, how they reflect or epitomise change in this country. And Statenotes will give readers a glimpse of trends and events in the towns and villages across the country.

LETTERS

FRESH APPROACH

■ Calendar age does not necessarily equate with political outlook, nor is it necessarily better but the energy and enthusiasm of "the new breed" of parliamentarians (August 31) will vitalise their office and the possibility of progress is greater. They are a star-studded cast of princely descendants, movie stars, bureaucrats and cultural figures, all coming from diverse backgrounds. All 86 of these first time MP's are untried, it is true, but they all, apart from some exceptions must be applauded for the fresh approach they have brought to the tasks before them.

Meerut — RASHMI ROSHAN LALL

COMING OF AGE

■ In your article "The Rajani Phenomenon" (August 31) you have said that Priya Tendulkar is 25 years old. In the previous issue in the Eye-catchers column you had said that she was 27. How is it that she has become younger by two years over a period of 15 days?

Lucknow — UMESH NAGAR

POOR QUALITY

■ B. De Souza's statement that you can't get even a simple door lock of the right quality ("Revolution on the Road", August 31) made me feel happy because at last there was somebody else as well who thought that way. Indian industry may be producing its own nuclear power plants, satellites, computers, etc., but it has failed miserably in producing good quality locks, scissors, electric plugs and the list goes on... And this is only because the consumers accept the trash that is available in the market.

Pune — SANJAY S. DESAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ACIL-BC-66/85 C

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

't verything of readership you reach?"

More for your money.

The quality of readership of any publication is largely dependent on the quality of its editorial content. And this is an area where The Times Group has always been ahead. Its editorial staff list reads like a veritable Who's Who of Indian journalism.

Its contributors are drawn largely from the most respected, best-read writers in their chosen fields. Even in production values and other related areas, Times Group Publications stand apart. Not surprisingly, this has earned a choice readership for the Group: in terms of standard of education, level of employment and income.

With such a high quality of readership, it's only natural that The Times of India Group forms the backbone of any media plan.

The Times of India Group of Publications

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ACCORD DISCORD

Your investigative cover story on the Punjab accord ("Breakthrough", August 15) was exemplary. It is a historic agreement which would go a long way in bringing an era of peace and harmony in the ailing state. All one now prays is that the terrorists don't strike again and bring back the problems that have lasted such a long time and cost so many innocent lives. The prime minister should now bring the Punjab economy back on the rails with strong guards to thwart the attempts of extremists who want to derail it.

Delhi SARBINDER SAWHNEY

■ May I remind you that the transfer of Chandigarh to either of the states is not what the citizens wanted. They wanted it to remain a Union territory. Chandigarh does not belong to any particular state because when the compensation for the land acquired was given, it did not come from any particular district's treasury. To have let Chandigarh remain a Union territory and a joint capital of both Haryana and Punjab would have been the best possible gift to national integration.

Chandigarh SAMRITA KAUR GILL

■ Punjab lives in villages, and not in Chandigarh and Amritsar where you have conducted the opinion poll. Bureaucrats, merchants and other exploiters reside in cities while the farmers live in villages. The farmer is the person who has been hit hard by the accord. He is the person who supplied volunteers for the morcha, recruits to the army and he is the person who has been deprived of water. The urbanites who have nothing to lose are happy but ruralites who are the true citizens of Punjab will suffer and thus condemn the accord.

Ludhiana GURBHAJAN SINGH GILL

WISDOM DELAYED

Your Comment, "The Punjab Lessons" (August 15), is one of the best write-ups I have seen on the Punjab problem. The lessons that you have derived are for the politicians to learn from. As per the settlement the most controversial demand pertaining to the Centre-state relations stands referred to the Sarkaria Commission. It would easily have been done much earlier, as the Akalis were always agreeable to have their controversial demands put before a tribunal. This points to the fact that if the Government had to concede to the demands and do what the Akalis wanted then it could have done so long ago and avoided all the riots and assassinations.

New Delhi HARISH JAITAK

RETHINKING

The report on the BJP wanting to return to the saffron flag ("Revamping the Pantheon", August 15) is realistic and objective. The BJP has reached a dead end, and should, without delay, choose between the alternatives of remerging with the Janata Party or returning to the saffron flag and renaming itself the Jan Sangh. There is a growing desire that India should have a rightist, Hindu-oriented alternative to the Congress(I) like the old Jan Sangh, and those who want to give a nationalist Hindu orientation to politics and policies. But A.B. Vajpayee does not reflect their mind. He is backed by people who have come to the BJP from the Congress(I) via the Janata Party.

It is wrong to describe the tussle in the BJP as one between the so-called liberals and the conservatives. These liberals are only opportunists who want a short cut to power.

New Delhi ONKAR SING CHARAK

■ Though one cannot runaway from the fact that introspection is necessary in view of the party's recent electoral defeat, it would be unfair of the BJP to revamp itself into its old egg shell. Any progressive party would like to adapt to the changed times to be better equipped to fight its opponents on their own grounds. But trying to choose a different path primarily because the Congress(I) has found inroads into its vote bank is a fallacy to be dispensed with.

The Indian voter looks up to an alternative not because of the ideology a party adopts but because of the poor performance of the ruling party, as has been demonstrated in the '77 and '80 elections. In India a secular party will win at the hustings always because the Hindu voter is generally not fundamentalist. Kudos to A.B. Vajpayee for standing up to the hardliners, though it would be better if he put his foot down more forcefully.

New Delhi NISHA KAPOOR

LOOPHOLES

Your explicit account of a shocking tale "In Cold Blood" (August 15) speaks of the escalating crime in the country. The perverse adventurism of the terrorists could have been thwarted had the intelligence wing acted in anticipation of the threatening letter Lalit Maken received a couple of days before. Besides, the brutal assassination in broad daylight pinpoints the apparent loopholes in the style of functioning of the police force.

Hyderabad ZAHEERUL ISLAM KHAN

LOW RETURNS

I don't think anyone would object strongly if fate were to achieve what the financial policemen of the country have not been able to ("Power Tussle", August 15). Peerless claims that investment under their schemes is "highly profitable" and the schemes have been introduced for the "welfare of the public". How far this is true will be evident from the fact that the rate of interest underlying their schemes works out to less than 7 per cent and the free accident insurance cover provided by Peerless to a maximum of Rs 50,000 is available from the nationalised insurance companies to the extent of Rs 1 lakh for an annual premium of only Rs 75.

Delhi RAJAN

STRIP-TEASE

The article "Cabarets: Flooring the Show", (August 15) portrayed the concepts and protests of the people very well. With the incredible flow of money from the Gulf, there has been a hike in inflation in Kerala, which in turn has produced these evils in society. There has been a rapid spread of crude shows at disreputable places. It is ironical to witness these evil happenings in a state like Kerala which is proud of numerous temples that provoke spontaneous devotion even from an atheist.

Kalpetta SARASWATHY GANESH

PRINTER'S DEVIL

Your Trade Winds item "Limited Access" (August 15) says we have booked orders worth Rs 45 crore. This statement is completely false and seems to have been made by you with the malicious intent of harming our interests.

New Delhi RAKESH GANDHI

The figure of Rs 45 crore was a typographical error. There was no malicious intent. The error is regretted.

—Editor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Democracy on Trial

THE GOVERNMENT'S decision to go ahead with the elections in Punjab in spite of Longowal's assassination is the only one it could have taken. No one has put the reasoning and justification better than Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi whose words in Parliament bear repetition. He said: "Shall we allow the exercise of the will of the people to be obstructed, frustrated and subverted by the forces of extremism and terrorism? On a correct response to this hinges the fate of the democratic system in India ....How individual parties fare is of little consequence. It does not matter who wins and who loses. What matters is that the lamp of democracy is not extinguished; what does matter is that India wins."

NINAN

The decision is a calculated gamble, one which puts at risk all that has been achieved in Punjab in the last few weeks. But it is an unavoidable one. Any other decision would have put the terrorists in the driver's seat. Any move to delay the elections would have caused the problem in Punjab to fester longer, denied a popular government which alone can take charge of the state's problems and tackle them in the only lasting way—democratically. Any move that seemed to reflect weakness in the face of a terrorist threat would simply have emboldened the terrorists and strengthened their hands further.

It is, of course, easy for those who are not in the firing-line to pass judgements such as these. What matters is that similar affirmation has also come from politicians, from the prime minister to his party colleagues and the Akali Dal, people whose lives are threatened and will undoubtedly be on the line during the election campaign. Intelligence reports confirm that terrorists will do their worst to disrupt the election, that the lives of candidates, their supporters and the public will be endangered, that death will stalk the campaigns. So the decision to go ahead was not one that could have been taken lightly. On the contrary, it reflects courage and a determination to do the right thing.

Yet it is also necessary to add that the Government owes it to the politicians who will fight the elections and the public that will participate to do its utmost to provide security. It is now a truism that nobody can escape the determined killer, and the whole world knows how hard it is to silence these guns of hatred which spit death and despair even in countries where security is far better organised. All this calls for an election with a difference. It calls for an election which must be conducted with less than the usual fanfare. Indian elections are usually festive melas. But the Punjab election is being held in more sombre circumstances, in the wake of political assassination and under the shadow of the terrorist gun. It needs to be swiftly and purposefully conducted. And if the polling turnout is lower than usual, it need not be taken for a negation of the democratic process.

The Election Commission rightly frowns on the presence of military and paramilitary forces at election time. But in this one instance, nobody will grudge the political parties or the Government the extra precaution of having these forces out in the streets through the campaign and on polling day. Moreover, in the face of mounting evidence that a number of terrorists have been in camps in Pakistan and have been sneaking back to India in the past few weeks, there will be every justification to put the armed forces on the border on alert against the infiltration of trouble-makers.

Ultimately, however, the threat of violence will be against the candidate, and Government must consider taking extraordinary steps and providing special precautions. There is no reason why, for instance, the major political parties cannot agree to minimise well advertised roadside public meetings, why they should not this time round forego the intimate contact of door-to-door campaigning, why public meetings cannot be held as far as possible in more easily protected public halls or away from potential sniper positions or, at some cost to the political parties, with suitable barricades and protected platforms as is done routinely in the case of VIP's. In the interest of keeping emotions in control, political parties must also accept their obligation to refrain from making communal appeals or raising communal issues.

Longowal's assassination shows that even the presence of gunmen is no guarantee of safety, but the Government will have to very seriously consider providing each candidate with a suitable number of bodyguards who are more than a token deterrent to a would-be killer. After all, the law says that the death of a candidate is cause for the postponement of an election. And having failed to scuttle the accord by killing Longowal, the terrorists cannot be allowed to abort the election through violence.

It is possible, of course, that in spite of all the efforts and the best will in the world, some bullets will find their targets. But it is now a fact that with every killing the terrorist finds himself more isolated from the people whose interests he claims to serve. The widespread abhorrence of Longowal's assassination is evidence of that. Fortunately, terrorism is confined to the Punjab problem, and more and more people of Punjab—both Sikhs and Hindus—want peace and normalcy. It is only when the people of the state develop a vested interest in that peace that the terrorist will be restrained. And that can only come about when the elections have been conducted, when the lamp of democracy burns bright in Punjab.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DO YOUR PRODUCT SAMPLES HAVE TO MAKE IT TO LONDON WITHIN A DAY?

DON'T PANIC—CONTACT DHL.

AIRFREIGHT-DHL collects consignments from your desk. And hand-delivers them to any desk in the world—with amazing speed.

Your documents and packages are rushed to their destinations across the globe by 2500 on-board DHL couriers, using 111 airlines. In fact, a DHL courier boards a plane somewhere in the world every seven minutes.

Only DHL International has the worldwide infrastructure to ensure such speed, safety and reliability.

A work force of 11,000 direct employees.

Operations in 635 offices from 146 countries.

Every day, DHL International delivers 56,000 items across the globe.

The world's first international courier service is still the largest.

We're changing the way the world does business.

AIRFREIGHT DHL WORLDWIDE COURIER

Contact Airfreight Pvt. Ltd. (DHL Courier Services Division) Ahmedabad: 408077, 400211, 400212 Bangalore: 561007 Bombay: Nariman Point: 224190, 230163, 230171, 243519; Ballard Estate: 265761-66; Worli: 4926643, 4926333; Airport: 6121883, 6122057 Ext. 369 Calcutta: 442174, 446279, 448401 Chandigarh: 40400 Cochin: 6163, 69477 Coimbatore: Selvalya Bldg., 8/434-D, Trichy Road; Delhi: Kasturba Gandhi Marg: 3311896, 3318945, 3318948; Nehru Place: 6432360; Rajendra Place: Ground Floor, 5, Prabhat Kiran Building; Hyderabad: 225234 Jaipur: 73337 Kanpur: 60245, 67954, 60587 Madras: Commander-in-Chief Road: 812169, 812366, 812189, 82330, 810227; Parry's Corner: 512401, 512269; Guindy: 431349 Pune: Dr. Ambedkar Road: 26071, 26073, 28874; Wakadewadi: 54098 Quilon: 3631, 3632 Ext. 105 Srinagar: 75540, 71268 Trichy: 32244 Trivandrum: 67231, 65863. Trikaya AF 3.85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Favoured Few

● In the world of business, where the guessing continues as to who is in and who is out with the Rajiv Government, the ones standing tall just now are Ratan Tata and Dhruv Sawhney, the young chief executive of the Triveni Engineering group and a school and college friend of the prime minister. Both were on the prime minister's guest list for the small lunch that he threw for World Bank President A.W. Clausen, and word quickly got around that while the finance minister may be observing partial purdah, the prime minister was willing to sup with businessmen on a formal occasion.

Ratan Tata, as it turns out, is also among the few businessmen who have had a private audience with the prime minister. Another is Russi Mody, chairman of Tata Iron and Steel Company (TISCO). And once again, the message received by the business community is that the Tatas are looked upon kindly by the Government.

This does not, however, mean that the country's leading business house is going to have its own way with the Government. Ratan Tata has been trying very hard to get entry into the telecommunications business, but the Department of Electronics is yielding little ground. Similarly, Russi Mody complained publicly at TISCO's annual shareholders' meeting recently that some of the company's applications for decisions that would involve saving foreign exchange have not been acted upon by the Government for the past year. T.N. NINAN

Collision Course

● High-profile diplomacy does have its own peculiar pitfalls as Foreign Secretary Romesh Bhandari discovered to his discomfiture last fortnight. Bhandari was speeding along the capital's Vijay Chowk, reclining in the back seat of his official car, his mind, no doubt, deeply immersed in some diplomatic tangle or other, when suddenly another car shot across the road. And before anyone could say By Thimpu, the two were entangled in an unholy crunch. A shaken Bhandari emerged indignantly from his car nursing a bloody nose, but ever the polished diplomat, he turned into Sir Galahad when he saw that his automotive adversary was none other than the attractive wife of a fellow foreign service officer. The formalities were quickly dispensed with and everyone went their way. Unfortunately, Bhandari was scheduled to go peacemaking between the Tamil Tigers and the Sri Lankan authorities in Bhutan, and was obliged to take along with him a most undiplomatic liability: a patrician nose criss-crossed with strips of plaster. South Block rumour has it that the lady in question received a flurry of calls from some of her husband's colleagues congratulating her on achieving what they have been yearning to do for some time. Car Seva?

DILIP BOBB

Royal Itinerary

● How does the prime minister select the names and the number of villages he wants to visit during his whirlwind tour of the states? Like his mother, he doesn't depend on the officials of the state Government for the finalisation of his itinerary. Instead, his aides in the Prime Minister's Secretariat collect the names of all the villages forming part of a block or a panchayat. Once the list is collected mandarins at South Block give their opinion keeping in view security requirements. But last month his advisers humourously chose a village named after one of his aides for the visit to Orissa. In response to a directive from the prime minister's office, Orissa's resident commissioner in New Delhi supplied a list of 14 villages in Sambhalpur district. When the list landed at the desk of Joint Secretary Mani Shanker Aiyer, he found Georgegarh on the list. Promptly, he called V. George, private secretary to the prime minister, and told him that he was including Georgegarh in the tour programme. Unfortunately, bad weather prevented Rajiv from making it to Georgegarh and the village —not to mention V. George —missed making a footnote in history. PRABHU CHAWLA

Coffee, Tea or Me?

● Minister of State for Railways Madhavrao Scindia formerly used to spend his summer vacations in England in pursuit of sybaritic pleasures such as the Derby at Epsom Down. This summer was different: the exuberant young minister slogged it on British Rail trains and brought home disposable plastic cups with filters attatched that are used to serve passengers fresh coffee and tea in the finest English tradition. But when he showed the cups to the commercial department of the Indian Railways to be copied for first-class passengers here, the department's officials quickly calculated that each cup would cost Rs 8, thereby sending up the cost of a humble cup of tea or coffee to Rs 10. The aping scheme was shelved, of course, but not before it was decided to provide individual service: first class travellers on Indian trains will henceforth be provided with thermos flasks of hot water with tea /coffee bags, plus a willing bearer to smilingly pour out the required beverage. Scindia, as a result, is now popularly known as the 'coffee, tea or koi hai' minister.

SUNIL SETHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

systems engineered captive power generation

Mere genset installations ...

Parry's pioneering expertise can be experienced anywhere in India ... the marketing and servicing network spanning the entire country. Service Engineers with sound technical background are available for need assessment, pre-purchase guidance, commissioning and servicing of gensets.

The Parry Genset range is wide enough to meet the captive power requirements of small, medium and large user segments. Starting with the identification of the rating requirement, the suggestion of the right engine-alternator mix, the commissioning and servicing of gensets ...

Parry expertise moves to much higher areas of specialised capabilities ... for the planning and execution of total systems packages.

- Pioneering expertise in captive power generation.
- All India marketing and service network.
- Rating range — 3.4 to 10,400 kVA.
- Excellent pre and after sales service.
- Systems engineering back-up.
- Indian representative — Mirrlees Blackstone Gensets.
- The reputation of reliability.

or, total systems packages. Parry does the job.

Parry's

For systems engineered captive power generation.

Parry & Co. Ltd.,

'Dare House', Madras - 600 001. Phone : 29251 Tlx : 041-6656 ● United India Building, Sir Phirozshah Mehta Road, Bombay - 400 001. Phone : 318000 Tlx : 011-2237
● 32 Chowringhee, Calcutta - 700 071. Phone : 240651 Tlx : 021-7316
● Jeewan Deep Building, Sansad Marg, New Delhi - 110 001. Phone : 312869 Tlx : 031-61591

Also Branches at : Bangalore ● Cochin ● Coimbatore ● Gauhati ● Kanpur ● Ludhiana ● Secunderabad.

PG 185

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The night was young. The driver was not.

A starlit, beautiful night. A soft summer breeze. A highway unfurling like a silver ribbon. And then suddenly... a truck leapt out of the stillness. The car didn't stand a chance. The elderly driver, even less so.

Accidents. You never imagine it could happen to you. But it can. And does. That's why you need the protection of Oriental Insurance's Householders' Package Policy. For a small premium, it covers you securely against unforeseen damages resulting from fire, theft, riots, explosions, floods and storms.

And at no extra cost, the same policy covers you for personal accidents (upto Rs. 10,000); baggage lost while travelling (upto Rs. 1,000) and legal liabilities to the public (upto Rs. 20,000 per year).

So why take chances? Especially when Oriental gives you such good value at such a reasonable cost. For details, contact the nearest office of Oriental Insurance or write to HPP, P.B. No. 7037, New Delhi 110 002.

Householder's Package Policy Premiums

Estimated Sum Insured	Current Annual Premium	Estimated Sum Insured	Current Annual Premium
Rs.20,000/-	Rs. 60/-	Rs. 60,000/-	Rs.180/-
Rs.30,000/-	Rs. 90/-	Rs. 75,000/-	Rs.225/-
Rs.50,000/-	Rs.150/-	Rs.1,00,000/-	Rs.300/-

LIVE WITHOUT FEAR

Because anything can happen at any time.

ORIENTAL INSURANCE
(Subsidiary of the General Insurance Corporation of India)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

FSA/OI/001/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

The Times of India

● Earlier parties used to be grassroot parties. Now all of them are nominated parties from the top.
■ I.K. GUJRAL in The Sunday Observer

● I have regained my lost friend.
■ FAROOQ ABDULLAH about Rajiv Gandhi at a public meeting

● They (Indians) have a much more fantastic attitude...I think if we live in countries like that long enough and become more Indian in our approach, we would perhaps see things in a different way.
■ PRINCE CHARLES in The Sunday Times, London

● Doordarshan can perhaps never acquire an Indian personality unless it gives up the identification of India with the newly-emerging middle class and the habit of viewing Indian life through the narrow prism of a middle class outlook.
■ The P.C. Joshi report on Doordarshan software quoted in The Telegraph

● The smiles on the faces of my leprosy patients and the handicapped inmates is my greatest reward. I value that more than any award.
■ Magsaysay Award recipient BABA AMTE in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● When you are winning people say you are a good captain and when you are losing you are the worst.
■ KAPIL DEV in The Sunday Observer

● My purpose is served...I was here to popularise billiards... and in this I feel I have succeeded.
■ BOB MARSHALL after his defeat in The Week

● If possible, I'll try to re-enter film acting. I haven't yet decided about it.
■ N.T. RAMA RAO in Free Press Journal

● The impression that is strengthening at every level, and within the Congress(I), is that in order to achieve catapultic growth, the less privileged will be sacrificed to runaway inflation.
■ ROMESH THAPAR in Business India

● What was wrong in his (Amitabh Bachchan) describing politics as a cesspool? It is.
■ KHUSHWANT SINGH in Filmfare

● I'm writing puranas, not novels. I'm not interested in becoming a Western novelist.
■ RAJA RAO in Society

● When I get married, it will be because I want to become a mother. I want to fulfil that part of my womanhood.
■ ZEENAT AMAN in Star & Style

● I'm very bad in arithmetic, mathematics, accounts and figures.
■ DEV ANAND in Showtime

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Remember your thirst victory?

Remember how the crowd applauded? How you laughed aloud with joy? Remember how you quenched that mighty football thirst with Limca? You can still taste the heady effervescence each time you have a Limca. The isotonic salts really quench your thirst. Just like the thirst time!

Limca. Each time is the thirst time is veri veri lime 'n' lemo

Limca

SERVE CHILLED

ARTIFICIALLY FLAVOURED. CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT PULP.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

RA/DEUS/BB/L/4-85

If you fly Cathay Pacific to Hong Kong, this

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Stretch it.

With the terrific little Hong Kong Bargain Book.

An amazing Cathay Pacific-Hong Kong Tourist Association offer designed to make that delightful shopper's paradise even more of a bargain.

It's a booklet containing 50 discount coupons which you get along with your Cathay Pacific airline ticket.

Each coupon entitles you to up to 25% discounts at a variety of establishments. In fact, you get two discount coupons for each outlet.

Some of the participants include Indian shops, restaurants, jewellery stores, Island cruises and fun places like the fabulous Ocean Park.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

this is what you can do with your US $ 500

Of course, you shouldn't forget some of the extras of flying Cathay Pacific.
Like the delicious cuisine, a connoisseur's choice of liquid refreshments and a charming crew to look after you.
All great fun.
And that isn't stretching it.

Arrive in better shape

CATHAY PACIFIC
The Swire Group

For further information, contact Cathay Pacific or your Travel Agent. Bargain Book offer valid only for passengers travelling from Bomb

Hong Kong Tourist Association

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/CX/40

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TIGER'S TALE

■ Tiger, tiger, burning bright, in the forests of the night, said William Blake. But the tiger burning bright in the small town of Kalibar in Nagaon district of Assam was certainly not in the forest—he was out in the fields.

But to go back to the beginning. Champak Hazarika and his friends were playing football in a clear patch of ground near the Kamakhya hills when Blake's beloved rushed from the forests and stalked around the field. Of course, the spectator intrusion on the pitch did not go down well with the players, who withdrew to a corner—not the corner where the tiger was—and the standing committee went into session.

The meeting lasted for 10 minutes and a consensus was reached—Hazarika would bell the big cat. He picked up the football, balanced it on one trembling hand and threw it to the tiger. The tiger sniffed at the offering and slowly dribbled it away into the forest. For a long time the young boys could hear his growls as he tried to score a goal. They were no doubt relieved at having got away but quite a few of them grumbled over having lost an expensive football.

KITCHEN COURT

■ Kitchen cabinets are not uncommon in India and it will come as no surprise to most people that kitchen courts exist in this country. Of course, not a kitchen court in the figurative sense of the term since that would be taking liberties with an independent judiciary, but a court in a kitchen using furniture usually found in a rasoi.

Such is the magistrate's court in Varkala, Kerala. It is temporarily in an outhouse and the result is quite excruciating. The august magistrate sits on a chair placed on a slab used for cooking. The lawyers have to sit on hefty wooden planks used for cutting and chopping vegetables. The exhibits have to be put somewhere and they are: in the lavatory, which is presumably not in use.

When confronted with this unsavoury state of affairs by

Marxist MLA Varkala Radhakrishnan, state Home Minister Vayalar Ravi admitted that the court had a what he choose to call a "space problem." He added, however, that the Varkala magistrate's court was first on the list of the 22 courts which needed to be built and for which the Centre's approval had been sought. No longer would the magistrate's friend have to ask him "what's cooking?"

ALARMING AMAZONS

■ Policemen in this country are often under the not-so-mistaken impression that they can get away with anything. But any policeman ought to shudder at the name of Imphal, because that is where the alarming Amazons prowl.

The alarming Amazons are a group of women, who roam the streets of the city carrying flaming torches looking for drunks. They are temperance maniacs and are taken with great respect by the town. To cut a long story short, the alarming Amazons on their nightly round uttering strange cries, came upon a police officer who had imbibed well but not wisely and was in the process of beating up people in the bazar. The women caught him and for some time he was subjected to rigorous questioning. At one time it was reported that he burst into tears.

Things would have gone quite badly for the gentleman had it not been for a posse of constables led by a deputy superintendent of police, who raided the torture chamber and rescued their erring brother in uniform from a fate worse than drink. The alarming Amazons were let off with an admonition.

WED BY WIDOWS

■ What would India be without its weddings, held in a bewildering variety of shapes and sizes? A lot less colourful, that's what. There is one common thread to all weddings and that is they are held in the presence of God and when all the signs are right. But there are quite a few who beg to differ and one of them is a rationalist and atheist from the town of Athur in Salem district of Tamil Nadu.

Last month he celebrated his son's wedding with the requisite gusto. Five hundred widows led the procession, bedecked in glittering polyester and diamonds. The musical accompaniment was given by instruments usually used at funerals and the mournful notes cast an odd shadow. The wedding proper was held at the time of "rahu kalam"—considered to be the most inauspicious among devout Hindus.

But what really drew approving gasps was the way in which the sacred mangalsutra, the marriage necklace of the bride was blessed—by two expensively-dressed widows—and given to the groom who put it round his wife's neck to cries of "down with superstition" and "stop humiliating widows." In India anything is possible.

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New Plans

LIC brings you 'DOUBLE ASSURANCE' plans.

'Jeevan Saathi'

This plan is ideal for working couples. Like the love and loyalty of the marriage bond,

Jeevan Saathi's assurance lasts beyond a lifetime.
On maturity, the basic sum assured, plus bonus, is payable.
If one of the partners expires during the term of the policy, the basic sum assured is paid to the survivor. He/She is not required to pay any further premiums.
The basic sum with profits is once again paid to the surviving partner on maturity, or to his/her nominee if his/her death occurs before maturity.

'Jeevan Mitra'

This plan is specially designed for maximum family security. On maturity, the basic sum with bonuses will be paid to the insured – as in the other endowment assurance policies.

If the insured expires during the policy term, the nominee receives double the sum assured and accrued bonuses.
For a little extra premium, an additional cover against death due to accident is also available.

For further details on these DOUBLE-BENEFIT plans, contact your LIC agent or the nearest LIC office.

योगक्षेमं वहाम्यहम्

Life Insurance Corporation of India

daCunha/LIC/166/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB RETURN TO U

FINALLY, it was a terrorist's single bullet that changed it all: the soaring spirit of one man's courage, the painstakingly laid foundation of peace and the wave of relief that after four years of dread had at last begun to filter slowly but noticeably through like a miraculous antidote throughout the troubled state.

Travelling to the assassinated leader Sant Harchand Singh Longowal's cremation in the heart of Punjab last week, the land was verdant with a rich harvest of paddy but faces everywhere were blighted with sorrow. Horror, grief and mourning at the passing of a man of peace were one thing; but the thousands who spontaneously poured into his village gurudwara in district Sangrur to witness his last rites were also there to mourn their own uncertain future.

From far out gurudwaras in Jammu and north Delhi, delegations of Sikhs travelled through the night and half the day to reach the spot on time; there were as many Hindus as Sikhs; and truckloads and tractor trolleys full of simple, unlettered peasants came bringing their womenfolk and children in homage. Gursaran Kaur, a 28-year-old farmer's wife had come all the way from a village in district Gurdaspur about 400 km away. She was unaccompanied by any other member of her family but had joined the local jatha which was made up of one person from each family in the village. She had never seen the Sant in her life, "but," she explained, "I had to come because his death is like a death in my own family."

For those first few hours after the Sant's killing, the forces of darkness seemed to be closing in on Punjab again. The gradual build up of euphoria following the Rajiv Gandhi-Longowal accord of July 24 appeared to be evaporating fast. And the anguish in people's voices reflected the return of political instability and fear of terrorist violence in the state.

Almost as swiftly and insidiously as the assassin opening fire, came the first discordant signs of strife over a leadership crisis in the Shiromani Akali Dal. For six

Sant Longowal being carried on his last journey: paying the price for peace

CC-0. In [illegible] Kangri Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

O UNCERTAINTY

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Police guard pays homage to Longowal's passing bier: widespread sympathy years the Sant had headed the party firmly, steering it through the longest agitation in its history and transforming his own status from puppet chief to paramount dictator whose growing popular appeal, in the end, outshone all other leaders. Hours before his death, he had successfully managed to cement a serious rift in the Akali Dal by skilfully drawing back into the fold two of its most powerful dissenting members, former chief minister Prakash Singh Badal and Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC) President Gurcharan Singh Tohra, who had consistently opposed the party accord with the Government and objected yet more strongly to calling an early election in the state.

The Sant's funeral pyre was still burning when the first acrimonious squabble burst out between the two factions over the succession issue. Assembled jathedars came virtually to blows, snatching the microphone in which the antim ardas (last prayer) for the Sant had minutes before been recited, and screeching on top of their voices to be heard. One group wanted Jathedar Ajit Singh from Ropar, a political nonentity produced like a rabbit from a magician's hat by the Badal-Tohra faction to be immediatly nominated as ad hoc convenor of the Akali Dal. The other majority faction pushed the tall, stringy, 60-year-old former Union minister for agriculture Surjit Singh Barnala, one of the Sant's closest associates and staunch protagonist of the accord, as the natural heir. Confusion reigned supreme, Badal and Tohra quietly vanished from the scene, and a grief-stricken Barnala fainted and was carried into the gurudwara where he revived after over an hour. The emotional shock, the physical exhaustion as also perhaps the unseemly bickering proved too much for the man who four days later was chosen acting president of the Akali Dal. "I just passed out," he confessed on the eve of his election in Chandigarh. "I had no idea what was going on outside. Our party is still in a dazed condition after the tragedy."

Arun Nehru, Arjun Singh, Balram Jakhar, P.V. Narasimha Rao and G.K. Moopanar at the funeral

An Akali Dal riven by devious alliances and rife with rivalries was only shaken out of its reverie by the Chief Election Commissioner R.K. Trivedi's announcement within 48 hours of Longowal's murder that the Punjab elections would be postponed by merely three days, from September 22 to 25 to accommodate the period of mourning. Almost every Akali leader in those 48 hours was expecting a postponement of the poll for reasons of gaining time to establish supremacy within the party or the tangibly grim external reality of facing terrorist wrath. "We needed some more time to come together," grumbled the wily SGPC President G.S.Tohra. "It was imperative to normalise conditions in the state before calling elections, but perhaps this is Delhi's way of wanting to capture the polls." And Bibi Rajinder Kaur, president of the Istri Akali Dal, the party's women's wing, a meeting of which Sant Longowal had gone to address in Sherpur village that fateful afternoon of August 20, lashed out: "You wait and see, Sikhs in Punjab's villages will slit each other's throats and a reign of terror will again commence if the polls are held on schedule. Sikhs have not adjusted to the accord yet, nor have they had time to set their party affairs in order. It is clearly the Congress Government's strategy to get the Akalis to fight among themselves."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It was not only to pre-empt such alibis for the intensifying power struggle among Akali factions that Punjab Governor Arjun Singh operated at lightning speed. From the moment the accord between the prime minister and Sant Longowal was signed, he had been an avowed votary of holding elections immediately, believing that only a rapid restoration of the democratic process could end the continuing uncertainty in the state. The prime minister endorsed his view by saying that he was not in favour of prolonging President's rule, due to end in Punjab on October 6. And no sooner had the elections been announced Longowal, who had made sure that the Government acceded the Akali Dal's two additional demands of rehabilitating army deserters and granting general amnesty to detained Sikh youth, promptly expressed his view on the subject. "We are not in the habit to run away from the field," he said, clearly indicating that he was prepared to carry his party into the electoral fray.

"Like a steamroller," remarked The Statesman sardonically of the governor's subtle scheme working like a charm, "Arjun Singh has moved on with firm wheels and in a straight line to achieve what he feels is best under the circumstances."

But after Longowal's killing, with the threat of carefully targeted violence greater than before, it was imperative to ascertain how safe it would be to hold elections. Singh rapidly set his administrative machinery into motion: repeated high-level meetings were held with the chief secretary, home secretary and district officials; individual reports were compiled from every senior superintendent of police in each district; and Congress(I) MP Rajesh Pilot, the ruling party's troubleshooter in Assam, was rushed to Punjab to submit an independent assessment to the Centre of the feasibility of going ahead with the polls. Arjun Singh was himself shuttling back and forth from Delhi—he made three trips in less than 36 hours—to brief the prime minister. He was sitting in the visitors' gallery of the Lok Sabha when an impassioned Rajiv Gandhi emphatically declared that "a democratic election is the people's answer to the brute force employed by a small section to impose their will on the masses... what matters is that the lamp of democracy is not extinguished. What does matter is that India wins." Resolute though he had remained to push through the elections, Arjun Singh was hardly oblivious to the terrible hazards of terrorist attacks during the campaign. Even the most die-hard and reliable senior police officials in Punjab were willing to concede last fortnight that anywhere between 10 and 15 candidates could meet their end during the poll campaign, and Congress(I) observers were claiming that as many as 200 people could be victimised in terrorist violence despite the extraordinary precautions being taken. "Of course," conceded Governor Arjun Singh readily to INDIA TODAY after the election announcement, "there can be no absolute guarantee against terrorism though we will try our best that the election scene is not disturbed or the movements of the candidates vitiated for it to become a meaningless exercise."

While Barnala has no grassroots support he is nevertheless bound to gain a massive sympathy vote as Longowal's rightful successor and give Badal and his men a run for their money.

The election announcement had the desired effect on the Akali Dal. The intrigue-ridden party Longowal left behind had been made more disorderly by the fact that he was its sole dictator—there was no appointed successor or even a working committee supported unanimously by the jathedars (religious heads) of 25 Akali Dal districts as far apart as Bengal, Himachal Pradesh, Haryana, Rajasthan and Delhi. Immidiately, the 19 jathedars representing Punjab assembled under tight security in Chandigarh along with a host of other invitees like Badal, Tohra, Barnala, former finance minister Balwant Singh, former speaker of the assembly Ravi Inder Singh and Amrinder Singh, the young maharaja of Patiala and former Congress(I) MP who had joined the Dal only the day before. Together they hammered out a compromise formula that chose Barnala to head the Dal with an ad hoc committee of all the jathedars; to satisfy the Badal-Tohra faction, Sant Ajit Singh was made head of the party's parliamentary board, its remaining members to be selected in consultation with Barnala. In effect, Barnala, backed by staunch Longowal loyalists like Balwant Singh and former education minister Sukhjinder Singh would have a clear head start over the other faction in selecting candidates for both the 13 parliamentary and 117 assembly seats.

For Arjun Singh and the Centre the papering over of frictions in the party and Barnala's supremacy came as a resounding victory. " Of all the Akali leaders today, Barnala alone stands out as a shining symbol of integrity, loyalty and an unblemished political track record. He

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE ASSASSINATION

Unwinding Threads

SHORTLY after three o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, August 20, Sant Harchand Singh Longowal, President of the Akali Dal reached Sherpur, a large village about 90 km beyond Patiala in the rich paddy-growing district of Sangrur. He had rushed there after accomplishing an arduous mission in Chandigarh: that morning, after weeks of subtle negotiation following the accord, he had finally won over his two dissenting colleagues, SGPC President G.S.Tohra and former chief minister P.S.Badal, to fight the election together.

As he entered the village gurudwara, its compound packed with an audience of 4,000, and ascended the stage to address the meeting, he was not only well pleased at his accomplishment but also completely relaxed. Patiently, he set about explaining in minute detail to the congregation aspects of his accord with Rajiv Gandhi, the importance of reaching a compromise in Punjab and going to the polls. He elaborated the Government's keenness to end the crisis by referring to its decision to rehabilitate the army deserters and release Sikh youth in jails. He expatiated eloquently on the need for establishing major industries in the state, of providing employment to the young, and restoring peace in a long-troubled land. Jubilant shouts of Sat Sri Akal rent the air as the Sant rounded off his hour-long speech.

It was nearly 5.30 p.m. Suddenly shots rang out from somewhere in the front row, the bullets aimed at the seated Sant on stage but wide off the mark. Fired from a .455 revolver by a 22-year-old youth called Gian Singh, they seriously wounded an Akali worker called Jagmail Singh and injured four others. As volunteers surrounded the Sant in protection, there was no sign of either the twenty-odd security men placed around the stage, nor the handful of commandos in strategic positions. Ringed protectively by panic-stricken Dal workers, the Sant could barely breathe. "Let me breathe properly," he said. "I am quite safe." They were his last words.

The moment his protectors moved aside, Halwinder Singh, 24, the second assassin seated a few feet from the Sant, pounced forward and fired a single shot at point blank range. It pierced the leader's abdomen, badly rupturing his liver and large intestine and covering him in blood. But before Halwinder could fire again, he was caught and immobilised. "I grabbed him from behind and held down his right hand. He tried to get away but as I had caught his knot of hair with my other hand, he could not free himself," narrates Surinder Singh Garewal, a sturdily-built Akali volunteer from Malerkotla. Others helped Garewal pin down Halwinder who was shot at in that split second by the Sant's nephew Sher Singh before being handed over to the police. Several witnesses on the stage, including Bhagwan Singh, the sarpanch of Sherpur and Kundan Singh, another sarpanch from Nathumajra village, exactly corroborate this scenario.

Bleeding profusely, the Sant was rushed by car to Sangrur Hospital 30 km away, but by the time he got there, neither his pulse rate nor his blood pressure was recordable. The loss of blood proved fatal and within an hour of being admitted, Longowal was dead, long before the team of doctors from Chandigarh's Postgraduate Medical Institute arrived, or for that matter, before a Deputy Superintendent of Police in attendance who shared the same blood group as the Sant, could be called upon for a donation.

While the Governor security advisor, Lt General Gowri Shanker (Retd), is investigating the security lapses leading to Sant Longowal's assassination, there are enough eyewitness accounts that point to the ineffectuality of a dozen commandos and a total of two hundred security men within the compound and outside in saving the Sant's life. Three news reporters present at the meeting, Prem Goyal, B.C.Kamal and Mohinder Kaur, have all gone on record saying that there was enough time between the first and second shots for security guards to spring into preventive action. Instead, it was the Akali Dal workers who tried to intercede but, as it turned out, in vain.

The security lapses are more ominous in light of the fact, that given the political circumstances in the state, the Akali Dal president was a sitting target for Sikh extremists or other political vested interests opposed to the spirit of the accord. "These vested interests have been overactive lately," admitted Governor Arjun Singh to INDIA TODAY last week.

It is clear from preliminary interrogations of the two assassins as well as three other conspirators, Nirmal Singh, Darshan Singh Khalsa and Arvinder Singh, put under arrest that they may, in fact, have harboured connections with political leaders in the state. The interrogation last week, of SGPC Assistant Secretary Abnashi Singh and United Akali Dal leader Jagdev Singh Talwandi and the arrest of former MLA and United Akali Dal leader Ranjit Singh Brahmpura is aimed at unravelling precisely such a

An Artist's impression

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Hours before his murder, Longowal had successfully managed to cement a serious rift in the Akali Dal by bringing back its two strongest dissenting members, Badal and Tohra, into the fold.

also represents a continuity of the accord signed by Sant Longowal," says a senior Congress(I) observer, well pleased at the result. The Akali Dal's official approval of Longowal's legacy was further emphasised by a resolution passed at the meeting saying that the party endorsed "every word" of the accord. Two days later it was declared that each party candidate would be obliged to sign a written statement affirming their acceptance of the accord before filing his or her nomination papers.

While Badal's faction has clearly been checkmated, it is the former chief minister himself who has come through the twisting negotiations of the last month in contradictory light, by first adopting a vituperative anti-accord posture, then being persuaded by Longowal hours before his death to present a joint front for the poll and, now, in the post-Longowal struggle for power losing out to Barnala and Balwant Singh in the race for cornering the maximum assembly nominations. Last week, when the decisive Chandigarh meeting ended, Badal was in an atrabilious mood again, huffily driving out and refusing to speak to the press. "He is a prisoner of his own indecision which has led to each ambition of his being frustrated," says an erstwhile confidante of his, now busy establishing an independent base in the party. But others say that Badal may be playing a convoluted game by depending on his massive support in the Malwa region to win a sizeable number of seats, and always remain in a dictating position owing to his hold on a powerful chunk of the party.

Akali Dal leaders counter such a view with the argument that while Barnala has no grassroots support he is nevertheless bound to gain a massive sympathy vote as Longowal's rightful successor and give Badal and his men a run for their money. Moreover, the Dal is still keen on employing the late Sant's proposed strategy of offering tickets to Punjabi Hindu, Muslim and Christian candidates. "It was something he had repeatedly proposed before his death," says a Dal leader, "not only to gain more seats and woo minority communities but to give the Akali Dal a secular image."

Meanwhile six of nine former MLA's who are with the United Akali Dal (UAD) led by Bhindranwale's father Baba Joginder Singh are Badal's men. They now face acute embarrassment since the arrest of UAD leader Ranjit Singh Brahmpura last week in connection with the Longowal assassination. Worse, one of the UAD's most outspoken, energetic leading lights, Jagdev Singh Talwandi, was closely interrogated for over four hours in Ludhiana at the same time and pressed to reveal his connections with Jarnail Singh (see box). These recent sensational developments combined with the nexus if it exists.

While both the Central Bureau of Investigation and a high-level team headed by Punjab Armed Police chief K.P.S.Gill have been involved in scrutinising a possible political conspiracy, it is known that Longowal's killers came mainly from a single village called Leel in Ludhiana district. Once a pocket borough of the Congress(I), the area is now full of United Akali Dal followers.

The crime was masterminded by Jarnail Singh, a former votary of Bhindranwale with six police cases pending against him including the murder of a school watchman, and a registered medical practitioner in Leel called Dr Gurmail Singh. It was at the doctor's clinic that the seven conspirators had been meeting regularly to plan the assassination.

Of them, Gian Singh, one of Longowal's two killers comes from village Pohar near Ahmedgarh. A typical drifter uneducated after primary school, he had served as a part-time granthi before deciding two years ago to shave his beard and attempting to join the movies in Bombay. On his return to the village, he started writing poetry and singing at religious congregations. "My son has blackened the face of the faith," spoke his shocked father Gurdev Singh on hearing the news of the assassination, "he should be given the severest punishment for his terrible crime."

But it was Jarnail Singh, once a granthi at Bhindranwale's gurudwara in Chowk Mehta, who trained the two killers. He dropped them off at the Sherpur gurudwara after drugging them with heavy doses of opium. Still missing last week, he is the crucial link in the conspiracy that led to the assassination of Sant Longowal.

His recent past suggests that his violent scheme may have been abetted by his powerful political connections. He was picked up some eight weeks ago by the police but was suddenly released despite the cases against him. Not surprisingly, his release was engineered by a prominent United Akali Dal leader who pressurised the district police chief to let him go. Jarnail Singh's arrest may finally reveal what security and police sources in Punjab fear most: that the Sant's killing was not only a carefully planned and meticulously executed terrorist operation but that it was also politically motivated.

—GOBIND THUKRAL, with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Longowal at his last meal in Kambhowal gurudwara

HARCHAND SINGH LONGOWAL

A Symbol of Peace

HE STARTED out as a plain granthi (religious preacher) in a village gurudwara, and ended up being hailed as the Gandhi of Punjab. A far cry indeed, but that was the transformation wrought by fate in the life of Sant Harchand Singh Longowal, a man who in his last days came to symbolise the hope that Punjab and its people would find peace.

In a world where such phrases are much abused, Longowal was a true man of God. Born on January 2, 1932 in Sangrur's backward Gadarhiani village, Harchand Singh was the youngest of four sons of a simple God-fearing farmer Mansa Singh. While his brothers helped till the fields, the quiet Harchand immersed himself in kirtan and religious discourses. At nine, he joined the dera of Sant Jodh Singh and grew up in the shadow of the old priest. Life at the dera was hard, much like a Buddhist monastery and the inmates were trained in total sublimation of the self. He never gave up his frugal life-style and simple habits. At the dera, he and other inmates learned humility by going out and begging for food. Till the end, his usual meal remained two rotis with a dal or a vegetable. A bachelor, he made his home in two rooms at the Kambhowal gurudwara which he had built. Harchand Singh soon earned renown as a gifted ragi (singer of religious hymns) in gurbani and brijbhasha. And at just 30 he became head priest of the Damdama Sahib Takht, one of the five sacred takhts of the Sikh religion. People started flocking to the gurudwara in the hundreds to seek advice and blessings from the ever-smiling "Sant" as he now began to be called. "Meeting Santji was a great solace and he should not have strayed from preaching," recalled Gian Kaur, 75, a resident of Longowal village after his death.

But the young Sant seemed predestined to be drawn into public life. A man sensitive to the needs of the poor, he never hesitated to organise morchas—whether it was a fight of tenants against landlords or the status of the non-elected government in PEPSU (before the formation of Punjab). Understandably, the Akali Dal asked him to fight the 1967 assembly elections—and he did, trouncing Congress stalwart and former PEPSU chief minister Brish Bhan. But he was a reluctant politician, and he went into hiding rather than follow the party's wishes to contest a parliamentary election. But he abhorred the Emergency enough to take a public stand against it. Said Longowal: "The Khalsa must fight to prevent democratic institutions, the judiciary, and the press from being destroyed by Mrs Gandhi."

Through all this, his religious training gave him the courage to say and do what he considered right and even to hazard his life if his conviction demanded. He was convinced that Punjab could not exist separately from India and the chasm dividing Hindus and Sikhs had to be bridged. Unmindful of threats by terrorists he set about creating an atmosphere of communal amity. "I have but one mission—to bring back the fraternal feelings between Hindus and Sikhs. My method is of love," he confided only hours before his death to Akali lawyer Gurnam Singh Tir who was drafting the party's election manifesto.

But Longowal had not always been as decisive. His early passiveness in the face of Bhindranwale's aggression had undermined his own position as head of the Akali Dal and dictator of its morcha. Though called dictator, he was at that time only one among equals. Some of his peers in the party, like G.S.Tohra and Prakash Singh Badal, were taller than him in stature. None of them seemed able to cope with Bhindranwale's terrorist challenge; the more they lost ground to the extremists, the less they seemed capable of doing.

It was only when he broke the shackles of collective leadership after his release from almost ten months in jail after Operation Bluestar that he came into his own. When he returned as party president after the formation of Baba Joginder Singh's rival Akali Dal, it was on the clear understanding that the party would endorse the platform of communal amity.

The diffident, reticent Sant had probably realised he was the Akali Dal's man of destiny, and that he would have to do something to allay fears about Sikh separatism in the minds of the majority.

To do this he travelled to Delhi and thanked the Hindu families who had

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

helped save Sikhs during last November's riots. He openly rejected the demand for Khalistan and declared the Akali Dal's total commitment to the integrity and unity of the country. So it was not surprising that half the crowd which flocked to his funeral comprised Hindus. Ram Avtar, a Malerkotla tea stall owner who had trekked 25 kilometres in the heat to attend Longowal's funeral said: "He had our interest at heart and his passing is a grave blow to peace in Punjab."

Politicians saw the same integrity. "What struck you about him was his transparent sincerity", says Inder Gujral, who acknowledges having developed "an emotional bond" with him. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi publicly declared he found Longowal likeable and trustworthy, and the Sant reciprocated by describing the prime minister as nisdhal (straightforward).

Longowal often spoke as if he had some presentiment of his end, as if he could feel the hotheads breathing down his neck. A day before his death he told INDIA TODAY at the Kambhowal gurudwara: "No one can browbeat me nor bullets deter me as I am truthful and honest before my Guru." In any case, he said, his death would be a "small price to pay for bringing sadbhavana (amity) to my brothers and sisters in Punjab". He once told journalist Kuldip Nayar: "Extremism will not end until it has taken my life."

Tragically, that proved all too true. Longowal began his last day as he did most others, rising at 3.00 a.m. and presiding over the early morning prayers. That morning he met Badal and Tohra in Chandigarh and climaxed his peace mission with an agreement to end their differences.

Obviously relieved, he told a news conference that morning: "I am very happy my brothers have finally overcome their differences to fight the elections and I appeal to all Punjabis to isolate and defeat the forces of terrorism."

His violent death may well contribute immeasurably to that defeat. Already his legacy of peace has begun to replace Bhindranwale's violent legacy. Small wonder that Punjab Governor Arjun Singh should have said: "Santji's martyrdom will achieve what a living Sant may not have attained."

—RAMINDAR SINGH with GOBIND THUKRAL in Longowal

For Arjun Singh and the Centre the papering over the frictions in the party and Barnala's supremacy came as a resounding victory.

Six of the nine former MLA's with the United Akali Dal, led by Bhindranwale's father Baba Joginder Singh, are Badal's men.

pledge that prospective Akali Dal candidates are expected to sign standing by the Gandhi-Longowal accord to the letter is likely to make a seat adjustment impossible between the two groups, let alone a possible reconciliation. But a move in the direction had seemed a distinct possibility a few days earlier when at the UAD meeting held on the same day in Amritsar as the Akalis were meeting in Chandigarh, its leaders actually condemned Sant Longowal's assassination. UAD and All-India Sikh Students' Federation (AISSF) leaders also sank their differences and empowered Baba Joginder Singh to singly decide on participation in the elections.

While the Akali groupings and regroupings are likely to remain in flux till the very last, the Congress(I)'s election strategy is designed if not exactly to aggressively seize power from the Akalis, then at the very least to purge its own image in the state. Old, fractious ridden politicians like former chief minister Darbara Singh have been given short shrift in both selection of candidates as well as party affairs. The ruling party's emphasis is on fielding younger people, so long as they have a clean background and new-look style. Given the Congress(I)'s uninspiring record in Punjab (bitter dissident wrangling and four PCC(I) presidents changed in three years) the idea, according to a party official, is to break with the past.

Still, with the terrible toll the election may take in terms of violence, the number of ticket-seekers swarming at the party

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

headquarters in New Delhi the last few days has been amazing: at last count, there were at least 6,000, nearly 60 per cent of them Hindus, a marked increase from about 40 per cent Hindu applicants in the last contest in 1980. The increase is significant for two reasons: while it represents the growing unhappiness of Punjab's urban Hindus who are looking for greater political representation and finding it under the Congress(I) umbrella, at another explosive level it confirms the theory that, after VIP's, terrorists usually strike at Hindus in the hope of creating a communal backlash.

The most recent example of this is that on the day Sant Longowal was assassinated, terrorists struck at two Congress(I) leaders in Jalandhar. Gurdial Saini and B.K. Khullar, president and general secretary of the district Congress(I) committee, respectively. They were attacked as they sat discussing elections in Saini's living room. Khullar died on the spot; Saini is still in hospital recovering from the four bullets that were embedded in his thighs and knees. But city officials agree that were it not for the local news being overtaken by news of the Longowal murder, the attack could have incited a communal clash.

As the elections draw closer, Governor Arjun Singh and his team of advisers have drawn up a whole framework of precautionary measures to ensure a free, fair and so far as it is possible, a violence-free poll. Among the major security reinforcements suggested are:

- Deployment of 60,000 additional police and CRPF recruits from outside the state;
- mobilising of six lakh ex-servicemen in the state to nominate at least 1,000 men per district who the Government will arm to protect voters;
- two gunmen to accompany each candidate and their offices to be patrolled round the clock by the police;
- particularly vulnerable areas to be patrolled by mobile guards;
- and the armed forces in the state to be kept on the alert.

"It's going to be a sizzling election," says Punjab Home Secretary N.N. Vohra. "We shall certainly try our best but the candidates do run a risk." So does Governor Arjun Singh who will face the biggest test of his career. "I draw my strength from the people's faith in peace and democracy," he confesses. And the price to be paid for both qualities which have eluded Punjab for so long could be heavy.

—SUNIL SETHI with GOBIND THUKRAL and bureau reports

COPING WITH T

THE IMAGES are still sharp and stabbing, like tombstones outlined ghost-like against the mists of modern Indian history. The hooded eyes and sinister smirk of Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, silver arrow in one hand and a death list in the other. The roar of the motorcycles playing a deadly overture to the frenzied chatter of machine-guns. The flower-bedecked funeral hearses trailing each other with agonising regularity through the bloody streets of Punjab. The stark and sorrowful shell of the Akal Takht standing accusingly amidst the ruins. A glass case covering the bloodstained spot where a frail leader fell to the assassin's bullet. And now, a courageous apostle of peace cut down in his moment of solitary glory and quiet communion with his God.

Coming full circle, Bhindranwale, who symbolised the start of Sikh terrorism, with Longowal who finally became its latest victim

More than any of the others, it was the shattering assassination of Sant Harchand Singh Longowal last fortnight that seemed to symbolise most starkly the spectre of terrorism that stalks the land with such arrogance and destructive power. It also, conversely, symbolised the frustrations and fears of a government engaged in a grim and gruesome battle with phantom forces. Once before, in the arid wastes of West Bengal, terrorism flared briefly but brutally in the hands of the Naxalites before it was brought to heel. In the remote redoubt of the north-east, gunshots still ricochet in the ravines where ambushers lie patiently in wait. But in the bloodied hands of Sikh extremists, terrorism has acquired the ominous permanency and deadly sophistication of a Beirut or a Belfast.

Since end-1981, when Bhindranwale and his hitmen cast their sinister silhouettes over Punjab, terrorism has succeeded in overshadowing all else. At its height, the toll was awesome. Between August 4, 1982 and June 3, 1984, when the tanks rumbled towards the Golden Temple, terrorist acts had claimed 410 lives and injured 1,180 others. Of those, 298 were killed in the six-month period prior to the assault on the terrorists holed up in the Golden Temple. Since then, the body count has come down except for sporadic bursts like the transistor bomb blasts in the capital earlier this year. Home Ministry files indicate that terrorist-related killings have been averaging about four a month. But that is no cause for comfort. The targets are no longer random but carefully selected, like that of Longowal and Lalit Maken, for optimum shock effect. A government which naively believed that Operation Bluestar had broken the back of Sikh extremism, now realises it is still as potent a threat. "Terrorism is here to stay as a serious problem and we have to learn to live with it. They are now better trained, better equipped and better motivated," says Union Home Secretary, R.D. Pradhan.

Tragically, the same cannot be said for the official agencies responsible for bat-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TERRORISM

RAGHU RAI

vale, who terrorism,
became its ists holed then, the except for tor bomb

ar. Home
rorist-re-ng about cause for nger ran-
e that of optimum
h naively had bro-sm, now at, "Ter-problem
it. They equipped on Home

e said for for bat-

ling the terrorist threat. An embarrassed government has admitted that the assassination of Longowal was a serious security failure and that the commandos provided for the Akali leader's protection faltered when it came to the crucial crunch, specially considering the fact that he was such an obvious target. In psychological terms, it represents a major victory for the terrorists as part of their traditional strategy of striking at moments when a breakthrough on the Punjab impasse is imminent. There are over 100 VIP's and politicians in Punjab, Haryana and Delhi who are currently being provided with special security guards as protection against terrorists with Arjun Singh and Haryana Chief Minister Bhajan Lal heading the hit list. But officials engaged in dealing with the terrorist threat are convinced that the Longowal killing has also had a negative effect in the sense of further isolating the terrorists from the Sikh mainstream.

But mere isolation is a distant cry from actual identification and elimination. Security officials in Punjab and elsewhere are convinced that there is no individual or individuals masterminding terrorist operations as was the case in the nightmare days of Bhindranwale. "The terrorists are operating in several groups and on their own steam. This is true also outside Punjab as was proved in the transistor bomb blasts cases in Delhi," says one top security official. Further, no longer are the operational bases, hide-outs and safe houses confined to the sprawling rural countryside of Punjab, now under intense surveillance and infiltration by intelligence and police forces. The new terrorist sanctuaries are in the bustling urban areas where crowds provide a natural cover and anonymity.

In the twin bureaucratic monoliths of North and South Block, however, which houses the cavernous offices of the Home Ministry and the Cabinet Secretariat, the worry is tinged with a certain optimism. "We have made some major intelligence breakthroughs in the last three months," says a top intelligence official, "the intelligence we are getting now is much better than before. We have infiltrated to some extent, the key terrorist groups and now have a better idea of what they are up to and their likely movements." As evidence he thumps the bulky pile of files on his table dealing with intelligence and interrogation reports on terrorists and points to last week's arrest of Ranjit Singh, the third man involved in the assassination of Sant Longowal. Singh was captured after raids on 30 suspected terrorist hideouts which were under surveillance.

After extensive exercises, the Home Ministry has now evolved a system where information is exchanged speedily and anti-terrorist squads can move into action within hours. Last month, the Government opened three 'clearing-houses' in Delhi, Chandigarh and Jalandhar through which all intelligence and information related to terrorists from the various agencies dealing with the problem are routed. "We are now in a position to make intelligence operational," boasts an intelligence official.

An exhaustive list of suspected terrorists, their dossiers, likely areas of operations and known contacts has been drawn up by intelligence agencies and police forces for north India. Over 100 people on that list have been arrested in the last four months and officials claim that it is a result of the better coordination between various agencies involved in security. So far, of the 400 known terrorists with Bhindranwale who escaped during Operation Bluestar, 150 have been arrested or have been put under close surveillance. The bulk of the remaining terrorists are suspected to be operating from inside Pakistan from where they launch their hit and run raids. To combat this, surveillance on the border has been intensified and shoot at sight orders issued. In the past three months, say security officials, over 60 terrorists have been shot trying to cross the border. Home Ministry officials believe that there are less than 200 Sikh terrorists operating in the country split up into various groups whose size depends on the number of people they are able to recruit.

Meanwhile, intelligence and security officials of Punjab, Haryana and Chandigarh have been meeting once and sometimes twice a week to exchange notes and review procedures while their counterparts in Himachal Pradesh, Jammu & Kashmir, Uttar Pradesh and Delhi meet once a fortnight to discuss interrogation reports and formulate appropriate strategy. These meetings are also attended by officers of the Border Security Force, Military Intelligence and the Central Bureau of Intelligence (CBI). Core units have been formed to act on specific terrorist-related information which is being fed to them constantly from all other sources. Early next month, the chief ministers of Haryana, Rajasthan, Jammu & Kashmir, Himachal Pradesh and the governor of Punjab and chief executive councillor of Delhi are to meet in Manali to evolve a joint strategy to fight terrorism in north India. The meeting of Northern Zonal Councils chaired by Home Minister S.B.Chavan will also work out ways to strengthen inter-state checkpoints and finalise an agreement for the constant flow of information between the states and Union territories involved.

Home Ministry officials are also convinced that the terrorists are being increasingly isolated with fewer members of the Sikh populace in Punjab now willing to provide support and sanctuary, a trend they believe will accelerate once normal political activity returns to Punjab after the September elections. "The perceptions at the top are different now," says a senior intelligence official, referring to the new Government under Rajiv Gandhi which has issued instructions that harassment and questioning of Sikhs in Punjab is to be stopped unless there is definite proof of terrorist links. Punjab Governor Arjun Singh has also issued similar instructions to police and security agencies in the belief that this will push them to the wall and eventually force many of the less committed ones to surrender. One key terrorist arrested last fortnight, Sarabjit Singh (see box), in fact, confessed to his interrogators that he was on the point of giving himself up when he was arrested in Amritsar. Says Punjab Governor Arjun Singh, himself a prominent terrorist target: "I think the important change is that there is very little difference now between the perception of the people and the Government in meeting the terrorist threat. There is now a widespread revulsion against the continuing violence."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Simultaneously, the Government is rapidly readying its key anti-terrorist agency, the National Security Guards (NSG) which will deal solely with terrorism on a long-term basis. The original idea of the NSG was floated by India's spymaster, Ram Nath Kao four months before Operation Bluestar. Mrs Gandhi ordered the Cabinet Secretariat to draw up a report on the proposal and its feasibility. The fall-out from Operation Bluestar bestowed the issue with added urgency and by the end of 1984, the incipient headquarters of the NSG had come into being in a nondescript office block in New Delhi's Ramakrishna Puram area under the command of R.T. Nagrani, a RAW officer.

LAST month, the force made its first public appearance on the streets of the capital outfitted in black dungarees, their faces blackened with anti-glare paint and armed with sophisticated West German Heckler and Koch sub-machine-guns. The NSG commandos were brought in to patrol the approaches to North and South Avenues where the MP's residences are located. However, their deployment had been strongly objected to by senior NSG officers who felt that reducing this crack force to routine guard duties was an abject waste of their talent. But it later transpired that the orders had come from the prime minister who wanted to instil a renewed feeling of security among the MP's after the recent murder of Lalit Maken. The NSG were removed after a fortnight to the Raj Bhawan in Chandigarh.

Though they are yet to be baptised by fire, the force nonetheless packs a powerful punch in terms of its assigned role. The men briefly on view in New Delhi were the creme de la creme, members of the Special Action Group (SAG), the strike arm of the NSG. Drawn mainly from various units in the army, these men have been trained extensively in specialised techniques at Sarsawa, near Saharanpur, by experts of the Special Frontier Force (SFF). They have been specifically schooled in anti-terrorist operations in large buildings, factories, cramped urban localities and even anti-hijacking operations aboard aircraft borrowed from Indian Airlines. Besides SAG, which is now almost fully operational, the NSG is going to add two larger groups called Special Ranger Groups (SRG) whose role will be to provide the manpower muscle to the NSG in instances like the Golden Temple action where a large strike force is required. The model they have based the NSG on is the West German Grenzschutzgruppe-9 (popularly known as GSG-9) raised from among the country's border police to counter the threat of the Baader-Meinhoff terrorist gang. They were later used in the successful raid on Mogadishu.

Officials of the Cabinet Secretariat and the Home Ministry express their satisfaction with the NSG and its formation so far and claim that initial infrastructural problems have been ironed out. The Home Ministry has bought 1,600 acres of land on the Delhi-Jaipur road near Maneswar village in Haryana's Gurgaon district where the NSG is currently building its own training facilities. Most of the equipment they will use, specialised weaponry, infra-red and thermal imaging equipment, bullet-proof clothing and stun grenades, have already been procured. For the first time, say Home Ministry officials, the country has a force mentally and physically honed for tackling terrorism.

Drastic changes have also been made in the security cordon around Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in the wake

PIB

V.P. KAPOOR

Weapons recovered from the Golden Temple after Bluestar (left) and the body of Ramesh Chander who was shot by terrorists in Jalandhar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DUNLOP INTRODUCES THE NEW PROFESSIONAL

Tough. Uncompromising. On the fast track. A new breed that's going places. A new generation with professional drive.

For this new professional, Dunlop has a new car tyre. The Dunlop Olympus Nylon.

It's got resilience. A strong nylon casing to take the roughest going.

It's got staying power. With a premium depth tread that goes a long way.

It's got style. A tread pattern designed for better grip.

Olympus. It's the new professional. Made by Dunlop for people with standards like yours.

New

DUNLOP

OLYMPUS

Nylon Car Tyre

Because professional standards demand the best

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection,

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Engineered like no other car in the world" say Mercedes-Benz. Even rival car makers agree!

Great Classics of Motoring presented by Engine Valves Ltd.

The arrogant Mercedes-Benz S had a mighty, super-charged engine of 6.8 litres.

When you stamped on the accelerator, the supercharger was engaged and an extra 60hp caused the car to leap ahead – and a howling, screaming wail joined the usual high-speed roar from its exhaust.

The 'S' was designed by the brilliant Ferdinand Porsche in 1927. These were some of Mercedes' finest years.
The SS and others that followed were fierce, rakish cars that were definitely not for the faint-hearted.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Have you heard of the man who collected his new Mercedes at Sindelfingen, Germany and drove off happily? Nothing strange there, except that he had left his wife behind. It's a true story – and the wife may have never forgiven him, though Mercedes lovers all over would have smiled indulgently at this minor oversight.

Carl Benz. The father of the automobile.

Mercedes-Benz. One of the finest examples of Germanic engineering. An evergreen yardstick for comparison. Few cars have the illustrious pedigree of a Mercedes, since it traces its ancestry to the father of the automobile, Carl Benz.

Gottlieb Daimler. Built the world's second practical car.

Carl Benz was born in 1844. He was fascinated by gas engines and set about making an engine and a car even though he'd never seen either. It was a historic occasion when his motorized vehicle took to the streets in 1885.

Mercedes Jellinek. The original Mercedes car was named in her honour.

Gottlieb Daimler became interested in using gasoline to power small portable engines when he was 23. At that time, gasoline was used only for dry cleaning! It was 1887 by the time Daimler installed his gasoline engine in a horse carriage.

Carl Benz and Daimler never met, though they lived only 100 kms from each other. While both businesses grew, Benz was more traditional and Daimler more enterprising. But it took an Austrian, Emil Jellinek, to inspire Daimler to produce a truly great car, in 1901. Its shape and performance revolutionised racing and travel. Jellinek made it a condition that the car be named after his daughter Mercedes.

The Benz 'Patent- Motorwagen' 1886.

By 1905, Benz and Mercedes were directly competing on the roads, showrooms and race tracks. The first World War ruined Germany. With the economy shattered, it made more sense for Benz and Daimler to merge than to compete. That's how in 1924, the new German colossus was born : Daimler-Benz AG.

Mercedes musings

- Benz's 1886 3-wheeler was equipped with leather brakes and powered by cleaning fluid purchased from a chemist.
- The 3 pointed star dates back to 1880, when Gottlieb Daimler painted a star on a wall of his house and said, "A star shall arise from here and I hope it will bring blessings to us and our children".

The famous 300 SL "Gullwing" — a 165 mph projectile. The novel doors were not a design feature but a necessity. Its special chassis dictated very high door sills.

- The world's first long-distance motoring was by Frau Benz and her 2 children. In 1888 they drove the car from Mannheim to Pforzheim and back (147 kms).
- The 1903 Mercedes 60 had internally expanding metal-to-metal brakes. After each application, the brakes received a shot of cooling water!
- The famous Silberfeile (Silver Arrow) was the Mercedes-Benz W25 racing car with its paint removed. This remarkably successful machine was 2 lbs overweight when weighed before a Grand Prix race. Every atom of its white paint was sanded off and the weight reduction was sufficient to make it qualify.

The 600 Pullman. Its V-8 engine could propel this mobile drawing room at 125 mph!

- The highest mileage ever recorded for a car is 1,184,880 miles — naturally a Mercedes.
- Mercedes-Benz crashes 100 brand new cars every year into concrete walls to test safety measures.

Oft-imitated

If imitation is the best form of flattery, Mercedes-Benz certainly has reasons to feel flattered.

The new 'S' Class, safe and incredibly sure footed.

Over the years, many a car has been unashamedly styled to resemble a Mercedes. (Some of them complete with stars atop look-alike grilles!) But the imitators miss the quintessential point : nobody, but nobody, ever buys a Mercedes for its looks.

World-famous cars use EVL valves

Did you know that EVL valves are used on cars like BMW, Jaguar, Mercedes-Benz, Peugeot and Volvo? EVL, a member of the Rane Group, began operations in 1959, collaborating with Farnborough Engg of UK, makers of the famous Tranco valves. EVL exports mainly to UK, USA, Australia, Singapore, Malaysia. In India, EVL products are OE on every vehicle ... more recently on the Maruti- Suzuki.

Engine Valves Limited
32, Cathedral Road, Madras 600 086

EVL

OBM 9224

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INCOMPARABLY HYATT.

What makes Hyatt Regency Delhi such a different experience for the business traveller?

A rare blend of ingredients that is a speciality of Hyatt hotels worldwide. Professional chefs with international work experience and experts in the art of culinary satisfaction. Deliciously varied cuisine as authentic as in the country of its origin. And the widest choice of vegetarian menus.

All this and more because food is one of our favourite forms of self-expression. It's how we show our creativity. And how we show our restaurants can be exceptional without being predictable.

Everytime you return, you'll discover another reason why Hyatt is the international traveller's hotel – worldwide. You'll agree, incomparable cuisine does make real business sense. Don't you WISH YOU WERE HERE℠

HYATT REGENCY® DELHI

INDIA

Reservations : Call the hotel 609911 Telex : 031-4579, 031-61512 HYT IN

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

of his mother's assassination. Preliminary inquiries and the initial findings of the Thakkar Commission have revealed the glaring loophole in that no one agency or officer could be held accountable for the prime minister's security with the Delhi Police and the Intelligence Bureau busy blaming each other for the lapses. To eliminate that overlap, a Special Protection Group (SPG) has been set up under the command of S.Subramanium, a joint director in the Cabinet Secretariat. The men who form the new force are hand-picked from the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF), the BSF and the Indo- Tibetan Border Police (ITBP) and are specially trained in VIP security operations. In the prime minister's house, all vehicles including those of chief ministers, are not allowed beyond a certain point. A 'ferry car' system is now in operation where all visitors except a designated few are transferred to specially screened cars and then allowed to proceed. Visitors have to pass through at least three metal detectors at the house and Rajiv's office.None of the security guards inside the prime minister's residential compound is allowed to carry Sten guns or even semi-automatic weapons. They are only armed with pistols as a measure to avoid a Mrs Gandhi-type situation where her security guards killed her with bursts from automatic weapons. All security personnel attached to the prime minister have to undertake firing practice every day. For additional protection, Rajiv wears a custom-tailored bullet-proof vest at all times.

BUT THE current terrorist threat, in its larger manifestation, is more external than internal. A voluminous top secret report prepared by RAW in 1984 after several months of investigation and data collection has detailed extensively the Pakistan connection in Sikh terrorism. The RAW dossier gives an accurate date-wise account of Pakistani involvement till the time of Bluestar. Since then, the dossier has been further supplemented by any number of statements made by Sikh terrorists under interrogation, the latest being that of Sarabjit Singh. Last May, Faqir Singh of Gurdaspur, arrested trying to cross the border, confessed that he along with two others had been in Pakistan for three months being trained by the Special Services Group, the Pakistan equivalent of RAW. He stated that he met a number of other Sikh youths under training and that they were given secessionist literature published by Sikh extremists abroad and finally given weapons and sent back with instructions to kill Hindus. Avtar Singh of Jammu, another prominent terrorist arrested, has confessed that he was trained in sabotage and told to set up an underground network in Jammu & Kashmir and recruit volunteers.

There are numerous such confessions which have been backed up by clandestine reports from Intelligence Bureau agents who have managed to cross the border and gain access to the training camps by posing as Sikh extremists. The steadily growing number of files on the Pakistan connection were shown to Pakistan Foreign Minister Sahebzada Yakub Khan during his recent visit to Delhi. But Home Ministry officials confess that much more pressure could be brought to bear on the diplomatic front but the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) seems to be playing down the issue. MEA officials say that they have done what they can in diplomatic terms but are handicapped by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's commitment to improve relations with that neighbouring country.

The real diplomatic thrust, consequently, is currently aimed at curbing the other external threat that emanates from Sikh extremist organisations abroad. The External Affairs Ministry and RAW have identified 27 separate organisations in active operation abroad in support of the Khalistan movement. The main ones are:

► The National Council of Khalistan, founded on April 12, 1980, by former student communist activist Jagjit Singh Chauhan in London. While Chauhan is the organisation's key propagandist, the action wing is headed by its General Secretary, Balbir Singh Sandhu. The organisation has branches in UK, West Germany, Canada and the US and draws its recruits mainly from Sikhs in these countries facing immigration problems. It maintains close liaison with the Nankana Sahib Foundation in Washington and the Jammu & Kashmir Liberation Army which was responsible for the murder of an Indian diplomat in Birmingham last year. Chauhan's Indian passport was revoked in April 1981 and in August a case was registered against him in India for sedition;

► The Nankana Sahib Foundation in Washington headed by Ganga Singh Dhillon, a prominent lobbyist and public relations expert who has close contacts with prominent US senators and claims to be a personal friend of Pakistan's General Zia and other top Pakistan officials. He has visited Pakistan frequently and the organisation seems to have unlimited funds. Dhillon is aided in his propagandist efforts by another prominent Washington lawyer and lobbyist, Ralph Singh. The latter has been working in close coordination with another key activist of the Nankana Sahib

BHAWAN SINGH

YOG JOY/TRIBUNE

An NSG commando (in black) on security duty (left) and Jarnail Singh, one of the assassins of Sant Longowal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SARABJIT SINGH

The Pakistan Link

WITH the arrest last fortnight in Amritsar of Sarabjit Singh, a Jammu-based All-India Sikh Students' Federation (AISSF) volunteer, and his sustained interrogation, the Indian Government has received final confirmation, about the involvement of Pakistan in training and motivating Sikh terrorists. By his own account, Sarabjit, who has a reward of Rs 50,000 on his head, stayed for about five months in Pakistan and was regularly in touch with some of the top extremists, including Attinderpal Singh, a key witness wanted in connection with the conspiracy behind Mrs Gandhi's assassination.

A prominent planner and recruiter for the terrorists, Sarabjit has made one of the most detailed and exhaustive disclosures about Pakistan's involvement starting from the time he was blindfolded and taken to Lahore and then to hide-outs and training camps in Pakistan. He has described Pakistani officials who trained him, and has furnished details about the crossing points along the Line of Actual Control.

The Sarabjit interrogation gives in some detail his transition from a goldsmith's son in Gurdaspur, to an AISSF activist during the Bhindranwale era and later to a prominent activist and planner. The transition was smooth: born in village Putligarh in Amritsar on March 5, 1958, the eldest of three brothers, Sarabjit was an intelligent student having passed MA in Punjabi with merit. But one crucial step led to another and Sarabjit's academic career ground to a halt when he became a member of the AISSF, as an activist of the outlawed organisation's Jammu unit. Sarabjit was slowly drawn to centre-stage by leaders like Harminder Singh Sandhu. He went underground after Operation Bluestar in June and with the Indian security agencies breathing down his neck, sought refuge in Pakistan where he was welcomed with open arms.

After his arrest last fortnight, he was subjected to intensive interrogation by various intelligence agencies. INDIA TODAY was able to obtain a portion of his interrogation report:

Initiation: "In 1978 I was baptised at the Anandpur Sahib gurudwara and after that I shifted to Jammu from Chandigarh and started organising the All-India Sikh Students Federation with the help of Avtar Singh. From '78 to '81 Avtar Singh and I were in the forefront, launching agitations and protest marches together. There were training camps in Jammu where training in the use of firearms was given. In one of them a young volunteer died of accidental gunshot wounds."

Morchas and agitations: Courted arrest several times in Jammu and also during the arrest of Bhindranwale.

Sarabjit: detailed disclosure

"During the Non-Aligned Meet I was asked by Sandhu to distribute some press releases to newspaper offices." Sarabjit claims that he had no idea what the releases related to. "In Delhi I met Virsa Singh and Sarabjit Singh Tony of Amritsar and distributed press releases. Virsa Singh later told me that he was responsible for the bomb blast at Palika Bazar." (INDIA TODAY, June 15).

Sarabjit is wary about admitting his involvement in any violent activity. In 1983, he was asked by Avtar Singh to carry arms to Amritsar several times. In June 1984, two Sikh youths confessed to him that they had bombed railway tracks. Sarabjit claims that by June 1984, he had completely stopped all his activity and gone underground.

Post-Bluestar and Pakistan: "In September I went to Srinagar and stayed in gurudwaras there. In the last week of November when I was in Singh Sabha in Raghunath Bazar in Jammu, two clean-shaved youths got in touch with me and offered to help me to cross the Actual Line of Control. I later received a message from Attinderpal Singh. On December 16, 1984, I took the help of these youths and crossed the Line of Actual Control from Devigarh village to a Pakistani checkpost near village Kharore. I reached at about 7 p.m. I told the ranger of the post to call military intelligence. After two-and-a-half hours, a jeep came and picked me up. I was taken to the next point which was a military guest-house in Sialkot. That was the day of the Pakistan referendum and no one talked to me.

"On December 21 a person named 'Malik' met me. I was taken to another place, a well-furnished house. Malik noted down my bio-data and asked for details about me. I was questioned for two to three days. I think Malik was a colonel in the Pak army. He was fair-complexioned, stout built, a mole on his left side cheek, about 35 years in age wearing a salwar kameez.

"I was taken to a well-furnished bungalow. The house was surrounded by a huge boundary wall about six feet high. I was kept indoors and my door was locked from outside. But I was looked after well. I realised that there were other Sikh youths staying in the same bungalow because I used to hear voices. One day, two Sikhs met me. One of them said his name was Faqir Singh and the other did not disclose his name.

"Malik asked me what I want. I told him that I want to meet Attinderpal Singh. Initially, he pleaded ignorance and claimed that he had no knowledge where he was. But two or three days later he promised to try and locate him. On January 5 I was shifted to another bungalow. We had to travel a lot in a jeep covered with curtains. We had to travel for about one-and-a-half hours. We then reached another bungalow again with high boundary walls. It was in a remote section of the city. Attinderpal Singh met me here.

"Others with him included S.Gurjit Singh (president, AISSF, Ferozepur) and Mohansingh Gardwai. In the bungalow, one Colonel Asif spoke to us. We told Asif that we wanted political asylum and financial help. Asif told us that our (the Pakistani) Government has yet to take a stand on the kind of support you (Sikh extremists) will get. But he promised to get guns. Our contention was that asylum should be given to us...we later learnt that some Sikh youths were in jail. We insisted that Asif take us there."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Planning and execution: "On February 17 we were all taken to another bungalow in the outskirts of Lahore. Asif took Attinderpal Singh and Gurjit Singh to jail where they met many other Sikh youths including Baldev Singh and Ajaib Singh.

"By March the political situation in Punjab had changed very fast. Attinderpal Singh and Gurjit Singh had differences. In spite of it we all sat together and discussed our strategy. It was decided that I would go to India with Baldev Singh. Pakistanis also liked the idea. By April we started receiving training from the Pakistanis. We were taught the use of revolvers and Sten guns and automatic weapons. We were also taught the use of chemicals.

"During our stay in Pakistan, Asif and Malik instigated the boys. We were repeatedly told that the Indian Government was crushing the Sikhs. We were also told to arrange for hide-outs and safe houses in Punjab. In Lahore, Amrik Singh of Akal Federation met us. It appears that there are approximtely 500 Sikh youths but I do not know whether all of them are receiving training. There are 300 to 350 youths in Kot Lakhpat jail and the rest have been kept in safe houses.

"On the night of April 12 and 13, Baldev Singh and I, with the help of Pakistani smugglers, crossed the Actual Line of Control. I do not know the name of the Indian post or the Pakistan post but we travelled for eight to ten hours... but I noticed that it was somewhere near Fazilka. Before leaving, Asif gave us one .455 revolver, 30 bullets and Rs 2,000 each for personal use. When I reached Amritsar I handed over the weapons to Baldev Singh. I began staying in the Golden Temple. On April 28-29, Baldev Singh came back with others, including Harminder Singh Kehlon and Dr Bagwan Singh.

"I told them of my desire to meet Baba Joginder Singh and in the first week of May, we—Kehlon, Dr Bhagwan Singh and myself—went to Rhode to meet Babaji. The talks were not encouraging. We demanded hide-outs but they refused.... Finally I was getting frustrated.... I was planning to surrender when I was actually arrested by the Amritsar police."

—RAJU SANTHANAM

Foundation, Lt-General Jaswant Singh Bhullar, head of the so-called World Sikh Organisation, to coordinate Sikh activities in North America;

► The Dal Khalsa, originally founded in India with one sole objective—the creation of an independent Sikh state. The UK branch was started in January 4, 1983 and a West German branch opened in June, 1983. The guiding light of the organisation was the late Giani Bakshish Singh, a Birmingham-based pro-Naxalite Sikh leader. Currently, the organisation is under the control of Jaswant Singh Thekedar, mukh panch of the Dal Khalsa, UK, who has issued statements like : "Only terror will help us to achieve Khalistan". He has been organising "education camps" for Sikhs in UK and West Germany and Vancouver, Canada. The Dal Khalsa was responsible for the hijack of an Indian Airlines Boeing to Lahore in September, 1983, and also claimed responsibility for the murder of Lala Jagat Narain and deputy inspector general of police, A.S. Atwal in Amritsar. The Dal Khalsa was outlawed by the Indian Government on May 1, 1982;

► The Babbar Khalsa: The organisation adopts the struggle of the Jews for the creation of Israel as a model for its activities. Mainly based in Canada, where it was established in 1981, it has lately extended its activities into the US, UK, Holland and West Germany. The Babbar Khalsa claims that Pakistan is the "natural and cultural neighbour of the Sikhs" and has launched an all-out effort to recruit Sikhs abroad for the creation of Khalistan through a Khalistan Liberation Army to be trained and armed abroad. In pursuit of this aim, in February 1982, the organisation hired Johan Vanderhorst, a veteran mercenary who had fought in Rhodesia, to train Sikh recruits in British Columbia. Vanderhorst hired fellow mercenaries by putting advertisements in Canadian papers offering them salaries of US $1,250 a month to train people in the use of weapons and combat techniques. In a later interview, Vanderhorst stated that he had been hired by a group of Sikhs to "help them take over the state of Punjab in India". The Indian Government obtained clandestine pictures of the training camp in British Columbia which had been handed over to the Canadian Government. In February 1984, Babbar Khalsa leader Sujan Singh Gill announced the setting up of suicide squads and issued warnings to all Sikhs who "showed weakness". The plot uncovered by the FBI of five Sikhs, including Lal Singh and Ammand Singh, to assassinate Rajiv Gandhi and Bhajan Lal in the US, is believed to have been organised by the Babbar Khalsa. The head of the organisation is Talwinder Singh Parmar. The organisation also seems to have unlimited funds and the FBI disclosed that the terrorists who they contacted had a 10-acre farm in Columbia, New Jersey, as a secret training base.

THE THREAT from Sikh extremist organisations abroad, as far as the Indian Government is concerned, is a serious one, specially in the light of the suspected sabotage of the Air-India jumbo, Kanishka, earlier this year. Recently, a clean-shaven Sikh, Gurmeet Singh Dhoot, was arrested by British police after being found target shooting in some woods outside Oxford. A search of his house revealed a mini bullet-making machine and a bullet-riddled, life-size cut-out of Rajiv Gandhi that had been used for target practice. The Indian Government has also confirmed reports of Sikhs frantically buying sophisticated arms in West Germany and Switzerland. The main buyers appear to be the US-based retired Sikh general Bhullar and his second in command, Rajinder Singh Purewal (Purewal was arrested in Vancouver some months ago with parts of an Israel Uzi machine-gun in his suitcase). Purewal is also known to have made two visits to Pakistan before his arrest in Canada.

Latest reports state that the Sikhs are also getting training from IRA veterans in sabotage techniques and the use of explosives for payment of large sums of money. The other source of finance is, of course, Pakistan agents abroad. The Havelock Road gurudwara in London, the most important gurudwara outside India and one frequented by Pakistani diplomats, had sent £1,00,000 to Bhindranwale in early 1984, according to Indian intelligence reports. Further, the Pakistan Embassy in London had set up a 'Khalistan cell' in 1981 manned by four army officers headed by a brigadier, which has been coordinating anti-India activities on behalf of the Pakistan Government. Beant Singh Dhatt, general secretary of the Shepherd's Bush gurudwara, has stated that he was contacted on numerous occasions by Pakistan diplomats who gave him secessionist literature and offered money to propagate Khalistan. Dhatt also alleged that the Sikh militants were also receiving money from the Chinese Embassy. Indian Government intelligence on external groups has increased dramati-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Proven technology from the world's best...

will keep us ahead of the rest!

The first in India to produce Petro-based Polypropylene Filament Yarn - the yarn of tomorrow. A growth oriented Company undoubtedly poised for a great future. Just take a look at its credentials.

Distinguished and experienced Promoters. Outstanding Filament Yarn Project. Latest technology provided by EMS INVENTA, SWITZERLAND. Versatile plant and machinery supplied by Barmag Barmer West Germany. And the product-Polypropylene Filament Yarn to be manufactured in India for the first time.

Indeed a blue chip Company, the first of its kind in India to manufacture Polypropylene Filament Yarn — the wonder yarn of the eighties — that has taken the advanced countries by storm. Parasrampuria Synthetics commences commercial production by October, 1985.

What's more, the Company is entering the Capital market with a Public Issue of 17,20,000 Equity Shares of Rs. 10 each for cash at par. A splendid opportunity for investors to share the prosperity of a project that will soon take Indian Industry by storm.

PUBLIC ISSUE OF 17,20,000 EQUITY SHARES OF RS. 10/- EACH FOR CASH AT PAR

HIGHLIGHTS

- Promoters—the House of Parasrampuria are in business for 120 years—trade, housing etc.
- First Plant of its kind in India to manufacture Textile grade Polypropylene Filament yarn—Yarn of tommorrow.
- Plant also capable of manufacturing POLYESTER and NYLON Filament yarn.
- Two different filament yarns can be manufactured simultaneously.
- World renowned technology from EMS INVENTA, SWITZERLAND.
- Most Versatile plant, supplied by BARMAG BARMER, WEST GERMANY—world leaders in this field.
- U.P.S. SYSTEM for non-stop production even for a fraction of a second; backed by 100% captive power generation.
- No gestation period—commercial production from October, 1985.
- Plant situated at Bhiwadi—a centrally notified backward area—only 70 kms from Delhi.
- Easy liquidity—listing on Delhi, Bombay and Ahmedabad Stock Exchanges.
- 80CC and Wealth Tax benefits.

ISSUE OPENS ON 16TH SEPTEMBER, 1985

Managers to the Issue
The Merchant Banking Division of The Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India Limited
8th Floor, Hindustan Times House
Kasturba Gandhi Marg.
New Delhi-110 001.

Advisers to the Issue
Canara Bank
Merchant Banking Bureau,
1-E, Vandana Building,
Tolstoy Marg,
New Delhi-110 001.

PARASRAMPURIA SYNTHETICS LIMITED
Regd. Off. : 103 Surya Mansion, 1 Kaushalya Park, Hauz Khas, New Delhi-110 016

The yarn of tomorrow

PARASRAMPURIA SYNTHETICS

PRESSMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cally in the last two years, mainly because of the additional intelligence operatives from RAW and the IB that have been posted under diplomatic cover in key embassies like Toronto, Vancouver, London, Washington, New York, Bonn and Paris.

Europe and North America, however, are not the only centres of Sikh separatism. Two months ago, Indian intelligence agencies uncovered a complex plot involving a large racket in foreign exchange which was being collected from wealthy Sikhs in India and sent via Dubai to Mexico where an underground training centre for Sikhs is apparently operating. Investigations established that over Rs 6 crore had already been sent out through the conduit. But so far, the Government's knowledge of Sikh terrorist activities abroad has yielded little in terms of diplomatic results. At least ten prominent terrorists wanted for murder and sedition in India who have been arrested by foreign security agencies in the US, UK, West Germany and Canada, have had Indian extradition requests pending against them for months.

BUT THE strategy of the Indian Government is to now put additional pressure on governments that are not responsive to India's requests to crack down on Sikh extremism. One example is Britain, where the lucrative Westland helicopter deal was abruptly aborted when it was in its final stages and government sources say that this practice should eventually pay dividends, specially in the case of European countries with large business and financial stakes in India. Inside the country, the strategy is to tighten up borders and entry points to deny access to Sikh terrorists entering from Pakistan or abroad and all border forces have been issued shoot at sight orders. Though the border with Pakistan is physically impossible to seal, the BSF and other border organisations have been supplemented with additional forces at known crossing points so that surveillance at least is maintained at peak level. But that will not be easy considering that terrorists have started entering from Nepal and Bangladesh as well. Last month, the Ministry of External Affairs was in possession of a top secret report from Nepal which indicated that Sikh terrorists are being trained by Chinese agents at certain locations in that country for infiltration into India, thus adding a new dimension to the problem.

BHAWAN SINGH

Special security personnel on duty at Red Fort on Independence Day

Government officials involved in tackling the problem, however, are confident that the terrorists currently operating within the country, at least, are on the run. "They now have little chance of regrouping or coordinating their activities since we have a better and clearer idea of their movements now," says a senior police official in Punjab. The general belief is that local terrorists are split up into a number of small mobile groups operating independently of each other and mainly confined to northern India. In that belief, intelligence agencies are currently engaged in the most extensive and concerted operation ever to track down the main groups and eliminate them from the scene. "In its entirety, the operation is massive in scale and in terms of the coordinated inputs we are getting and we are hopeful of success," says a senior IB official.

According to conservative estimates, there are currently a total of 10,000 security personnel including officers and men engaged full-time in tackling terrorism, most of them in Punjab. This is apart from the para military forces like the CRPF and the BSF who are also involved in terrorist-related activity. In Punjab, four battalions (approximately 4,500 men) of the Punjab Armed Police under the command of a Jalandhar-based Inspector General of Police (operations) K.P.S.Gill who was involved earlier in curbing the Assam agitation, are solely involved in anti-terrorist operations. For the coming elections, this force will be considerably supplemented by some 17,000 additional CRPF personnel.

But in the long run, coordinating officials are convinced that a return to normalcy in Punjab will prove the main deterrent for terrorists. The Punjab Government has already released over 3,000 people held in jail after Operation Bluestar and more releases are expected soon, including those of AISSF activists against whom no specific cases are registered. Arjun Singh has also issued an appeal to all Sikh youth who are underground to give themselves up and pledged that they would be dealt with leniently under the due process of the law. Already, the response to the appeal has been surprisingly satisfactory and Punjab administration officials feel that more will come forward after the elections in September.

Ultimately, however, officials realise that terrorism is going to be a permanent problem, perhaps not on the scale it has been earlier, but still capable of major upheavals in terms of the selection of targets. The crucial test of both the Government's confidence and the terrorists' disruptive capability will be in the coming elections in Punjab. Government sources say that security will be the tightest-ever for any election held anywhere in the world and that with the obvious targets—the candidates—identified, they are confident of countering the threat with minimal loss of life. That of course, is still the ultimate irony, that the moment of truth for Indian terrorism and the forces ranged against them will be in an election in Punjab, where it all started in the hands of a minor but mesmeric village priest.

—DILIP BOBB with
RAJU SANTHANAM and SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSAM

Celebration of Peace

RONGALI Bihu is the premier Assamese festival of rejoicing and merrymaking. And this year, it seems, it came four months later than usual. Armed with the copy of the accord signed with the Centre, as the 50-odd leaders of the six-year-old anti-foreigners agitation landed at Guwahati's Borjhar airport last fortnight, the ethnic Assamese population suddenly found itself in the kind of frenzy it had not known for years. From the airport, to the Judges' Field, in the heart of the town 22 km away, over three lakh people, men, women and little children, burst into spontaneous dancing and slogan-shouting. For once, it seemed, even the agitation leaders had failed to gauge the popular mood as an AAGSP leader realised on walking out of the airport lounge and doing a little Bihu jig. Within a minute he was being pushed back by the policemen as the stampede began and thousands lunged forward to get a glimpse of the returning heroes. "They were so desperate to touch them only I know how difficult it was to bring them out of the airport safely," said Guwahati police superintendent Rajiv Mehta, ruing the loss of his name-plate and his trousers torn in the melee.

The convoy inched forward and the scenes of frenzied rejoicing were repeated en route at the Guwahati University Campus, for many years the nucleus of all agitational activity in the state. Girl students showered flower petals, boys burst crackers, many shouted "Hiteswar Saikia we will bury you alive" and then in one solemn moment the agitation leaders got off the shoulders of their supporters and prostrated themselves before the stately martyrs' column with a chorus of mekhala chadar clad girls singing "Hey swahid tomak sahasra pranam" (O martyr a thousand salutations to you.) Said Jonai Rehman, one of the chorus girls, later: "This is a moment of celebration. Now we have to make it complete with a victory in the elections".

That indeed was also on the minds of the movement leaders as they strode the podium at Judges' Field where it had all begun six years ago on the call of 'Glory to Mother Assam', building up to the kind of mass movement the country had never seen, not even in the days of Gandhi.

SHEKHAR GUPTA

Mahanta at martyrs' memorial

Arising out of the Assamese fear of losing their cultural identity and political power because of the unbridled influx of Bengali-speaking infiltrators from the bordering districts of Bangladesh, the movement had the state administration paralysed for four years, and for a substantial period the agitators blocked the supply of the state's oil and plywood to the rest of the country. What began as a by and large peaceful movement found a violent catharsis in the February 1983 election which, in the face of a boycott by the ethnic Assamese, cost thousands of lives. But today the agitation leaders were, for a change, looking forward to an election. "We have had to make compromises but we have won a victory," said All Assam Students' Union (AASU) President Prafulla Kumar Mahanta and then added the tell-tale observation: "We were not going to walk into Dispur stealthily. We will go there after winning the election." Shortly afterwards, AASU leaders and activists were making it clear that Mahanta and AASU General Secretary Bhrigu Kumar Phukan were planning to launch a new, regional political party, perhaps amalgamating Asom Jatiyatabadi Dal, a constituent of the All Assam Gana Sangram Parishad (AAGSP) and sundry other regional groups. Almost immediately efforts began to work out new political alignments to forge a front against the Congress(I), obviously the Assamese elite's bete noire. Even more than the Congress(I), in fact, the ire was now directed at Hiteswar Saikia, frail Ahom chief minister who had kept the agitators at bay for over two years now, burrowing into their organisation's soft underbelly—the Muslim students—in his relentless, cruel quest to split it from within.

'High on cannabis, Saikia is lost in his long slumber', was the favourite slogan of the throng, but the wily Ahom from Sibsagar is hardly the kind to be caught unawares. Making good use of the week-long gap between the signing of the accord and the agitators' return to Guwahati he had already stolen a tactical march over them, claiming the agreement as something he had achieved for the Assamese and minorities and accusing the AASU and AAGSP for "running such an expensive movement for so long to achieve so little". In an audacious move Saikia, who had hung on to his chair by the skin of his teeth, printed the text of the accord as an Assam Government document carrying a cleverly-worded foreword signed by him, offering "all cooperation to the Centre in implementing the accord." Said he: "This accord is my victory," arguing: "This is the best possible thing for the minorities. Earlier the Government officials could harass any poor Bengali who did not have a citizenship certificate. Now all those who came before 1966 have been regularised. I will obviously seek people's mandate on the accord."

For a man who had just dissolved his state Assembly and converted his cabinet into one with mere caretaking responsibilities, Saikia today presents a remarkably tenacious exterior. "What has the AASU gained if the next election is going to be held on the basis of the 1971 electoral rolls?" he asks. He rules out all possibility of the disenfranchisement of the 1966-71 infiltrators before the forthcoming election, saying that will take at least a year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This, indeed, is the movement leaders' Achilles' heel. Over the years, and through endless rounds of negotiations with the Centre, the movement leaders have maintained that as far as the presence of foreigners on the electoral rolls is concerned they will make no compromise. But now they face the paradox of fighting the next election with the names of all the 1966-71 entrants on the rolls. It is a strange anomaly, for it is theoretically possible that a person from this stream may be elected chief minister in the forthcoming election and may then be disenfranchised under the accord. The agitators accept that it is inconvenient to analyse this paradox but plead that there was no way out.

But this kind of realism does not detract from the fact that the implementation of the accord is likely to involve insurmountable practical problems. No one yet believes that people who came into the state almost two decades back could now be effectively identified and there are specific problems such as:

▸ The 1967 electoral rolls, which will form the basis of the identification of the 1966-71 entrants are available only for 57 of the 126 constituencies. Partial rolls are available for 40 constituencies and none for the rest.

▸ The accord implies that all those who were expelled in the '60s under the Prevention of Infiltration from Pakistan (PIP) scheme and returned subsequently will have to be identified and deported all over again. Their numbers are likely to be over 2.5 lakh and for their identification the government agencies will need to go behind 1966, leading to additional complications.

▸ Since the foreigners of the 1966-71 stream will be voting in the next poll it will be legally difficult to disenfranchise them subsequently. In fact according to many legal experts they could later go to the courts and easily get their disenfranchisement struck down.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"This is the best possible thing for the minorities ...Now all those who came before 1966 have been regularised. I will seek the people's mandate on the accord."

HITESWAR SAIKIA
chief minister of Assam

Government officials in Delhi and Dispur, however, say this will not look all that different once the new machinery to handle this task is constituted. But as of now no one even wants to talk about the specifics of doing this. Says V. Ramakrishnan, deputy chief election commissioner: "As far as we are concerned the Election Commission has nothing to do about this yet. For any action, as a matter of fact, the accord will have to be first translated into legislation."

Besides implementation, the accord will also add substantially to the existing ethnic and communal tensions. Minority leaders rightly point out that once the entrants of the 1966-71 stream are identified and their names put on a list for disenfranchisement they will always be open to harassment. This is also expressed by the Left-Front CPI(M) leaders in neighbouring West Bengal.

In fact within 24 hours of the announcement of the accord the West Bengal Government ordered a special alert along the Assam-Bengal border to prevent a refugee influx. And even though nothing really happened, Jalpaiguri's Forward Bloc leader and state Industries Minister Nirmal Bose argued that large numbers of non-Assamese families were bound to trickle into the state, creating "intolerable tensions in north Bengal as land availability shrinks and prices soar." West Bengal Chief Minister Jyoti Basu personally led the chorus of protest calling the award "absurd and improper" and after a meeting held on August 21, the Left Front decided to launch a movement

THE ACCORD

No Losers

ADDRESSING a rally in Guwahati on August 12 the prime minister promised an accord on the Assam problem that will leave no winners or losers. And true to that promise the authors of the accord have performed a remarkable balancing trick. For example:

▸ The accord lays down January 1, 1966 as the base year for detection of foreigners. While for the agitators it reads better than the 1967 offer made to them by former governor L.P. Singh five years ago, it changes nothing effectively as the 1967 electoral rolls will still be the basic document for the identification of foreigners. Also, from the minorities' point of view it protects the large number of Bengali Hindus who came in the wake of the 1965 India-Pakistan conflict. Besides, the names of people who came in between January 1, 1966, and March 25, 1971, will be deleted from electoral rolls for only 10 years and those who entered Assam after March 25, 1971 will continue to be identified and expelled.

▸ Special steps to protect the linguistic, cultural and social identity of the Assamese people have all along been promised by the Centre. But the accord is unspecific on the steps though the movement leaders say they are supposed to nominate a small sub-committee to hammer out the details with the Government. In any case, the package does not contain anything as drastic as a ban on outsiders buying property in Assam which had been widely anticipated.

▸ An obvious sop to the agitators is the promise to reconsider sympathetically the cases of disciplinary action and criminal cases, except those for heinous crimes, filed in the course of the agitation. For the relatively harmless kind of agitator the Government has offered to raise the upper age limit in public services. Most Assamese students lost two to three academic years in the course of the agitation.

The package effectively seals a long-standing controversy without involving any major concessions on government policy or loss of face by the agitators. The minorities in Assam differ with it but even for them the accord could mean a positive change if it achieved its main objective, of bringing about lasting ethnic and linguistic peace.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ELECTORAL ROLLS

New Problems

FOR OVER six years now, an agreement on a cut-off year was considered the key to the solution of the Assam riddle. But last fortnight, as that landmark was reached, officials and politicians realised that the cut-off year was only the beginning of what promises to be a whole new problem.

Officials say the task of cleaning up the electoral rolls beginning with 1966 is daunting, if not impossible. The crux of the problem is numbers. The agitators have always argued that the electoral rolls contain the names of at least two million foreigners. The Government maintains that the numbers are much lower. To find out the truth the election officials have conducted an intensive door-to-door enumeration all over the state and the Election Commission is finalising electoral rolls updated backwards to 1971.

The list compiled by the enumerators was compared with the 1971 electoral rolls. The 70 lakh names that figured in the 1971 rolls were retained in the new rolls and so were their direct descendants. Intensive, individual investigations were then carried out on the antecedents of the remaining three million listed in the course of the enumera-

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

1 RATABARI(SC)
2 PATHARKANDI
3 KARIMGANJ NORTH
4 KARIMGANJ SOUTH
5 BADARPUR
6 HAILAKANDI
7 KATLICHERRA
8 ALAGPUR
9 SILCHAR
10 SONAI
11 DHOLAI(SC)
12 UDHARBOND
13 LAKHIPUR
14 BORKHOLA
15 KATIGORA
16 HAFLONG(ST)
17 BOKAJAN(ST)
18 HOWRAGHAT(ST)
19 DIPHU(ST)
20 BAITHALANGSO(ST)
21 MANKACHAR
22 SALMARA SOUTH
23 DHUBRI
24 GAURIPUR
25 GOLOKGANJ
26 BILASIPARA WEST
27 BILASIPARA EAST
28 GOSSAIGAON
29 KOKRAJHAR WEST(ST)
30 KOKRAJHAR EAST(ST)
31 SIDLI(ST)
32 BIJNI
33 BONGAIGAON
34 ABHAYAPURI NORTH
35 ABHAYAPURI SOUTH(SC)
36 DADHNOI(ST)
37 GOALPARA EAST
38 GOALPARA WEST
39 JALESWAR
40 SORBHOG
41 BHABANIPUR
42 PATACHARKUCHI
43 BARPETA
44 JANIA
45 BAGHBOR
46 SARUKHETRI
47 CHENGA
48 BOKO(SC)
49 CHAYAGAON
50 PALASBARI
51 JALUKBARI
52 DISPUR
53 GAUHATI EAST
54 GAUHATI WEST
55 HAJO
56 KAMALPUR
57 RANGIYA
58 TAMULPUR
59 NALBARI
60 BARKHETRI
61 DHARMAPUR
62 BARAMA(ST)
63 CHAPAGURI(ST)
64 KALAIGAON
65 SIPAJHAR
66 MANGALDOI(SC)
67 DALGAON
68 PANERY
69 UDALGURI(ST)
70 MAZBAT
71 DHEKIAJULI
72 BARCHALLA
73 TEZPUR
74 RANGAPARA
75 SOOTEA
76 BISWANATH
77 BEHALI
78 GOHPUR
79 JAGIROAD(SC)
80 MARIGAON
81 LAHARIGHAT
82 RAHA
83 DHING
84 BATADRAVA
85 RUPAHIHAT
86 NOWGONG
87 BARHAMPUR
88 SAMAGURI
89 KALIABOR
90 JAMUNAMUKH
91 HOJAI
92 LUMDING
93 BOKAKHAT
94 SARUPATHAR
95 GOLAGHAT
96 KHUMTAI
97 DERGAON(SC)
98 JORHAT
99 MAJULI(ST)
100 TITABOR
101 MARIANI
102 TEOK
103 AMGURI
104 NAZIRA
105 MAHMARA
106 SONARI
107 THOWRA
108 SIBSAGAR
109 BIHPURIA
110 NAOBOICHA
111 LAKHIMPUR
112 DHAKUAKHANA(ST)
113 DHEMAJI(ST)
114 JONAI(ST)
115 MORAN
116 DIBRUGARH
117 LAHOWAL
118 DULIAJAN
119 TINGKHONG
120 NAHARKATIA
121 CHABUA
122 TINSUKIA
123 DIGBOI
124 MARGHERITA
125 DOOM DOOMA
126 SADIYA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tion. Now, with the rolls more or less finalised for 113 of the 126 constituencies, Election Commission officials confirm that over five lakh names have already been struck out. The chopping will be greater in the remaining constituencies and finally, after the claims and objections are sorted out, the fresh electoral rolls could have about seven lakh voters less than the adults enumerated earlier this year. This will also contribute later to making the process of detection and deportation of the post-1971 infiltrators easier. The list can serve as a basic document for detection and deportation.

But election officials admit that even their present task, of rectifying the rolls with 1971 as the base year for holding the forthcoming elections in the state is far from easy. After a series of meetings with the Assam agitation leaders Chief Election Commissioner R.K. Trivedi conceded their demand for a thorough review of the enumerated list and draft rolls in the 13 constituencies spread all over lower and central Assam. Seven of these, expectedly, fall in the Goalpara region bordering Bangladesh and the rest from the regions of Kamrup, Darrang and Nowgong dominated by immigrant Muslims. The Election Commission has now appointed a senior officer in each of the 13 constituencies to act as additional chief electoral officer (ACEO) and supervise the review. "This is being done most thoroughly, at the level of senior officers. We have even got officers of commissioner's rank as ACEO's and from the police side we have deputy inspector-generals. This process is not being handled by constables any more," says Assam Chief Electoral Officer P.C.Mishra. The Assam agitators, however, are still sceptical.

At the other end of the spectrum, the minorities have the opposite view. They argue that the Election Commission's demands on an individual to prove his Indian citizenship are too exacting. "How many poor people in Indian villages possess birth or citizenship certificates?" asks Amit Kumar Nag, the Guwahati-based correspondent of Amrita Bazar Patrika. The leaders argue that such documents as school certificates, ration cards and radio licences should be considered proof of citizenship. Even Chief Minister Hiteswar Saikia sent a letter to Trivedi, complaining about the attitude of the commission. But Trivedi was not impressed by the chief minister's arguments.

against the award.

Ironically, irritating though it was, the protests from West Bengal also brought unexpected relief to the Assam agitators. "If the accord brings us nothing new, as Saikia has been claiming, why has it got Jyoti Basu so upset?" they asked their audiences at a series of mass contact meetings in the Brahmaputra valley last fortnight. But they were not underestimating Saikia's capacity to exploit the compromises made in the accord later at the hustings.

PRIVATELY, they also admit that they are awed by the kind of defiance Saikia has been able to put up before the party high command. At the talks, it seems, the Government had agreed to retaining Saikia as the head of a three or four-member caretaker cabinet. But Saikia retained 17, explaining it away to the prime minister in the light of his "political compulsions". This was also his way of slighting the agitation leaders. But even Saikia realises that he cannot take this defiance too far, for his future depends on whether the high command lets him lead the party in the poll.

And he has already had his little brush with authority. On August 12, as Rajiv Gandhi visited Guwahati in connection with the party centenary celebrations, Dharanidhar Basumatari, the state Congress(I) chief loudly asked at the public meeting: "Today, let me ask where is AASU, where is AAGSP?" The prime minister later sternly pulled up Saikia for having allowed that on the eve of a possible accord with the agitators. It is thus not for no reason now that Basumatari finds his head on the chopping block. The high command is likely to choose a new party chief for the state within the next few days.

The Centre, it is obvious will not allow the precious gains in Assam to be frittered away, for the stakes are high. An accord in Assam, sources in North Block say, should promise peace not just in the state but in the rest of the north-eastern states surrounding Assam. For example, in Mizoram, Nagaland, Tripura and Manipur, the insurgencies by themselves are incapable of causing widespread trouble, barring the odd ambush here and there. So far the malcontents had looked up to Assam to maintain a disturbed atmosphere in the region, straining the security forces' resources. The accord changes all this. Intelligence sources reveal that feelers have already begun to come in. While Mizoram is already on the verge of a solution with Laldenga making highly conciliatory statements at Aizawl last fortnight, clear signals are also being perceived in Tripura. The Tripura National Volunteers (TNV) guerrillas have killed over two dozen policemen in the past six months and have not conceded any ground to the security forces despite repeated induction of fresh paramilitary troops. But last fortnight TNV sympathisers were circulating pamphlets in the tribal areas, containing a tell-tale message from Bejoy Hrangkhawl, the TNV supremo, saying: "If the Government can negotiate across the table with the Mizos, what is wrong with doing the same with us?" This is obviously an olive branch.

Interestingly, intelligence men place the two recent ambushes by the National Socialist Council of Nagaland (NSCN) in similar perspective. "That is their own way of reminding the Government of their presence, of saying that we are also around," says an officer. But the possibility of a thaw with the NSCN, by far the most belligerent and militarily the strongest of all the north-eastern insurgent groups is not merely a matter of conjecture. Nagaland Chief Minister S. Chubatoshi Jamir has been frequently sending mediators to the NSCN hideouts in Burma. Says he: "Yes, we are in touch with the NSCN including its leaders Muivah and Isaac Swu. They are keen to have talks with the Centre and we think that it is the best course to peace even if it takes slightly longer."

Clearly, on the north-eastern front the Centre is now looking for permanent gains and the crucial question is the kind of price it is prepared to pay for this. There is talk already of the possibility of some kind of an electoral adjustment between the Congress(I) and the movement leaders who have nothing against the Central Government. "Rajiv Gandhi is a dynamic leader. We have nothing against him or the Central Government," says AASU executive member Gagan Dutta. In fact over the past fortnight Guwahati has seen the strange spectacle of people shouting zindabad for Rajiv Gandhi and murdabad for Saikia. That leaves the Centre with a tricky problem.

In the course of the talks, as the deadlock on Saikia's fate entered the early hours of Independence Day, Rajiv Gandhi clinched the issue with a disarming: "Be reasonable. I cannot cause a revolt in my party." That dilemma still exists. If Saikia goes there will be widespread protests within the party. If he stays, the movement leadership and Congress(I) will continue to be ranged on the opposite sides, accord or no accord.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Guwahati

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NATIONAL ANTHEM

Jana Gana Mana

WAS INDIA'S national anthem composed as a patriotic song—or did it celebrate the visit of King George V, Britain's monarch who arrived in India in December 1911 when Rabindranath Tagore's Jana Gana Mana was first sung? The controversy is about as old as the song, having recurred at periodic intervals even after the Constituent Assembly formally adopted it as the Republic's national anthem in 1950. Now, M.V.Krishna Warrier, headmaster of an obscure Sanskrit school at Palazhi near Trichur, has given the controversy a new currency. He has sought to substitute it with a Sanskrit verse of his own—a kind of mellifluous lullaby with a patriotic content so obtrusive that even the staunchest patriot flinches with embarrassment.

Warrier had recently banned the national anthem from his experimental school where all the 49 students read, write and talk in Sanskrit. But the Union Education Ministry intervened last fortnight, threatening to dub the substitution of the national anthem as a criminal offence. Warrier promptly complied with the government order by lifting the ban on Jana Gana Mana in his school. But the debate smouldered on, this time with editorial patronage from Janmabhumi, the Malayalam organ of the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS). Warrier himself told INDIA TODAY he had a great deal of respect for Tagore but that Jana Gana Mana was not worthy of being the national anthem because it was written to herald the arrival of George V in India.

The allegation drew predictable flak from Visva-Bharati, the university founded by Tagore at Santiniketan in West Bengal. Its historian Vice-Chancellor, Nemai Sadhan Bose, wrote off Warrier's-charge as "ill-informed gibberish". The views of the Visva-Bharati establishment, including those of Bose and Prabodh Chandra Sen, a widely acclaimed Tagore scholar who authored a book on the national anthem, centred on the poet's own disclaimer in a letter written to a friend in 1939. Tagore wrote: "I should only insult myself if I cared to answer those who consider me capable of such unbounded stupidity as to sing in praise of George the Fourth or George the Fifth as the Eternal Charioteer...."

The charge, as it were, sprang from a discrepancy in newspaper reports of the proceedings of the 28th session of the Indian National Congress, held in Calcutta on December 26 and 27, 1911. Jana Gana Mana was first sung on the second day's session. The Congress, at that time, was dominated by the moderates who were grateful to the British for having annulled the 1905 Bengal partition. Tagore's sympathies clearly lay with the moderates led by Gokhale and S.N. Bannerjee as opposed to the fire-spewing radicals dominated by Tilak. The official report of the 28th session of the Indian National Congress, which Sen quotes, says: "The proceedings commenced with a patriotic song composed by Babu Rabindranath Tagore, the leading poet of Bengal...then a Hindi song, paying heartfelt homage to their Imperial Majesties was sung by the Bengali boys and girls in chorus".

Sen thinks that the Anglo-Indian press of the times was merely interested in reporting the "loyalty resolution" and had therefore adopted a cavalier attitude with regard to actual details, such as which song was sung when and for what. At any rate, the official report of the Congress gives the lie to the speculation that Tagore's song had anything to do with the royal visit. Significantly, the most authentic book on the 1911 Delhi Durbar, called The Historical Record of the Imperial Visit to India, 1911, written by John Murray in 1914, has no mention of any Bengali song.

The Morning Song of India

Thou art the ruler of the minds of all people, dispenser of India's destiny. Thy name rouses the hearts of the Punjab, Sind, Gujrat and Maratha, of Dravida and Orissa and Bengal; it echoes in the hills of the Vindhyas and Himalayas, mingles in the music of the Ganges and Jamuna and is chanted by the surging waves of the Indian Sea. They pray for thy blessings and sing thy praise. The saving of all people waits in thy hand, thou dispenser of India's destiny. Victory, Victory, Victory to thee.

Day and night thy voice goes out from land to land calling the Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains round thy throne and the Parsees, Musalmans and

Tagore's translation and (inset) Warrier: out of tune

Sombre, slightly repetitive around the opening but marked by vivacity and pace when played by military bands, Jana Gana Mana was adopted as the national anthem following tough competition from Bande Mataram, the theme song of India's struggle against colonialism. Mahatma Gandhi called it "not only a song but a devotional hymn". Nehru defended it at the Constituent Assembly when he called it "distinctive and different". Finally, on its formal adoption on January 24, 1950, all members of the Constituent Assembly sang it in chorus, with both Nehru and Rajendra Prasad, joining in.

Warrier and his supporters will obviously be hard put to find enough arguments against the historical, and musical, sanction for what Tagore himself later described as "the morning song of India".

—SUMIT MITRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Lufthansa.
The European Express.

Lufthansa has daily non-stop flights to Frankfurt. From Frankfurt there are swift and convenient connections to 58 European destinations. And, as with any good express service, Lufthansa's return flights will bring you home just as conveniently, just as swiftly.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EVER SINCE I DISCOVERED RAYMOND'S READYMADES, IT'S GOODBYE TO ILL-FITTING CLOTHES.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Remember the waistband that went limp after just three washes! Past history! Raymond's Readymades range says a firm goodbye to poor stitching, costly delays, ill-fitting clothes and surly outfitters. While offering you a royal choice.

The Trousers. Designs from traditionally classic to a sporty jeans look. Fabrics from the finality of all-wool to the lightest of blends. Colours to complement any occasion. And top quality! Fused waistbands, chain stitching on sides and seat, bar-stitching to strengthen stress areas. Even the belt loops are made on a Rimoldi machine!

Infinite care — from fabric to finishing — is the hallmark of the range. Suits. Safaris. Shirts. Blazers. Trousers. Take your pick and say a firm goodbye to unhappy tailoring.

Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

Location courtesy: The Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay.

Raymond's Mens Wear

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bajaj Tempo Limited.
Moving in step with the growing needs of Indian transporters

Bajaj Tempo Limited, with over 25 years of experience in the development and manufacture of light commercial vehicles, is today poised to take a leap into the future – propelled by the achievements of the past.

A leap possible not only because of Bajaj Tempo's own R&D efforts, but also due to its technical and financial collaboration with Daimler-Benz A.G. (makers of Mercedes light commercial vehicles, trucks and cars), the world leaders in automotive technology.

Bajaj Tempo's new Matador F-307 range is fitted with the Mercedes OM616, the most fuel efficient and least pollutant IDI diesel engine. And as a result of Bajaj Tempo's meticulous studies and vast experience, the new range of vehicles is perfectly tailored to Indian load, road and traffic conditions.

Bajaj Tempo supports all its vehicles with an extensive service and spare parts network of 150 authorised dealers: the largest of its kind in India.

Bajaj Tempo Limited, a combination of advanced technology, excellent engineering and solid service support – to fulfil tomorrow, as it does today, the needs of Indian transporters.

BAJAJ TEMPO LIMITED
Akurdi, Pune-411 035.

The name with unrivalled automotive experience in India.

4973

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

Point of no Return

HIS DETRACTORS have often likened the brash Balakrishna Pillai—sarcastically—to Napoleon. But last fortnight the once invincible gadfly of Kerala politics seemed to have met his Waterloo. Even after a full bench of the Kerala High Court dismissed the by now famous "Pillai case" the former electricity minister found himself unwanted by the ruling United Democratic Front. The case involved a petition filed by K.C.Chandy, a Congress(I) functionary, against Pillai seeking a writ restraining him from continuing as a minister. The petitioner had contended that by making a seditious speech at Cochin during his party's convention last May Pillai had violated his oath of office and therefore had absolutely no right to remain a minister. Pillai had resigned when the writ petition was admitted by Justice Radhakrishna Menon.

However he had been banking on returning to the Cabinet once the case was dealt with. Indeed, soon after its disposal K.M.Mani and P.J.Joseph, his Kerala Congress bosses, demanded his reinstatement. But Chief Minister K. Karunakaran and his Congress(I) MLA's were far from welcoming. Congress(I) MP's from Kerala too have requested Karunakaran to keep Pillai out of the Cabinet. Party sources point out that the court had not exonerated Pillai, it had only said that the question of whether a minister had committed a breach of privilege was not within the scope of judicial review. And G.Karthikeyan, the state Youth Congress(I) president and MLA who is very close to Karunakaran, must have been echoing his master's sentiments when he said: "The chief minister is well within his rights in having a closer look at the case. The question here is whether Pillai—a man against whom there are serious charges involving the integrity of the country—should be taken back."

The Congress(I) has good reason to be wary of rehabilitating Pillai whose controversial image has been further tarnished in the period that he has been out of power. Mathrubhumi, a leading newspaper of the state, came out with a story soon after he quit about his lavish life-style and personal wealth which included four luxury mansions. Pillai says his father was the richest landlord in Quilon district and he had inherited his wealth. But said a Congress(I) minister: "What Pillai forgot to say was that he had five sisters and as per the Nair family partition system all his sisters should have got an equal share. Today he is definitely a hundred times richer than any of his sisters."

The next scandal to hit Pillai concerned leaks at the Edamalayar hydroelectric project (INDIA TODAY, August 31). The contractor responsible was Pillai's own partyman and allegations were aired that Pillai as the then electricity minister was hand in glove with him. Suspicions were strengthened when K.M.Mani, who had taken over the electricity portfolio after Pillai's resignation, refused to institute a judicial enquiry into the Edamalayar leaks. And to top it all, last month a close relative of Pillai who was an agent of the electricity board had his premises raided by income tax men. They discovered unaccounted money as well as promissory notes and foreign exchange in violation of Reserve Bank rules.

It seemed the ex-electricity minister's travails were never-ending. Days after the high court judgement, Malayankil Nair, an advocate, filed a petition before the three-man commission set up under the Kerala Public Men Prevention of Corruption Act alleging that Pillai's Cochin speech was a wilful contravention of the laws of the country. And not to be left behind, K.C.Chandy decided to approach the governor for action. Said he: "If Pillai is allowed to become a minister once again without any further enquiry it will amount to a contemptuous disregard of the judgement of the high court."

For a man who gained notoriety by speaking his mind at any opportunity, Pillai was being remarkably reticent even as the issue picked up momentum. As he told INDIA TODAY: "I am more sinned against than sinning. Regarding the latest developments it is better for me to keep my mouth shut." But his party, which values Pillai as the only prominent Nair leader in a party of Christians, was solidly behind him. Said P.J.Joseph, revenue minister and chairman of the Kerala Congress: "It is a basic principle that is involved—that the chief minister should accept any person suggested by a constituent unit as a minister in a coalition set-up." Joseph, clearly seeking to force Karunakaran's hands, gave an ultimatum to him to make his decision known before the Assembly is reconvened on September 3. Kerala Congress leaders even sent an urgent message to party

Pillai (left) Karunakaran (right); and (bottom) Kerala Congress demonstration: feuding partners

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

strongman Mani, who was away in the US, to return immediately. Admitted Joseph: "We are in a tight corner; Pillai should be reinstated because the prestige of the party is involved."

Karunakaran, on his part, made it clear that he would have no objection to any other person belonging to the Kerala Congress being sworn in as minister. He maintained that he was still studying the legal implications of the judgement. But it was clear Karunakaran was stalling for time. The four-day Onam festival, during which the feuding front partners called a ceasefire, gave him welcome reprieve but time was running out for the chief minister. There was little chance that the 15-member Kerala Congress group would pull out of the front but it was clear that Karunakaran's Government would yet again be brought to the brink of a break-up before a compromise was worked out.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

ALLEPPEY

Storm at Sea

WITH a regularity that has become predictable, the harvest season in Kerala is when non-mechanised fishermen renew their agitation for the implementation of marine fishing regulations. The issues remain the same; for no concrete steps have been taken to resolve the problem. The only noticeable change in the pattern of agitation this year is that the fishermen have shifted from their usual post outside the state secretariat in Trivandrum to the collectorate in coastal Alleppey.

The shift was not without a reason. A few weeks ago a trawler roaming the inshore waters near Alleppey at night ploughed through a boat of traditional fishermen, killing four men. "The Government has failed to apprehend the killer trawler, so as a symbol of our struggle against mechanised boats, we chose Alleppey as the focal point of our agitation," explained Father Thomas Kochery of the Redemptorist Fathers order, the informal leader of the five-year-old fishermen's agitation (INDIA TODAY, August 15,1981).

This year too the protestors led by militant Catholic priests and nuns used the weapon of hunger strike to focus attention on their grievances. Sister Rose, a 43-year-old nun of the order of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, went on an indefinite fast in a thatched hut outside the collectorate. The police swung into action and arrested and hospitalised her. But Sister Rose was not alone in her effort, and Father Dominic George, director of the Socio-religious Centre in Calicut, took her place. Obviously the fishermen are not going to be frightened off for as M.G. Shobana, a fisherwoman who is supervising the struggle in Alleppey district, said: "The Government keeps on playing hide and seek with us. This time if there is no permanent settlement we will go out into the sea and burn all the trawlers."

As before, the Government has chosen to be unsympathetic to the agitators.

C. RATESH KUMAR

Father Kochery addressing fishermen: inspiring battle

To focus attention on this indifference the fishermen brought out posters which showed a collage of newspaper headlines of the unimplemented promises the Karunakaran Government has made in the last four years. In its defence, the Government pointed out that two commissions had been set up over the last four years to look into the problems.

But the agitators have no difficulty in punching holes in the Government's argument. The first commission, headed by Babu Paul, a senior civil servant, had submitted its report in 1982. It had conceded some of the fishermen's demands but ruled out a ban on trawling. Yet the Karunakaran Government had put the report in cold storage without assigning any reason. Last year the fishermen renewed their agitation demanding the implementation of the Paul Commission's report and a ban on trawling during the monsoon. Strangely Karunakaran chose to set up another commission to look into the problems.

The Kalwar Commission, which arrived at more or less the same conclusion as the Paul Commission, presented its report to the Government early this year. This time, Father Kochery decided he would try and outfox Karunakaran. He dropped their demand for a ban on trawling and is now asking only for the implementation of the 30-odd resolutions of the Kalwar Commission. These include a ban on night trawling, ensuring adequate supplies of kerosene for outboard engines, and a lump sum grant to fishermen's children. The commission has also suggested that the number of trawlers in inshore waters should be reduced from 3,500 to 1,500.

The Government by delaying implementing the commission's findings is only exacerbating the problem. Trawling in inshore waters is "depleting the ocean's marine wealth and depriving the traditional fishermen of their means of livelihood," explained Father Dominic George. Adds E.J.Peter, a local fisherman: "Due to trawling, the shrimps have disappeared. But more alarming is the fact that the common man's delicacy like sardines and mackerals found in inshore waters are also fast depleting." Over the last five years there has been a 200 per cent increase in the fish catch of mechanised boats while the traditional fishermen's catch has decreased by 50 per cent. "Today more than anything else we want a conservation of fish resources," said Father Kochery.

To further complicate the issue, the chief minister recently alleged that the agitation was "foreign funded". He raised more eyebrows when he refused permission to British film maker Edward Milner to shoot in the state a film Faith Under Stress on developments inside the Catholic church on the grounds that the matter was 'sensitive'. "Karunakaran has unleashed vicious propaganda to suppress the fishermen's movement in Kerala," charged Father Kochery. He and many others involved in the agitation are wondering what the chief minister was finding so sensitive about the fishermen's struggle.

There is, as yet, no end to the struggle but the fishermen are now looking to Delhi for a solution. Their hopes soared when word got around that the prime minister during his visit to Kerala will be visiting coastal fishing villages to study the situation for himself. They see the visit as their best opportunity in the last five years of getting a fair deal.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

zed by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai a aran. He ban on y for the resolu-

n. These
g, ensursene for m grant commis-number hould be g imple-dings is

. Trawl-
ting the wealth
e tradi-of their od," ex-
Dominic
Peter, a
"Due to shrimps
ed. But the fact n man's nes and in in-also fast
the last
per cent
hanised ermen's er cent.
else we ources," sue, the

that the ed". He refused Edward m Faith side the
that the nakaran anda to ment in
ery. He e agita-efminisout the struggle king to s soared e prime a will be to study see the

the last

R PILLAI

We've got the whole world at our feet.

NORTH STAR

It's a great feeling!

Available at select Bata & BSC stores

BIL-5654

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Geometric designs have always been there. Right now they are on top."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The geometry factor in art, introduced by early Egyptian architects and artisans, has had a lasting impact on aesthetic concepts of today.

In fashion, the elements of geometry come as a liberating relief from the dominance of floral patterns. The geometric line becomes the fashionable stripe, the point and circle, a dot, the square, a check. Add to these the cube, zig-zag, diamond and arc and we have a panoply of shapes, simple yet permanent. Since these shapes are fundamental, they allow ground colours to have full play.

"Geometric" is the new story line for Garden-Vareli fabrics — trendy, futuristic...in keeping with the image of the modern woman as a liberated one."

Praful A. Shah, Managing Director, Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd.; Chairman, Vareli Group.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Changing to Superlac gave everything a new look...

...well, just look at him!"

"It was unbelievable! The lifeless walls were transformed before my eyes. Pale Lilac. Julia Green. I had 44 shades to give my walls. And it was so easy to clean.

"What was more unbelievable was the way it changed my husband. Whipping up breakfast. Putting up new posters. He is a new man!"

That's the magic of Superlac. An extraordinary wallpaint. Made by one of the leading paint companies in the country today. Shalimar Paints.

Try Superlac. And just watch your world change!

SUPERLAC
Acrylic Plastic Emulsion

Shalimar Paints
Wall time favourites

SPL-5881A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Gift-Wrapped

DOES a state government with almost two-thirds majority in the Assembly need to woo MLA's with expensive gifts and sumptuous lunches daily to ensure their support for its annual budget proposals? The answer in Uttar Pradesh is 'yes', where the Government recently spent approximately Rs 1 lakh every day a minister presented his budget to the Assembly.

At the end of the budget session last fortnight, over 20 ministers including the Chief Minister Narain Dutt Tiwari had liberally distributed to the state's 425 MLA's, about 30 journalists and 100 officials a wide variety of gifts ranging from VIP suitcases to flasks. In addition, five course lunches specially ordered from Lucknow's more famous restaurants were served daily, the 20 days the budget was presented. Defending the practice, the chief minister said: "We have to ensure the presence of MLA's in the House during the budget session. If they go home for lunch, they may not return to the House due to the pressure of the people from their constituencies."

Tiwari had found an effective if unconventional way out of an impasse. The state Government came up with its novel solution when it found that often the attendance in the House was less than the mandatory 50 per cent required to approve a budget proposal. Since the majority of the MLA's usually returned home after signing in their presence, it was decided to serve lunch — an attractive bait — in the lobby so that they could be relied upon to be present when the quorum bell rang.

Trying to explain away an awkward situation, state Parliamentary Affairs Minister Hukum Singh said: "It is not that the MLA's can't take care of their lunch. But the Government has shown this small gesture for their long stay in the House. There is nothing wrong or illegal about it." The Government's munificence did have a salutary effect in the Assembly. Almost all the budgets were passed without any major fiasco and MLA's who were usually offensive in the House cheered the ministers for presenting bold and innovative budgets.

But the manner in which 'operation hold-them-back' was conducted reflects the Government's desire to keep the affair secret. While the gifts were deposited in the ministers' rooms in the dead of night, the lunch packets were brought in through the back-doors of the stately Vidhan Bhavan. Each MLA was told to send either his or her guard or any other trusted person to collect the gifts, and despatch it home immediately. In a few cases, the gifts were delivered at home. In fact, some MLA's even prepared a detailed list of every gift received to double-check and ensure that they'd not been left out of anything.

To add to the cloak-and-dagger confusion, even the ministers went about choosing the gifts—which together cost over Rs 16 lakh—in great secrecy. Two days before the budget was presented, each minister invited senior officials of his department to seek their cooperation in supervising the operation. With ministers vying with one another to provide the better gifts, their suggestion-lists were as closely guarded as state secrets.

Even then some ministers had to suffer the wrath of the MLA's for presenting gifts that disappointed them. While Health Minister Lokpati Tripathi presented a brief-case to each MLA, Agriculture Minister Narendra Singh gave a suitcase. Much to Tripathi's chagrin the MLA's were happy with Singh—the suitcases were of VIP make—but indignant with the brief-case which was of a local make called BIP.

The gift was quickly dubbed: 'Bungling in Purchase'. And a visibly upset Tripathi promised them a genuine VIP brief-case later on. To add to his discomfiture Tripathi discovered that his arch Thakur rival in the cabinet, Irrigation Minister Veer Bahadur Singh, had

Photographs by S. PREMI

MLA's Mool Chand (left) and Satish Ajmani and the gifts for MLA's

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

delivered an expensive VIP skybag at each MLA's home.

Surprisingly, none from the opposition benches rose to criticise the state government's new project to ensure full attendance in the House. On the contrary, some opposition MLA's criticised those ministers who refused to fall in line. When Civil Supplies Minister Vasudev Singh expressed his inability to provide lunch at his department's cost, he was censured not by his own party men but by the Opposition. "How can a food minister feed the state's population if he can't provide us food in the House?" asked Manohar Lal of the Lok Dal.

But outside the Assembly some newcomers and ministers expressed their annoyance to the chief minister. Over a dozen MLA's drawn both from the ruling and the opposition parties have questioned the Government's decision to force the losing state government-owned corporations to bear this extra financial burden. This year there was a deficit of over Rs 178 crore in the state's annual budget, and all the 60-odd corporations have suffered an accumulated loss of over Rs 2,000 crore.

Promilla Badhwar Mehra, a Congress(I) MLA, said piously: "I have distributed all the gifts to my aya, servant and guard. But it would have been better if this extra money spent on us could have been given to our constituency." Pretending helplessness, H.C. Srivastava, a BJP MLA, added: "I am really ashamed of accepting all this. I am going to raise it in my party's meeting and will try to put an end to this evil practice." Bhagwati Singh, an independent MLA, admitted that "this is a corrupt convention. But I can't really explain why none of the major opposition parties has opposed it."

The MLA's feel that the ministers were forced to accept this practice due to the pressure from the bureaucrats who are in league with the suppliers. Since the same dealers and restaurants supply the goods every year, the bureaucracy they feel have a vested interest in the continuation of the practice. But state government officials dismiss these allegations. Asserts Arun Kumar Singh, cooperation minister: "We have adopted all the procedures. And in my case, there is a budgetary provision also. I have a cooperative federation which has a separate budget for commercial promotion and publicity."

Uttar Pradesh's elected representatives it appears need juicy add-ons to their basic wages to help them discharge their duties.

—PRABHU CHAWLA with S.PREMI in Lucknow

GUJARAT

Back to Work

HAPPY days are here again for Snehal Lakhia, the sole distributor of Telco vehicles in Gujarat. He used to sell 150 trucks on an average in a month but with unrest sweeping the state in the last five months, he could sell a bare five trucks in that period. But now that peace has returned business is back to normal, and last fortnight Lakhia was again selling some four trucks a day. The anti-reservation stir was defused in July itself and the only remaining confrontation ended last fortnight when the Amarsinh Chaudhary Ministry signed an accord with state government and panchayat employees who were on strike. Lakhia's joy was widely shared: the end of the strike was greeted with the bursting of firecrackers in all major cities of the state. The saddest chapter in the 25-year-old history of Gujarat, which took over 200 lives and had threatened to derail the rapid progress of India's second-most industrialised state, is now over.

The strike was truly historic: over four lakh government and panchayat employees stayed away from work for 73 days demanding abolition of the roster system. No other strike has gone on for so long in independent India. The accord came after the Government decided to stop soft-pedalling the issue and served termina-

Government employees offer sweets to Chaudhary: jubilation

AHMEDABAD

Green Success

CAN AN informal group succeed as a pressure group and force the Government to retract on a careless, insensitive decision? A group of concerned citizens of Ahmedabad did just that through a colourful campaign that won the support of a large number of the people in the city and forced the state Government to revert a decision to set up a five-star hotel in one of the city's most beautiful green areas.

The battle to save 2,700 sq m of land in the Law Garden area began last September when two professors, M.G. Parekh and Pravin Sheth, learnt that the Gujarat Industrial Investment Corporation (GIIC) was collaborating with a leading hotel chain to build a five-star hotel. Ironically the site chosen had been earmarked by the Ahmedabad Urban Development Authority as "one of the lungs of the city" with 710 trees ,3,000 shrubs and over 300 plants. Parekh and Sheth, members of a local environment group wrote to the editor of The Times of India protesting against the move and arguing that the city which was getting more and more polluted every day could not afford to lose so many trees in one go. Theirs was not an isolated cry of alarm as

Demonstrators at site: effective protest

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tion notices on 70 employees, including some association leaders. The leaders were already under pressure from the employees who were getting impatient—over 10,000 of them had already resumed work—and they capitulated without holding out for their main demand. However, they did succeed in getting the government to agree to remove some anomalies in the implementation of the roster system. The Government was content that it had succeeded in guarding the basic interests of the backward classes.

Typically, both sides were claiming a victory. Said Finance Minister Arvind Sanghvi, who was one of the mediators: "We have moved in the right direction. We have managed to strike a healthy balance between the need to maintain the roster system so as to uplift the backward classes and the need to remove the anomalies which were causing concern." Similarly, Sandeep Dave, secretary of the Gujarat Corporations' Employees' Federation, also claimed: "Our strike was worthwhile after all. We got 90 per cent of our demands met."

People, by and large, were not interested in who won and who lost; they are just relieved that they could get back to work. Specially relieved were businessmen. Trade and industry has suffered a staggering loss of over Rs 2,200 crore since the anti-reservation stir erupted in mid-February. Said Girish Bhagwat Prasad, president of the Maskati Cloth Market Association: "The accord will help restore peace which is so essential for the progress of the state." Even the Congress(I)'s detractors were happy: former chief minister Babubhai Patel hailed the agreement and called upon all concerned to help the administration to implement it.

But there were some ominous signs of protest from employees belonging to the backward classes. The police opened fire in Gandhinagar when a rally organised to protest against the accord turned violent. The pro-roster employees say the agreement violates their constitutional rights. The rally featured armed tribals shouting slogans like 'don't tease the sleeping lion'.

The Government, however, is looking ahead. Soon after the accord was signed Chaudhary flew to New Delhi to seek a massive loan of Rs 63 crore to implement a plan to modernise textile mills in the state and take over 12 closed textile mills. His success will bring an end to the misery of the families of over 30,000 workers who are in dire straits. Already half a dozen workers have committed suicide after being driven to the brink of starvation. Chaudhary also took the opportunity to address newsmen in the capital: his first press conference after he took over. The timing could not have been better. When he took over his appointment was greeted with widespread skepticism. Today, Chaudhary is being hailed as the architect of a peace that seemed impossible to achieve under Madhavsinh Solanki.

—RAMESH MENON

in the days that followed the newspaper published 27 letters saying virtually the same thing.

Their letter was followed up by a door-to-door campaign seeking support from people normally indifferent to such issues. Working without resources on a purely voluntary basis, the 12-odd members of the group demonstrated the seriousness of threat to the environment by showing that green space per person in New York was 22 sq m, in London 20 sq m, New Delhi 18 sq m while in Ahmedabad it was only half a sq m. They calculated that the total value of services rendered by a 50-year-old tree worked out to a staggering Rs 19.7 lakh by way of production of oxygen, pollution control, prevention of soil erosion, recycling of water, control of humidity and shelter for birds and animals.

At one time it seemed all the effort had been in vain. On July 2, days before Madhavsinh Solanki was replaced as the chief minister, the Government issued a notification converting the green space into a plot for commercial use so that the construction of the Rs 9-crore hotel could be started. The Government claimed that the environmentalists were exaggerating the problems as there were only 70 trees in the plot. To disprove the claim, Parekh and Sheth got botany students from the university to identify and count the trees (their figure of 710 was proved right). "It was obvious that some vested interests were at play. Otherwise the Government would not have been so enthusiastic to push this project so hastily," Sheth recalled.

All seemed lost when on July 9 the secretary of housing and urban development called for objections on the project. Desperate by now, the group hit upon the novel idea of fighting their case with the help of posters. Helped by young people in schools and colleges, bright posters with evocative messages were plastered all over the city, even on trees. "I am a pipal tree. Why do you want to cut me?" read one such poster. The press and leading citizens like Jnanpith award winner Uma Shankar Joshi, Magsaysay awardee Ela Pathak came out in favour of the protest.

The writing on the wall was clear. The new Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary met members of the group and without any argument asked the GIIC to look for an alternative site. H.K. Khan, additional chief secretary and chairman of GIIC, candidly admitted later: "The environmentalists had reason to be upset. There was no point in confronting them."

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

YOUTH CONGRESS(I)

Indecent Exposure

NOT SINCE the rumbustious days of Sanjay Gandhi has the Youth Congress (I) witnessed the kind of fireworks it did last fortnight when the battle for control of the ruling party's youth wing exploded into the open. The fireworks began with Gurudas Kamat, the abrasive Maharashtra state YC(I) president, quitting the body, but not without washing a lot of dirty linen in public view over organisational matters. Ostensibly, Kamat's abrupt resignation followed colourful reports of unruly behaviour by YC(I) delegates at the World Youth Festival in Moscow last month. Accusing YC(I) President Anand Sharma of soft-pedalling on the episode, Kamat launched a virulent personal attack by saying: "We saw a completely different Anand Sharma — someone whose arrogance was to be seen to be believed—someone who relished humiliating others by heaping insults or denigrating them before others."

Kamat followed up by dashing off a strongly-worded letter to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi complaining not only about YC(I)'s performance at Moscow but also about its overall functioning. Evidently, Kamat was also using the occasion to settle scores with Sharma, who was catapulted to the youth wing's top post early this year after Rajiv ignored the pressure from a powerful pro-Kamat lobby within the Congress(I). Soon after taking over, Sharma had rubbed salt into the wound by ignoring him for the post of one of the YC(I)'s general secretaries.

The animosity between Kamat and Sharma boiled over in the selection of the YC(I) delegates for the Moscow festival. While Kamat reportedly wanted some of his favourites included, Sharma declined to accommodate them on the plea that he could not ignore the claims of other meritorious candidates recommended by party VIP's. However, Sharma did include Kamat's nominees from Maharashtra. But the selection of delegates was bound to pose a few problems for Sharma: a bare 300 had to be chosen out of 40,000 claimants. In the process he obviously made more enemies than friends. Said Sharma: "For one selection I had to reject at least 100 other people who were also deserving ones. Some of them might have been hurt and others were waiting to exploit the situation."

That situation was not long in coming. No sooner had the 500-strong Indian delegation landed at Moscow, than differences surfaced between the YC(I) and other youth organisations in the contingent like the CPI(M)'s Students' Federation of India, the CPI's All India Students' Federation, the Janata Party's Yuva Janata and the Youth Congress of the Congress(S). But as it happened these differences were largely buried behind the headlines resulting from the fall-out of the dissension within the YC(I). Two unforeseen factors combined to fuel the controversy: routine surveillance by Soviet authorities of the 20,000-odd youth assembled in Moscow and Sharma's apprehensions of how his flock would behave. Soviet authorities, he learnt, were scouring the wooded 500-acre park in front of one hotel in which many Indian delegates were staying. They were looking for three Russian youths peddling drugs. Sharma used this as an opportunity to bring his flock to heel: he directed his trusted aides and friendly journalists to spread the fictitious story that Russian police had caught 17 Indian youths in compromising positions with girls—both Indian and Russian—and that he was going to send all of them back to New Delhi. The ploy worked in Russia—all the delegates were on exemplary behaviour

"We saw a completely different Anand Sharma (in Moscow)... someone whose arrogance was to be seen to be believed."
GURUDAS KAMAT
ex-president, Maharashtra YC(I)

Indian delegates dancing at the festival

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

thereafter—but boomeranged on the inexperienced Sharma once the delegates got back home and Kamat announced his dramatic resignation.

According to Congress(I) insiders, Kamat's resignation symbolises the growing dissension within the Congress(I) which started when a new president had to be chosen last year to replace Tariq Anwar, who had crossed the age-bar of 35. Since the YC(I) was Rajiv's and Power Minister Arun Nehru's favourite front organisation, various interests within the Congress(I) took an active interest in the selection of a new chief. While one faction led by AICC(I) Treasurer Sita Ram Kesri and one of the prime minister's political secretaries backed Kamat, outgoing president Anwar supported Madhu Kant Shukla from Bihar. But Rajiv picked on Sharma who was not sponsored by any of the lobbies. Kamat, however, continued his efforts to gain the confidence of Rajiv and his aides. In his resignation letter he emphasised that he was one of Rajiv's loyalists and also disclosed that he had collected over Rs 1,20,000 from sources in Bombay for inserting adulatory ads in local newspapers on the eve of Rajiv's visit to Maharashtra during the Vasantrao Patil crisis. He also claimed to have risked his political career in Maharashtra by favouring Rajiv against Patil.

While Sharma has been more or less non-committal over Kamat's outbursts in public, though his resignation was promptly accepted, two dozen young MP's from Maharashtra, Uttar Pradesh and Bihar and over a dozen YC(I) leaders have requested Rajiv to take disciplinary action against Kamat. In a memorandum to the prime minister, they have warned that Kamat represents that section of the ruling party which is determined to blow up intra-party differences and damage Rajiv's position as the party's boss. Says Sharma: "What surprised me was not his resignation but the publicity which he gave to internal organisational matters. He could have discussed them at various party forums and even with Rajivji." Added Bhubaneswar Kalitha, MP and YC(I) general secretary: "It is an open revolt against the party's discipline. In the garb of attacking Sharma individually, he has thrown a challenge to the party's leadership. One should find out who are behind it and why the name of the prime minister has been dragged into this controversy."

However, Kamat says he has reason to include the prime minister's name. "All that I was trying to convey through that reference was the fact that we had successfully managed to keep ourselves independent of any influence of the state leadership and had displayed part of that independence by welcoming our leader through advertisements without help from any state leader," he said in defence.

"What surprised me was not his resignation but the publicity he gave to internal organisational matters."
ANAND SHARMA
president, YC(I)

Sharma, during a brief meeting with the prime minister, said that he was being attacked because of his determination to cleanse the YC(I) of controversial people patronised by powerful chief ministers and other regional satraps. During the last four months Sharma has reorganised over a dozen state YC(I) units and sacked, with the prior approval of the prime minister and the AICC(I), those against whom numerous complaints were pending. In a few cases in Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and Madhya Pradesh, he was pressurised to appoint nominees of some MP's and PCC(I) presidents but the prime minister's office rejected all of them.

Currently, however, the party rank and file is waiting expectantly to see what action the prime minister takes against Kamat's rebellion. If Kamat becomes a rallying point for all the dissidents in the youth organisation, it will encourage other low-lying dissidents to join the fray. And that could only mean that the recent round of mud-slinging is only the start of the battle. —PRABHU CHAWLA

BIHAR

Isolation Ward

FIVE months ago, when 70-year-old trade union leader Bindeshwari Dubey was selected as the "consensus" chief minister of Bihar with the open backing of the irrepressible Jagannath Mishra, the deposed leader Chandra Shekhar Singh was so humiliated he flew off to Delhi without formally handing over to his successor. But last fortnight, Singh performed an abrupt about-turn and, in the course of a significant two-day trip to Patna, claimed publicly that he and Dubey were now the firmest of political allies. Different motives were attributed for his sudden volte-face but one thing is clear: the newly forged Dubey-Singh axis has the sanction of the party high command. Mishra's men, who viewed the development with barely concealed disfavour, are convinced that it is part of Delhi's devious strategy to isolate their leader.

The Dubey-Singh rapprochement had all the ingredients of classic political drama. They had not shared a public platform after Dubey took over but now they chose a meeting of a small faction of the Momin Conference, itself a Singh creation, to shower praise on each other. Barely two months ago, when Dubey completed 100 days in office, Singh had been non-committal when asked for his opinion on how he rated the performance of the new ministry. But now Singh called Dubey a "good chief minister and administrator" and said his government was "working in the right direction". A smiling Dubey in turn praised Singh and called him an "old friend and colleague". Then followed three rounds of talks between them in circumstances in which they behaved like long-lost brothers whom fate had reunited. Dubey rang Singh up at the state guest-house, expressing his desire to go over but Singh instead rushed to the chief minister's house to meet his new-found friend even though newsmen had already assembled for a press conference he had called. At the delayed press conference, the normally taciturn Singh was again fulsome in his praise for the Dubey Ministry.

But what made the newsmen's wait worthwhile were his views on the fate of Mishra. Said Singh: "Mishra has been isolated from the mainstream of the Congress (I). But we (Dubey and Singh) are in the mainstream, the stream of Rajiv Gandhi. (If) someone inside the party wants to defy him (Rajiv) he is bound to be isolated." Singh and Mishra have been known to be at loggerheads ever since Singh replaced Mishra in September 1983 but this was the first time that either of them made public their mutual antipathy. Political observers feel it is unlikely that Singh would have been so openly critical of Mishra unless he had the tacit approval of the high command.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dubey, however, pleaded ignorance about any attempt to establish a new axis or isolate Mishra. As he told INDIA TODAY: "Singh came and saw me and we discussed the state's problems. Old misunderstandings were removed and he assured me and my government his full cooperation." Similarly, regarding Mishra, he maintained: "My relationship with Mishra is just as good as with any other party colleague. When we are all in the same stream, the same party and under the same leader, how can there be any conspiracy or an attempt to isolate any colleague ?"

But Singh's statement had clearly irked Mishra. Lashing out at Singh, the Union minister of state for textiles, Mishra said: "Who says I have been isolated? I am doing Congress (I) politics, Rajiv Gandhi's politics, which is the mainstream. I am more in this stream than anybody else. The only difference between me and others (meaning Singh) is that I am working for the party and the people while others have vested interests in remaining in power here or in Delhi." It was strange, he added, that even though he was not in power, people were trying to create controversies around him and cast doubt on his dedication to the party and loyalty to Rajiv Gandhi. Such statements (as Singh's), he felt, were attempts by disgruntled elements to create a rift between Dubey and him. This, he concluded, would never succeed as "my support to Dubey is without preconditions."

Mishra's disclaimer notwithstanding, the party high command is known to regard his support for Dubey with suspicion. It has lost few opportunities to impress on Dubey that he should distance himself from Mishra. To help Dubey, party sources point out, the high command has repeatedly suggested to Mishra that he should accept a governor's posting and move out of Bihar. But Mishra has been consistently turning down the offer. Though Mishra asserts that he has learnt about such offers only through newspaper reports, he told INDIA TODAY: "I am not going to leave Bihar as I have some personal problems. I cannot afford to leave the state." His supporters say that they claim Mishra's opponents want their "popular" leader out of the state so that they can then get at Dubey, who lacks the "mass base" that Mishra enjoys.

But Mishra seems to have accepted that it is in his political interest to distance himself from Dubey. There is increasing evidence that Mishra has initiated the process. In the recently-concluded Assembly session, six out of the nine dharnas offered in the well of the House were reportedly at Mishra's instigation. Pataliputra Times, a Hindi daily owned by Mishra which virtually ignored the Singh press conference and instead ran a story on the "fate" of Singh, has lately started front-paging stories critical of the Dubey administration, a marked departure from the past.

Mishra (top); Dubey (left) and Singh (right) at convention: new alignments

Singh's motives for making up with Dubey are still not clear. His dilemma is known: if he is to continue as a Union minister he must get elected to either house at the Centre by the end of this month when the six months' grace period expires. Till late last month, no solution was in sight for Singh, who continues to be an MLA even though he has yet to take his oath. His supporters were spreading the word that the high command wanted Singh to join the Dubey Ministry as the deputy chief minister so that the Dubey Ministry could gain from Singh's varied experience as a minister at the state and Centre. Singh himself declined comment, saying that his future was "the worry of the high command", and Dubey maintained that "everything would be decided by the prime minister". But Singh's critics said the former chief minister had hurried to bury the hatchet because Dubey had, on Mishra's promptings, threatened to order an enquiry into some decisions taken by Singh when in power. But Dubey denied this with alacrity, saying: "We discussed nothing except the state's various problems and various development programmes."

Though Dubey's pious clarifications found few takers, the full implications of the fresh alignments were still unclear. What Singh's outburst, and Mishra's replies, did establish is that factionalism in the Bihar unit of the Congress(I) is now out in the open. And that cannot make matters any easier for Dubey.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

The Waiting Game

THE CONGRESS(I) has a dream in Tamil Nadu: to return to the power it last enjoyed in 1967. Understandably, then, it hopes to capitalise on every weakness of its ally, the All-India Anna Dravida Munnetra Kazhagham (AIADMK). Last fortnight, even as the ailing chief minister, M.G. Ramachandran, wound up a trip to Japan and the United States, infighting in the party again erupted into the open and it seemed the Congress(I) had finally decided it should assert its independence. The timing was opportune: there was speculation again about the actual condition of MGR's health and it was not clear if MGR was in total control of the party and government.

There was nothing covert about the Congress(I)'s moves. Fourteen of the 25 Congress(I) MP's from the state, who were led by S.Singaravadivelu, met in New Delhi and sought an appointment with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to complain about the AIADMK Government's partisan manner of implementing development schemes like the Integrated Rural Development Programme (IRDP) and the National Rural Employment Programme (NREP). Most of these MP's belong to party General Secretary G. Karuppiah Moopanar's faction in the state Congress(I). Said one: "Our major serious complaint is that while we have been involving the AIADMK in all the Central Government's programmes, the representations made by local Congress(I) leaders have been ignored by the agencies of the AIADMK Government in the carrying out of these rural development schemes."

However, state Congress(I) leaders also took pains to deny any cracks in the political equation between the two parties. Observed Congress(I) MP and Moopanar's close aide G.Ramamoorthy: "The fact that we are taking up these issues should not imply that we are breaking up with the AIADMK." Added Moopanar: "The Congress(I) continues to have the same cordial relations with the ruling AIADMK in Tamil Nadu. You should not attach any special significance to the meeting of MP's in Delhi." However, the AIADMK Government was not as sanguine about the meeting. Observed Local Administration Minister P.U. Shanmugham: "I can only express my regret that the MP's concerned do not have adequate knowledge of the actual position regarding the state Government's implementation of anti-poverty programmes. We are implementing all these programmes with great zeal and interest."

But the Delhi conclave was not the only thorn in the AIADMK's flesh. By a suspicious coincidence, Tamil Nadu Legislative Council member and former TNCC(I) chief M.P. Subramaniam, who is a prominent leader of the anti-Moopanar group in the state, has also recently submitted a memorandum to the prime minister. It is reliably understood that this memorandum also suggested that the Congress(I) should capitalise on the present weaknesses of the AIADMK. As Subramaniam told INDIA TODAY: "The present leadership of the state Congress(I) has been ineffective in cashing in on the weak points of the present AIADMK Government. For one thing, Chief Minister MGR does not seem to be enjoying sound enough health to be in full command of his party and the state Government. There is very little action on the state Government's part in their third term in office. And there are serious internal dissensions within the AIADMK, all of which the Congress(I) can take advantage of."

But does capitalising on the AIADMK's weaknesses mean that the Congress(I) should snap its alliance with MGR's party? Subramaniam makes a very telling comment: "The alliance was entered into only for the purpose of the elections. Where is the question of any alliance after the elections are over?" Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi himself told journalists when he was in Madras last month: "Our relations with the AIADMK are certainly cordial. But it should be the aim of every political party to build itself up independently."

Factional infighting in the AIADMK is undeniably serious. The tussle between Information Minister R.M.Veerappan on one side and Food Minister S.Thirunavukarasu and Rajya Sabha MP Jayalalitha Jayaram on the other is quite old. But while Jayalalitha is keeping a low profile now, the Veerappan and Thirunavukarasu factions have been sniping in the open. At a public meeting organised by his faction, Thirunavukarasu said: "All AIADMK ministers are zeroes and gain value only because they appear after the figure of one, which is MGR." He was indirectly hitting out at Veerappan's image-building exercise after MGR entrusted him with the powerful police portfolio when he went abroad. Retorted P. Musiriputhan, a Veerappan camp MLA: "What is this statement that all ministers are zeroes? Did MGR make zeroes ministers?" Veerappan himself chipped in at another meeting: "How can all ministers be equated to zero? There are senior ministers with experience and there are others who are juniors." Thirunavukarasu's reply, delivered at yet another meeting was: "I don't distinguish between one zero and another." Even otherwise, AIADMK leaders talk openly of the strengths of their respective factions.

The infighting in the AIADMK fits in with the Congress(I)'s intentions. Although they would not openly admit it, Thirunavukarasu and Electricity Minister S. Ramachandran are known to have close links with the Congress(I). The Congress(I) may not be planning any immediate toppling game, but it certainly wants to keep its options open. The fact that MGR does not seem to be in full control goes to its advantage. MGR had reportedly promised to rehabilitate

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Managing Time

How to put more time into your executive life.

By A.V. Deshmane
Management consultant, Bombay

For today's executive, time is an important resource. "I want to do it, but I don't find time" is a common complaint. The solution to this problem is hidden in the sentence itself. You cannot 'find' time. You must 'reserve' and 'protect' it.

The top ten time wasters

According to R. Alex Mackenzie, author of 'Time Management Notebook', the top ten 'time wasters' are: (a) Telephone interruptions (b) 'Drop-in' visitors (c) Ineffective delegation (d) Meetings (e) Lack of objectives, priorities (f) Crisis Management (g) Attempting too much at once (h) Cluttered desk/disorganisation (i) Indecision/Procrastination (j) Inability to say 'no'.

It is these time wasters that lead to the paradox of time management: the higher the level, the more the working hours. This paradox is now compelling executives to explore and adopt techniques of effective time management.

How to analyse time

Divide your time into three categories: 1. Time controlled by me. 2. Time which I must spend in response to the demands made by others. 3. Time for unpredictable events. By including your daily activities in the above analysis, you will find that although the percentage of time controlled by you is more than that controlled by others, the nuisance value of interruptions and distractions is too high.

Maintain an Achievement Diary

Most diaries maintained by executives only show 'activities' i.e. what they will do on what date and at what time. Instead, the entries should be listed as under:

Time	Activity	Objectives	Preparation required	Achievement

This record will help you know whether time was used productively or unproductively. Also the sheer compulsion to state the objectives clearly will help you work in an unhurried manner and yet achieve more satisfying results with less time being spent.

Also, this diary will help you distinguish the important from the urgent. Because the trouble is, the urgent cannot wait and the important cannot be postponed. For example, streamlining management information and control systems is important. Submission of the weekly or monthly report is urgent. This listing of activities will also prevent time lost in 'fire-fighting'... running from one important job to another... and ending up frustrated and exhausted from trying to do too much in too little time.

Having outlined these few basic rules of effective time management, I would like to now present some practical tips.

1. Batchwork vs Patchwork

It pays to have fewer discussions of longer durations with your boss, colleagues, subordinates, suppliers, clients etc; after collecting all the necessary papers and writing down all the points for discussion. You will find that sitting for half an hour or an hour at a stretch and finishing everything at one go takes much less time in the long run than frequent 'just-a-minute' meetings.

2. Meetings and appointments

The normal practice is to say "meet me at 11 a.m." Consciously develop the habit of saying "between 11 and 11.30" etc. This will go a long way in shortening duration of appointments and also enable the other person make intelligent use of his time. Make sure that meetings start in time and the discussion centres around topics on the agenda. This again will save a lot of your time.

3. Telephone conversations

Keep them brief and to the point without sounding curt. Tell your secretary to screen your calls. Those that are passed on to you will cut into your time, so the trick is to keep an ordinary sand bowl on your desk and turn it upside down when the conversation starts. When the upper bowl is empty, the time limit for conversation is over.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

4. Paperwork

Routine correspondence can be eliminated, standardised or simplified. If possible write the reply on the original letter itself. Take a xerox copy, if necessary, and return either the original or copy. Effective delegation can also take a mountain of paper off your desk. Before you deal with a paper put a ☑ tick mark in any one of the following boxes printed on a small covering chit: ☐Please do whatever you think right ☐Please do whatever you think right but only tell me what you have done. ☐ Please study this and let me have your recommendations. ☐ Please study this and give me only facts/figures. ☐Please attach previous papers.

5. Indecision/Procrastination

Time management experts —Alan Lakein and Edwin Bliss— suggest that you avoid the perfectionist trap. You must be able to know how good the job should be and when you reach that level, move on.

6. Learn to say 'no'

Inability to say 'no' is a major time waster. Lack of confidence or assertiveness, or the need to be 'nice' to others results in your saying 'yes' when you want to say 'no'. Result: visitors you don't want to see. Work that you can't handle. End result: waste of time. Learn to decline tactfully and firmly.

Conclusion

"Managing time is everybody's No. 1 problem" said Peter F. Drucker. "Those who really get things done, don't start with their work. They start with their time". Effective time management not only helps you get your work done faster and more of it, it also helps you lead a balanced life and allows you to have enough time for rest, relaxation and a happy family life. It does not matter whether you work for 8 hours or 24 hours. What counts ultimately is the result. As you go along you will find that you can come up with many more ways of saving time than those mentioned above. The best time to start ... you guessed it ... is now.

This is part of a series on Executive Excellence, brought to you by Vimal. People whose commitment to excellence brings you India's finest fabrics. For this season, Vimal offers you an excellent range for corporatewear: Vimal Worsted Suitings.

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT
WORSTED SUITINGS

The commitment to excellence continues.

Mudra: A.RTI.2516

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED INDIA INS

One thousand metres below the ocean, one man blazes new trails in the water.

Combing the bottomless depths for the fabulous treasures it holds. For oil. For minerals. For food. For new sources of energy.

In a deep-sea vehicle fitted with sensing gear. A battery of cameras. Four-foot long robot arms and giant hands that can actually feel. . .

One thousand metres below the sea, a high-tech bubble called Deep Rover prises open the secrets of the ocean. . .

The hunt is on.

As deep-sea technology races ahead, United India keeps pace.

With trail-blazing policies like our cover for ONGC's high-risk, high-gain venture at Bombay High.

For India's exciting Antarctic adventure.

For the mammoth fleet run by the Shipping Corporation of India.

And for solitary fishermen in their battle for survival.

Adapting to needs as they evolve. Stepping out beyond the beaten track with the assurance of security. Fostering the spirit of adventure.

So that you can dream of conquering new worlds. Of pushing back frontiers further and further.

So that you can work on making your dreams come alive. Keeping your feet on the ground while you reach for the stars. . .

United India will be there tomorrow.

Watching, guarding, anticipating.

Whatever. Wherever.

UNITED INDIA INSURANCE CO. LTD.

We'll be there.

CC-0. In Pu

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's a Video Camera!
It's a Video Recorder!
It's a Monitor!

it's JVC's VideoMovie

VHS C

From the inventors of the VHS system here's yet another epoch-making technological break-through... VHS VideoMovie.

The VideoMovie is a Video Camera, Video Recorder and a Monitor, all in one compact single unit. And it weighs only 1.9 kgs.

It is the only compact video camera which is not only capable of live recording but also of instant playback through the camera viewfinder/monitor.

Moreover you can connect your VideoMovie directly to a T.V. and view your recording without using your VCR.

All that you do is just drop in a compact cassette, shoot like you would with a home movie camera and see the results in the electronic Viewfinder/Monitor or on your T.V.

All together now!

GR-C1

Another innovation in the JVC tradition

JVC

ONIDA

JVC Authorised Service Centres in India

NEW DELHI MONICA ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 630740, 638293, 631351

BOMBAY MIRC ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 6049358, 6322218

CALCUTTA MONICA ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 261841

MADRAS MIRC ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD.

COCHIN BIONIX, TEL. 39422, 31595

JVC Authorised Distributors in the Middle East

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES OASIS ENTERPRISES DUBAI TEL. 435323/24, 283171

SAUDI ARABIA SAID-EL-AJOU TRADING CORP. TEL. JEDDAH. 6606456 RIYADH. 4039853, AL-KHOBAR. 8641347, MAKKAH 5742214

SULTANATE OF OMAN JUSBANI STORES, MUTTRAH, TEL. 772407, 734587, SALALAH. 460251

KUWAIT AL-ALAMIAH ELECTRONICS. TEL. 414140, 414141, 414142, SALIMIYAH. 615299

QATAR NASIR BIN ABDULLAH & MOHD. SIDDIQ TRADING CO. DOHA. TEL. 321486, 321487

BAHRAIN GAJRIA ELECTRONICS W.L.L. TEL. 253453, 258396

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Jayalalitha after his return from the US early this year. But seven months have gone by and Jayalalitha still continues to be out in the cold. Veerappan has also used his clout to have Thirunavukarasu removed from the leadership of the party's youth wing.

However, there is no possibility of a split in the AIADMK just yet. Thirunavukarasu certainly does not seem to have any intentions of quitting the party. Says he categorically: "MGR is all right and in full control. The Congress(I) cannot indulge in any topping game here. All of us are solidly behind MGR and he is here to stay." But of course, the Congress(I) does not need to topple the AIADMK Government. It is content to wait for its ally to drain its strength.

—S.H.VENKATRAMANI

P.H. PANDIAN

Telling Tape

THE NORMALLY pugnacious speaker of the Tamil Nadu Assembly, 40-year-old Paul Hector Pandian, found himself last fortnight in an unusual situation: on the defensive. But the constellation of forces ranged against him was truly formidable, even for Pandian. First, Governor S.L. Khurana reportedly pulled him up. Then came reports that several ministers of the ruling All-India Anna Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam (AIADMK) are known to be unhappy with his behaviour. Cho Ramaswamy, Janata Party leader and editor of Tughlak, turned the heat on him by producing a tape in which Pandian is supposed to have talked of taking "revenge" against him. And Pandian's slate was full when the city's journalists, upset with some offensive remarks he reportedly made against a reporter, started a signature campaign against him.

Pandian

Ramaswamy

Paulraj

Ramaswamy's allegation was the most startling. He claimed that the tape was a record of a telephone conversation between the editor of Vaniga Ottrumai, A.M. Paulraj, who was sentenced to a couple of weeks' imprisonment by the Assembly, and Pandian. In the course of the conversation Paulraj says to Pandian: "Our people say that you have taken revenge against me to teach a lesson to the Tughlak magazine." Replies the voice on the other side: "Revenge on him will take a different form (avanai pazhi vera mathiri)." More evidence followed that somebody was indeed gunning for Ramaswamy. Posters suddenly sprouted all over Madras accusing Ramaswamy of being involved in a blue film scandal.

Typically, Pandian was aggressive even in defence. He refused to comment on what transpired between him and the governor but maintained that the AIADMK was "solidly" behind him. The tape, he said, was a "fraud" and an attempt at "blackmail" and added: "I must point out that recording of telephonic conversations is an offence under the Indian Telegraph Act." As for the posters, he said categorically: "I am not responsible for the appearance of the posters."

However, Pandian has clearly come off second best in the Paulraj controversy, whom he ordered arrested but who got a stay order from the court and is still a free man (INDIA TODAY, August 15). Much has happened with Paulraj; he claims to have been kidnapped by uniformed policemen (Pandian has denied involvement) from whose clutches he then escaped. But the limelight has been on Pandian's inability to get his order carried out. And it is obvious that Pandian is now chafing and fretting at the impasse. As he asked INDIA TODAY combatively: "Why don't you try and interview the chief justice of the Madras High Court on legislative privileges?" And when a group of journalists met him in the course of all the drama around Paulraj's disappearances and reappearance, he allegedly hurled unprintable epithets at the reporter of a Tamil daily, Dinakaran. Pandian subsequently sought to make amends by claiming that he had actually spoken to the reporter in "affectionate" terms but the journalists are unconvinced and have launched a signature campaign against him. More than a hundred pressmen had signed on by last week.

Tughlak editor Cho Ramaswamy turned the heat on by producing a tape in which Pandian is supposed to be talking to Paulraj of taking "revenge" against Cho.

Controversy is nothing new for Pandian, a post-graduate in criminology and a vitriolic DMK-hater. In a remark in the Assembly, which he himself expunged later, Pandian had once said that M.Karunanidhi, the DMK leader, did not know his father's name. Even though he is a third termer, he has made several such remarks which he himself has expunged later and has often participated in mayhem inside the house, even after occupying the speaker's chair. Once he had even challenged DMK MLA A. Rahman Khan to a duel outside the Assembly.

Expectedly, Pandian arouses strong likes and dislikes. It may not be entirely unrelated to the governor's talk with him that as many as 13 state ministers who were in town failed to show up for the governor's Independence Day reception. Raj Bhavan sources refused to term it a boycott. Said a source close to the governor: "Normally, the chief minister attends. So all the ministers come along. But this time the chief minister was not in station. A few ministers who could not come had expressed regrets earlier." However, the nagging doubt remains: Is there more to this than meets the eye?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"THANK YOU LOGIC SYSTEMS. IT'S SO EASY TO BUY AN ELECTRIC TYPEWRITER. I PAY RS.2,999 NOW AND BALANCE IN FIVE YEARS".

"Mr. Sen paid only Rs. 2,999 and became the proud owner of a Logic Systems Electric Typewriter LS 101. He will pay the balance in five years."

Identical to IBM Selectric II(R) of USA, this typewriter is as good as the best in the world. Over 5000 customers around the country testify that Logic Systems error correcting, single element golf ball electric typewriter is your best bet for letters, tables and other documents.

Logic Systems Electric Typewriter LS 101 is available on D G S & D rate contract and on many State Government rate contracts.

Logic Systems' prestigious Trilingual Electronic Typewriter 302/ 502 and photocopier LS 316G are available on DGS&D rate contract and on a 'USE NOW, PAY LATER' instalment plan with only 10% down payment.

ADVEL-LS-205

Logic Systems

LS 101

a matter of good impression

For more details write to or contact: Logic Systems Pvt. Ltd.,D-30, Defence Colony, New Delhi-110024 Ph: 804443 & 693006

No import licence necessary. All consummables, spares and after-sale-service facilities readily available through a nation-wide network of 18 branches at: • AHMEDABAD • BANGALORE • BHOPAL • BHUBANESWAR • BOMBAY • CALCUTTA • CHANDIGARH • COCHIN • GAUHATI • JAIPUR • LUCKNOW • MADRAS • NAGPUR • PATNA • PUNE • SECUNDERABAD • TRIVANDRUM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJASTHAN

Bigamy Blues

WHAT does Rajasthan Education Minister Rampal Upadhyaya have in common with film stars Raj Babbar and Dharmendra? The answer: they all have two wives. But while the actors have managed to get away with it, the minister may end up paying dearly for his double marital status.

The matter, ironically, came to a boil because of a heart ailment which has been troubling Upadhyaya for the past few months. Fifty-year-old Upadhyaya, who was earlier also a minister for eight months, decided to go to Houston, USA, for bypass surgery in July. The government order of July 12 sanctioning Rs 3.5 lakh for his trip and treatment said the minister could be accompanied by his wife. Upadhyaya duly left for Houston on July 26 accompanied by his doctor and a middle-aged lady called Taramani, who claimed to be his wife.

The matter blew up last fortnight while Upadhyaya was still abroad. Bharatiya Janata Party MLA Nathu Singh went to the press and wrote to Chief Minister Harideo Joshi alleging that Taramani was not Upadhyaya's legally wedded wife: she was in fact married to a teacher of an Ajmer college. He went on to say that the minister's wife was Kamla, who stayed in Upadhyaya's native village Gangapur in Bhilwara district. Moreover, Singh said, she was the mother of Upadhyaya's five children.

Says Singh, a former member of parliament, now in his early 30s: "The government order expressly uses the term 'wife'. But the minister's wife is Kamla; then how could Taramani go with him? She even filled up her passport application form claiming to be Upadhyaya's wife. It is a clear case of impersonation, cheating, criminal conspiracy and misuse of state funds." He concluded by saying: "If the chief minister is serious about providing a clean administration, he should immediately drop Upadhyaya from his cabinet."

Upadhyaya was recuperating in Canada and so was not available for comment. However, Taramani's 90-year-old father Badri Narain Sharma, when contacted, added yet another dimension to the whole affair. According to him, it was not a traditional love triangle with just the minister, his wife and the other woman. This one, he said, had five angles. Badri Narain admits that Kamla is indeed Upadhyaya's first wife and that Taramani was married to some other man. But he says Taramani's husband maltreated her and threw her out after an "oral" divorce and went on to marry another woman. This was more than 20 years ago. Taramani then took up the job of a teacher in a government school. It was then that she gradually came close to Upadhyaya, who used to know her husband.

Upadhyaya with Taramani (above); and Nathu Singh: serious charges

It is well-known in Jaipur that the two have been living together for years. Badri Narain claims that while Upadhyaya continued to maintain and look after Kamla and the children, he married Taramani in a Jaipur temple in 1965 according to Arya Samaj rites. Badri Narain adds that Upadhyaya had taken Kamla's consent in writing for the marriage. He points out that this matter had also been raised during Upadhyaya's previous tenure as minister but he had satisfied the party high command about his second marriage.

There are others also who argue that there is nothing amiss in Upadhyaya's marrying a second time. Says one of them, Rajas than High Court advocate G.G.Sharma, who is handling some cases for Upadhyaya: "Taramani was free to marry because her earlier husband had married another woman and had children by her. On the other side, Upadhyaya had obtained his first wife's consent. Thus under the law, his marriage with Taramani is perfectly valid and no one should have cause for complaint."

Taramani's father accuses former chief minister Shiv Charan Mathur, who also belongs to Bhilwara district, of having engineered this controversy. Says he: "This is an attempt to defame Upadhyaya and discredit the chief minister." Mathur was quick to deny any involvement but with a cabinet expansion imminent, the controversy around Upadhyaya could not have come at a worse time for him. What makes Upadhyaya's position all the more precarious is the fact that he has not exactly covered himself with glory in the past few months. Instead of ordering the routine number of annual transfers, Upadhyaya personally ordered more than 3,000 transfers, according to an education department official. This has led to a peculiar situation in which some schools have far too many teachers and administrators, while some others do not even have the bare minimum.

Due to a ban on all transfers ordered between July 29 and August 13, most of these transfers were not effected. Chief Minister Joshi, who is looking after Upadhyaya's portfolio in his absence, is not particularly enthusiastic about implementing them even though the ban is over now. That may be some indication of the rapport between the chief minister and Upadhyaya.

While Upadhyaya recuperates in Canada, his fate hangs in balance back home. Whether his recuperation will be coupled with a political recovery is something that defies diagnosis. However, the fact remains that at the most sensitive point in his political career, this controversy is hardly what the doctor could have ordered.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Whether it's underwriting issues or managing mergers, we give you the edge.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wide ranging information on financial events and trends. A team of professionals who respond to the specifics of a situation instead of hiding behind rules.
And the ability to see a problem from your perspective.

That's what it takes to give you the edge.
And HongkongBank has it.
Isn't it time we talked?

HongkongBank
The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation

Bombay Calcutta New Delhi
Madras Visakhapatnam
Merchant Banking Division Bombay
The British Bank of the Middle East Bombay

Your financial edge, the world over.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INFILTRATORS

A Quiet Invasion

ONLY recently have Indian intelligence agencies woken up to the fact that the porous Indo-Pakistan border adjoining Rajasthan and Gujarat has become a major security threat. Over 800 Sikh terrorists have reportedly crossed the border in recent months and returned after a spell in training camps armed with bundles of currency and sophisticated weapons. But the threat of infiltration in these areas has over the years acquired wider and more dangerous dimensions. Thousands of Pakistani nationals have also infiltrated into the area making it a happy hunting ground for smuggling and espionage. The influx also threatens to upset the demographic balance in the region since many of the infiltrators have acquired local political godfathers against whom police officials are helpless to act. To investigate the extent of the problem, Ahmedabad Correspondent RAMESH MENON toured the affected areas extensively. His report:

FOURTEEN years ago, Halim Misri left his home in Barmer village in Rajasthan and crossed the border to settle down in Meghe-ka-tala in Thakarpur district of Pakistan. He recently returned to his village, only to be arrested by the police as he was now a Pakistani citizen. But, as it turned out, he had remained an Indian citizen too. His name was still on the voters' list and the records showed that he had even cast his vote in the last Lok Sabha elections. The court released him but the police maintained that he had not been in India and someone else had voted for him.

Sajjan Khan, who migrated to Pakistan in 1965 from Longewala in Jaisalmer, was caught in Indian territory in November 1982, without any passport or travel documents. After his arrest, Sajjan somehow managed to have his name entered in the electoral rolls of the Shiv constituency of Barmer. He also got the sarpanch of a Rajasthan village to testify in court that he was a resident of that village. The court released him with the police again helpless to act.

Halim Misri and Sajjan Khan are just two of the 242 Pakistani infiltrators arrested in Rajasthan over the last three years. Police officials say that even this Government apathy has encouraged infiltrators to cross the border with impunity. The sparsely populated desert terrain also helps them to settle down without being noticed

Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by RAMESH MENON

Amin-ka-paar village at the Barmer border: a haven for aliens

figure is a mere fraction of the actual number and point to the rise in population figures—the population country-wide registered an average increase of only 20 per cent between the 1971 and the 1981 census, the growth rate for Barmer alone was 44.41 per cent, for Jaisalmer 44.84 per cent, for Bikaner 48.02 per cent and for Ganganagar 35 per cent. While none of the district collectors assigns a definite reason to this aberration, most of the local populace strongly believe it is the increasing number of infiltrators sneaking into India from Pakistan.

After the 1965 war with Pakistan, as many as 17,598 Indian Muslims migrated to Pakistan. Of these, 930 chose to come back later while the others opted for Pakistani citizenship. All this while their names had remained on the voters' lists and votes continued to be cast in their names. So those who returned had no problems in slipping back quietly into the mainstream. While the police insisted that they were now Pakistani nationals and had illegally entered India, the electoral rolls eventually proved to be evidence to the contrary.

Though the Rajasthan and Gujarat government have repeatedly denied the existence of any infiltrators in the two states, the fact that thousands have slowly and steadily crept into India is only too well-known. Equally well-known is the fact that this has more often than not been possible with the secret help of ruling party leaders and other influential persons. Corrupt panchayat officials also help legalise the infiltrators by procuring documents to prove their presence in the area for the past many years. Police and intelligence men privately admit that this is still continuing.

Natives of border villages are alarmed at the unexplained increase in population. In the relatively short span of 1971 to 1981, the population in Rajasthan's Bandha village has gone up from 172 to 5,888, in Muhar village from 9 to 247, in Kuldar from 32 to 240, in Modana from 422 to 1,198, in Mota Kilon-ki-dhani from 48 to 540 and in Madasar from 446 to 1,171. That this is largely due to infiltration is borne out by the sudden rise in the number of Muslim-dominated villages along the border.

Bureaucrats and police officials do not rule out the possibility of Pakistani nationals having come over and used names of migrated Indian Muslims to gain legitimacy. Says Rajasthan's Director-General of Police Raghunath Singh: "It is extremely difficult to spot out Pakistanis settled here as border villages are remotely situated." As many as 352 Pakistanis who came to Rajasthan on valid passports in the last three years have not gone back. The police have not been able to trace even one of them. What they are up to is anybody's guess.

The infiltrators have their own specific purposes ranging from simply coming back to their roots to smuggling and espionage. Many of the infiltrators are said to be trained mujahideen (rebels and religious fighters) living in secret exile in the border areas for obvious reasons. Some infiltrators are specifically sent across by Pakistani intelligence agencies or the army to collect information or to draft informers, say intelligence sources.

One such case is Umar Dagara, a Pakistani, who sneaked into India through Kutch and stayed with Juma Vali Mohammed, a known smuggler. He reportedly drafted Madhu Maheshwari, a deck-hand on the Indian Navy training ship INS Valsura, to pass secret information for a monthly payment of Rs 2,500. Maheshwari was taken to Pakistan on camel-back across the Kutch desert and shown detailed close-ups of various parts of INS Valsura. He was then instructed to gather and send some specific information about the ship. He was also told to shelter Pakistani spies and if needed, smuggle them aboard the ship. The details came to light after Maheshwari was arrested for spying.

In Jaisalmer itself, there are at least 6,000 cases of Indians who had crossed over to Pakistan in 1965. There is no way to prevent them, or others impersonating them, from coming back unless their Indian citizenship is cancelled. And their return can only have unpleasant implications as a Bikaner police official points out: "After living in Pakistan for 20 years, it will be difficult for them to identify with India. And in case of conflict, this may "Pakistanis should be identified and sent back. Otherwise innocent Muslims will suffer in the propaganda against infiltrators."

G. KHAN
additional collector, Jaisalmer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

even lead to disastrous consequences."

Both the state governments and the Centre pretend that the problem doesn't exist. They have chosen not to publish the break-up of the majority and minority communities in the latest census of these areas. This ostrich-like attitude stems from the fear that official acknowledgement of the abnormal rise in the number of Muslims along the border might trigger off a strong adverse reaction and compound the villagers' feeling of insecurity.

More than this, some sources attribute it to the ruling party's desire to maintain its Muslim vote bank despite all odds. Says a senior bureaucrat posted at Jaipur: "Removal of these migrated Indians from the electoral rolls may change the ruling party's political fortunes and so the Government is not ready to risk it."

Years ago, the then Jaisalmer district collector, M.K.Vyas, had put it on record that one of the Government's prime concerns should be to tackle the problem of infiltration as it was assuming alarming proportions. He had even indicated that some of the infiltrators were trained mujahideen. Vyas had launched a move to delete the names of all migrants from the Jaisalmer electoral rolls. But he met with stiff opposition from the then law minister, Ahmed Bux Sindhi, and other political bigwigs in Jaipur. Eventually, Vyas was transferred to the backward Dungarpur district and the proceedings died a silent death.

The apathy of the Government has encouraged infiltrators to cross the border and settle down in Indian territory with impunity. Many people from Khanpur, Dharikhipro and Zol in Pakistan have come over and settled down in Jaisalmer villages like Kunjadi, Bhagu-ka-gav, Khodiasar, Devikot, Khuiyala, Seeamber and Chatrel. The sparsely populated desert terrain also helps them to settle down without being noticed. Since they do not look any different from the local people with their bright lungis and kurtas, they merge easily into the environment of any Muslim village.

Police stations and outposts are far from the villages and the border too is unmanned for long stretches. For an area of 1,547 km along the border, there are only 149 Border Security Force (BSF) outposts, leaving large gaps unattended. And anyway, most of the BSF strength is channelled off and on to deal with internal disturbances, leaving little of it for effective border vigil. In fact, in certain parts, there is just one BSF outpost with merely a dozen men to look after an area of 50 km. In Sam area of Jaisalmer, a police station with just 12 men takes care of an area of 800 km.

Congress(I) leaders of Jaisalmer, Talib Khan (left) with Ghazi Khan: dubious loyalties

"We have to stop infiltration and smuggling on the border. If they can carry goods, they can also carry information."
S.K. SHARMA
DIG, Jodhpur range

Once inside India, it is quite some time before the infiltrators are found out. By the time they are, they have already acquired the necessary papers to prove that they are Indian nationals and are beyond the pale of any action. As Jaisalmer police chief Mahendra Nath Dhawan points out angrily: "Our laws are oriented to help criminals. They are so lax and liberal. Ninety per cent of the offenders caught for infiltration, smuggling or spying get away without any punishment." In February last year, the then Barmer district collector, C.K. Mathew, arrested Mustaq Ahmed of Burran-ka-tala under NSA. Though an Indian, he was carrying a Pakistani identity card. Records showed that he had earlier been convicted in 1975 for crossing over to Pakistan and again in 1979 under the Official Secrets Act for possessing classified documents.

It was found that Mustaq had undergone training at Lahore for espionage. When arrested, Mustaq sneered at the police saying that they would not be able to hold him for long. Sure enough, his words came true when the police had to release him under pressure from top Congress(I) leaders in Jaipur. Admits the former collector of a border district: "Infiltration can be stopped and so can espionage if district collectors on the border do not have to contend with political interference."

The concentration of Muslims in certain areas along the border has also aggravated communal differences. This was amply borne out in the last assembly elections when the Congress(I) candidate Amin Khan, a sitting MLA from the Shiv constituency of Barmer, lost to the Janata Party's Rawat Umaid Singh as the voting pattern had clearly swung to the lowest denominator of caste politics. Election slogans in Barmer were unabashed in their exhortations of "Hindu ko vote do." Khan in turn played on the religious susceptibilities of his own community by asking Muslims not to cooperate with the intelligence men who were dealing with the cases of infiltrators.

In fact, Khan is known to have sheltered Pakistani nationals himself in the past. He has even been arrested

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Guess who's playing tabla for Ravi Shanker.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He thought he'd be watching a TV programme on Ravi Shanker. But suddenly, it was as though Ravi Shanker had sat down in his very living room and started to play. And the experience was so phenomenal, he just had to join in, on the tabla.

That's what happens with a Sears TV. The images are so clear, they seem to fill your room. The colours so alive, you want to reach out and touch them. And the voices so real, you find yourself replying. Or singing along!

Sears Colour TV. Bringing you advanced internationc technology. Quality that is closely monitored at ever stage of manufacture. And a performance so exquisitely perfected that it becomes hard to tell the programme from real life!

Wouldn't you love some real life entertainment? Today!

When it happens on a Sears TV, it happens to you.

SEARS ELCOT*

A joint sector enterprise with the Govt. of Tamil Nadu.

123 A/3 Lattice Bridge Road
Thiruvanmiyur, Madras 600 041

BRANCHES:–
Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi, Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Mangalore, Hyderabad, Vishakapatnam, Madurai, Cochin, Calicut, Ranchi, Dehra Dun, Goa, Jaipur

*Sears is the trademark of Coral Electronics (Pvt) Ltd., owned and managed wholly by Indian entrepreneurs.

ain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOR SOME MEN THINGS ALWAYS GO SMOOTHLY

First night tickets.
Par for the course at golf.
And the rich, mellow experience of a truly great smoke. For some men, it all comes very,
very smoothly.

Wills Filter Kings
Smooth. Very smooth

STATUTORY WARNING
CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

WFK-5950

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

thrice — in 1965, 1971 and 1973 — for alleged anti-national activities. That Khan's interests lie more across the border became clear when he recently objected to the setting up of a BSF outpost on the border facing Amin-ka-paar, a predominantly Muslim village in Barmer. Since there were no restrictions here with people from both sides freely crossing over, the BSF had shifted its checkpost in front of the village. The villagers objected to this and when it had no effect, they approached Khan. When the BSF did not listen to him either, Khan goaded the Pakistan Rangers on the other side to protest that the BSF had come too close to the border.

Khan is not the only one. There are others, like Ghazi Khan and Talib Khan, both well-known Congress(I) leaders of Jaisalmer, who have been arrested on similar charges. Bachaya Ahmed of Kutch, who was the vice-president of Congress(I)'s Lakhpat taluka unit, is still in jail for bringing Pakistanis into India, sheltering spies and even spying for Pakistan himself. That the loyalties of most of the Muslim villagers on the border lie on the other side is another disturbing fact.

Apart from problems like smuggling and espionage, infiltration also threatens to upset the demographic balance in the region. This is especially true in the districts of Kutch in Gujarat and Barmer and Jaisalmer in Rajasthan. Interviews with a cross-section of society revealed that the grudge against outsiders who have been cutting into the region's scarce resources is steadily building up. Residents of the border villages fear that the situation has all the potential of turning into another Assam. Says H.V.Malpani, convenor of the Citizens' Council of Jaisalmer: "If the Government does not initiate immediate steps to stop infiltration, it will escalate into a major problem soon due to imbalances. The country has seen what happened in Assam." And G.Khan, additional collector of Jaisalmer, agrees: "Pakistanis should be identified and sent back. Many of them are now freely moving about. If this is not done, innocent Muslims will suffer in the propaganda against infiltrators. Border inhabitants are naturally scared of another Assam developing here."

But perhaps the most serious threat is the threat from within. It is not only Muslim villagers who are suspect. Rajputs living near the border are equally involved in smuggling and sheltering infiltrators. The easiest means of livelihood in these backward border areas is to smuggle Indian liquor and bidis to Pakistan and exchange it for provisions. As a result, villagers of Jaisalmer district feel closer to Pakistan than to their own country as the nearest Indian town is more than 100 km away. No development programme of the Government reaches them. They get no benefits and so do not feel part of India. Jaisalmer District Collector Lalit Kothari says: "We are doing so little for their welfare. They feel that India does not care for them. They are also not dependent on India as everything they need comes from Pakistan. Then how can they identify themselves with India?"

THE Government is largely to blame for this increasing alienation. In Ganganagar, villagers on the border had only a negative reaction to India as they could watch only Pakistan television. It is only now, when a low-power television transmitter has been set up in the area, that things are beginning to change. Said Ashok Kumar Khatri, a revenue inspector in Ganganagar: "They have started feeling attached to India after watching Indian programmes and news on television."

The BSF has been asking the Centre to define a buffer zone between the two sides. As things stand there is not even a fence to stop people from crossing over to each other's sides. Even if a barrier is erected, it still would not help until the Government stepped up vigil along the border. There are areas where the nearest BSF outpost is 40 km away from the border because the terrain is rough and rocky. White concrete pillars at intervals of some kilometres form the only demarcating line. Kabul-ki-dhani, a village in Barmer yards away from the border, is known to shelter Pakistanis. Here the BSF has shifted its watchtower to an elevated plane to have a better view. But that hardly helps when the outposts happen to be few.

The Centre had continued to turn a blind eye to the problem until Sikh terrorists started jumping the boundary for arms, training, funds and shelter in Pakistan. That is when the Government was forced to sit up and take note. Police and army officials were taken aback when they stumbled on bits of evidence after the arrest of Ravindra Sethi and Balvinder Singh who were slipping back into India after guerrilla and commando training in Pakistan. Intelligence men discovered that at least 800 Sikh youths had similarly crossed over. Sikhs who were jailed in Pakistan had been released only to be trained in these camps for three months and then sent back to India. They brought back with them sackfuls of sophisticated guns, grenades and Rs 10,000 in Indian currency. They were promised more arms and money every three months if they completed their mission successfully. The Ganganagar border has now been tightened and more BSF battalions have been deployed. Sealing the border and intensifying patrol is just the beginning. A lot more needs to be done to tackle the problem. To begin with, it has been suggested that the names of all migrated Indians be struck off the rolls and those living along the border be issued identity cards. But considering the rate at which the infiltrators are trickling in, by the time that is done, it may be too late.

"Our laws are oriented to help criminals. Ninety per cent of the people caught for infiltration, smuggling and spying get away without any punishment."
MAHENDRA NATH DHAWAN
SP, Jaisalmer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RACHPAL SINGH

Diary of an Extremist

WHEN the cordite finally cleared on that fateful June day last year, army and intelligence personnel sifting through the rubble of the Akal Takht where Bhindranwale and his men chose to make their last stand, came away with two truckloads of files, papers and miscellaneous documents. Stuffed into gunny bags, the assorted collection was distributed among the concerned intelligence agencies for scrutiny. Among the papers was a diary written in Gurmukhi which is now in the possession of the Central Bureau of Investigation. Though the contents of the diary will never be made public, it has a singular significance in that it was maintained by Rachpal Singh, a personal assistant and a trusted confidant of Bhindranwale and the man who screened all those seeking interviews or favours from his militant leader. Rachpal's diary was discovered near the bodies of Bhindranwale, Shahbeg Singh and Bhai Amrik Singh but of Rachpal himself there was no trace. His body was never identified among those killed or captured during Operation Bluestar but his diary offers a sensational and often embarrassing insight into the close liaison between Punjab government officials and the terrorist preacher. Principal Correspondent RAJU SANTHANAM was able to examine a portion of the diary recently. His report:

RACHPAL SINGH was one of the few men close to Bhindranwale who was well educated and therefore acted as a conduit between those seeking an audience with Bhindranwale and was in fact present at most meetings. The diary, though incomplete—some secret meetings now publicised are not mentioned—and not regularly maintained, has nonetheless, entries from '83 to the end of May 1984, and lists people who called on Bhindranwale as well as offers a rare insight into the thinking in the Bhindranwale camp just before Operation Bluestar. The diary lists names of seven senior government officials who were close to Bhindranwale and in fact were passing on information to him and also contains details of the secret meetings with government emissaries owing allegiance to then Central Ministers, Buta Singh and Giani Zail Singh.

From the contents of the diary it is clear that part of the problem in Punjab last year was that there were too many emissaries involved in negotiating with the militant leader, some officially and others at the behest of ministers. If the diary is authentic, and there is every reason to believe it is, there was total confusion in evidence. On the one hand were emissaries sent by the Government trying to forge some semblance of peace; on the other were hordes of politicians, senior police officials and local sarpanches who forced Bhindranwale to question the Government's motives and thereby spurn any peace feelers.

One example mentioned in the diary is the exchange of fire lasting several hours between Central Reserve Police Forces and Bhindranwale's men on February 12 last year. The diary notings indicate that Bhindranwale was convinced that the security forces were going to storm the temple; on February 14, according to the diary, a deputy commissioner rang up Bhindranwale and actually apologised for the firing and also confided that the Government was thinking of launching an attack and the heavy firing was believed to be a sort of prelude.

Yet, the diary records that on February 19, Sardar Ajaib Singh Machaki, an emissary of Buta Singh, met Bhindranwale to urge him to issue a statement condemning violence and in support of communal harmony. The suggestion was abruptly turned down because, as Rachpal notes, Bhindranwale was already convinced that the Government was preparing to storm his citadel. At the same time, Rachpal notes, yet another peace move initiated by the then Border Security Force commander, Birbal Nath, was made through a go-between, Makhan Singh, sarpanch of Bagha Purana in Ferozpur district. Makhan, the diary notes, met Bhindranwale on March 31, and stated that Nath had spoken to the prime minister who had agreed to lift the ban on the All India Sikh Students Federation if Bhindranwale laid down arms. Makhan asked Bhindranwale to send two representatives to Delhi to discuss the details. Rachpal notes that the offer was rejected and that Bhindranwale suggested to the Government that Rajiv Gandhi should come to Amritsar instead to talk to him personally.

The diary reveals that on April 13, Bhindranwale was again approached by a government emissary with the proposal that two unnamed central ministers were prepared to fly to Amritsar and talk at the circuit house to any of his representatives. The diary, however, does not mention any response, but presumably this offer was refused as well. What it does reveal is that between February and April,

THE DIARY

Entries

THE ENTRIES in Rachpal Singh's diary are usually brief and to the point, often in the nature of an appointment book with some elaboration on what was discussed. But they also convey a glimpse into the myriad comings and goings around the man who was the hub of terrorism in Punjab for so many years. Among the other entries in the diary:

January 26: A deputy commissioner told a Bhindranwale aide that unless the Akalis compromised with Bhindranwale there was no possibility of solving the Punjab tangle.

February 3: Two police officers, favourably inclined towards Bhindranwale, met him at night and urged him to instruct followers that no further incidents should take place in Amritsar city.

February 19: Bhindranwale rings up a superintendent of police in a district and asked him to trace two missing Sikh girls or face consequences.

February 22: Two police officers met Rachpal Singh and Amrik Singh. They were escorted out at 10.30 at night.

February 24: A journalist (not named) warned Bhindranwale of a possible police attack on the Golden Temple at night.

February 26: An unnamed Sikh army officer from Sarsawa alleged that an air force officer in Assam had trained commandos who were to be dropped into the Golden Temple. Each helicopter would be reinforced and would carry 24

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bhindranwale's mind was being poisoned against the Government by some of the very emissaries who had supposedly come to talk peace. On March 3, the diary states, Ajaib Singh Machaki told Bhindranwale the incredible story that the anti-Sikh violence in Haryana had been orchestrated by Rajiv Gandhi, Bhajan Lal, Sher Singh, a Haryana minister, and T.N. Chaturvedi, the then home secretary. On March 11, a Congress (I) leader, Trilochan Singh Riyasti, goes and meets Bhindranwale with the news that he had met the prime minister and she appeared in no mood to solve the Punjab tangle.

There was also a consistent effort made separately by Giani Zail Singh's emissary, a man called Pistaul Singh. The diary only notes that on March 12 Pistaul Singh met Bhindranwale and made certain revelations which were discussed till late in the night by the militant leader and his closest aides. The diary makes no mention of what the revelations are, but Pistaul Singh, 55, a veteran politician who is well known in the Mehta Chowk area, is still around. When asked by INDIA TODAY, he did not deny his meetings with Bhindranwale and in fact admitted to meeting him on several occasions during the period of the diary. He now says that Bhindranwale had told him that their only demands were that the cases against him and his close aides should be treated leniently. "I promptly conveyed this to Giani Zail Singh but other persons were against any form of settlement," he says.

What has the Government done with the revelations in the diary? After translation into English, the Central Bureau of Investigation wrote to the Home Ministry with the names of the officials who were mentioned in the diary. The Intelligence Bureau was given the task of verifying whether the allegations were true.

The interrogations of some prominent extremists like Harminder Sandhu included questions about the diaries. Said one official who followed up the diary: "In some cases we were fairly convinced that a particular official was linked quite closely with Bhindranwale. In the case of others we realised that the officials were actually collecting intelligence." Officials say that action was taken wherever the Government was convinced that an officer was involved. Of the seven officers named, one has been suspended and five others transferred to other jobs.

A senior intelligence officer admitted that it was difficult to ascertain an individual officer's real political leanings and the motives for his actions which may, on the surface, have led the authorities to believe that he was hobnobbing with Bhindranwale. The whole truth will never be known—unless, of course, there was another meticulous Rachpal Singh writing another interesting diary.

SATPAL DANISH

Bhindranwale blessing Rachpal Singh at his wedding: trusted aide commandos outfitted with bullet proof jackets.

March 4: Retired Brigadier Mohinder Singh (now in detention) gave information about possible commando action. Five companies of the BSF and Army, he allegedly said, had been sent to Halwara for commando training.

March 6: A journalist met Bhindranwale and told him about "intense activity" outside the Golden Temple.

March 21: A Swedish Diplomat and his wife met Bhindranwale and held discussions. Bhindranwale is said to have talked about "excesses" committed on Sikhs.

March 24: Sardar Ajaib Singh Machaki conveyed to Bhindranwale that Buta Singh would reach Amritsar the same day and asked Rachpal Singh to arrange an interview with the Sant.

March 24: A local journalist was given Rs 40,000 by Bhindranwale for publishing his viewpoint.

April 3: Bhindranwale rejected the prime minister's feelers through Makhan Singh of Bagha Pura.

April 12: An anonymous call from a 'Colonel' from Calcutta who said that "adequate" precautions were necessary for Baisakhi because the government planned to kill Bhindranwale on that date. The message was discussed at a high level meeting by Bhindranwale, Major General Jaswant Singh Bhullar, Brig (Retd) Sandhu, Brig Mohinder Singh, and another retired officer, Narinder Singh.

April 29: An IAS officer, Gurtej Singh, who is now underground, met Bhindranwale. No other details given.

—RAJU SANTHANAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SQUATTERS

Battle of the Budge

"THEY work and sleep where they ease, for no conveniences are available for them. Their daughters come of age, bathe under the nosy gaze of passers-by, unmindful of the feminine sense of bashfulness. The cooking and washing over, women pick lice from each other's hair. The boys beg. Menfolk without occupation snatch chains with the connivance of the defenders of law and order. When caught, if at all, they say: "Who doesn't commit crimes?"

—from the judgement of the Supreme Court authorising the Bombay Municipal Corporation to pull down unauthorised structures on public land.

NAMAS BHOJANI

FOUR YEARS after the first huts were pulled down on Senapati Bapat Marg in Central Bombay in 1981, the wheel has come full circle. It is now over a month since the Supreme Court gave its verdict on the petition filed by a journalist and two slum-dwellers challenging certain sections of the Bombay Municipal Corporation (BMC) Act which empowered the corporation to pull down unauthorised structures on public land. The Supreme Court ruled that squatters had no right to encroach on public land and that the BMC could demolish their unauthorised structures. However, it stayed evictions until October 31, a month after the monsoons, and urged the BMC to provide alternative accommodation to the pavement-dwellers who had been listed in the 1976 census.

For the past one month and even before that, government and city agencies in Bombay have been coming to terms with the fact that the judgement, far from being a solution to the city's housing and environment problems, has only brought matters back to square one. If anything, in Bombay civic officials realise it only too well that they cannot afford to be high-handed in the evictions any more. They agree that the brash way in which the then chief minister, A.R. Antulay, had ordered all pavement-dwellers to be thrown out in 1981 won't do now. Which is why Municipal Commissioner Jamsheed Kanga has promised to go about the eviction in a "systematic manner". Says Additional Municipal Commissioner N. Ramamurthi with studied caution: "We are working out a phased programme of clearances. First major roads and arteries that are choked up will be cleared. Then squatter settlements which hold up public projects will be moved and so on. It's a question of working out priorities."

Unmindful of municipal priorities, the pavement-dwellers are determined to stick on where they are until given other places to stay

Unmindful of municipal priorities, however, the pavement-dwellers are determined to stick on where they are until given other places to stay. The more defenceless of them have resigned themselves to fate. Like Sahara Bano, an emaciated maid who came from a village in Maharashtra's Sholapur district and settled down in a 5×5 feet hovel on the same Senapati Bapat Marg where it all began. Bano's brother makes and sells paper fans on the beaches and this is the family's principal means of livelihood. Now Bano even has a ration card to her name and looks on her piece of the pavement as her only home, mainly because she has no option. Says Bano helplessly: "Now there is nothing left for us to do but to throw ourselves on the street and let the seths' vehicles run us over. I am determined not to go back to my village and die of hunger and starvation."

Miles away, along the tracks that lead to Ghatkopar station in the eastern suburbs lives Sopan Biramane with his wife in a makeshift corrugated iron jhonpdi bought for Rs 7,000 in 1982. He pays Rs 10 a month for using a nearby water tap and Rs 15 a month for electricity. Biramane, who earns Rs 600 a month from a lowly job in a chemicals company, is uncomfortably aware that his tacky hovel could be one of the first to be pulled down since it stands on railway land. But he says resignedly: "I have nothing to go back to in Satara. No land, no work, no prospects. Here at least I can live a comparatively decent life."

In the heart of Bombay stands Farida Bai, a large woman who wears an amulet on her arm to keep her blood pressure in check. She is something of an activist and has taken part in several morchas to demand better living conditions. Yet, she is as helpless as anybody else. Says Farida: "I have been living here for 25 years. This is my home. Where do you want me to go?"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To this question, fiery Shiv Sena chief Bal Thackeray has only one reply: "Out!" And "out" means not only from their unauthorised huts but out from the city itself. For years, Thackeray has been thundering hellfire and brimstone at the "outsiders", the migrants settled in Bombay, asking for their eviction from the metropolis. To Thackeray, the Supreme Court verdict has come as something of a first step in this direction since most of the squatters are "outsiders" by his definition. And with his chauvinistic Maratha party at the BMC helm, Thackeray is now swearing sweet vengeance. Says Thackeray in gritty tones: "All unauthorised structures, whether on the footpath or elsewhere, we are going to demolish. The law must be obeyed. You have to be ruthless. Bombay is not an orphanage for the entire country."

Thackeray can afford to be belligerent. His party made a stunning comeback a few months ago in the BMC elections and now rules the city. Chhagan Bhujbal, the Shiv Sena mayor of Bombay, hits the headlines often with his clean-up drives. In one of them, he even walked through knee-deep sludge in crowded Crawford Market and personally supervised the clearing of 100 truckloads of age-old muck. Bhujbal is now determined more than ever to carry out the law to the letter. Says the Maratha mayor: "The pavements are for pedestrians. They are not plots of land on which one can settle down for ever and ever. Bombay must be saved."

The 'save Bombay' chant is increasingly being taken up by the city's Maharashtrian middle class which has thrown its weight behind Thackeray and his fiery legions. Somewhere along the line, squatters have become synonymous with "outsiders" and they now find themselves the major target of Maratha ire. That this is a misconceived notion floated by the Shiv Sena does nothing to quell this vehemence. Vows Nalini Majrekar, a Senapati Bapat Marg housewife: "It was we who were the second class citizens. Now we'll show them what's what." Revchand Lad, a state government employee, is equally gleeful: "What Antulay did in 1981 (the eviction of slum-dwellers in blinding rain which provoked the petition to the Supreme Court) was excellent. I have seen these people. They are the criminal element in Bombay. And they must be thrown out."

But their teeth-gnashing righteousness is not shared by their neighbours belonging to other states. Company executive Suresh Balasubramaniam reasons: "The judgement and subsequent action by the corporation will bring back the rule of law. If they have a right to life, so do I."

NAMAS BHOJANI

"All unauthorised structures we will demolish. You have to be ruthless. Bombay is not an orphanage for the country."
BAL THACKERAY
Shiv Sena chief

Even cricketer Sunil Gavaskar feels the need for rationale: "I welcome the idea but I hope the Government finds them alternative accommodation."

The vengeful mood of the "legitimate" citizens has ironically driven home the extreme sensitivity of the situation. This has put the city bosses on guard. Local politicians are wary of antagonising the middle and upper classes. Says Bombay Regional Congress Committee(I) chief Murli Deora: "It is a step in the right direction. But the implementation will cause some problems." Virendra Bakshi, MLA from Ghatkopar, cautions that action has to be carefully thought out. "We can't just get rid of them," he says. And considering that the majority of his constituency lives in slums or on pavements, he obviously knows what he is talking about.

Whatever Thackeray might say, it is just not possible to get rid of the squatters for good. Blind eviction with escorts to the state's boundary is simply not on. And even if they are evicted, what is to prevent them from coming back? There are countless cases of people having left a place temporarily, only to return once things cooled down.

The options open to the BMC therefore become limited. Either it rehabilitate the slum-dwellers on the spot or resettle them in other areas if their hutments come in the way of development projects. A number of agencies are working out solutions that are essentially in the nature of pilot programmes, all of which hinge around the secure land tenure theory. Says Satish Tripathi, chairman of the Bombay Housing Board, the body charged with looking after the thousands of crumbling buildings in the metropolis: "Many of our schemes are held up because of squatters. So even though pavement-dwellers are not our responsibility we are offering them the incentive of forming cooperative societies and giving them pieces of land at a nominal cost with long-term leases."

The idea is to ask financial institutions to give the cooperative societies loans to build simple houses. Adds Tripathi: "Normally we would have evicted them straightaway. Now we have to change our approach. The board has ten such schemes on hand. We will see how it works and then take up more if these turn out to be successful."

The Maharashtra Housing and Area Development Authority (MHADA) and the Bombay Metropolitan and Regional Development Authority (BMRDA) are working on a less idealistic programme: the Bombay Urban Development Project (BUDP) with an investment of Rs 282.33 crore, partly financed by the World Bank. The emphasis here is not on providing finished houses but serviced sites. It is proposed to develop 85,000 house plots at strategic locations over 600 hectares through the next five years. However, this scheme is not meant for existing slum-dwellers but aims at meeting the increasing influx from outside Bombay, which is currently estimated at 300 people daily. The essential part of the scheme is long-term leasehold rights to the plots.

On a smaller scale, MHADA is starting a pilot programme for one lakh slum fam-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Compare our quality
Compare our price

WHY PAY MORE

When you can buy a genuine Hero bike for better performance at economical price!

HERO

THE ONLY ONE IN ASIA & EUROPE PRODUCING OVER

20,00,000

(TWO MILLION)
BICYCLES IN A SINGLE YEAR

HERO

Equipped with Saddle & 1/4 Chain Cover at no extra cost

Whichever way you look at it, Hero has an edge over any other bicycle in the Indian market. In quality, in economy, in durability, in range.

The sturdy frame and fork; the bright handle bar, durable chainwheel, crank & rims; the noiseless freewheel for effortless pedalling and the streamlined look. You just can't get better value for your money.

Thirty years of expertise has gone to prove that India's largest selling bicycle is also India's best bicycle. Ask any of the happy owners who rides it.

HERO CYCLES PVT. LTD.
LUDHIANA

HC-NP-191

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

ilies in Greater Bombay. Certain basic criteria have already been laid down:

- One latrine for 10 families;
- One water tap for 15 families;
- Internal lanes not less than four feet in width;
- A spiral approach road to the slum
- Security of tenure on the land, provided 70 per cent of the residents join together to form a cooperative society.

Says MHADA's Chief Community Development Officer Pratima Panvelkar: "We have been talking to a lot of people and the response has been pretty positive. It's the security of tenure which attracts them the most." As it should because that is what they want most of all. Says Arumugam Ramaswamy, a casual labourer who lives in a Mulund slum and supports a family of three with his earnings of about Rs15 a day: "I came to Bombay 10 years ago in search of work. But still I have no place I can call my own. Give me a piece of land and I will be happy." The so-called "photo-pass", the identity card issued (theoretically) to all the slum-dwellers listed in the 1976 census, says specifically that it "does not confer any rights on the occupant in the property he has occupied".

The resettlement colonies are not popular with the squatters because they are far away in the suburbs and badly serviced, often no better than the slums themselves. Kalavati of Dahisar works as a maid in half a dozen houses, helped by her 15-year-old daughter, and earns around Rs300 a month. She asserts that she just cannot accept being banished to the boondocks like "so much kacchra". The boondocks is Malwani, a reclaimed marsh in north Bombay which today houses over one lakh displaced pavement and slum-dwellers. Begun as a resettlement colony in the early '70s, Malwani is bidding to become another Dharavi and land here is already expensive at Rs 150 per sq ft. Rooms sell illegally for Rs 30,000. This despite the fact that facilities are deplorable: inadequate bus service for the residents, most of whom work more than 5 km away, filthy toilets, unclaimed garbage and the growing menace of liquor dens and slumlords hunting for new pastures.

Malwani, a reclaimed marsh, houses over one lakh displaced pavement and slum-dwellers. Rooms sell illegally for Rs 30,000 despite the fact that facilities are deplorable.

The Supreme Court judgement, even while reopening the eviction issue all over again, has been a blessing in disguise. It has forced the authorities to realise that the nearly two lakh illegal dwellers cannot be thrown out of Bombay as this would strain the city. Kisan Mehta of the Save Bombay Committee recalls that when he was chairman of the Bombay Electric Supply and Transport (BEST) about 15 per cent of its employees lived in slums. Today it is estimated that at least a fifth of the BMC's lower grades live in slums. They provide almost all of the city's maids and casual labour and about 50 per cent of its hawkers. Says Mehta: "If you say the city will sink with them, the city will also sink without them. I can't evict them and expect my milk to be delivered at Malabar Hill at six in the morning." And his point is amply illustrated by Kalavati who says: "If they take me away to Malwani then who will wash the sethanis' utensils? As it is, if I am asked to live in Malwani, I will have to double my rates."

Like many others, Mehta points out that the Government can easily take over nearly 3,000 hectares of private vacant land under the Urban Land Ceiling Act. With five persons occupying a tenement of 20 sq m and with 300 tenements to a hectare, 3,000 hectares could house all the 4.5 million slum-dwellers of Bombay. "This would ease the pressure on essential roads which these people are occupying at present, free essential land meant for public projects and solve Bombay's problem without a lot of heart-burn," he says. He estimates the cost of the project at Rs 200 crore. However, the state Government has so far made no move to acquire the vacant land. In fact, there was a move two years ago to give the land back to the owners but it was shot down by the courts.

NAMAS BHOJANI

The "photo-pass", the identity card issued to slum-dwellers, says specifically that it "does not confer any rights on the occupant in the property he has occupied".

As the monsoon nears its end, both sides are getting ready for November 1, although the BMC has so far stayed its hand, mindful of the court's decree. There have already been minor skirmishes between a police force intent on taking advantage of the judgement even before it can be implemented.

In the Shantinagar slum of faraway Dahisar, for instance, there have been quite a few visits by over-enterprising policemen out to make a fast buck. Subhash Gupta, who came to Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HAMARA SHEHER

Hard Focus

THE COINCIDENCE couldn't have been more remarkable. The Supreme Court judgement on Bombay's pavement-dwellers came barely a few weeks after an 82-minute celluloid shocker began rubbing consciences raw all over the town. Hamara Sheher (our city) made by 35-year-old award-winning film-maker Anand Patwardhan, is a documentary just this side of anti-demolition propaganda. The film shows the all-too-familiar images of shanty town: a dingy wasteland levelled by lathi-wielding cops; determined faces living in constant fear of being evicted or run over; and a sturdy woman saying defiantly: "You can keep breaking things down. I will just spread my sari and make another shelter."

These images may not be new. But the film's triumph lies in the juxtaposition of the pathetic and the ridiculous with consummate artistry. And the strident and cynical message that emerges is: "Our city has no place for the poor." The ridiculous, like the ragged, has various shades. It emerges in former sheriff S.P.Godrej saying: "As Indians, it is shameful to allow such a life-style." Or in a powdered socialite who reminisces of the good old days when Bombay was not so crammed. Or in the perspiring MLA and political lord of Bandra, Ahmed Zakaria, who ties himself in knots declaring that he is against unauthorised construction and in the same breath claiming credit for a stay on demolitions near the Bandra slaughterhouse in 1983.

The whole bizarre sequence is set off by the apparent callousness of civic officials. Former municipal commissioner D.M.Sukhthanker sits on his well-tended lawns and says: "It is best they go somewhere else where they are legal." A lesser functionary is seen asserting contemptuously that the only possessions of pavement-dwellers are plastic sheets. Probably the only ones who feel any pity are the much lesser officials who carry out the actual demolitions. But then it is more a matter of identification and common suffering than pity. Like the municipal worker who himself lives in a slum and shares their plight. He underlines the irony when he says: "What kind of a state is this where those who live in slums are sent to demolish them."

The satire is more eloquent in the scenes showing a street play. The play mocks the stereotype politician who munificently provides dry taps for a slum and promises that they will have water five years later when the next elections are held.

Hamara Sheher is not a beautiful film. Precisely because it is not meant to be so. Also, it offers no apology for its heavy bias: its random samples of former sheriff and fat socialite, who in no way represent the wider public opinion against demolitions and evictions. Says Kisan Mehta of the Save Bombay Committee: "What we need are solutions and urgently." It is the film's weakness that it does not provide any. Patwardhan says he wanted it that way. He admits that he wanted to get his own message across and so he even talked people into making candid statements that suited him. So while Sukhthanker and Godrej thought they were participating in a dialogue on the environment, they unwittingly gave themselves away on a more sensitive issue. But for the Marxist Patwardhan, the ends justify the means. And many agree that in this one case, the dictum has been well-taken.

Hamara Sheher: "no place for poor" from Jaunpur in Uttar Pradesh 15 years ago and stayed on to run a small shop here, found himself at the receiving end of one such visit. He was confronted by a posse of burly constables from the local police station who demanded to see the licence for his shop, knowing full well that he didn't have any. They demanded Rs 300 and Gupta thanked his lucky stars when he was let off for just Rs 10.

Not so lucky was Shanta, who came from Palanpur seven years ago and now ekes out a living by hawking flowers at Malad station. She recounted her terrible experience: "I came back home one day and found everything broken up. Now I am afraid to leave my house in case they come back." Not working for just one day means a loss of Rs 25 which the flower-girl can ill-afford. But their troubles have just begun. The worst of it is yet to come. Their real plight would begin when the temporary reprieve granted by the Supreme Court expires and the BMC embarks on its eviction drive.

By all accounts it will be a tense winter in Bombay. Already, activist groups are girding up for the protest, enthused by Anand Patwardhan's controversial film on slum-dwellers and their eviction (see box). Says Dr Indumati Parikh, president of Stree Hitkarini, a women's organisation active in central Bombay slums for the last two decades: "We are terrified of the misery and the chaos indiscriminate demolitions would cause." Adds Nirmal Kumar of the Sangharsh Vahini, which has adopted three slums: "The harassment will no doubt increase as the weeks go by. Only if the slum-dwellers present a united front will they get some respite."

For the present, Bomay's rulers will be forced to tread the fine line between duty and concern. Additional Municipal Commissioner Ramamurthi frankly admits that the solutions will not be easy. The next few months will show if India's richest city can prove its greatness and humanity by cleaning up its pavements and green spaces without throwing out its people, by protecting them from the chauvinistic goons of the Shiv Sena who think Bombay is theirs and theirs alone. For this crowded strip of an island, the challenges have never been so daunting.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The birthplace of a leader— Gabriel shock absorbers.

Mulund. Bombay.

Gābriel

CC-0. In Public Do[illegible] ection. Ha[illegible]

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In all the colours of a woman's world...

A dignified new generation of adornment. Sweet Memories. Soft, delicately feminine.
Ushering in state-of-the-art natural fibre textures. That feel silk.
Flow like silk. And, radiate the rich lustre of silk. You don't have to look to the Far East. Any longer.
Sweet Memories. An infinite glory of colours. Shy Pinks. Preening Greens. Passionate Blues. Dusky Browns.
Moody Wines... We leave you the joy of discovering the rest. 250 shades every single month. 3000 shades a year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sweet Memories

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT
Sarees

Dress Material

Zero-defect creations of new Water Jet technology.
Palace. Jet Palace. De Chine. Palace De Chine. Crepe De Chine. Nashiji. Jacquard De Chine. Dobby De Chine. Dobby Palace.
China Silk. China Yoryu. Fuji Silk. Dobby Yoryu. Jacquard Yoryu. Nep Palace. Nep De Chine... A rich variation in textures.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:RTI:2328 R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Now who'd want to hurl a stone at such a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, many might.

Some of your neighbours for instance. Who may have seen your new ONIDA. And envied its classy, futuristic looks, the most astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote.

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

In case you want more details rush to the nearest Dealer.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TITAN'S TIME

THE TATAS are moving into watches through a joint venture called Titan Watches, in collaboration with the Tamil Nadu Industrial Development Corporation (TIDCO) and Frances Ebauches, a leading Swiss watch component manufacturer. Each of the three partners will hold between 20 and 26 per cent of the equity, with the balance being offered to the public. The project, worth Rs 30 crore, will turn out two million watches annually—quartz analog and mechanical—at a plant near Hosur in Tamil Nadu (national watch sales total between 12 and 15 million a year, half of it smuggled). The Tatas have already pulled off a coup by taking in I.K. Amitha, former executive director of HMT and the doyen of the country's watch industry. For the Tatas, this will be the second attempt to get into the watch market, the first one being an abortive tie-up with Hegde and Golay, and promises enormous growth because the market is growing at between 8 and 10 per cent annually.

BANKING ON THE BOOM

INDIA's capital market boom is beginning to attract some of the world's largest merchant bankers. Close on the heels of the New York-based Merrill Lynch and the London-based Warburg S.G. and Hill Samuel, who are investigating offshore tie-ups with Indian businessmen to set up mutual funds — or unit trusts — for non-resident Indians and foreigners interested in putting money into Indian stocks, comes Credit Suisse First Boston (CSFB). This London-based investment bank has pioneered non-resident investment in Brazil, South Korea and Taiwan, and Chairman Michael von Clemm says his bank is interested in exploring the idea of a mutual fund if regulatory, tax and other problems are resolved. The Hindujas are expected to be involved in the venture, if and when it is floated.

SHADY SALES

THE COMPANY law board (CLB) is investigating the non-resident purchase of shares in the Madras Aluminium Company (MALCO), which the financial institutions had handed back in mid-1983 to Congress(I) MP, R. Prabhu, who is the son of one of the company's two founders, on the understanding that he would buy out the 27 per cent institutional holding. But some of the shares seem to have been acquired by non-residents. The company's second founder has now complained to the CLB that the non-residents are Prabhu's front-men, and the CLB has said it is investigating the matter. Prabhu explains that the non-residents had approached his brokers in Bombay, and that he had consequently agreed to sell them some of the company's shares.

DEEPENING MYSTERY

THE DCM share mystery (INDIA TODAY, July 15) has taken an unexpected twist, and may go down in corporate history as the first case where a company's chairman emeritus sold shares that the board of directors later refused to transfer into the buyer's name. No fewer than 60,000 shares were sold by Bharat Ram Associates, while a further 1.35 lakh shares were sold by Shriram Fibres (run by Bharat Ram's son) and five of its investment subsidiaries. Yet the company's board of directors has now decided not to register the new owners of the shares. But the new law on share transfer registrations cannot be applied to the latest share transfer refusal because it has not yet been gazetted.

SHIFTING SCENES

THE GOVERNMENT's policy of liberalising industrial policy seems to have produced quick results, judging from the number of letters of intent and industrial licences issued in the first half of this year. There is an increase of 64 per cent in the former, from 500 in January-June 1984 to 822 in January-June 1985, while the increase in industrial licences is from 480 to 565—an increase of slightly under 20 per cent.

B.K. SHARMA

This is despite the fact that a number of industries have been de-licensed and only need registration with the department of technical development. Simultaneously, official sanctions for share and debenture issues by a number of companies are also going up, from Rs 2,000 crore last year to between Rs 2,500 and Rs 3,000 crore this year. The number of regis trations too has shown a substantial and steady increase over the previous years.

MOUNTING COSTS

THE GOVERNMENT has woken up to the unexpectedly large foreign exchange cost involved in allowing a large number of companies to sign foreign collaborations for two-wheeler, car and truck projects. Investigations show that in the first five years of the Maruti project alone, the foreign exchange cost involved in importing equipment, components, and in paying royalties and technical fees will total Rs 550 crore. A second car project, in the private sector, is expected to cost Rs 265 crore in foreign exchange over five years, while two other car projects are likely to cost about as much. Some projects for manufacturing light commercial vehicles will also have a comparable foreign exchange bill. A tentative total of the foreign exchange outgo for all the projects works out to almost Rs 1,800 crore — with further sums likely to be outward bound because of the associated projects being undertaken by ancillary units. The final foreign exchange total may be in excess of Rs 3,000 crore. The Government is sufficiently worried by this and has called for a review of new foreign collaboration proposals.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FINANCE MINISTER

Bouquets and Brickbats

AT A CONGRESS(I) parliamentary party meeting, he is heckled on prices amid virtually unprecedented scenes of a minister not being allowed to speak. Elsewhere, he creates waves by talking of clapping big industrialists behind bars, and allegedly threatening to whip businessmen with their own lash. Inside the Finance Ministry, he has thrown out the deadwood in the top echelons of the bureaucracy, and has just got the resignations of five senior officers in the Income Tax Department: he himself says with a chuckle that this is unprecedented. And moving farther afield, he has sacked two bank chairmen, secured the resignation of the chairman of the Industrial Development Bank of India (IDBI), replaced all non-official bank directors with new nominees, and made the ending of corruption in the banks a crusade. Across the country, he is the target of loud and often vitriolic criticism for his policy of not meeting businessmen and industrialists individually.

The man at the centre of these many converging storms is 54-year-old Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh. And as he sits down every morning at his large, boomerang-shaped desk in the Finance Ministry—usually at 7.15 in the morning—he has in front of him what he calls an "action plan". This is done department-wise for every quarter, and judging from Singh's explanations of the individual items (some 200 of them), it is quickly obvious that more storms are brewing: Singh has a list of government departments and directorates that will face the axe if they can't justify their existence ("some of them are so redundant, no one even knows they exist, and I am going to trim down the size of the Government"); he is also in the middle of setting up a customer complaints system for the banks, and customers whose complaints do not get sorted out will be allowed to confront the concerned bank chairman in a monthly face-to-face. Singh seems about to launch his own version of Doordarshan's Janavani. And all this is only the beginning.

Singh grins at the prospect of the action in store. Asked if businessmen aren't complaining about the 'excessive' activity by tax raiding parties, Singh says: "But I haven't even begun moving. I have just turned the ignition on." And quizzed on how he has been able to pack in so much action in recent weeks, he comes up with two answers: first, he says there will be even more "compressed action" in the next two months; then, he walks behind one of the sofas in the well-appointed, wood-panelled office that is twice the size of the prime minister's across the road, and pulls out for your astonished gaze a plastic pink-and-blue chattai (mat). "I am here every morning by 7.15 or 7.30," he says. "And I put in 15-hour days. Sometimes, I sleep here at night, and I use this chattai." Doesn't he get tired? Yes he does. So sometimes he does what he calls free-hand exercises. Unfortunately, he doesn't allow photographers to snap the sight of the finance minister furiously waving his arms next to the computer on the side unit of his desk.

V.P. Singh, as should be obvious by now, is enjoying himself. He chuckles easily and frequently, though the hour is late and his wife is calling up from home—which is not a government mansion with acres of lawns, but a small apartment far away in south Delhi. Asked if she doesn't complain about his long hours, he dismisses the thought with another light-hearted comment: "We are long past the stage of complaining." Then, he pulls out of his pocket what at first sight looks like a photo album. On second sight, it is in fact a photo album. But inside, each page is filled with white cards, detailing what Singh has on his agenda: policy issues on the left-hand pages, individual cases and other matters on the right-hand pages. At two stages during the conversation, when issues cropped up on which he felt he wanted more information, Singh paused to make fresh notings in his 'diary'. And as in the case of the action plan on his desk, different colours of inks are used to mark out progress: yellow for urgent priority, with the deadline approaching, green for a job done, and so on. The finance minister has classified, prioritised, and is monitoring his work. And since Singh's other cap is that of the commerce minister, he has a bundle of bound volumes, containing computer print-outs of the work to be done a kilometre away, in Udyog Bhavan.

Management by objectives? Management by the Birla-patented parta system of daily monitoring of underlings' progress. What V.P.Singh is doing is both, and much more. A country that is used to having seasoned men like T.T. Krishnamachari and R.Venkataraman, or astute operators like Pranab Mukherjee as finance minister, now finds that it has something approaching an enfant terrible in the hot seat. For while he isn't a great expounder of economic philosophy, he is a finance minister who believes in action.

and is clear on what he is after. For as he says, "my job is my action plan". So he wants to clean up the departments and the banks, he wants to push through with an impressive range of new legislation (a narcotics bill this year, another on tax evaders, a third on new direct tax laws next June, and a review of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act before next March), announce a long-term fiscal policy this month, implement the recommendations of the Abid Hussain and D.N. Kapur reports on exports, decide on a new policy for public sector enterprises based on the Arjun Sengupta report, and much more. Already, in the last few months, he has announced a new scheme for giving employees stock options in their companies, amended the law governing the registration of share transfers, and prepared new crop insurance and social security schemes, apart from shaking up taxpayers, tax evaders and tax-collectors, and holding one 'open house' session where he listened to exporters' problems for three hours in the morning, and came back in the afternoon with 28 spot decisions that had everyone cheering.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Anyone chasing so many hares at the same time is bound to find some foxes chasing him too. And across the country, comment is plentiful on his numerous raiding operations, on the budget-inspired price rise, on his unwillingness to meet businessmen and parliamentarians to discuss their individual problems, on the shape of a new tax policy, and much else. And predictably, opinion is sharply divided. "You don't get more tax revenue with an attitude of confrontation," says D.A.Patodia, president of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), referring to the flurry of raids in search of tax evaders. "If you want taxes, you must develop an attitude of cooperation." A leading Calcutta-based industrialist, asked to comment on the city's assessment of the hyper-active finance minister, says very simply: "The mood is anti. How can he tell his income tax officers to catch people and to ignore the 'niceties of the law'?" (Singh says he was misquoted on this.) Madras businessman H.C.Kothari says: "The finance minister is becoming paranoid about tax evasion." And FICCI Secretary-General D.H.Pai Panandikar admits that big business is not happy with many of the things Singh is doing, though he adds that in the sessions that he has had with FICCI delegations "Singh made a very good impression."

The finance minister has his fan club too. Tarun Das, secretary-general of the Association of Indian Engineering Industry (AIEI), confesses that he is an admirer, refers to Singh's unostentatious life-style and points out that the country needed a clean finance minister. Swraj Paul, the non-resident enfant terrible, says: "I was very pleased to find on my latest trip to Calcutta that people were no longer saying they could get things fixed in the Government. This is a remarkable change." And K.N. Modi, one of whose companies faces tax problems with the Government, says: "V.P.Singh is unpurchasable." Not to be outdone, horse-owner and industrialist M.A.M. Ramaswamy says that "when the Government is making it attractive for businessmen to pay their taxes properly, we should try to help the Government."

Opinion is equally divided on the finance minister's reluctance to grant audiences to people for discussing their individual problems. The Congress(I) Lok Sabha member Ramakrishnan Prabhu recalls how Singh declined an appointment to a delegation of tea estate owners who had come up from Uthagamandalam, Prabhu's constituency, and says he finally had to barge into Singh's office so that the tea-men could hand across their representation. One industrialist pointed out that even the prime minister met people, so why not the finance minister? Another said: "Singh's problem is that he thinks there are very few honest people, and that after Gandhi there is V.P.Singh." K.N. Modi argued, in contrast, that there was no reason why industrialists should want to meet the finance minister. "Even if I meet him, what can I tell him?"

A bank officer, one of thousands who went on strike recently because the Government reduced the salary increase that the officers' union had hammered out with the Indian Banks Association, was bitterly critical of Singh's attitude. And Sonodyne's A.K. Aikat said: "I support what Mr Singh is trying to achieve. But I don't entirely support the way he is going about it, because giving sweeping powers to the tax-collecting machinery in the past has often increased corruption."

Singh himself is unfazed by reports of mounting hostility, especially from the business community. "They know what I am after, and when they meet me they tell me that what I am doing is fair. All these complaints are only lobbying. In any case, if a businessman has evaded the law, and the law says he should be in jail, then he should be in jail. What is wrong in my saying so? Jail is where he belongs." But when asked why, soon after his budget, he declared that tax rates would be raised again if revenues were not enough, he says with a disarming smile: "You must also make some allowances for a politician." Quizzed on the fact that most raids in the past have yielded precious little prosecution, he says this was because of the law saying that catching someone with black money was not enough, you had to prove his intention to evade tax. "Now I am going to amend the law in the next Parliament session, so that the burden of proving innocence is not on the Government but on the man with black money."

He has, however, modified his stand subtly on some issues. No, he does not have a policy of not meeting people individually, it is just that he does not have time, since he handles two heavy portfolios and has a double-load of Parliament work as well. And quite in contrast to his stance at the party meeting where he was heckled, he does not any longer roll out the statistics to show that inflation this year is less than in earlier years. He admits that "the middle class has been affected, because of the higher prices of petrol, sugar, electricity and the kind of vegetables that they like to eat". But he adds that the items consumed by the poor have not become that much costlier, and says sardonically: "If you want to eat tomatoes in this season, they will come out of cold storage, and you have to pay the price."

While his officials hum and haw endlessly on what the long term fiscal policy will do in precise terms, Singh is disarmingly forthcoming, and seems to promise far-reaching change. "Why should people have to be jumpy at budget-time every year? We owe it to the people to say what we have in mind over the next five years: will we raise or lower taxes, will estate duty or the compulsory deposit be brought back in the next five years? Are

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

India's total annual capacity of fertilizers: 6,500,000 tonnes

ECC, Construction Group of L&T, contributes to the development of the industry both in the nitrogenous and phosphate based fertilizer fields. In fact 27 of the 36 fertilizer complexes in India have drawn on the comprehensive construction services of L&T's Construction Group. And so have fertilizer plants abroad.

Current assignments include the Thal Project of Rashtriya Chemicals & Fertilizers Limited near Bombay and Krishak Bharati Cooperative Ltd. at Hazira, Gujarat.

ECC's capabilities cover:

- ☐ Design and construction of bulk storage structures and plant buildings using precast, prestressed concrete elements, slipform method for urea prilling towers, chimneys....
- ☐ Fabrication and erection of steel structures, storage tanks, hortonspheres, reformers....
- ☐ Site assembly and erection of equipment, vessels, etc. including specialised work in heavy lift erection up to 600 tonnes, in a single piece.
- ☐ Process piping involving specialised welding techniques....

LARSEN & TOUBRO LIMITED

ECC—CONSTRUCTION GROUP

P.O. Box 979, Madras 600 089
P.O. Box 278, Bombay 400 038
P.O. Box 9010, Calcutta 700 071
P.O. Box 6223, New Delhi 110 015

L&T/ADV Dept. ECC 102 / 8

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

we going to introduce the value-added tax, will customs duties on raw materials be lower than on finished goods? And if domestic industry is going to get some duty protection, what degree of protection can it expect? We will talk of the whole gamut of issues, so that people can later judge our achievement against what we promised."

A man who talks so positively, and quite unlike most politicians dressed in brief authority, must be different from the ordinary run of vote-seekers. And when he is up against a tough chestnut, he admits it frankly. Can he really end corruption in the banks? He falters a bit, then concedes that "this is a tough question. It is not that everyone in the banks is corrupt, because then the banks would not have survived, but I have to do more, and I know it." Nevertheless, he already has his basic work planned out: key operating results (including loan recoveries and frauds) are mapped out for the major banks on a single sheet of paper. "When any bank chairman comes to me, I show him this sheet and say this is your face. Tell me what you have to say. And when the time comes for his term being renewed, I will look at this sheet." The sheet of paper, as it turns out, is not very flattering for something like two-thirds of the public sector banks that Singh is talking about.

Singh is equally critical of the bank chiefs for being willing to pay their officers so much money. "Their total bank profits, after allowing for the clerical staff's pay hike, is Rs 80 crore, and they want to give Rs 80 crore to the officers in a pay increase. Then will the budget subsidise the banks and their officers? A junior officer gets a starting pay of Rs 2,200. They have to keep the rest of the economy in mind." He seems to have put his view across equally strongly at a meeting with bank officers' spokesmen the following day, because the officers' strike call was quickly withdrawn.

In the next few weeks, Singh is going to take a final decision on a change in the financial year, decide how much money the power and telecommunications departments can raise directly from the public to supplement their investment budgets, take a series of measures aimed at reforming the stock exchanges, give a push to the computerisation of bank operations, decide on ways to improve bank profitability, start a detailed review of government expenditure, submit proposals to the Cabinet on new pricing and wage policies for public sector companies, decide on new tax rates for the textile industry, 'intensify' revenue collection, decide how many senior tax officers he wants to retire compulsorily, take the first steps towards simplifying direct tax laws, decide on what to do with the recently submitted black money report and so on. The months to come will see even more action on a dozen other fronts. And every morning, Singh is going to monitor progress on these fronts, at half-hour sessions with all his five department heads.

There is little doubt that Singh means what he says: the future will see even more 'compressed action' than the immediate past. And few will be able to cavil at even the decisions that are likely to be controversial, like a trimming of government. For Singh—despite getting no fewer than 800 letters every day, every one of which is acknowledged—has reduced the personal staff of the finance minister from 14 to 3, and got rid of another 11 personal staff attached to the commerce minister. And he functions without a personal secretary.

So, unfazed by the talk of him being dropped from one or the other of his portfolios, Singh continues with his job, as he put it once, of lowering the walls put up by past governments, but cementing the gaps in the walls. And, as he said in reply to a question on how his senior officials react to his style of functioning, "this is not a love affair that I have to watch reactions. A finance minister has to do his job."—T.N.NINAN

"You don't get more tax revenue by an attitude of confrontation. If V.P. Singh wants taxes, he must develop an attitude of cooperation."

D.N. PATODIA
president, FICCI

"I was pleased to find on my latest trip to Calcutta that people were no longer saying they could get things fixed in the Government. This is remarkable."

SWRAJ PAL
industrialist, London

"When V.P. Singh is making it attractive for businessmen to pay their taxes properly, we should try to help the Government."

M.A.M. RAMASWAMY
stud farm owner and industrialist, Madras

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HEGDE & GOLAY

Running Out of Time

IT WAS heralded as an industry pioneer: one of the first private sector majors to start ticking after the public sector Hindustan Machine Tools went into the watch business in 1961, and perhaps the first to launch digital electronic watches in the country. Hegde and Golay also had a lot going for it: a collaboration agreement with a Swiss watch company, imported machinery that business rivals describe as "excellent," and a product that compared favourably with the best in the country. As an added bonus, many of its 1,800 employees were trained in Switzerland. But on July 26, in two separate judgements, Justice P.P. Bopanna of the Karnataka High Court ordered the Bangalore-based time-keeping pioneer (peak turnover: under Rs 5 crore) and 16 of its ancillary companies to be wound up. In a quite unanticipated way, company Chairman B.T. Shanker Hegde's time finally seemed to have come.

The fateful verdict was preceded by raids on Shanker Hegde's house and his arrest on three occasions, the first when excise officials raided his watch complex, the second when the Karnataka State Financial Corporation (KSFC) locked up one of his factories and the third on the charge of threatening a local revenue official with a revolver—an accusation he hotly contested in a letter to state Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde. And even before the case came up for hearing, Shanker Hegde bought space in the Bangalore edition of The Times of India to charge the KSFC with illegally attaching property and harassing small units.

If what went on out of court spelt high drama, the charges aired in the courtroom did so no less. The State Bank of India, which had hauled the company into court, accused Hegde and Golay and its ancillaries of not repaying loans. Together with interest, the dues amounted to over Rs 6 crore when the bank filed its winding up petition five years ago (in all the company owed Rs 10 crore to various creditors, including the KSFC). The bank also charged the company with refusing after 1978 to permit bank officials to inspect stocks and machinery pledged to it. Finally, the State Bank argued that the assets of Shanker Hegde and his wife, both of whom had stood guarantee for the loans, had little value now: much of the assets comprised dues from the company which was in no position to repay them. Also, plant and machinery pledged with the bank had depreciated in value over the years. With its security worthless, the bank pushed for closure of the company and its ancillaries.

"I believed that we could produce millions of watches and export them."

B.T. SHANKER HEGDE
chairman, Hegde & Golay

The watch company, on the other hand, while denying that it owed the bank money, accused it of forging documents that suggested the opposite, of scheming to ease out Hegde and bring the Tatas into the company's management, of not providing funds in time, and of levying exorbitant rates of interest.

What emerges from this welter of blasts and counterblasts is that the company ran into squally weather after the mid-'70s. According to Government officials, though it was licensed to manufacture 6 lakh watches annually, actual production capacities never crossed 3.5 lakh. In recent years, output touched a high of 2.20 lakh downmarket watches before slumping to a little over 25,000 some two years ago. The company has paid no dividends for over a decade, and has been in the red since 1976, except in two years. Even in those two years, the firm's auditor testified in court, it would have shown a loss had the interest owed to the bank been taken into account.

What went wrong? The company suggested in court that the State Bank's failure to release money in time pushed the firm downhill. Hegde himself wrote to the Karnataka chief minister that state officials and politicians had conspired to harass him. And he told INDIA TODAY that KSFC-financed equipment bought from Switzerland in 1974 was not released till two years later because the institution did not cough up the money in time. Hegde also blames the Government for slashing the import duty on watches in the late '70s in a bid to fulfil the domestic demand for watches, while retaining the duty on stainless steel, a vital raw material. Says Hegde: "It was impossible to compete in this situation. My friends called me an eccentric for not seeking an import licence for readymade watches because private manufacturers were also getting them. But I would not do it on principle."

Certainly, Hegde was a controversial figure in an industry traditionally associated with conservatism. Says a Central government official who did not want to be identified: "The problem was that Shanker Hegde was forever getting into disputes." That could be true. He is at the moment up to the neck in legal battles (he has filed in all 26 petitions).

But the key to the man may really lie in his past. Without formal education, he has had to battle it out for much of his life. After leaving his home in a south Karnataka village as a young man, he made a name for himself in the trade union movement in Bombay. He quit the city in the '50s to make his foray into industry. Says Hegde: "I believed that we could produce millions of watches and export them," adding proudly: "All these boys is the watch industry across the country are my boys. I trained them. I was a tyrant who gave them hell but loved them." His dream of building "a multi-million dollar trade name export-oriented watch industry" has come a cropper, but he owns a printed circuit boards (PCB) unit—with (monthly profits of Rs 5 lakh), a cutting tools factory and a transmission equipment unit.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What all this suggests is that Hegde and Golay's problems may have sprung from Hegde's sour relationship with his bankers and the financial institutions. The closure of the company's foreign collaborator, Bernard Golay SA, a small Swiss watch firm, was also clearly a blow to the company. Watch industry sources also attribute the company's sticky times to "bad, overcentralised management" and "unfair competition from small units." The chief executive of a watch company who sticks to the latter theory points out: "Hegde was no babe in the woods. He was an astute businessman."

Whatever the truth of the matter, Justice Bopanna upheld much of the State Bank's case. And a Tata official claimed last fortnight that Hegde, and not the bank, had invited the Tatas to come on board. According to him, Hegde had second thoughts fearing that the Tatas, the State Bank and the KSFC were banding together to take over his company. The Tatas eventually pulled out.

What is curious in all this is that Hegde seems to have signed blank documents. Notes Justice Bopanna: "The contents of the document, excluding the printed matter, are in one shade of ink, but the date... bears another shade of ink." And while he exonerated the bank of the charge of forgery, the bank did not get off lightly on the count of levying high interest. Said the judge: "This court has taken the view that the payment of interest at the rate of 16.5 per cent per annum...does not appear to be in consonance with regular banking practice." What is also not clear is whether the bank and the financial institutions appraised the project judiciously before lending the company money.

The company is now closed, marking the untimely death of an industry pioneer. Though the court has turned down his appeal to stay its order to wind up the company and its ancillaries, he remains unfazed. He asks: "Do I look upset or tired of the situation?" He then pauses and adds "I know my age. Perhaps the time has come for me to launch an offensive" — a statement he declines to elaborate.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI with SREEKANT KHANDEKAR in Bangalore

BUSINESSPEAK

M.S. GUJRAL

Standing Tough

IF ANYTHING has marked Mohinder Singh Gujral's working life, it has been repeated confrontations with labour. Gujral almost always won, of course. So it was entirely fitting that on the day Gujral, 62, finally stopped working, with the expiry of his term as chairman of Coal India, the Supreme Court gave its judgement on a host of petitions by railwaymen who had been summarily sacked in 1981 by Gujral, then chairman of the railway board. The judgement, upholding the right to sack government servants without holding an enquiry, has kicked up a storm, but Gujral—an army officer before he joined what was then known as the Superior Revenue Establishment of the Indian Railways in 1948, maintains a military view of worker indiscipline as evident from this conversation with Senior Editor T.N. NINAN.

I REMEMBER how the case started. In November 1980, I had been appointed chairman of the Railway Board and asked to put the railways back on the track. One problem was indiscipline. In February, the All India Loco Running Staff Association went on a lightning strike, and I sacked 1,000 of them. They got a court order that they should be paid full wages until the court gave its verdict.

Normally in such a situation, the Government decides that since they are being paid anyway, they might as well be allowed to return to work. But I said this will break discipline, and I had to teach them a lesson. So I said, all these people live in railway colonies. If they are getting their full pay, but not going to work like everyone else, they will have to face the reaction from their colleagues and neighbours. This will be a psychological war, and I said let them face it.

Now the court verdict has come, and I have been vindicated. The point is that you have to take demonstrative action. Basically, labour is good, but you have to anchor them with discipline. In the coal industry, even if you concede 20 demands, they will come to you with 200 more. And they are paid so much money, some of them take home as much as Rs 3,000. This unbalances the economy, they don't know how to spend the money usefully, so they drink, or they don't come to work half the time, because they don't need the money.

In Coal India too, I had to take demonstrative action. When they gave a call for an illegal strike, I said that anyone who stayed away for one day would have his pay cut for eight days. This too is in court. I acted under a clause in the Payment of Wages Act which has come down from British days, but I know that the court will finally strike my order down, because this clause is unconstitutional: how can you take away wages when the man has worked? But I had to use the law because the unions were holding the coal industry to ransom. Without tough action, there will be strikes daily and even good workers will get demoralised. Once you take demonstrative action, there is no need for it later.

People of my type are bound to get into a clash. My philosophy is that unions are out to hijack all the time. We can't go on with the British culture of union rights. In fact, the sickness in Indian industry is because managements in India are either soft, or timid, or bureaucratic. A learned American jurist once said that "Law is violence", and our industrial elite is reluctant to accept the 'violence' implicit in law enforcement. So no one wants to enforce discipline.

In the 1960s, I had to manage the railways in Asansol during the days of the United Front government. I was gheraoed because a worker had died in an accident, and they wanted the foreman suspended. I said an enquiry will be held. Till then, no suspension. So they gheraoed me, and said they would bury the dead worker in front of the office staircase. I just kept quiet. So at night they dug a grave and buried him. That immediately brought the Central Government into the picture: how can a man be buried on government office property? So Delhi told the state Government to remove the grave and the dead body. The police, who had done nothing during the gherao, had to do it. That helped my reputation, and there were no more gheraos. Most of the time, I find that my reputation preceded me after that, because of the action I took. And that was half the battle won.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MARBLE INDUSTRY

Polished Performance

MARBLE, it seems, is really moving. The luxury building material that graces the Taj Mahal is being used in many more buildings in many more ways. Prices are stable, modernisation is under way, and demand is booming. All of which makes great news for Rajasthan, which produces 90 per cent of India's marble and has estimated reserves of 900 million tonnes. From only 2.65 lakh tonnes in 1980, the state's output this year is expected to touch 7 lakh tonnes.

Fuelling the marble boom has been hectic construction throughout the country. And even the middle class is in the market, perhaps encouraged by the upwardly surging cost of cement. Says Gauri Shankar Dhoot, owner of a marble processing unit in Makrana, the town synonymous with the marble of the Taj: "Mosaic tiles (made of a mixture of white cement and marble chips and used for floors) cost nearly double what they did six years ago. But the price of the cheaper variety of marble has gone up by only about 25 per cent in the same period."

Keeping the price down has been achieved partly by the introduction of new technology, both indigenous and foreign. A new type of cutter made locally has enabled processors to use much smaller blocks of the stone. In the past these would have been sold cheap to make chips. Also, as K.P. Lal, managing director of the Rajasthan State Industrial Development and Investment Corporation points out, "Over the last few years there has been an awakening to the advantages to be had from modernisation in various other areas."

Marble is also finding a market in what was once the preserve of ceramic tiles—covering walls and interiors. Until two years ago there was only one unit which produced these tiles, but in the past year three more have emerged and in the next few months another seven are expected to go on stream.

But the most important technological development in the industry has occurred in the processing units which convert the blocks of marble into slabs. Till a decade ago this was done by notoriously slow steel saws. The mid-'70s saw the first Italian cutting machine (which uses diamond bits) come to Makrana. So efficient were the new machines that 130 of them have replaced 1,390 of the old. A bright spot in the change-over has been the role of local ingenuity: most of the diamond-tipped cutters are local copies of the foreign models, available at half the price.

"The new machines have speeded up the process fantastically," says Deepak Bansal, a prominent marble processor in Makrana. "The old steel saws could cut only up to two inches in an eight-hour shift. But the diamond machines cut between four and nine inches per hour. The polishing and finishing are better too." What is more, the indigenous saws cost only about Rs 10 lakh, half the price of the imported variety.

The mines of Makrana and (below) blocks of marble: boom time

SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

But there are some dark patches in this rosy picture. Out-dated practices in the mines, for example, act as a drag on the industry's growth. Mining methods are a case in point, and the scene at the mines sometimes looks like a frieze unchanged over the centuries. Most of the work is still performed manually, and though a few petrol-driven cranes are used it is not uncommon to find labourers using a winch to haul up one-tonne or even heavier blocks of stone from a depth of more than a hundred feet. Some mines are only 40 feet square.

A disappointing situation also exists as regards exports, even though India is the second-largest producer of marble in the world, next only to Italy. The industry has difficulty enough fulfilling the demand at home, leading to the situation which occurred recently when a quiet lifting of the ban on import of marble led to firms in Calcutta, Delhi and Bombay importing it under the Open General Licence (OGL). The ban was reimposed after a furore over the scandalous loss of foreign exchange.

The industry was also shocked when this year's budget called for an excise duty of Rs 20 per square metre of slabs. This led to a prolonged strike in the mines, and the duty was subsequently reduced to Rs 10 per square metre with a 25 per cent margin for waste in slab production. But problems remain. Says a unit owner: "It is difficult to quantify marble production since so much cutting is involved. More than the money, it is the harassment by officials that bothers us since one can keep arguing forever over every block of stone." But all these problems notwithstanding, the general mood of the industry remains upbeat. With demand booming, production rising and prices relatively stable, the marble at Makrana reflects a bright future.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AMCO
it takes you
where your spirit dictates

If you are adventurous type speeding away to win the moment on your new generation two-wheeler, make sure of the power that really makes you the hero you are.

The power of AMCO, the new generation batteries, built with the latest technology of Yuasa, the world's largest manufacturer of motorcycle batteries, and a leader in a variety of automotive and industrial batteries.

AMCO-YUASA tie-up

As a leading manufacturer of automotive, locomotive and industrial batteries, catering to the OE, Replacement and Export markets, AMCO has always been in the forefront of technology.

Today AMCO is upgrading its proven technological excellence by utilising the best of Yuasa's technology – to bring to you the most advanced batteries for the new generation two-wheelers, four-wheelers and other equipment.

What's more, with Yuasa's expertise, AMCO is also modernising its facilities for its new breed of products and technology.

The products are also being backed by specialised after-sales service facility through AMCO's 600-strong dealer network and nationwide service outlets.

Yes, when it comes to batteries, trust AMCO – always on the go – meeting tomorrow's challenges today.

AMCO : where the action is

MR. A. SIVASAILAM
Chairman, AMCO Batteries Ltd.

MR. YUICHI YUASA
President, Yuasa Battery Company Ltd

MAC/AMCO/504

AMCO Batteries Limited Bangalore.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fun...on the double!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cut out the dullness.
And let the fun shine in!

Pick up your Hot Shot.
And pass the smiles around.

With Hot Shot, no one's left out.
No one's on the other side of the fence.
Not even the photographer!

Yes, now there's a smile
behind the camera too.
Because there's nothing to worry about.

No fidgeting. No focussing.
Just aim. And shoot.

Choose from the widest range of cameras. In the popular 110 format.
Or in the 35 mm format with the exclusive Universal Focus System.

Get what you want.
A camera with a flash.
Or a tele lens.
Or automatic features.

Whatever you decide on,
one thing's the same.
You get a camera built for fun.

Hot Shot.
It could be the clowning point of your life!

HOT SHOT 35&110

Just aim. And shoot!

PHOTOPHONE INDUSTRIES INDIA LIMITED
7, Saki Vihar Road, Bombay 400 072

Sista s-423/85/A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The New India range of assurance covers

1. Personal Accident
2. Hospitalisation & Medical Expenses
3. Domestic Package Policy
4. All Risks Insurance
5. Burglary & House Breaking
6. Fire Insurance
7. Combined Fire & Theft
8. Passenger Flight
9. Public Liability
10. Carrier's Liability
11. Bullock Cart
12. Pump Set
13. Pedal Cycle
14. Horse
15. Engineering Insurance
16. Professional Indemnity
17. Workmen's Compensation
18. Multi Perils
19. Fidelity Guarantee
20. Plate Glass
21. Business Interruption
22. Cash in Transit
23. Marine

and many more.

Fate can push us over the edge . . . anyday, anytime. Are you protected?

Lady Luck has a habit of playing nasty tricks on the unsuspecting. A thriving business is left in ruins when a fire rages through it. The headlines in the papers scream about plant and equipment damaged by rioting strikers. You read, disbelievingly, that a well-established business has been brought to the brink of ruin by the fraudulent practices of its key executives.

You think these things always happen to others. Never to you. But it could. And when you least expect it. Leaving you completely shattered . . . physically and financially.

Wouldn't it be wiser to protect yourself against the unexpected? New India offers the widest range of covers against every contingency. And the premiums cost a tiny fraction of the total value of the security being offered.

A little foresight shown today can give you all the protection you need for the future. Don't delay. Call or write to your nearest New India office. We'll be glad to give you complete details.

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE
A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India

So much security. For so little.

Contour Ads-NIA-1002/83

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Punalur Mills: controversial closure

KERALA

Costly Error

INDUSTRIALISTS are not often bundled into prison like petty criminals. And when they are, the repercussions are predictably shattering as the Kerala Government has ruefully discovered. Last fortnight, the Kerala-based Punalur Paper Mills announced that it would down shutters come November 10, throwing almost 1,400 workers on the streets and threatening the livelihood of another 4,000 who depend on the mill.

The mill's closure application was submitted to the Government immediately after the dramatic arrest of its Managing Director, Laxmi Nivas Dalmia, and his release under a court order. Quilon District Collector Anand Bose had ordered his arrest because his company had not paid sales tax dues of Rs 31 lakh.

Certainly, that was not a very large sum to kick up a dust about. Oddly enough, the state Government owed the paper mill Rs 1.5 crore in excess raw material billings. It should have handed over the money to the company before last April under the terms of an agreement struck between the two long-feuding sides, but did not do so because it was strapped for cash. Had the Government paid up in time, Dalmia would have had the cash to clear his own liabilities, and the whole situation could have been avoided — a point echoed by the ruffled industrialist. Says Dalmia: "If the Government had adjusted the balance of the sales tax dues against the money due to me, the whole issue could have been settled amicably."

While the arrest itself may have raised eyebrows, the circumstances in which the industrialist was held sent shock waves through the state. A diabetes patient, Dalmia's request for a doctor when he was arrested was turned down. Surrounded by rifle-carrying constables, he was dumped into a police jeep and hauled off to Trivandrum Central Jail. But Bose, a young IAS officer, tells it differently. Claims the district collector: "All that we did was to refuse him permission to travel in his own car after his arrest. He also wanted his personal doctor instead of the government doctor provided by us."

"The single biggest error I ever committed was to rehabilitate a sick paper mill in Kerala."

LAXMI NIVAS DALMIA
managing director
Punalur Paper Mills

That may or may not be so. But Bose seems to have erred in arresting Dalmia. The Kerala High Court, which quashed Bose's arrest warrant after the mill filed a writ petition, observed that under the Sales Tax Act only a dealer who has been assessed for sales tax and has failed to pay it in the stipulated time can be called a defaulter. Justice Radhakrishna Menon, while pointing out that Dalmia was not a dealer, added: "(Here) the company is the defaulter and therefore the question is whether the respondent was within his jurisdiction in initiating proceedings against the managing director." Bose on his part explains that "we proceeded against Dalmia under Section 65 of the Revenue Recovery Act: We could not attach mill property because Dalmia had already got a court order against this." He also hastens to clarify that in his drive against sales tax defaulters, he has even attached the property of public sector undertakings in Quilon district.

The latest bout between Punalur Paper Mills and the state Government is the upshot of long-simmering differences between the two. The mill has piled up losses till last year of Rs 8.5 crore principally because of raw material problems. The Government diverted forests reserved for it to rival mills and billed it excessively for dry eucalyptus. According to a company spokesman, while his mill had to shell out Rs 1,058 per tonne of dry eucalyptus, Gwalior Rayon got the raw material for Rs 35 and Hindustan Newsprint for just Rs 18.53. So the company went to the high court. The court ordered the Government not to discriminate among the three units. Says Dalmia: "As a result of the losses, raw material shortages and the state Government failing to implement the high court order, the company's financial position became very critical. Therefore, it could not pay its statutory dues."

The row hotted up again early this year when the Government started proceedings against the company to recover sales tax dues of Rs 47 lakh. Dalmia threatened closure, but before the shutters could be downed permanently, a deal was struck with the Government: Rs 16 lakh would be paid before March 31 and the remainder before October. Chief Minister K. Karunakaran assured the management that the excess payments would be refunded before last April, but the promise was not kept.

But what is clear is that the barrage of publicity could deter other industrialists from investing in the industry-starved state. And as Laxmi Nivas Dalmia put it last fortnight: "The single biggest error I ever committed was to rehabilitate a sick paper mill in Kerala."

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STOCK MARKET

Scrip Scrap

THE MORNING of August 12 started like any other on the nation's 13 stock exchanges, promising business as usual. Going by the trend of the last few months, that meant a fresh spurt in share prices. But before the day was half out, it was evident that something unusual was afoot. A select group of brokers was selling a mixed bag of blue chips and lemons. Southern Petrochemical, Associated Cement, Gwalior Rayon and Tata Iron and Steel Company shares — all the favourites of the last few months — were sold. Then, like donkeys being introduced in the derby, the shares of some weaker companies were launched. And the brokers who sold these shares clearly had instructions to sell at any price.

The market soon realised what was up. The financial institutions were flexing their muscles and unloading a small slice of their Rs 3,000 crore plus equity hoard. Within the next few days, the trickle would soon turn into a steady stream, and before the fortnight was over some Rs 25 crore worth of carefully selected scrips would have been dumped on the market.

The meticulously planned intervention had immediate effect. The Economic Times share price index, which on August 7 had touched 519.1, tumbled over the next few days and by August 16, had settled at 471.7. The Rs 100 Tata Steel share which had by August 9 climbed to a dizzying Rs 1,195, sank in the next seven days to Rs 985. Other blue chips like Gwalior Rayon, Bombay Dyeing and Associated Cement also took a nose-dive. But with share prices slowly inching their way up again by the end of last fortnight, a chorus of stock-market voices was raising a host of questions. Did the Industrial Financial Corporation of India (IFCI), the General Insurance Corporation of India (GIC), the Unit Trust of India (UTI) and the Life Insurance Corporation of India (LIC) really mean to put the lid on share prices? If so, why was such a limited amount of scrips hawked? As Delhi broker Prakash Jusroi sardonically put it: "If the institutions sell such limited quantities, their move will go the way of the gold auctions under the Janata government."

There is, however, little doubt that some kind of action to cool an overheated market was overdue. The stock exchange authorities had raised brokers' deposit requirements (or margin money) to a staggering 40 per cent of the price of some shares, but even this had failed to curb overtrading. And government officials argue that official intervention had to come. Says the chairman of a financial institution: "Gamblers had entered the market. The stock exchanges were not able to monitor jobbers (brokers who trade only in one or two shares each); even shares placed privately and not listed on the exchanges were being quoted at a premium. The market had reached a dangerous point and needed some correction." Certainly, Finance Minister V.P.Singh was sufficiently worried by the turmoil on the stock-market, and personally ordered the financial institutions to start selling. Singh told INDIA TODAY last fortnight that he wanted to cool the market, and that he had left the operational details to the institutions.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The Government also suspected that the share boom was being fuelled by black money, and there is evidence to suggest that this may well be the case. At a Citibank branch in Bombay last fortnight, where share applications were being received, the queue before the cash counter was far longer than the one before the cheque counter, and snaked its way all round the block.

But many believe that the Government's move to bring share prices down will come a cropper. Amrit Lal Bajaj, president of the Delhi Stock Exchange, swears that nothing can hold back share prices. Says Bajaj: "The economy is bracing to take off. Prices may fall for a few weeks but are bound to go up again. The market will remain unaffected even if the institutions sell their entire equity."

While that extravagant claim was yet to be tested, the institutions' move had other spillovers. Broker Pramod Kohli in the capital had a premonition that the institutions would unload their shares. So three days before the operation began, he sold 7,000 Southern Petrochemical shares at Rs 132 each. Come August 12, when institutional selling had driven the share's price down to around Rs 126, he bought them back, making more than Rs 40,000 in the bargain. And about a dozen brokers on the Delhi Stock Exchange who had been caught on the wrong foot by speculating without having shares to deliver (stocks were not available) were able to buy shares. Says Jusroi: "Bears got a chance to get out of the market."

The biggest winner in all this has clearly been the financial bodies. They seized the chance to strengthen their share portfolios by dumping their lemons (some 10 per cent of the total shares sold, according to an IFCI official) and profit from a booming market. Says the chairman of the financial institution: "I wouldn't hazard a guess as to how much profit has been made, but it's a very good sum."

The big question last fortnight was whether the institutions would now make it a regular practice to unload their shares so that the market would not get overheated. Some of the institutions have a long-established policy of not parting with their shareholdings in blue chip companies, despite repeated demands from brokers that they unload their shares in established firms and reinvest the money in the shares of newly floated companies. Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh said last fortnight that he was personally in favour of the reinvestment idea, but added that the Government had not considered the issue. Meanwhile, the key question remained unanswered: had the institutions shot their bolt, or would they be back with more blue chips and lemons in the coming weeks?

—PALAKUNNATHU G.MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Colour from Uptron.

Reach out and touch it.

UPTRON TV

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Corporate Office: 10 Ashok Marg, Lucknow-226 001.

ULKA-D-UIL-631

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ADVERTISING

The Celebrity Sell

WOULD you buy a suit from this dashing, greying cricketer with the Robert Redford moustache? Or a TV from that demure news-reader who blinks her eyelashes every time she tells you that an accord is reached? Or ghee from a wrestler who has obviously had a lot of it? Quite a lot of people think you will, going by the number of celebrities—aspiring, current or fading—posing and pirouetting in suits, next to food cans, on top of cycles, astride motorbikes and inside T-shirts.

Starting with the number of nubile and not-so-nubile actresses drooling over Lux toilet soap to M. Azharuddin looking dumbfounded in an odd make of suitings, more and more advertisers are getting the beau and sporty monde to climb on to their bandwagon. Says Alyque Padamsee, executive director, Lintas India Ltd: "What we're seeing is selling of life-styles by the people who epitomise that life-style the best."

More and more advertisers are getting the beau and sporty monde to climb on to their bandwagon.

A number of high-profile, celebrity-based campaigns have hit the road in the last few years:

Editor Russi Karanjia, Lt-General Jagjit Singh Aurora, actor Kabir Bedi and cueist Mike Ferreira figure in a series of Vimal ads for premium worsted suitings—"the finest suitings for professionals in the age group of 35 plus", according to the Mudra Communications boss A.G. Krishnamurthy.

Film stars Rati Agnihotri, Mithun Chakraborty and Tina Munim pose for Hindicised spots—"Hum, tum aur Thril"—for McDowells' cola in what Padamsee calls an effort to grab the huge "Hindi market" for soft drinks.

Television news-readers Tejeshwar Singh and Gitanjali Aiyar, fashion designer Lillette Dubey and TV sportscaster Charu Sharma peddle concentrated food Marmite; HMM Ltd, the company that makes it, says that sales have increased by over 50 per cent ever since the spots began to be aired.

Cricketer Ravi "Audi" Shastri looks cool in Proline sportswear T-shirts, with or without beauties clinging to his arm, and Proline Chairman Rajiv Batra claims that the 'Ravi Shastri collection', a daring attempt to sell T-shirts priced at shirt prices as exclusive casual wear, is doing very well with sales of Rs 3 crore. Shastri also puts in an appearance in the Japanese-made National television sets ads aimed at the Indian market.

On the not-so-commercial front, character actor Iftekhar and aging tragedian Dilip Kumar were used in commercials made for the railways, in which they exhorted travellers to keep compartments and stations clean. Evergreen tycoon J.R.D. Tata had also agreed to appear and appeal, claims K.George John, resident Director of Ulka Advertising Pvt Ltd, which did the spots.

And, of course, one of the most successful campaigns has been for Parle's highly saleable cola Thums Up, which has used practically the entire Indian cricket team at some time or the other.

So the celebrity bandwagon rolls on, with more action to come. Cricketer Sunil Gavaskar and his wife Marshneil have joined up with two former advertising men to form the Professional Management Group (PMG), an agency which plans to take over sportsmen's advertising lives and get them better deals than they have got so far. Azharuddin, for instance, was offered Rs 7,500 for a year's contract with a textile mill when even a professional model would have got Rs 20,000.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Says PMG partner Sumedh Shah: "We don't get to the American level where the agencies literally tell the sportsmen to run their lives. We'll just secure for them the best contract they deserve. After all, the sportsman's appeal cuts across the board." Thus on the cards is a commercial for Pizza King, where the entire Indian team might indulge in fun antics like trying with one another to see who eats pizzas the fastest. The fee for the whole thing could be as high as Rs 2.5 lakh and will be doled out according to each player's seniority and standing.

Egoes mean money and there is no doubt that quite a few of the celebrities are in it for fast hefty bucks and other perks. Shastri's contact with Proline Sportswear is said to be worth over Rs 1 lakh. Sunil Gavaskar says he doesn't know how much he is making "out of this racket" but estimates his income from commercials at Rs 2 lakh per year. Kapil Dev is said to receive the consumer goodies he poses for as perks: a TV set, a fridge and so on.

This is a far cry from the days when celebrity advertising first began in India. Russi Karanjia says he modelled for Vimal because Dhirubhai Ambani asked him to do so and he didn't get a penny. Ferreira, who explains that he togged up in worsteds only to "give billiards a break", got only Rs 3,000 while Tejeshwar Singh got only Rs 1,000 for the Marmite ad. The rate for a top bracket face, according to Suresh Balasubramaniam of Trikaya Advertising, the company that evolved the Thums Up campaign, ranges from Rs 25,000 to Rs 1 lakh a year.

That is a lot of money, but if the campaigns are slick and well designed, they work wonders for the advertiser too. Rediffusion Advertising created a campaign for the high-priced BSA SLR bikes which showed Kapil Dev and Vijay Amritraj saving their respective situations because the bikes lent to them by obliging children got them to their playing fields on time. Targeted at the 11-15 age group, the spots apparently did their job: the bikes' manufacturers T.I.Cycles' sales ballooned from 30,000 to 1,80,000 cycles a year. Says H.V.Subramaniam, branch director, Rediffusion: "The point is that it is really the kid who lends the heroes his bike who is the centre of attention. So the sportsmen don't dominate the ad."

Another success story is that of the Ravi Shastri-Proline tie-up.The Proline sportswear range was launched only two years ago but it already sells five lakh pieces a year thanks to its clever positioning as all-purpose sportswear and skillful use of Sandeep Patil (who was the first cricketer used for the campaign but was dropped when he stopped making runs) and Shastri. Says Proline Chairman Batra: "Ravi really comes across as the cool, casual achiever and that's how men and women want to feel when they wear our clothes."

Cricketer Sunil Gavaskar and wife Marshneil have formed an agency which plans to take over sportsmen's advertising lives and get them better deals.

Other intelligently placed advertising is not so prominent. Actress Jaya Prada lends her luscious hair to Amla hair oil and thespian Shreeram Lagoo to the tonic Chyawanprash, both products of Dabur Pvt. Ltd. But sometimes it can fail. Sunil Gavaskar remembers the time when he first started appearing in ads for a soap called Sentry. "I don't even know if it is still around." Later he appeared in a series of Palmolive shaving cream ads but says that "somehow people

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

And suddenly colours begin to sing

Warm, pleasing yellows. Soft, soothing greens. Deep, mystic purples. Colours you've never heard before.

At Colour-Chem we make them sing. In the widest repertoire of shades and hues in the world of pigments and dyes.

In that subtle refinement of tone called quality control.

That constant striving to excel, which is R & D.

And that intimate empathy with the audience which you know as customer service.

You'll recognize Colour-Chem colours. And they'll sing for you. Whether you're in the textile, paints, printing inks, rubber, plastics or leather industry.

Just stay tuned in to Colour-Chem. You can't go wrong.

Colour-Chem

Colour-Chem Limited

194, Churchgate Reclamation,
Bombay 400 020.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

remember me in the ad but always remember the product as something else." Former Indian cricket captain Mansoor Ali Khan Pataudi once appeared in an ad for Chancellor cigarettes: the film showed him throwing a sumptuous party in a sumptuous flat for sumptuous people: The cigarette flopped miserably. "Celebrity advertising is tricky," muses Ogilvy Benson and Mather creative director Suresh Mullick, "which is why we never use it now, although we did use Shashi Kapoor for Liberty shirts once. Very often the celebrity can overshadow the product, and then poof."

The big daddy of celebrity advertising is of course the Lux campaign which began worldwide over 50 years ago and which in India currently uses over 40 stars a year—about 300 have been signed up for it all over India—without paying them anything. "I wouldn't dream of showing Lux without a filmstar clutching it," says Shunu Sen, vice-president, marketing, Hindustan Lever Ltd (HLL). "When a star appears on Lux you know she's arrived." The stars are paid only token gifts to appear in it—although some years ago there was a move in the film industry to boycott Lux campaigns because they weren't getting any money for it. "The product is in tune with the people who endorse it," says Sen. "It's a perfect example of synchronisation."

However, HLL has run into problems with another star, Priya "Rajani" Tendulkar. She appeared in national ads last fortnight as a choosy Rajani Prabhakar endorsing the detergent made by HLL's competitor Godrej—which also sponsors the Rajani programme on television. Before she became a celebrity, however, Priya had signed a contract for Rs 6,000 with HLL for advertising a similar product and the film had already been shot. Sources say that this could have been one of the classic pitfalls of celebrity advertising: one person endorsing two competing products.

There is as yet no research to show if celebrity advertising works or doesn't, but most advertisers are agreed on one thing—that for mass-produced consumables like soft drinks and clothing, of which there are plenty of competing brands, attaching a celebrity's name to a particular brand makes it stand out from the crowd. Explains Padamsee of the Thril campaign, "We wanted to reach out to the vast mass of unanglicised people who were with it but not it. Rati, Tina and Mithun are not perceived as part of the English-speaking crowd and their invitation to share their drink was really an invitation to share their life-style. A life-style that went down well with the large mass of people who wear jeans but were not brought up on them."

With the proliferation of brands in any product, celebrity testimonials might be the only way to break away from the pack. But establishing credibility is still the key to a good sell, though that might not be the case with the Lux line-up—as one wag says, "who believes that Zeenat Aman actually uses Lux." Says Bobby Sistas of Sita's Pvt Ltd: "Shastri for sportswear is fine, Shastri for motorbikes—even with his gold Audi—can pass, but Shastri for suitings with models clinging to him? Ridiculous." The idea, as Subramaniam of Rediffusion says, is that the celebrity "must be in sync with the product."

Which is probably why Pardip Chanda, marketing manager of HMM Ltd, says they did not use a celebrity for their Horlicks—it is notable that not one sportsman appears in the health drink ads because "Horlicks is not a glamorous product but a down to earth one." HMM used a housewife called Suchitra for Horlicks for eight years and Hindustan Lever is said to have eschewed the use of a familiar face in favour of a tough, rather cussed housewife called Lalitaji to get across its point of Surf being value for money. Mudra uses celebrities lavishly but subtly. As Krishnamurthy claims:

Celebrities can enhance awareness of a product but can drown it if not properly used and the key is to fine-tune the medium and the message.

"We were the first and still are the only agency using celebrities who do not endorse the product."

So celebrities can enhance awareness of a product but can drown it if not properly used and the key to getting you to believe Sunil Gavaskar or Gitanjali Aiyar is to fine-tune the medium and the message. Whatever the tricks of the trade, more and more people, especially the newer stars of sponsored programmes are getting into the act. Shafi Inmadar and Swaroop Sampat of 'Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi' are modelling for desi banians and phoren sarees respectively. Satish Shah from the same sitcom has already appeared in other ads. As video director Jalal Agha—who appeared in a highly successful spot for Pan Parag—says: "We have got to the point where any big name is willing to sell anything. Whether he actually does or not is not his problem." What's in a name. Well, if selling something, just about everything.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI with PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SEVENTH PLAN

Hope on the Horizon

THE LAST thing you would expect from a government headed by an ex-pilot is a sharp cut in the spending on aviation. Yet that is precisely what the Seventh Five-Year Plan, now being given its final touches, proposes to do. While investment in virtually everything is scheduled to rise sharply, by between 50 and 100 per cent or more, the money being given for civil aviation is down from Rs 931 crore in the sixth plan to Rs 758 crore. In fact, the plan document says that "the growth of Indian Airlines will be restricted to 8 per cent per annum."

That is one of several surprises in the plan document, a copy of which was obtained by INDIA TODAY. For instance, in an atmosphere charged with a new consumerism and the promotion of colour TV's, new cars and videos, the draft plan calls for a curb on conspicuous consumption. And for all the talk of high technology, the biggest increases in investment outlays are in a host of unlikely fields, such as forestry, social services, special areas programmes, and the development of backward areas. Family planning, in fact, gets a record 135 per cent increase in outlay, while nutrition's slice of the cake is up by a mouth-watering 335 per cent: an increase that no other sector can match. This perhaps reflects the Government's new-found awareness of more basic human needs.

Other policy reversals may be imminent, for the plan document talks of raising an additional Rs 2,000 crore through higher direct taxes in the next five years. This cannot be achieved without reversing the trend set in the last Central budget, which saw hefty reliefs being given in income tax and wealth tax, apart from the abolition of estate duty.

How much of this will finally go through remains a question, however, because the prime minister has asked the Planning Commission to give more money to some of the relatively neglected sectors, like power, oil and the railways. And Rajiv Gandhi is apparently not very happy with the Planning Commission's sense of priorities. The coming weeks will show whether he now manages to get the plan recast in a new mould.

There is some surprise over the sixth plan performance too. The two sectors that got the maximum attention from the Government in terms of policy changes—industry and exports—have turned in the poorest performances. For the first time in any plan, industry grew slower than agriculture (3.9 per cent annually against 4.4 per cent for agriculture), while exports during the 1980-85 quinquennium totalled only Rs 33,000 crore, far short of the target of Rs 41,000 crore. In fact, the trade deficit is not expected to drop even over the next five years.

The poor performance by industry seems to have occurred despite what the plan document terms a "sustained increase of 16 per cent per year in the real investment in fixed assets by the private corporate sector during the first four years of the sixth plan", despite this, as a recent assessment of the Indian economy by the World Bank has noted, "the acceleration in (economic) growth....reflects improvements in agriculture and services, with the contribution of industry actually decelerating..." Clearly, the Government seems to feel it has the right now to ask industry for a better response to liberalised policies.

There is, nevertheless, a fair sprinkling of good cheer running through the plan document, which starts off by declaring that "since the mid-'70s the Indian economy has moved to a higher growth path." It also says that the percentage of the population below the poverty line has dropped from 48 per cent in 1977-78 to 36.9 per cent last year (a claim that is disputed by numerous economists and social scientists), and a further drop to 25.8 per cent is forecast for 1989-90. The growth of employment, at 4 per cent annually, is expected to be well over the 2.6 per cent growth in the labour force.

How much of what the plan says is to be taken seriously is another matter. For while the draft document says that "the Government and the public sector have to play a major role in the development process" and that "these are matters which cannot be left to the free play of market forces", the public sector gets less than half the total investment outlay for the first time ever. In both the third and the fourth plans, the public sector outlay formed more than 60 per cent of investment. This dropped to 53 per cent in the sixth plan, but in the seventh this figure will be no more than 48 per cent. India's private sector has now become the dominant factor in economic investment.

Such numbers may, in the end, say little about what will really happen. For while the overall growth target for the next five years is a relatively modest 5 per cent (the sixth plan did 5.3 per cent, and earlier plans used to aim at between 5-and 6 per cent), the target for industry is no less than 8 per cent: more than double that achieved in the last five years, with no obvious reason to expect that such a sharp acceleration is round the corner.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Also, the total investment proposed is Rs 3,22,366 crore, and reads unnervingly like one of those telephone numbers you never get. Some of the other growth rates projected are equally flattering: annual double-digit growth is forecast for sugar, newsprint, fertiliser, cement, aluminium, polyester and viscose staple fibre and filament yarn, machine tools, commercial vehicles, electricity generation and a host of chemical products. But the biggest growth of all is slated for electronics, from a very low base to Rs 10,500 crore in 1989-90, and a staggering Rs 50,000 crore by the year 2000, at which point electronics is expected to account for no less than one-eighth of the gross domestic product (GDP).

The state of the economy at the advent of the much heralded 21st century is spelt out in some detail, and with a fair overlay of hope. Only 5 per cent of a population of 972 million will be below the poverty line (against 36.9 per cent now), there will be near full employment, and per capita income at Rs 4,020 will be over 50 per cent higher than what it is today. Also, the country will be producing around three times the current quantum of steel, fertiliser, aluminium, coal and electricity, and five times in the case of plastics. Yet, in actual fact, this is not much to speak about; for using current World Bank standards, the projected level of per capita income at the turn of the century will just about take India out of the 'low-income economies' bracket.

If that does not make for a very ambitious target at a time when euphoria runs high on what the economy can do, given the policies promised by the Rajiv Government, perhaps the most important and certainly worrying reason is the increasingly desperate state of government finances, reflected in the declining percentage of public sector investment. Despite planning for additional resource mobilisation of a staggering Rs 46,500 crore through higher taxes and increased prices for public sector products, taking credit for foreign borrowings in the public sector of Rs 18,000 crore, and planning for budgetary deficits totalling Rs 14,000 crore—making for a total additional cash inflow for the Government of Rs 78,500 crore—the public sector investment outlay will be only Rs 1,54,218 crore. Without the additional cash, the existing resource base provides only Rs 75,718 crore—less than the Rs 1,10,000 crore invested during the sixth plan.

As the plan document states honestly enough, the Government is eating up capital for non-plan spending, and the seventh plan document shows no easy way out. In fact, the document notes with concern that the national savings rate has dropped from 24.6 per cent in 1978-79 to 23 per cent, with a corresponding drop in the investment rate. It is in the light of these that the plan calls for a curb on conspicuous consumption. Manmohan Singh, deputy chairman of the Planning Commission, has in fact spoken out against promoting industrial growth by encouraging consumption, and called for encouraging people to save so that the Government will have to invest.

The other new feature of the plan document is the concern for the environment, and some of the statistics in the document would make anyone sit up. No less than 105 million hectares of cultivable land and 8 million hectares of non-forest and non-agricultural land are subject to "widespread soil erosion", and a further 43 million hectares are degraded because of waterlogging, soil alkalinity, ravines and shifting cultivation.

There is also going to be an enormous strain on Indian cities: as much as 60 per cent of the population growth between now and 2000 will be in the cities, which will more than double in size. Amidst the urban decay that is already evident, the possibility of such an explosion can hardly be cause for comfort

Other fundamental changes will also occur in the Indian economy. The share of agriculture in GDP will drop over the next 15 years from 37 per cent to 25.5 per cent, while mining and manufacturing will increase their share from 18.1 per cent to 23.6 per cent. The most dominant sector in the economy will therefore be not agriculture, as now, but services.

Through it all, however, the main statement that the plan document makes is one of hope: that in a measurable time span of 15 years, "the percentage of population below the poverty line would have been reduced to 5 per cent, there would be near full employment....there would be a palpable improvement in the quality of life for the people as a whole, and a majority of the population would have been enabled to satisfy all the basic needs of living." If this vision of the future becomes reality, half a century of problem-ridden planning will finally have delivered.

—T.N. NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

It's Light...

...Yet Strong-

BASF EXPANDED Styropor® PACKS

Light yet strong, Expanded Styropor has many other excellent characterisitcs which makes it the most versatile and ideal packaging material yet developed.

Be your product big or small, fragile, heat sensitive, perishable, etc. Expanded Styropor is the ideal packaging material, as it:-

- Insulates against extremes of climate.
- Prevents breakage.
- Absorbs shakes and shocks of transportation and handling.
- Keeps out dirt and moisture.
- Can be custom moulded to embrace any size or shape of product to hold it securely.

It protects, while it pleases the eye.

Styropor® is the registered trade mark of BASF Aktiengesellschaft. Registered users-BASF India Limited.

Both Thermocole and Styropor are made in India by:-

BASF India Limited
Maybaker House, Sudam Kalu Ahire Marg, Bombay 400 025.
Branches at:-
Ahmedabad • Calcutta • Delhi • Madras

BASF

BII/61-B/PREM ASSOCIATES

Sarayu Foundation Chennai and eGangotri, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Consumer prices have ruled relatively steady, but wholesale prices saw a sharper rise than in past weeks. Money supply recorded no growth but bank credit to firms was on trend last fortnight. The trade gap expanded and foreign exchange reserves dipped sharply. The stock market also saw a sharp down swing.
All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of the last six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale prices jumped 0.7 per cent last fortnight, chiefly owing to a sharp spurt in the prices of food articles.

The consumer price index saw a moderate rise by 0.3 per cent last month, at about half the trend rate of growth.

A decline in bank credit to government offset marginal increases in other components of money supply, to yield almost no growth.

Bank credit to firms had increased marginally by 0.7 per cent last fortnight, maintaining the long term trend.

The trade gap expanded to about Rs 650 crores last month, causing some pressure on the tight foreign exchange situation.

Foreign exchange reserves recorded a 2.1 per cent dip continuing the see-saw of the last few months and adding to the decling trend.

Altogether share prices appear to have maintained their upward movement in fact there was a drop of nearly 2 per cent in the last week.

A 2.8 per cent decline in the price of gold last fortnight reversed the rising trend of the previous month.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Items with maximum growth in July 1985

	% Growth
Tapioca	16.16
Raw Hides	11.49
Fish	9.47
Maize	8.27
Khandsari	7.62
Sugar	6.46
Masoor	5.12
Bajra	4.77
Gur	3.88
Raw Silk	3.71
Cashew-Nuts	2.80
Barley	2.70
Wheat	2.58
Caustic Soda	2.45
Meat	2.17
Chillies	2.16
Milk	1.88
Coffee	1.62
Gram	1.53
Groundnut Seeds	1.51
Nylon & Terene	1.45
Cables & Wires	1.26
Aviation Spirit	1.25
Kerosene	1.11
Coir Yarn	1.09
Cotton Cloth	1.02
Mining Machinery	1.01
Betel-Nuts	0.94
Bolts & Nuts	0.91
Jowar	0.84
Machine Tools	0.83
Industrial Instruments	0.75
Coir Fibre	0.73
Boilers	0.73
Pipes & Tubes	0.69
Dyeing Materials	0.68
Arhar	0.66
Pesticides & Insecticides	0.59
Woollen Cloth & Khadi	0.58
Buses	0.57
Tractors	0.53
Sugarcane	0.50
Power-Driven Pumps	0.50
Tobacco	0.47
Dry Cells	0.46
Paper	0.45
Cement	0.45

Of 139 series considered, 50 with a weight of 38.6 accelerated while 89 with a weight of 48.0 decelerated.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1985	1984
Coal Thousand Tonnes, July	10803	10547
Saleable Steel Thousand Tonnes, July	655.8	542.6
Cement Thousand Tonnes, July	2662	2527
Petroleum Crude Thousand Tonnes, July	2281	2283
Goods Traffic Million Tonnes, July	20.35	19.07

—Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP, ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"At first, I found it a little hard to believe that the Chemical Division of a 'third world' company not only exports products but also technology to developed countries of the West."

That's the Thermax Chemical Division for you.

Importing technology from abroad is one thing. But, at Thermax, we have always made it a point to make foreign technology relevant to India. So we have adapted and innovated the technology we have acquired from the West.

And, today, the scenario has changed. Take, for instance, the agreement Thermax signed 5 years ago with Sybron Chemicals Inc., U.S.A., whereby Thermax had to pay royalty for technical know-how. But, today, Sybron, who are one of the world's largest and most technologically advanced manufacturers of ion exchange resins and related polymers, accepts Thermax to be on par with them technologically. As a result, the agreement has been renewed recently with a mutual technology transfer clause replacing the royalty clause. Today, Thermax actually exports indigenously developed technology to Sybron, in exchange for the know-how being gained from them.

The Division has not only contributed immensely towards import substitution of nuclear grade resins and resins for the recovery of Streptomycin, but exports nuclear grade resins, resins for metal extraction, and inert resins for mixed bed water treatment systems in thermal power stations.

The Chemical Division has gained international recognition of our competence. Besides exporting our speciality chemicals to the USSR and Canada, we also have technology exchange programmes with the USSR on a regular basis.

The Chemical Division has many 'firsts' to its credit. And the product range we have to offer is impressive.

An at-a-glance view of the product range

Our products include the TULSION range of macroporous and gel ion exchange resins for

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

removal of dissolved ionic impurities from water or other solvents. These resins are manufactured in collaboration with Sybron Chemicals Inc., U.S.A. We also manufacture TULSEPARS anionic polyelectrolyte, CAT-FLOC-T cationic polyelectrolyte, made in collaboration with Calgon Corporation, U.S.A., and MAXTREAT non-chromate and chromate-based chemical dosing formulations for cooling water systems.

We introduced in India ECONOMIX, a fireside combustion deposit cleaning agent, which increases boiler efficiency, while saving effort and maintenance costs. This is made in collaboration with Chalbar Ltd., U.K.

We also make oil well chemicals, which include speciality chemicals like the 'pour point depressant', which improves the mobility of crude oil; oil-soluble demulsifiers for oil-water separation; scale inhibitors for water flooding in oil wells; and polyelectrolyte-based deoilers.

And we recently developed a handy test kit for water testing in process industries and in boilers.

The Chemical Division in a capsule

Our problem-solving approach and proven abilities have earned us a great deal of goodwill. Even companies not using Thermax systems or products approach the Division for guidance. And we also undertake to train employees of our clients.

The Division continuously monitors the performance of all products sold. Ours is an improvement-oriented approach, with a constant effort to better product performance. For instance, our entire range of ion exchange resins has been upgraded recently.

The Chemical Division of Thermax not only stands tall on our own strengths but also forms an integral part of Thermax's activities. It enables the Company to offer you, across our different divisions, a comprehensive package of services.

THERMAX

THERMAX PRIVATE LIMITED

CHEMICAL DIVISION

97-E, General Block, Bhosari, Pune 411 026

SALES OFFICES: Bombay • Calcutta • New Delhi • Madras • Ahmedabad • Bangalore • Bhopal • Hyderabad

Thermax Chemical Division – Making our chemistry work for you.

Rediffusion/T/4017a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Copper & Aluminium Wires & Strips Covered with Paper, Fibre Glass, Nomex, Kapton & Teflon and Paper Covered Bunched Conductors.

Also Paper Insulated Flexible Lead Cables.

An undisputed choice for quality electrical windings.

Vinstar

Vinstar Winding Wires and Strips for transformer, motor and allied electrical applications are manufactured under strict quality control and as per Indian and International standard specification. They can also be supplied as per customers own special specification. These are manufactured in an ultra modern plant having facilities with latest equipment and technology in the field.

Range of production for round conductors is 10 SWG to 22 SWG. And for rectangular conductors from 2 × 2 mm to 10 × 10 mm cross section.

Manufactured by:

VINDHYA ENTERPRISES
Post Box No. 43, Rani Baug,
Rewa-486 001 (M.P.)

AMA-VE-15

We are proud to offer matchless quality.

Copper strips for Segments.

Copper Components and Flexibles & Laminated Copper with/without Electro tinning. Copper & Aluminium Bus-Bars.

Profiles.

Bare strips for field & armature coils.

Manufactured to the most exacting standards and under strict quality control.

Supplied to most of the leading O.E.M. consumers including M/s Lucas TVS Limited, M/s Bharat Heavy Electricals Limited group, M/s The General Electric Company of India Limited group, M/s NGEF Limited, and M/s Indian Telephone Industries Limited to name a few.

These are import substitute items developed and manufactured by us for the first time in India.

Please direct all your enquiries to:

KEN ELECTRICALS LIMITED
Post Box No. 14,
Rani Baug,
REWA-486 001 (M.P.)

AMA-KL-14

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Turning Tide

THE TIDE finally seems to have turned, and it needed the financial institutions to achieve what for weeks had seemed impossible. By acting in unison, and dumping large amounts of shares on the stock-market in a concerted bid to end the sustained boom in equity prices, the financial institutions finally managed to pull down the rising curve of share prices. Share prices took some time to resume their upward search after the institutions had stopped selling. The bulls who had collared the market and done precisely what they wished for weeks on end seemed to be taking their own time before getting back into action and were now nowhere in sight. And some of the shares were offered 25 to 30 per cent lower than their peak levels.

Nevertheless, the stock-market has not suddenly become a bear's haven. The Economic Times stock-market index dropped only 7 per cent despite the heavy institutional selling, and suggested that there was still some resilience left on Dalal Street. Also, it remains uncertain whether the institutions will continue selling, or whether they have shot their bolt for the moment. It does seem clear that the institutions cannot sell too much just yet, because they will (with the exception of the Unit Trust) be subject to the capital gains tax on their sales realisations—unless, of course, an amendment to the tax law is round the corner so that this no longer acts as a limitation on institutional behaviour on the market.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Meanwhile, the market was agog with speculation as to the reasons for the institutions' sudden decision to enter the market and act with the clear desire to bring prices down. Both the Unit Trust chairman and the head of the General Insurance Corporation had asserted two months ago that they would not be disinvesting. Nevertheless, both had also made no secret of the fact that they thought the equity boom was overcooked, and that the heat had to be turned off.

For all that, there is little doubt that the orders to sell came from New Delhi, which had noted that the authorities on the Bombay Stock Exchange had gone to the extent of imposing 40 per cent margins on the purchase of cash-paid as well as forward-traded scrips. Even the much quieter Madras Stock Exchange had witnessed the slapping on of 10 per cent margins.

Clearly, the time had come to do something about the extraordinary state that the market found itself in, and perhaps no one could have done the job as effectively as the institutions. Certainly, their decision to sell, and sell big, has given the market a much-needed pause. The question now is whether the bulls will be on the rampage again.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1985 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 19.8.85	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	59.00	29.00	46.00	11.00 –
Associated Cement	610.00	385.00	490.00	70.00 –
Atlas Copco	70.00	37.50	61.00	2.00 –
Associated Bearings	725.00	425.00	720.00	37.50 +
Bajaj Auto	2000.00	855.00	1850.00	75.00 –
Ballarpur	65.00	45.00	55.50	8.50 –
Baroda Rayon	460.00	281.00	380.00	55.00 –
Bata India	88.10	48.00	66.00	18.50 –
Bayer	480.00	305.00	450.00	5.00 –
Best & Crompton	115.00	61.00	105.00	Nil
Bharat Forge	95.00	35.50	76.00	3.00 –
Blow Plast	85.00	36.50	78.00	13.00 +
Blue Star	82.50	33.00	77.50	2.50 +
Bombay Dyeing	156.00	66.00	115.00	9.00 –
Brooke Bond	83.00	47.50	63.00	12.50 –
Ceat Tyres	290.00	180.00	290.00	15.00 +
Century Spinning	1310.00	810.00	1120.00	190.00 +
Chloride India	91.00	56.90	82.00	4.00 –
Durgia	85.00	32.25	58.00	17.00 –
Colgate	318.00	147.00	170.00	15.00 –
Cyanamid	90.00	33.00	67.00	3.00 –
DCM	73.00	18.00	71.50	8.50 +
Dunlop	48.75	22.30	43.00	2.00 –
Elecon	108.00	54.00	90.00	5.00 –
Escorts	102.00	49.87	90.00	9.00 –
Food Specialties	215.00	86.00	160.00	35.00 –
Garware Nylon	56.00	24.50	49.00	3.00 +
Glaxo	78.00	24.00	65.00	2.00 –
G.E. Shipping	36.50	14.25	29.00	0.50 –
Gujarat St Fertilisers	810.00	537.00	705.00	60.00 –
Gwalior Rayon	87.50	53.75	74.00	2.00 –
Hindustan Lever	125.00	51.25	92.00	16.00 –
Hindustan Motors	86.00	37.50	74.00	3.00 –

	1985 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 6.8.85	Change on Fortnight
Indian Dyestuff	390.00	267.50	320.00	20.00 –
Indian Explosives	73.50	33.00	57.00	15.50 –
Indian Hotels	135.00	76.00	105.00	5.00 –
Indian Organic	124.00	50.50	110.00	2.00 –
Indian Rayon	125.00	66.00	109.00	3.00 –
Indrol	250.00	90.50	175.00	50.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	365.00	162.00	340.00	Nil
ITC	65.50	29.00	54.80	10.70 –
JK Synthetics	118.00	52.75	100.00	13.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	380.00	128.00	310.00	40.00 –
Kirloskar Oil	38.00	23.00	25.00	4.00 –
Lakme	200.00	74.00	145.00	30.00 –
Larsen & Toubro	175.00	72.00	149.00	11.00 –
Lipton	58.50	26.50	43.00	10.00 –
Lohia Machines	85.00	42.00	70.00	nil
Mahindra & Mahindra	102.00	48.00	67.00	19.00 –
Motor Industries	690.00	321.25	630.00	20.00 –
National Organic	550.00	240.00	485.00	25.00 +
Nirlon	70.00	37.75	50.00	6.00 –
Peico Electronics	99.00	38.40	76.50	19.50 –
Premier Auto	645.00	322.00	515.00	95.00 –
Ranbaxy	127.50	49.00	97.50	10.00 –
Raymond	120.00	59.00	86.00	15.00 –
Reckitt & Colman	95.00	57.00	85.00	5.00 +
Reliance Industries	252.00	120.00	230.00	5.00 –
Sandoz	82.00	31.00	65.00	8.00 –
Shriram Fibres	81.00	34.00	74.00	7.00 –
SPIC	137.00	43.50	114.00	7.00 –
Tata Steel	1195.00	381.00	985.00	75.00 –
Telco	1030.00	409.00	775.00	145.00 –
Vulcan Laval	125.00	64.00	112.50	2.50 –
Zenith Steel	75.00	28.00	64.00	7.00 –
20th Century Leasing	84.00	31.50	56.00	9.00 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.4123	8.3216
Austria	Schilling	100	61.9229	61.4339
Bahrain	Dinar	1	31.4123	31.4019
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.4813	42.4803
Canada	Dollar	1	8.8254	8.7471
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.1975	1.1854
Egypt	Pound	1	14.2213	14.2209
France	Franc	1	1.4164	1.3888
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5291	1.5159
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.0063	1.0060
Iran	Rial	100	13.3552	13.2919
Italy	Lira	100	0.6413	0.6401
Japan	Yen	100	5.1203	4.9950
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7140	0.7139
Kuwait	Dinar	1	39.4093	39.4087
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8485	4.8013
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.7945	0.7940
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6323	0.6212
Netherlands	Guilder	1	3.8639	3.8388
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7590	0.7582
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.3446	5.2946
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0724	0.0721
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4380	0.4379
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.4549	1.4401
Switzerland	Franc	1	5.3005	5.2543
Tanzania	Schilling	1	0.6823	0.6820
Thailand	Baht	100	44.5723	44.5001
UK	Pound	1	16.7154	16.5933
USA	Dollar	1	11.9475	11.8350
UAE	Dirham	1	3.2350	3.2347
USSR	Rouble	1	14.0110	14.0023
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	4.3975	4.2918

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Ltd, New Delhi, and quoted between the Banks on 26.8.85.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASHOK VAIRE

SRI LANKA

Tough Talk

Rajiv with Hector Jayewardene in Delhi: balancing act

AFTER the Punjab accord and the Assam settlement, it looks like Rajiv Gandhi has been denied a hat trick", was the wry comment of a 'Thimpu-watcher' in Madras, referring to the virtual collapse of the second round of Indian-sponsored talks between Sri Lanka and their Tamil opponents over the island's ethnic issue in the Bhutanese capital last fortnight. The analogy was only too apt, with the Indian cricket team currently on an official tour of Sri Lanka. In the Thimpu test, however, with the injured teams back in the pavilion, it was India's umpiring that was becoming the subject of heated debate and controversy.

The Tamil militants, already resentful at India's strong-arm tactics in frog-marching them to Thimpu, had their hackles raised further by the demand of Sri Lanka's chief negotiator, Hector Jayewardene, that they lay down their arms failing which the negotiations could not proceed further. Since the positions had not altered much, the result was a deadlock which was further compounded when the Tamil delegates walked out of the talks over what they believed was a major violation of the two-month-old cease-fire; the alleged massacre of over 400 Tamil civilians at Vavuniya and Trincomalee by Sri Lankan security forces.

The Sri Lankan Government denied the reported killings, but the talks were doomed. In a desperate salvage bid, Indian Foreign Secretary Romesh Bhandari rushed to Thimpu, storming angrily into the hotel where the Tamil delegates were packing to go home and gave them a tongue-lashing. Said one of the delegates: "He shouted and swore at us saying 'why the bloody hell did you walk out' and tried to literally drag us back to the negotiations. We said that our leaders had asked us to return. The next day he agreed that some of us could return but a token presence had to be maintained to indicate that the talks had been only adjourned".

But for the militants, convinced that they were pitted not only against the Sri Lankan but also the Indian Government, more fireworks were in store. Back in Madras, deportation orders were served on two top-ranking Tamil militants by the Indian Government, confirming their view that, unlike his other political successes, Rajiv Gandhi had chosen the stick over the carrots. The two men served with deportation orders, Professor A. S. Balasingham, official spokesman of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, and S. C. Chandrahasan, convener of the Organisation for the Protection of Tamils of Eelam from Genocide, were asked to leave India within 48 hours. Balasingham is a British passport holder and a social scientist from London University, while Chandrahasan is a lawyer with Sri Lankan citizenship.

Balasingham: deported

Obviously, the deportation orders were served as a result of Hector Jayewardene's meeting with Rajiv in Delhi after the official adjournment of the aborted talks. Equally obviously, the Indian strategy seemed to be to come down hard on the hard-line militants to ensure that the negotiations succeed at any cost. Last week, the Indian Government was still pressurising the Eelam National Liberation Front (ENLF) to send representatives to Delhi in a bid to get the negotiations restarted. An ENLF spokesman stated that the militants would agree to resume negotiations only if the Sri Lankan Government stopped army atrocities on Tamil civilians, ensured that the cease-fire was not violated, and put up concrete proposals. A few hours before he was whisked away by four policemen and an immigration officer, Balasingham had told INDIA TODAY: "We are no longer prepared to go on and on with the discarded district council proposal. Jayewardene has to come up with something more satisfying."

The Jayewardene he meant, Sri Lankan president and Hector's brother, was really in no position to make any concessions. In Colombo, the average Sinhalese, and more so the middle class intelligentsia, is increasingly restive and critical of the Government. Already economically hard-pressed, they are now freely critical of an administration they perceive as ineffectual and would prefer a military solution that would appeal better to their nationalistic pride than a peaceful settlement. But an embarrassed government seems incapable of either.

With the middle class forming the main opinion-makers in the compact, highly-literate and politicised island, these emerging trends are starting to undermine the self-confidence of the ruling United National Party's (UNP) rural and small town leadership. And, with Finance Minister Ronnie de Mel given to almost daily warnings of a darkening economic landscape (swelling defence spending has wrecked his budget), the business community, the traditional, pivotal pillar of the UNP, has started showing signs of acute insecurity. As a result, the party's top-rung spokesmen, including senior ministers, are now busy contradicting themselves when they are not contradicting each other over the question of "war or peace". The only section that can be happy about the turn of events is the newly formed National Front. "Parties cannot function nor can parliamentary politics if we do not halt the drift towards chaos which is where the Government is leading Sri Lanka. The only purpose of the National Front is to halt that," said Mrs Bandaranaike last fortnight.

Away from the din of the emotionally-charged debate, however, there are sections of the Sri Lankan intelligentsia that genuinly regret the Thimpu failure, but they now tend to blame Delhi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some names become a legend.

Decades later... still the leader.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"My Video."

NV-780EM VHS

- 7-system (PAL, PALI, NTSC 4.43, NTSC 3.58, MESECAM, SECAM, LONG PLAY) video cassette recorder
- 8-hour recording and playback • AC Auto (110-240 volt)

TC-AL2600 WORLD 14 SYSTEM

Alpha α Series 66 cm (26") colour TV
- World 14-system
- New vertical design
- Twin built-in woofers with sound reflectors
- 26-key infra-red remote control
- Built-in stereo amplifier

"When it comes to video cassette recorders, I know performance and features are critical. That's why I go with Japan's largest-selling brand of consumer electronics, National.

"One of National's most popular video cassette recorders. . . and one of my personal favourites. . . is the 7-system NV-780EM. It records and plays back the two most important systems, PAL and MESECAM. And even if you can't be home, you won't miss a single program; simply set the 14-day program timer to record it. The wireless remote control is convenient too, with fingertip command over all major VTR functions.

"Add a National TC-AL2600 'Alpha Series' colour TV and you've got the perfect TV/video combination; TC-AL2600 14-system viewing and an extra-large 26-inch picture to provide a whole new world of video entertainment.

"If you're like me, you want superior performance when you buy anything electronic. I go out of my way to buy National. Shouldn't you?"

Mithun Chakraborty

National

National Authorized Service Centres in India

BUSH INDIA LTD.
- Rajmahal Building, 33 Altamount Road, Bombay 400 026 Tel: 351979/351799
- 36 Community Centre, Basant Lok, Vasant Vihar New Delhi 110 057 Tel: 607815
- 26 Farrah Commercial Complex, J.C. Road, Bangalore 560 002 Tel: 223771/223149

ESQUIRE SERVICE CENTRE
(For video-related products only)
- Unit No. 1A & 1B Ground Floor Rehmat Manzil, 75 Veer Nariman Road Churchgate, Bombay 400 020 Tel: 882 8857

INDUS AIR CONDITIONING PVT. LTD.
(For home appliances only)
- Pali Chandi Road, Prabhadevi, Bombay 400 028 Tel: 422 37 29/422 37 37

ASSOCIATED ELECTRICAL AGENCIES
- Anugraha 19 Nungambakkam High Road Madras

BUSH INDIA LTD.
- Cochin (Opening Soon)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SINGAPORE GIRL, YOU PUT A SMILE ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH.

A great way to fly
SINGAPORE AIRLINES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Beltek.

And the other. The difference is color.

A million colors on screen. Life-like, real, changing. Colors to capture your imagination. Such are the exciting colors of Beltek Euro-Color, a TV crafted with the help of 270 computerised quality control tests, using state-of-the-art technology from ITT of W. Germany.

The difference is technology.

BELTEK

National-161

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LALITH ATHULATHMUDALI

"I fear more bloodshed"

SRI LANKA's National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali is known for his forceful and independent views, specially on the ethnic crisis that has engulfed his country. Though his domineering role in the Tamil issue is not as visibly in evidence as earlier, his is still a major decision-making voice. Last fortnight, Athulathmudali was in Geneva where he spoke to INDIA TODAY's CHITRA SUBRAMANIAM Extracts:

Q. What are the gut issues at Thimpu?

A. The land settlement issue. How to move from the poverty test to an ethnic test. There is a strong feeling that land settlement must not be seen as making the majority into a minority. This is a tough issue. I don't like this concept of traditional homeland. The whole of Sri Lanka belongs to all of us and you cannot push a homeland thesis simply because the Tamil speaking population of Sri Lanka live in certain provinces. So while rejecting the homeland question one has got to see how an ethnic balance can be worked out. The other issue is the law and order question. They (the Tamils) say we need to protect ourselves and we need our own police force.

Athulathmudali

Q. But are their fears not legitimate?

A. I think to some extent they are not wholly unreasonable. But on the other hand in a small country how do you move your police, how do you arm them, how do you train them?

Q. But don't you agree that there is a threat to the Tamils?

A. No. I would put it this way. The Tamils had no threat till they started these terrorist attacks. They made demands which were seen as unreasonable by the people. As soon as terrorist attacks intensified in 1983, there was a backlash problem because the average masses thought the terrorists and Tamils were one. They hit back. The terrorist attacks were seen as a provocation. If they stop, there will be no such problem.

Q. There is indication that the hardliners and the Buddhist clergy are against negotiating.?

A. Not at all. So long as we can get a reasonable solution there will be no problem, we can sell it to the masses. The Buddhist clergy tend to become important only when they reflect the opinion of the majority but what a lot of people don't understand is that the Sinhalese feel threatened. They feel they are being driven into the sea and when Madras starts sabre-rattling you know what they say, they (Tamils) can go back to Madras but where can we go.

Q. Your economy is suffering. What happens if the Thimpu talks fail? Will there be more bloodshed?

A. Well, I hope not but I fear so. In Thimpu, the talks have adjourned sine die..

Q. Yes, India is trying....

A. ...pushing around.

Q. If you are trying to say that the Tamils have not come voluntarily then whatever settlement you reach will not hold.

A. Yes, but if they have come there we can have some kind of acceptance. But if they didn't go there voluntarily they are showing that they only want a military solution.

Q. How do you see India's role in the issue?

A. I don't like to think of its behaviour prior to 1984. At present there is much greater understanding but the question is here are two friendly neighbours, age-old friends. They are two sovereign states and one does not challenge the sovereignty of the other. But can you go allowing on one's soil, people saying that I am going to declare war on your friendly neighbour? Some decision has to be taken about that.

Q. But India is a free country...

A. Yes, but when the statements are made by citizens of a third country, what then? Some of the militants in Madras are British citizens.

more than Colombo. Delhi, they say, was right to take advantage of the much improved chances of a negotiated settlement that arose partly out of external pressure from Sri Lanka's aid donors and partly because Sri Lankan opinion was getting used to a new Indian premier less haughty and indifferent to Sri Lankan sensibilities than his predecessor. But Delhi, they say, erred in grabbing the opportunity too soon and too eagerly and for being naive enough to ignore the old truism that the smaller the country, the more intractable the complexities and irrationalities of its politics.

There is increasing opinion that by ordinary logic, Colombo's bottom line had to be much higher than the rejected provisional councils formula and that should have been ensured by Indian and Sri Lankan negotiators long before the actual talks were organised. But with the resurgence of violence, the worrying question was whether events had once again slipped out of the control of either Delhi or Sri Lanka's civilian negotiators.

In Madras, the militants are angered at the deportation decision and have begun to openly show signs of resisting Indian pressure. Huge rallies have been held in support of the militants and in protest against the deportation of Balasingham and Chandrahasan but latest indications are that New Delhi is to continue its crack-down on Tamil militants, while putting pressure on Colombo to bring its security forces to heel and control the violence.

India is also pressing Colombo to agree to making the working paper submitted at the Ceylon Workers' Congress to last year's All-Party Conference, a basis for further negotiations between the militants and the Sri Lankan Government. The paper envisions a substantial amount of regional autonomy for the Tamils with safeguards for all minorities through special administrative innovations. So far, the hitch has been that the Sri Lankans would like the Tamils to make the proposal while the Tamils insist that the Sri Lankans bring up the issue "so that we can then ask for something more and at least get regional autonomy". But if the anti-Tamil violence in Sri Lanka continues with Colombo unable to restrain its armed forces, and India increases its pressure on the militants in Madras, thus forcing them back to Sri Lanka, there just may not be another opportunity to give peace a chance.

—MERVYN DE SILVA in Colombo and S.H.VENKATRAMANI in Madras

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ACUPRESSURE SANDALS.

For those who want to walk health problems away.

All it takes is eight minutes, twice a day!

Do you know that 38 nerve endings that control the vital organs in your body are actually under the soles of your feet and the pressure applied on them improves your blood circulation, digestive system and health in general.

Acupressure Sandals — based on a 3000 year old therapy — is derived from this biological fact.

An easy way to health

So convenient. All you do is walk on them for eight minutes every morning and evening before meals. And if walking is already a part of your health routine, walk on Acupressure Sandals instead, for double health benefit. Because they have the effect of medicine on your health without any after-effects.

Popular world-wide

Acupressure Sandals — Convenient, Economical & Safe.
No wonder they are taking USA, Australia, Canada, England, Europe, the Scandinavian countries and now India in their stride!

Buy a pair today!

And now, if you are a health-conscious person fill in the attached coupon along with the outline of your foot on paper and mail it to us.

Price by V.P.P. — Rs. 110/95 & Regd. Parcel — Rs. 106/95

Inclusive of Postage, Packing and all Taxes.

1. Brain
2. Mental Nerve
3. Pituitary
4. Pineal
5. Head Nerve
6. Throat
7. Neck
8. Thyroid
9. Spine
10. Piles
11. Prostate
12. Uterus
13. Penis
14. Ovaries
15. Testes
16. Lower Lumber & Lymph Glands.
17. Hip
18. Bladder
19. Intestines

20. Colon
21. Appendix
22. Gall Bladder
23. Liver
24. Shoulder
25. Pancreas
26. Kidney
27. Stomach
28. Adrenal
29. Solar Plexus
30. Lungs
31. Ear
32. Energy
33. Nerves & Ears
34. Cold & Nerves
35. Eyes
36. Heart
37. Spleen
38. Thymus

Regd. Design No. 155538

ACUPRESSURE THERAPY HEALTH CENTRE
74, Park Street,
Calcutta-700 017
Phone : 43-3583
Telex : 021-4248 KRM IN

ACUPRESSURE THERAPY HEALTH CENTRE
74, Park Street, Calcutta-700 017
Phone : 43-3583 Telex : 021-4248 KRM IN

Please tick the appropriate box.

Send me a pair of Acupressure Sandals by Regd. Post. I am sending Rs. 106.95 by Bank Draft/M.O. (Payable to Acupressure Therapy Health Centre, Calcutta).

Send me a pair of Acupressure Sandals by V.P.P. I promise to pay the postman Rs. 110.95 on delivery.

Name .....

Address .....

Pin .....

Size ..... Age .....

Signature .....

IT-16

V. DIWAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

XLRI JAMSHEDPUR

Institute of Management and Labour Studies

INVITES APPLICATIONS FOR ADMISSION TO

☐ TWO-YEAR POSTGRADUATE PROGRAMMES IN

1. PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS
2. BUSINESS MANAGEMENT

☐ FELLOW PROGRAMME IN MANAGEMENT

Founded in 1949, XLRI is an Institute for postgraduate studies, imparting advanced education in Business Management and Industrial Relations. Its programmes are recognized by the Government of India.

A candidate is allowed to apply for only one of the above programmes. The minimum qualification for the postgraduate programmes is a bachelor's degree in any discipline with at least 45% marks. Students who will have completed their degree examinations before July 1, 1986, may also apply.

The Fellow Programme in Management is similar to a Ph. D. programme of a University. It is open to those who hold a BE or a postgraduate degree, or its equivalent, with at least 45% marks.

The written test for all the programmes will be held on February 2, 1986, at Bhubaneswar, Bombay, Calcutta, Cochin, Delhi, Hyderabad, Jamshedpur, Kanpur, Madras, Nagpur and Patna.

Your request for the prospectus and the application form should be addressed to the Admissions Coordinator, XLRI, Post Box 222, Jamshedpur 831 001, enclosing a crossed demand draft for Rs.30/- made out in favour of "XLRI Jamshedpur" and drawn on the State Bank of India, Jamshedpur, or Canara Bank, Jamshedpur. No other mode of payment will be accepted. Local candidates may pay in cash.

Ensure that your request for the prospectus and the application form is sent by registered post with acknowledgement due. The last date for issuing application forms is November 2, 1985. Completed application forms must reach the Admissions Coordinator on or before November 30, 1985.

V. DIWAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

Religious leaders at AIMPLB meet in New Delhi: forceful plea

MUSLIM PERSONAL LAW

Controversial Verdict

WHEN the Supreme Court ruled that Muslim women were entitled to maintenance from their divorced Muslim husbands, they must have realised they were treading on tricky ground. But they could hardly have imagined the judgement would split the Muslim community down the middle. The ruling, delivered in April by a five-judge bench headed by the-then chief justice Y.V. Chandrachud, upset conservative Muslims who felt that the court was intruding on the basic tenets of the faith. The younger and more liberal sections of the community, who have been at odds with prevailing attitudes and practices that have kept their women backward, drew comfort. With the air heating up on both sides and appeals being made to the prime minister, the inevitable explosion was only a matter of time.

It came last fortnight, when conservative Muslims under the banner of the All India Muslim Personal Law Board (AIMPLB), met in New Delhi to chalk out a three-month long programme intended to build up Muslim public opinion against the verdict and defend the Shariah (comprising the divine revelations and doings of the Prophet). Warned AIMPLB General Secretary Maulana Minatullah Rahmani, the powerful Amir-e-Shariat of Bihar and Orissa: "We have so far desisted from an agitational course, but if our demands are not conceded by the Government, we will do whatever is possible."

The AIMPLB's demands, backed by the signatures of 275 leading ulema from all over the country, made a plea for amendment of Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code (CRPC). Earlier no Muslim husband was required to pay maintenance to his divorced wife beyond the required period of three months (iddat) but the Supreme Court judgement modified the statute requiring the ex-husband to maintain his wife if she were without means. What's more, the court made it clear that if there was any conflict between Muslim Personal Law (MPL) and Section 125, the latter would prevail. The ruling was lent added weight by the fact that the learned judges quoted from the holy Koran: "For divorced women, maintenance should be provided; on reasonable scale; this is a duty on the righteous." Frequently referring to scholarly works on the Koran by a host of distinguished academics, the judges observed: "The contrary argument does less than justice to the the teachings of the Koran."

Muslim leaders were not slow in reacting. Said a visibly upset Syed Shahabuddin, Janata Party leader and editor of Muslim India: "The judgement has created a sense of religious insecurity. The Supreme Court cannot decide what is the essence of Islam as the MPL is a religion." Echoed G.M. Banatwala, general secretary of the Indian Union Muslim League: "This judgement will go down in history as a gross and shocking departure from judicial tradition. It is not for the court to sit down and interpret any religious book. They have totally outstepped their jurisdiction." If these observations did not border on contempt of court, it revealed the extent to which tempers had been aroused. Rahim Qurraisi, secretary of the Hyderabad unit of the AIMPLB argued that the "judges have wrongly interpreted Section 125" since their ruling is "violative of Section 127 (3) (b) which protects Muslims from the effects of Section 125." The respected Qazi-e-Shariat of Bihar and Orissa pointed out that "to impose responsibility of maintenance...is not supported by Koranic argument and on the contrary, is violative of the limits laid down by the Koran."

Strong observations, but they could not obscure the fact that the judgement had gone down well with a wide if not vocal section of the community. Said Supreme Court advocate Agha Farooq: "We are citizens of India and if the MPL clashes with the Constitution we must follow the Constitution. If maintenance is against the MPL or Islamic laws, let our women not ask for it. But if they go to court, then the court is bound to go by the law of the land." Wrote an elated Nusrat Bano Ruhi, a lecturer in political science in Bhopal: "The Muslim theologians tried their best to arouse the masses to agitate against a most just and reasonable pronouncement. That they gave a call to observe 'security of shariat day' on the last Friday of the holy month of Ramzan speaks for how the unscrupulous leaders who know little about their own religion play with the religious feelings of the people."

Welcome support came from no less personage than the Union Minister of State for Home and Industry, Arif Mohammed Khan. In a strongly-worded speech in the Lok Sabha – timed to coincide with the moving of a private member's bill by Banatwala seeking amendment of Sections 125 and 127 of the CRPC that would debar courts from grant-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"This judgement will go down in history as a gross and shocking departure from judicial tradition... They have totally outstepped their jurisdiction."

G.M. BANATWALA
General Secretary
Indian Union Muslim League

IBRAHIM SULAIMAN SAIT
President, Indian Union Muslim League

"No Muslim will ever tolerate any interference in the Shariat or personal law... It is obligatory to mould personal life according to the Shariat."

Shah Bano also led a delegation of women to the Prime Minister... urging the Government not to entertain any demand for amendment of Section 125.

ing maintenance to divorced Muslim women—Khan said was deceitful on the part of anyone to accept that part of the Shariat which suited him and reject those parts that again certain responsibilities. The former student leader of Aligarh Muslim University pointed out that a substantial provision had been made in MPL to protect women's rights. A husband's responsibility towards the woman he proposed to divorce and the manner in which it was to be effected were clearly laid down yet they were being blatantly flouted. Talaq, nowadays, was uttered thrice in a single breath to effect a divorce but the law laid down that a husband had to say it on three separate occasions and all the while the couple had to live together. Also, after divorce the man had to adequately provide for her. Substantial maintenance, even if it were a one-time transaction, was ordained by the holy book.

More important, the verdict came as a godsend to unassuming 70-year-old Shah Bano, who little realised the flap she would create when she filed a case with the first class judicial magistrate in Indore seeking maintenance of Rs 500 from her husband who had thrown her out of home. The proceedings dragged on till November 1978, when her husband Mohammed Ahmed Khan pronounced talaq thereby divorcing her. He argued that since she was no longer his wife, he was not entitled to pay her anything other than the mehr (promised at the time of marriage), maintenance for two years and during the three months of iddat. The magistrate, however, directed him to pay the princely sum of Rs 25 a month in August 1979, which the Madhya Pradesh High Court increased to the peculiar figure Rs 179.20 after Shah Bano appealed. An incensed Khan challenged the decision in the Supreme Court – though he was earning around Rs 5,000 a month from his legal practice. The rest is legal history.

Oddly enough, till the case went to the Supreme Court, no Muslim leader or organisation showed any interest. After the judgement, however, some conservative leaders were agitated over what they felt had brought into question the rituals of nikaah, wedding, and talaq, divorce. Argued Rahmani: "The judgement means a divorced woman continues to be wife until she remarries. In Islam two strangers are joined by nikaah and talaq means breaking of the tie. If after nikaah the two are not a couple and if after talaq the two are not separated, then everything becomes meaningless and illegal." He further argued that maintenance (nafqua) is in lieu of service to husband and the woman who has not done such service cannot be entitled to maintenance. Added Mujahidul Islam, considered an authority on the Islamic laws, "the wealth so obtained (through maintenance) on the part of the wife constitutes unlawful gain which is not permitted by our religion."

The verdict had its spin-offs in other places. In Calicut, a young divorced woman, Sainab, won the battle last month to secure maintenance for herself and her four-year-old son when the Kozhikode Additional District Magistrate ordered her husband to pay monthly maintenance of Rs 300 each to mother and son. Slightly different is the battle of Shahnaz Sheikh who has challenged many aspects of MPL on the grounds that they violate her fundamental rights enshrined in the Constitution. Maltreated by her husband, who had married a second time, and then divorced, Shahnaz filed a case in court in 1983 challenging the MPL on three counts – talaq, polygamy and maintenance. Two months ago, B.R. Atre, additional legislative counsel with the Union of India filed a counter affidavit saying that Shahnaz's writ had no substance and pleaded that it be dismissed. These developments had unnerved the ulema and other Muslim leaders. Said Indian Union Muslim League President Ibrahim Sulaiman Sait angrily: "No Muslim will ever tolerate any interference in the Shariat or personal law. To remain a Muslim it is obligatory to mould personal life according to the Shariat." Some see it as an ominous first step towards a common civil code.

Events have now taken a turn with a memorandum presented to the prime minister on July 30 by an AIMPLB delegation seeking amendment of Section 125. A note has also been submitted giving a detailed explanation of Islamic laws and the effect the verdict has had. Around the same time Shah Bano also led a delegation of women to the prime minister and submitted a memorandum signed by 400 women urging the Government not to entertain any demand for amendment of Section 125. With battle lines drawn and talk of sacrifice in air, the outlook for the future is anything but peaceful.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's First Microprocessor Based Electronic PABX. From BPL.

The country's first indigenous Microprocessor based Electronic Private Automatic Branch Exchange [EPABX] comes from BPL – the first Company in the private sector to secure an industrial licence from the Government for the manufacture of EPABX.

BPL's EPABX, field-tested and proven, is working satisfactorily in several locations. Offering upto 237 internal and 64 external lines, it caters to your vital communication needs and boosts all-round productivity, accelerates decision making and controls telephone expenses.

With an experience of nearly 2 decades in electronics and over a decade in communication, BPL is indeed a force to reckon with in these fields. Further, BPL's comprehensive in-house systems and engineering capability has helped integrate computers and communication. BPL's Power Line Carrier Communication System and Switching Equipment have been performing effectively since 1972, in almost every electricity board in the country. That's not all. BPL's Electronic Private Automatic Exchange which provides voice and data communication has been installed in many reputed Government and Private organisations as well.

Apart from the Electronic PABX, BPL's existing Business Computers, Word Processors and Automatic Plain Paper Copiers provide a single source integrated solution to meet today's office automation requirements.

The Electronic PABX manufacturing facility is supported by seven integrated factories, three R & D units, in-house manufacture of critical components, comprehensive tool rooms and PCB plants.

The Electronic PABX from BPL – The Single Largest Integrated Source of Office Automation Products in India.

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

Computers ● Communication ● Components
Instrumentation (Industrial, Medical & Measurement) ● Office Automation ● Consumer Electronics

Central Marketing Organisation: BPL-Centre, 32, Church Street, Bangalore-560 001. Tel: 52321/2/6. Tlx: 0845-511.
Branch Offices at: Bangalore, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, New Delhi.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THALASSAEMIA

The Doomed Children

HAPPY Budhiraja, 16, of Delhi looks anything but what his name suggests. Instead his enlarged, grey complexioned face has a grim haunted look and his small stunted body appears to have been put together all wrong. He suffers from thalassaemia, a debilitating blood disease caused by the body's inability to produce red blood cells. His is not an isolated case but there are 240 other known victims of thalassaemia in Delhi, all between the ages of five and 20. They live in an agonising limbo, alternating between extreme lassitude and brief spells of normalcy. And more than anything else, these children live with the crushing certainty of a premature death. Few will survive through the teens. Most of the 72 thalassaemic children who have succumbed to this incurable illness in recent months were in their teens or even younger.

Happy is one of the two surviving children of Madan Lal Budhiraja. His is a family decimated by thalassaemia; three other sons have died and now Happy is afflicted. Happy does not attend school, because doctors warned that any injury could be fatal. He needs two bottles of blood every fortnight but often has to make do with one. Happy's sister is the only healthy child out of five. The curse has shattered other families too, where parents of tender mettle just gave up. Neerja is a schoolteacher, whose husband, an officer in the Central Government, deserted her only because she bore two thalassaemic children. One of them died and now she is bringing up the other one alone.

More heart-rending and tragic is the story of a hapless 20-year-old mother who committed suicide because she could not stand the fortnightly sight of doctors probing for a vein in the tiny arm of her year-old daughter. Now the girl's widowed father brings her to the Red Cross blood bank for blood transfusions which alone can prolong a life doomed to end prematurely.

Delhi at least has a couple of organisations which recognise the problem and do something about it. But what is the fate of similar children in other cities? How many of them have already died without knowing what they were afflicted with? The General Secretary of the newly formed Thalassaemia Foundation of India, C.L. Juneja, fears that country-wide, thalassaemia may be responsible for up to 10 per cent of the deaths of infants under one year. "Most people and even most doctors are not aware of the problem," says Juneja.

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Blood transfusions are essential to keep these children alive and active; they live on borrowed blood. Most of them need a transfusion every fortnight and this painful ordeal has turned many of them into psychological cases: their veins have been damaged by frequent punctures and they cringe at the sight of a hypodermic needle. Six-year-old Ashima needs blood every 20 days and "sometimes the technicians cannot find her vein and 25 pricks are needed to locate it", says her father Vijay Wadhwa, 36, a motor parts dealer of Kashmere Gate.

But by far the worse predicament is of parents who see their children wasting away before their eyes. Dr M.L.Gupta, in charge of the Red Cross blood bank in Delhi, said: "The parents are fighting a losing battle. These children are practically living corpses..." Helpless, Wadhwa admits morosely: "We know such children have to go in a few years." The Wadhwas have resigned themselves to the inevitability of losing their pretty daughter, just as they lost a son some years ago.

There are two forms of thalassaemia. Thalassaemia trait (or thalassaemia minor) which is not a disease and thalassaemia major, which is fatal. People with thalassaemia trait are healthy and it is found in the blood of about 17 per cent Indians, mainly Punjabis and Sindhis. If a person with thalassaemia trait marries a person with normal blood there is a 50 per cent chance that their children will have thalassaemia trait. But when both parents have thalassaemia trait, there is a 25 per cent chance that their child will have thalassaemia major and 50 per cent chance of becoming a carrier of thalassaemia trait.

Happy Budhiraja (above); and parents of affected children at the Red Cross blood bank: living in limbo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Children with thalassaemia major are normal at birth but become severly anaemic between three months and 18 months. Doctors say that most of them have a haemoglobin count of 6 to 7 grams and in some cases it falls to 2 grams in summer. It should normally be 10 to 12 grams. Untreated, they die before the age of eight. Chronic anaemia weakens the heart, lowers resistance to disease and generally shortens the lifespan. The growth of such children becomes stunted, their facial bones start protruding and the skin gets dark and discoloured because of the excess iron in the system. Their sex organs are underdeveloped and the girls don't start menstruation in time. A man of 25 looks like an adolescent 15-year-old.

The only treatment is regular blood transfusions and some children need to have the spleen removed because it becomes enlarged and starts breaking down the red blood cells in the transfused blood. Parents of modest means are unable to afford or arrange prompt splenectomy operations for their thalassaemic children; in private clinics the operation costs at least Rs 10,000 and there is a long waiting-list in government hospitals. About two dozen children who urgently need to have enlarged spleens removed line up hopefully in the corridors of crowded Delhi hospitals every week to enquire if their turn has come.

Getting sufficient blood is not the only problem. An expensive treatment to reduce iron accumulation—a side-effect—has also to be undergone. The first problem of blood supply was sorted out some years ago when the Red Cross blood bank offered free blood to thalassaemia patients as long as it was available. But whenever there is a calamity or disaster like the recent bomb blasts in Delhi, there is a rush on the blood banks, and the first sufferers in the blood shortage are the thalassaemics. They then have to run to commercial blood banks and buy expensive blood of suspect quality (from professional blood sellers). The Red Cross blood bank needs 400 bottles of blood every month for thalassaemics alone. But it does not have transfusion facilities. "These children need special care and expert handling to ensure that their delicate veins do not get damaged by repeated transfusions, but that kind of care is not always available," complains Juneja of the Thalassaemia Foundation.

Gupta: fighting a losing battle

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Because the disease is not widely recognised, there is a general lack of knowledge and awareness. Ashima Wadhwa desperately needs Desferal, a drug that combats the build up of iron in the body but was advised by a doctor not to take it. There are even instances of doctors prescribing iron tablets—which can be fatal. Some children die because blood is not available and others because transfusion facilities are not available. Ideally there should be a clinic during evening or night hours for working parents to bring in their children. "To keep these children alive we need at least Rs 24 lakh a year," said Dr Gupta of the Red Cross.

Regular blood transfusions cause iron accumulation when the red blood cells are used up but the iron content is retained. The treatment for this is infinitely more expensive. The transfused blood has to be passed through a leucocyte (white cell) filter which costs Rs 100 a piece. And to expel the accumulated iron, the patient has to be given two Desferal injections daily, at Rs 30 a injection. The monthly cost of treatment is approximately Rs 1,800. Only three of the 200 affected children in Delhi receive this treatment. As the heart is weakened by intermittent spells of anaemia and iron, heart attacks are the commonest cause of death.

Fortunately, the New Delhi Municipal Committee hospital has recently opened a thalassaemia clinic to provide transfusion facilities, leucocyte filters and even Desferal injections to about 50 children. A small beginning, for some other Sarojini is still needed to alleviate the misery of the other 170-odd children who need similar treatment. Such clinics should also have counsellors to advise people to get their blood tested for thalassaemia trait before marriage, to avoid having children if both partners have the gene.

Tragically, thalassaemia is still to be taken seriously by the Government and the medical profession. And till such time the unfortunate children like Hari have nothing to look forward to but a painful and terribly premature death.

—RAMINDAR S...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

How Bank of India used CitiBanking® to help accelerate diamond exports by 40% a year.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's 13,000 diamond exporters created a US $1.2 billion industry—cutting and polishing miniature diamonds. To help smooth the way, new methods were needed to speed import payments and the reporting of export receipts.

Bank of India, which has played a catalytic role in the promotion of diamond exports, turned to global electronic CitiBanking for the advanced capabilities required.

"We use CitiBanking to transmit import payments electronically and to get electronic confirmation of dollar receipts in New York," explains Pushpa Wagh, Chief Manager of the bank's Opera House Branch in Bombay. "That gives our clients maximum use of credit lines and sets the groundwork for dramatic export growth."

To find out how your Export Department can benefit from the world's most advanced and secure electronically delivered banking services, call the Citibank located near you.

And put the Citi of Tomorrow℠ to work for your company today.

WELCOME TO THE CITI℠

CITIBANK INDIA

IN TUNE WITH THE NATION'S NEEDS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

©1985 Citibank, N.A. Member FDIC

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some days are so hot, you can fry an egg on the pavement.

That's the kind of heat only Amtrex can handle.

Amtrex is specially designed to handle temperatures as high as 45°C. It cools effectively even in peak summer — when all other machines struggle to cope.

Most air conditioners work well when it isn't too hot – but they can't handle more than 40°C. When temperatures rise above 40°C, you need a machine with greater cooling capacity.

Extra cooling power

At very high temperatures, Amtrex keeps you really cool. In Delhi, for instance, Amtrex survives peak summer without the help of water. In cooler cities like Bombay, the extra capacity of Amtrex makes it the most effective. Even on the hottest day of the year, even in overcrowded rooms, Bombay will never use the full cooling power of Amtrex.

This extra cooling power is generated by giant-size co coils, and an optimised air conditioning cycle that coo more air, faster.

Who's bought Amtrex?

Amtrex has already found its way into some of the bes offices and homes in India. Gwalior Rayon Silk (Wvg) M Hoechst India Ltd. Diners Club India Pvt. Ltd. Bank of Ahmedabad. Orkay Polyester Ltd. Indian Merchants Chamber. Shri Dinesh Mills Ltd. Crown TV–Televisio Components Pvt. Ltd. Alliance Francaise. Lohia Mac Hinditron Computer Systems Pvt. Ltd. Saurashtra Pe

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sales service

gh you'll hardly ever need it, we're on our toes all the 7-days-a-week service. Complaints attended to within urs And if your machine has to be taken away, we give you a standby unit.

ess your enquiries to:
Enterprises (A Division of Akik Pharma Chem Pvt.Ltd.)
, 3rd floor, Near H.K. House, Ashram Road, abad 380 009. Tel: 447535, 449284, 406956.
ch Offices: Bombay, Delhi, Madras, Baroda, abad, Bangalore.

AMTREX

Air conditioners
0.5,1,1.5, and 2 tonnes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Close-up is for close-ups

Singing under the umbrella on a rainy day, sharing smiles... sharing good times. And you're confident because you've used Close-up.

Transparent, red Close-up's two super-whiteners leave your teeth their whitest and its special mouthwash keeps your breath its freshest.

So, smile a close-up smile and stay confident, because after all, Close-up is for close-ups.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

A quality product by Hindustan Lever.

The Toothpaste and Mouthwash in One

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

A Rich Find

NO OTHER religion has the kind of mystical and ethereal associations as Buddhism. But more than a religion, it is a way of life that seems as timeless and unending as a prayer wheel in motion. For archaeologists specialising in its heritage, Buddhism offers a rich and bottomless bounty with every now and then an ancient stupa or vihara emerging from the mists of time as if by some design. Like last fortnight, when the archaeological community was abuzz with excited anticipation regarding the latest Buddhist excavation which has unearthed a well-preserved monastery buried under a mound in deserted Bavikonda, off the Madras-Calcutta highway and a mere 17 km north-east of the port city of Vishakhapatnam in Andhra Pradesh.

The site was first spotted by an Indian Navy aircraft on a reconnaissance mission in 1974. But it was not until last fortnight that the state archaeological directorate team led by Dr V.V.Krishna Sastry was able to successfully excavate the remains of the monastery and draw the preliminary conclusions.

According to Dr Sastry, despite the extreme humidity and the ravages of nature, the site is virtually undisturbed. The partly excavated mound shows evidence of an advanced civilisation that is believed to have existed between 150 BC and 200 AD. Beneath the scrub and natural rock formations, the archaeologists identified the unmistakable brick architecture of a Buddhist monastery. Besides the mahastupa, the site has the ruins of three small stupas and three chaityas (smaller shrines)—two apsidal and one circular.

All these shrines are of the Hinayana school, which did not believe in idol worship or avatars like the later schools. Though no relics were found at Bavikonda, the archaeologists did find three Roman coins — two of Emperor Tiberius' reign and one of Augustus Ceasar's. This served to strengthen the belief that the Bavikonda ruins are at least 1,800 years old.

Photographs taken by the archaeological team show that the floor in front of the entry points to the mahastupa (main shrine) and the viharas (residential sections) are plastered with packed rubble and a coat of lime. The entrances of the main stupa leading to the pradikshanapada (circular path or inner circle) are enclosed by a brick railing. At a higher level opposite the southern entrance is a broken slab of Buddhapadas (Buddha's footprints). The triangular vihara apparently had 51 rooms and a congregation hall on its northern side. But these are only tentative guesses. The real picture will emerge only when the excavation of the 10-acre site is completed, which Dr Sastry thinks will take at least another two years.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

The mahastupa in Bavikonda (above); and the Buddhapadas: divine heritage

The naval aircraft had also identified another likely site in Mangamaripeta but the archaeological team decided to explore Bavikonda first as it is a smaller mound and not as steep and difficult. Says Dr Sastry: "Digging along slopes is tricky and takes longer. But Mangamaripeta will be easier once we get going. The contours of the settlement are already visible. It will hopefully give us clues as to how and why Buddhism flourished in this part of the country."

The Mangamaripeta excavation, however, will have to wait till the archaeologists finish with the Bavikonda site. Funds and manpower are scarce and the directorate can concentrate on only one site at a time.

The greatest enigma about the 47 identified Buddhist sites in Andhra Pradesh is that they possibly hold clues about how Buddhism spread in the state and who spread it. Equally intriguing, and at the same time self-explanatory, is the fact that neighbouring Karnataka has only two known Buddhist sites and Kerala and Tamil Nadu have none while there are a number of sites across the Palk Straits in Sri Lanka, where Buddhism is a major religion even today. Sastry surmises that Buddhism at Bavikonda can possibly be ascribed to the Satvahanas who were powerful and tolerant rulers from circa 200 BC to 230 AD. The facts, however, will be certain only after cross-checks with manuscripts or inscriptions. Inscriptions have been found at some of the sites but most of the relevant manuscripts are available only in Tibet and China. This has made the work of Indian historians studying the influence of Buddhism more difficult. "Eventually, we have to pore over the travelogues of Chinese travellers Fa Hien and Huen Tsang to understand the spread of Buddhism in India," Dr Sastry says.

But like the travels of Hien and Tsang, exploration is a painfully slow process and the shortage of funds only adds to the archaeologists' troubles. Andhra Pradesh, for instance, spends less than Rs 2 lakh a year on archaeological excavations and it is therefore not surprising that only 15 of the 47 identified sites have been dug up so far (see map). Indian archaeologists feel that without more funds and opportunities for research in collaboration with other interested countries like China, much of India's past religious history will be lost in the dark shadows of time.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

brings you an elegant range of low-cost Decorative Luminaires.

Versatile lighting systems designed for universal indoor applications, created to harmonise with any architectural feature and interior decor in offices, banks, show rooms, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:
Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

FICCI's Message: Insist on purity and right weight.

Heros' BE-778 B

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Quick, pick a lifestyle

Mafatlal's plain and fancy shirtings.
Cool cottons and blends.
In soft textures, distinctive colours and designs.

They don't just match your lifestyle.
They help make it.

Come pick from our latest designs at the nearest Mafatlal Fabrics Approved Retail and other leading Stores.

Mafatlal

— the name you can trust

Mafatlal Fabrics ®

Regd. Trademark of Mafatlal Industries Ltd. (New Shorrock Mills) and The Mafatlal Fine Spg. & Mfg. Co. Ltd.

Heros' BE-778 B

T-4-B MF 441

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COME ON FOLKS! THE SHOW'S ABOUT TO BEGIN WITH SANYO'S VTC-R10PS

Create a home theater of fun and wonderful memories the whole family will enjoy together.

Bring your family into the adventure of exciting video, and give them the experience of creating a home network for themselves. Tune into both PAL and SECAM broadcasts and receive a myriad of UHF/VHF channels world-wide from countries using these systems. Capture the shows you don't want to miss with the 8-Day/1-Event Programmable Timer. Convenience in control and editing is yours with the 10-Function Remote Control Unit, including the Still Image Playback which lets you stop the action scene by scene. Other functions, such as full color picture search, auto rewind, and digital tape counter, plus other convenient controls, give your family a hand in touching the world. It's always showtime with Sanyo!

VRC 100P PAL Betamovie single-unit portable color video camera with 3.35-hour recording

VTC-R10PS PAL/SECAM Betacord video cassette recorder

VTC-R4ME PAL/SECAM/NTSC-3.58/NTSC-4.43 Betacord video cassette recorder

SANYO

BPL-INDIA Sanyo products can be serviced at these local authorised service centres:
• Bangalore: Phone 220266; Cable-Phisilab; Telex 0845-511; • Calcutta: Phone 431916; Telex 021-2390 • Bombay: Phone 4940384; Telex 011-73789; • Co-
Phone 39422 • New Delhi: Phone 6411037; Telex 031-2692 • Madras: Phone 74810; Cable-Phisilab; Telex 041-6507 • Palghat: Phone 3241; Telex 0853-

Sanyo products are available wherever you go:
Bahrain A.A. Zayani & Sons., P.O. Box 932, State of Bahrain TEL 255921 Kuwait Supplying Store W.L.L., P.O. Box 1154, Safat, Kuwait TEL 425367 Pakistan Worldwide Trading Co., Sanyo Centre, P.O. Box 8852, Garden Road, Saddar, Karachi, Pakistan TEL 725601 ~ 05 Qatar Qatar Electronics Co., W.L.L., P.O. Box 8883, Doha TEL 414614 Republic of Maldives Srimal Enterprises, Male, Republic of Maldives TEL Male 3087 or 3461 Sultanate of Oman General Electric & Trading Co., P.O. Box 7006, Muttrah TEL 704457 Saudi Arabia Basic Electronics Co., W.L.L., P.O. Box 1402, Alkhobar TEL 8641180 • Abdullah Bin Sulaiman Basahel & Sons Co., P.O. Box 60, Jeddah TEL 6369581 Sri Lanka St. Anthony's Consolidated Ltd., 516, Sri Sangaraja Mawatha, Colombo 10 TEL 24261 U.A.E. Al-Futtaim Electronics, Marketing Division, P.O. Box 5559, Dubai TEL 231566 SANYO ELECTRIC TRADING CO., LTD.

85-INM-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

vijai SUPER mark II

There's no 150 cc scooter to match it for ECONOMY POWER SAFETY.

FEATURES	Brand X	Brand Y	Vijai Super Mark-II
FUEL ECONOMY Kms/litres	40±6	40	56±6
POWER BHP	6.3	6.5	9.6
SAFETY Engine Mounting	Right hand side	Central	Centrally aligned

Vijai Super Mark-II. The latest model from Scooters India Limited — successors to Innocenti of Italy.
The winner at the Indian Grand Prix at Barrackpore and Sholavaram, it now incorporates a number of innovations for even greater economy, power, safety and durability.

SUPER ECONOMY: 56 ± 6 kms/litre.
The new variable venturi carburettor based on Japanese technology provides the engine just the right amount of fuel at different speeds. SAVING FUEL.

Improved cylinder design avoids turbulence and reversal of gas flow resulting in complete combustion of gas.

Modified gear ratio reduces transmission loss, giving greater fuel economy even at lower speeds.

SUPER POWER: 9.6 BHP
Vijai Super Mark-II is the most powerful scooter on the road, going from 0 to 60 kms in 12.75 seconds flat.

When the traffic light turns green, it is the first to take off.

SUPER SAFETY
The centrally mounted engine, low centre of gravity and wider wheel base offer greater stability while turning and braking — even at high speeds with load.

Its 35 watt rectangular headlamp provides a powerful wide beam making night riding safer.

SUPER DURABILITY
Modified material composition of cylinder, chrome plated piston rings and the use of solid lubricant significantly increases engine life.

With the new washable fibre filter based on American technology, the engine breathes freer and cleaner. That's why it carries a warranty of 15 months or 10,000 kms (whichever is earlier) — the longest on any two wheeler.

Vijay Super Mark-II is totally dependable, because it undergoes 1000 tough quality checks and is sold and serviced through 225 outlets countrywide.

Made to exacting international standards, it is exported to many technologically advanced countries, including Italy — its birth place.

vijai SUPER mark II

The best deal on wheels.

Scooters India Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You are looking at
our new International selection of suitings.

WORSTED AND POLYESTER BLENDED SUITINGS

SUITINGS FROM THE Cezari COLLECTION

BOMBAY DYEING

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEUROLOGY

The Better Brain

THE LITTLE grey cells in Indian brains have a lot going for them. Recent medical research by some neuropathologists and neurologists has produced the interesting revelation that in Indians, brains grow senile and degenerate much slower than westerners and the number of senile persons in India is far less than that abroad. In other words, the researchers claim, the Indian brain retains its agility and sharpness much longer.

That is, of course, quite a claim. But it doesn't faze Professor R. Sarasa Bharati, head of the department of neuropathology at the Madras Medical College who has done her M.D and Ph.D. in brain tumours and devoted all her time to the study of the brain and nerve cells. It was Bharati's pioneering work which has led researchers to this startling conclusion. Basing their findings on the detailed observation of the formation of so-called senile plaques or patchy substances in the grey matter of the brain which obstruct free and quick communication between nerve cells, medical analysts say that such plaques form in the brains of very few Indians even after they cross the age of 60 whereas westerners begin to have senile patches in their brains when they cross 40 and nearly 40 per cent of the western population have senile patches by the age of 60. In India, there has been positive clinical evidence of senility only among people over 80 and that too very rarely. Says Bharati: "I have examined over 150 brains of people over 60 years of age over the last six years. Not even in one brain could I observe the formation of senile plaques although nearly 10 brains seemed to be in the initial stages of plaque formation. We can't, however, definitely say that plaques would have formed in these brains had the persons continued to live because the process of brain ageing can go on to a little extent and then stop. So I think the formation of senile plaques in Indians around the age of 60 is practically nil."

These findings, when presented at the International Women Doctors Conference in Toronto last year, were corroborated by the observations of other neuropathologists working in different Indian cities. The senile plaque forms at the point of contact between one nerve cell and another blocking the communication channels between different nerve cells and retarding the activity of the brain. But tangles of fibres within the nerve cells themselves can also impair the normal agility and resilience of the cells and thereby make the brain age and senile. Also called neurofibrillary tangles, they are further evidence of the degeneration of nerve cells and the brain. Medical studies have revealed that nearly 15 per cent of westerners over 60 have such tangles in their brains. Says Bharati emphatically: "Such tangles have not been spotted in Indian brains at all. In all the brains which came for autopsy and which I examined, I haven't seen a single neurofibrillary tangle." And her observations have been done by studying the brains under a powerful electron microscope—the first of its kind in India—which magnifies the minutest brain segments an incredible 1.2 million times.

S.H. VENKATRAMAN

> "I have examined over 150 brains of people over 60...the formation of senile plaques in Indians of that age is practically nil."
>
> Professor R. Sarasa Bharati

Some other symptoms of degeneration have also not been seen, or seen very rarely, in Indian brains. For instance, pre-senile dementia is very common in the West, so common that it was once even known as a killer disease. But it is practically absent in India. Even more curious is the case of multiple sclerosis—a disease in which the nerve processors (lines of contact that radiate from every nerve cell) lose their sheaths or what is called in medical terms as myelin. It is quite common in the West with an estimated 5 per cent of the population suffering from it. Artherosclerosis or hardening of the arteries is seen rarely in India but is a deep-rooted medical problem in the West.

Medical investigators, however, have yet to come out with a definite statement in scientific terms detailing the result of their researches. This is because the number of human brains that have been available for microscopic analysis has been small compared to the number of old people in the country. As Dr K. Jagannathan, neurologist at the Government General Hospital in Madras, put it: "The autopsy rate in India is less than 1 per cent so we cannot draw any firm conclusions about Indian brains. But still it is factually correct to say that evidence of senility has been far less in India compared to the West." Added Dr K. Logamuthukrishnan, neuro-surgeon at the same hospital: "In spite of a low autopsy rate, we can say both in terms of autopsies done and clinical diagnosis that senility among Indians is far less when viewed against its prevalence in the West."

In fact, there is some interesting chemistry to be unravelled in tackling the problem of senility. While zinc and magnesium are normally present in the human brain—for exactly what purpose is not known—aluminium has been seen in the senile plaque formations. Further, medical investigators and researchers have yet to understand what is ageing and degeneration of the brain and how it happens. In fact brain cells are very sturdy, and with adequate and continuous supplies of oxygen and glucose, can survive and function for nearly 200 years. But that apart, researchers are more concerned with the question of why Indian brains show fewer physical symptoms of senility than their western counterparts.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Oberoi Hotels and Travel House present :

THE PALACE EXPERIENCE

4 days and 3 nights of luxury for only Rs. 1,234.*

Srinagar...truly a paradise on earth. And in this enchanted valley, nestling in the foothills of the Himalayas and overlooking the picturesque Dal Lake, the former royal palace of the Maharajas of Kashmir awaits your pleasure.

Today, the Oberoi Palace still retains the grandeur of another era, in its splendour and gracious living combined with modern luxuries and comforts. Spacious, elegant interiors, chandeliers, wood-panelling and magnificent carpets recreate a royal life-style.

Fountains play on the hotel's 20 acres of landscaped lawns and flowers bloom in colourful profusion in these terraced gardens that have a breathtaking view of the beautiful Dal Lake and the valley beyond. An idyllic retreat for holiday-makers and honeymooners alike, the Oberoi Palace offers you a royal experience like nowhere else in Kashmir.

Oberoi Palace

Srinagar, Kashmir

A PRINCELY PACKAGE*

Look at how much you get for only Rs. 1,234 per person sharing a double-room (or Rs 1,800 for single-occupancy) :

* Airport-hotel-airport transfers.
* Morning tea, full breakfast, lunch or dinner every day.

* A grand half-day visit to the beautiful Mughal Gardens.
* A leisurely shikara ride on Dal Lake.

* Free fixed-time shuttle-service to the heart of the city.
* A one-day membership of the Golf Club.
* Accommodation for two children up to 12 years in your room without extra bed.
* Conference room at no extra cost.

...AND ALL THE EXTRAS.

Among other recreational facilities, children will love to frolic in safety at the children's park in the hotel grounds. And relish the budget meals prepared for them. Also, if you want a third person to share your room and all the fun of the package, it will cost just an extra Rs. 1,000. Plus : visits to Gulmarg and Pahalgam can be arranged at reasonable rates.

For reservations, contact your nearest Oberoi Instant Reservations Office, Travel House or a bona-fide travel agent : BOMBAY OBEROI 2024343 TRAVEL HOUSE 230547 AHMEDABAD OBEROI 26037 DELHI OBEROI 699571 TRAVEL HOUSE 351130 SRINAGAR OBEROI 71241 CALCUTTA OBEROI 230181 MADRAS OBEROI 478156 TRAVEL HOUSE 473347 BANGALORE OBEROI 53444 TRAVEL HOUSE 71403 AGRA TRAVEL HOUSE 64701 HYDERABAD TRAVEL HOUSE 222216 JAIPUR TRAVEL HOUSE 78771

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Original parts regardless of origin

OVER TWO DECADES OF EXPERIENCE HAS PLACED US IN SUCH A CONFIDENT POSITION FROM WHERE WE GUARANTEE VIRTUALLY NO DOWN-TIME OF YOUR EQUIPMENTS FOR WANT OF SPARES AND MAINTENANCE.

IMPORTERS AND DISTRIBUTORS OF SPARES FOR EARTHMOVING, CONSTRUCTION, ROAD BUILDING, MINING MACHINERIES, GENERATING SETS AND DIESEL ENGINES.

Aarkay Engineering Corporation

6B, Saklat Place, Calcutta - 700 072. INDIA
Phone : 27-0214/3512/2581, 26-7984/9106
Telex : 21-2851 HOPE IN Cable : CATKOMA

SETSQUARE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MERCHANT NAVY

A Sea of Sorrow

KAMAL Wadhawan, 26, is a thin-faced lad from Delhi who can be seen most evenings at the Seaman's Club in Bombay's salt-sprayed Ballard Estate playing billiards on the club's run-down table. Three years ago, after graduating from Rajendra, the training ship for merchant navy officers, he served as a cadet on board a ship belonging to a reputed shipping company, passed his second mate's examination, and sailed with the company. After a year at sea, he asked for leave to get married.

On his return, however, he was told that his services had been terminated. Wadhawan took a loan from his wife to acquire a moped agency, hoping to pay it back with the Rs 50,000 his company owed him in arrears. But even after 17 reminders, the company failed to pay his dues. Wadhawan's marriage, barely half a year old, was on the rocks and the pair finally separated. Today, Wadhawan is unemployed and cannot get a decent job because he is not a graduate and lives a hand to mouth existence on money borrowed from others. Says he bitterly: "The day I decided to join the merchant navy was the beginning of my troubles and there is no end to them"

KAMAL WADHAWAN, 26
unemployed

"The day I decided to join the merchant navy was the beginning of my troubles and there is no end to them."

Wadhawan has one small consolation: he is not alone in his jobless misery. More than 300 qualified second mates like him have been without jobs for the last two years and are either living on borrowed money or are underemployed in jobs which they were not trained to do. Their miserable situation gives the lie to the myth about the highly-paid glamorous life of the merchant navy. Says Vibhash Sarvania, 24, second mate who now works in the cargo claims department of the Shipping Corporation of India (SCI): "They lured us with visions of a glorious career. Now I am pushing a pen at a desk instead of keeping watch on a ship." Others who feel similarly let down:

► Arun Bhardwaj, 23, was denied a job by the SCI despite completing the training successfully, and had to take up a clerk's job with the Life Insurance Corporation.

► Sanjay Handa, 22, a topper from his Jalandhar school threw up an engineering course to join Rajendra and later the SCI as a cadet only to find that the corporation had no job for him when he got his second mate's ticket. Now a construction assistant in Delhi he gets Rs 600 a month.

► Anuroop Chauhan, 21, passed up a seat in the prestigious Delhi School of Planning and Architecture for "the lure of the sea". But after serving the SCI for two-and-a-half years and obtaining the second mate's certificate, he still has no job.

► Sandeep Beecha, 23, got his certificate of competency as second mate last year, and also a vague promise from the SCI that he would get a job after four or five years. Now he is security officer at the Palika Bazaar car park in New Delhi.

These are all trained officers who should have been earning Rs 4,000 a month. They have already spent nearly Rs 6,000 for their training and most have served on board the SCI's cadet ships for paltry stipends and worked long hours towards the coveted second mate's certificate. Today they blame the powers that be and especially the SCI, which accounts for 70 per cent of jobs for their plight. Atul Tyagi, 25, who has been without a job for over two years now says that he sometimes skips a day's meals to cut down expenses: "They should stop running those attractive stories in Reader's Digest saying what a magnificent life the merchant navy offers us."

Photographs by HEMANT PITHWA

VIBHASH SARVANIA, 24
cargo claims dept of SCI

"They lured us with visions of a glorious career. Now I'm pushing a pen at a desk instead of keeping watch on a ship."

The reason why all these merchant navy officers have been cast adrift is partly the result of the current slump in the shipping industry. But more obviously because of mismanagement and planning by the authorities concerned, which meant that there were more officers in the pipeline than the country needed. The second mates point the finger at SCI and later this month the first three on a petition in the Supreme Court affirming this is coming up for hearing. The basic assertion in the petition is that SCI took a bond from all the Rajendra graduates who joined it as cadets to serve with the company for a period of five years after they obtained their second mate certificate and that they were required to pay the corporation Rs 50,000 as bond money in case they did not join. While officials refuse to comment on the petition, they assert that the terms of agreement under which the second mates were taken also say that if the company cannot provide employment, then he is free to seek a job elsewhere. Says Capt. R. Kohli, technical director, SCI: "Not of them can be absorbed on our ships. This is a time of slump and there are just no vacancies."

But SCI is the biggest employer of second mates—it absorbs about 70 per cent of the Rajendra's graduates—and its inability to hire more of the young officers is one of the prime causes of their misery. Moreover the corporation is accused of continuing its system of direct recruitment well into the '70s, when it was clear that a slump was coming. In short, it aggravated the crisis: there were simply too many officers. Most important, the SCI is the respondent in a suit filed by a group of unemployed and underemployed second mates saying that the company is legally bound to employ them as officers. They cannot get jobs elsewhere simply because there are none to be had.

The seamen have another grouse: they say that the SCI's decision to convert as many as 2[illegible]

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri ships into cadet ships by 1983—the ormal cadet complement of a ship is two ree but the SCI at one time carried 20 ets on a ship—was simply to exploit as cheap labour. The petition lists names of nine accidental deaths and suicides — among them D. Dash died on SCI duty when he was ed against the side of the Vishwa in October 1984. The complainants they were made to work long hours.

nia, who spent 23 months on SCI says they once worked 72 hours at a to clean the holds. "They used us g labour, because they knew that them a fourth in wages of a normal and that we would do work regular seamen wouldn't," he says
SCI officials call the charge
" and add that the cadet-ship me was activated to ensure a supply of officers to fulfil the ally burgeoning demand.

The second mates tell a different tale.
Tandon, 24, who left his engicollege in Ahmedabad and has without a job for the last two years:
has given a few of us desk jobs on with a consolidated pay of Rs month and no other allowances.
not fooling us ? If they employ a officer on the 70-odd ships they and none of them is laid up—they easily provide employment to half of others assert that if not full employ-the shipping companies could take on for six months at a time to keep skills from rusting. "After you been to sea for a long time, your weaken," says Vinod
24, now working in
at a desk job.
ternative and com-employment is sible for the second as they are not for anything else
because they are te-
not graduates.
Mohan Singh
25, hails from

NAVAL BHATIA, 23
unemployed

"Why didn't they think of the slump when they continued taking cadets? It's a callous attitude to the best talent leaving schools."

Ranchi and was pursuing a science course at Delhi University when the call of the sea brought him to Rajendra and unemployment five years later. Says Lamba: "The SCI gave me a temporary no-objection certificate so that I could find a job but who's going to employ me? All I know is how to run a cargo ship?" Lamba recounts how, after months of trying, he was offered a job at the Bombay Port Trust—Rs 1,000 a month all told and "means of transportation"—a bicycle "Who do they think we are? We are officers, not chaprasis."

The genesis of the problem lies, paradoxically, in the shipping boom of the late '60s and early '70s when Indian companies were buying about 15 ships a year. At that time there was an acute shortage of trained officers and Captain Kohli of the SCI says half-jokingly that Indian officers went around with their resignations in their pockets and often ships were manned by only two officers who alternated watches—the legal requirement is three officers: master (the captain), first mate and second mate, who are supposed to divide the day into three eight-hour watches.

Part of the shortage was due to the demand by foreign shipping companies for well-trained Indian officers—then trained on the Dufferin, a converted Ist World War troop carrier. At one time, a large number of vessels flying the Liberian and Panamanian standards were manned by Indians, working for salaries roughly four times what they would get in Indian companies. In 1977, the Rajendra course was shortened from two years to one year, effectively doubling its intake of aspiring captains. It was also the year that the SCI and a few other companies began taking in direct entry cadets. The result was that about 500 boys out of school joined the training programmes every year from 1977 to 1981 with 25 second mates coming into the market every month.

Unfortunately, 1977 was when the shipping slump began. Apparently nobody had anticipated this and by the time the SCI stopped taking direct entry cadets and the Rajendra cut down its intake by half last year, it was too late and hundreds of recruits were already in training. Naval Bhatia, 23, of Dehra Dun who joined the SCI after the Rajendra as an apprentice and has done nothing except pound the pavements in search of a job for the last 18 months, says: "Why didn't they think of the slump when they continued taking cadets ? It's a callous attitude to what is the best talent leaving schools."

There is, however, some hope on the horizon. For the last few weeks now the authorities at the Mercantile Marine Department and the Indian National Shipowners Association (INSA) have sat down to find out what can be done about the 300-odd highly trained—the government investment in them in terms of training subsidy comes to nearly Rs 1 crore—officers now on the streets. The solution is obvious: employ them as fourth officers on board ships, of which there are enough to accommodate all the unemployed second mates. Says Captain P.S.Barve, nautical advisor in charge, Mercantile Marine Department: "We have talked to INSA and they're going to get back to us in two weeks with a package deal."

PREET MOHAN SINGH LAMBA, 25
unemployed

"The company gave me a temporary no-objection certificate so I could find a job but who's going to employ me?"

The one obstacle to the arrangement whereby the second mates will go on board each ship is the SCI which says that unless the court case is cleared they cannot take any action. However, the corporation is not averse to the idea though the next few months are crucial for the future of the current crop of 300 unemployed. Says Bali: "All we can do is wait or try and get a degree and graduate and look for other jobs. But the sea is what we are trained for and at the moment we can't think of anything else." Captain Barve is as philosophical: "Look, after five years the slump will end. Then you will need trained manpower. These are bad times but I am sure that good times cannot but follow." But till then, the second mates are likely to drift rudderless in their sea of sorrow.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI
with SUMIT MITRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kirloskar Brothers

These top-ranking specialists offer techno-commercially competitive package deals for project engineering with quality and reliability.

Mazagon Dock Ltd. entrusted Kirloskar Brothers Limited (KBL) with the design, development and supply of a fire water pumpset package to work under very arduous conditions on their offshore well platform. KBL got the job because the project demanded utmost reliable service. With this first indigenously engineered and manufactured package, KBL satisfied the exacting demands of the client and moreover met the challenge without any foreign assistance or know-how. This was recognised by FICCI by their prestigious national award for outstanding achievement in the field of research in science and technology.

When National Thermal Power Corporation Ltd. (NTPC) wanted a reliable contractor to take on an important circulating water and cooling tower equipment package for their Super Thermal Power Station at Korba, they awarded the contract to KBL. It was won against global competition.

The Department of Atomic Energy wanted a dependable party to handle their critical application engineering job for their heavy water project. They relied on KBL for high quality zero leakage pumps, for continuous, uninterrupted service. This was an import substitution assignment.

The Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay chose KBL even though there were international competitors for the Stage II Sewerage Project work of their four sewerage pumping stations.

It is engineering strength that has earned KBL the position of a leader in fluid handling. And it is innovative stamina that will keep it ahead.

Kirloskar

Leaders in fluid handling since 1920

KIRLOSKAR BROTHERS LIMITED
Udyog Bhavan, Tilak Road, Pune-411 002.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CITIZENS' REPORT

Saving the Good Earth

SOME things need strong medicine, and it is symptomatic of the popular attitude to environment issues that it took a disaster like the Bhopal gas deaths last year to shake this country out of its complacency. For years, the worriers of the country's environment had been shouting themselves hoarse saying that India's chemical industry is the most dangerous one in the country using pesticides that are banned or severely restricted in the West. Bhopal had drama, tension and so India and the world listened. But there is much else happening in this vast country—quietly. Forests are being chopped down at the staggering rate of 1.3 million hectares a year, every river is choked with rubbish, greedy cities are gobbling up precious agricultural land—tragedies that have affected the lives of many more than a single Bhopal has.

But Bhopal has made the country receptive to the environment. And so an extraordinary 400-page volume The State of India's Environment 1984-85 released last week should fall on more eager ears. It is the second citizens' report. The first one released three years ago, was unique in that it was the first time a group of concerned citizens—without any government funding—had attempted the monumental task of studying all aspects of India's environment. It was a great success. The second report should have a wider audience and greater success. It is well-researched, crisply written and even entertaining. It is investigative journalism at its unflinching best. Edited by Anil Agarwal and Sunita Narain of the Centre for Science and Environment (CSE), it has used the information and expertise of 24 voluntary organisations and 54 environmentalists spread across the country, studying the ecological processes that newspapers seldom bother about, providing thus more than a snapshot—an overview.

But if it is good investigative journalism, it's still not a good news story. Indeed, the report presents a picture that is almost uniformly bleak:

► India's urban population is today the fourth largest in the world. By the end of the century it will be the largest. By that time 75 per cent of Bombay's population will be living in slums.

► The colossal Narmada Basin Development Programme, which will involve the building of 329 dams, may end up costing Rs 25,000 crore. It will also displace a million people.

► The world's worst air pollution problem could be the wood-smoke inhaled by poor rural women while cooking.

HARSH MAN RAI

There are other possible Bhopals. Baroda is one, with the country's single largest concentration of heavy petrochemical industries on its periphery.

ASHOK CHADHA

► The current car and two-whe boom in Indian cities could choke th sands to death. Delhi's half-a-million m tor vehicles spew 400 tonnes of pollut daily. In Bombay, air pollution is a ma cause of tuberculosis and respirat ailments.

► The face of urban India is rapid changing. Bangalore, Pune and Del Dun, once cool, green, quiet, are to boom towns—noisy, dusty and hot.

► Hill-stations are dying everywhe With tourists pouring in, forests ha been destroyed and water crises a common.

► Thousands of workers die every y because of occupational diseases, gravest being caused by various types dust.

► There are other possible Bhopa Baroda is one, with the country's sing largest concentration of heavy pet chemical industries on its periphery.

► The mosquito has become a formid ble enemy. Researchers be lieve that the incidence o malaria may be as high as 2 million, whereas official st tistics claim only 2.1 million.

► With forests being ra idly cut down, Delhi to gets firewood from Assa over a 1,000 km away.

What man has do nature is only a reflection what man has done to na An indifferent governme has become the chief villa The report says: "The Go ernment, which owns, co trols and develops India's fo ests, dams, power statio roads, mines and a large p of its industry, is not just th protector but also the m feared destroyer of t country's environmen Again and again the envir ment and the poor have b sacrificed to high-pro high-risk industry. If a da going to bring power to cities, even though it m uproot a million tribals, then it must and after someone has to suffer progress. Needless to say never the rich and the po ful. In the Bhatti mines the Delhi-Haryana bor labourers hang precario from ropes all day to claw rock faces. They earn Rs

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANIL AGARWAL

The Crusader

HERE is one picture: rows upon rows of box-like DDA houses, yellowing, crammed with colour televisions, cordless telephones, video recorders and people. None of the rooms look any garden. Potted plants die because there is no water and the air is thick with black fumes. Outside there is always a traffic jam. The streets are lined with slums and it takes an hour to get to the nearest grocery store. No one smiles. It's hot, hot, hot.

Here is another picture: the city is broken into little centres, made up of small earthen houses. The houses are small but beautifully sculpted, designed with a keen eye on weather conditions. They look lish healthy and flowers smile from every window box. There are few cars in these centres, people commute by bicycle and when they want to go to another centre, some miles away, they take a train. Here too there are televisions, an even sophisticated telephone system. But most important of all, there is fresh cool overhead, clean, blue skies.

The first is a picture of Indian cities in 1985 years. The second is Anil Agarwal's private little dream centred around the subject closest to his heart, the poor and the voiceless. "In Alexandrique, some of the wealthiest people live in mud houses, it is a fad," says Agarwal, "but here it is the only housing possible if you want to provide for everyone." It is a dream of the past that could become a vision of the future.

But then Agarwal is no ordinary dreamer. At 37, he is the chairperson of the Environment Liaison Centre in Nairobi. He is the chief architect of the report on the State of the Indian Environment. He was among the first to take on drug multinationals in a hard-hitting booklet published seven years ago. In October he delivers the prestigious World Conservation Lecture in London, an honour reportedly bestowed on him over World Bank President A.W. Clausen.

Agarwal's affair with the environment began in 1970 when he stepped out of IIT Kanpur with a mechanical engineering degree in hand. Twelve years later in 1982, he began work on a book of monumental proportions and incredible impact: The State of India's Environment 1982. But how did an IIT graduate

BHAWAN SINGH

Agarwal: hitting hard in engineering—who should have been on the side of big industry—become one of the leading international voices on the environment and its greatest enemy: irresponsible industry ?

Agarwal doesn't quite know himself. He started out like any other young student, with dreams of going West. After IIT, he got admission to the University of California in Los Angeles. But some instinct told him it would be better to wait. Ten days before he was to fly off, Agarwal sent a letter instead, saying that he would not be joining.

Environment was nowhere on his life schedule. Journalism was. In June '72 he flew to Stockholm to cover the UN Conference on the Human Environment for The Illustrated Weekly. Soon he became a full-time science journalist, first with The Hindustan Times and then with the Indian Express. During that period came the famous Chipko movement. "That was my first understanding of the relationship between the individual and the environment," says the bespectacled Agarwal. The thinking process had begun.

The next few years were traumatic ones. Agarwal got married and had a daughter, but she was a spastic child. The Emergency and its constraints were frustrating him. As it happened, he got a job with the International Institute for Environment and Development in London where he spent three-and-a-half years. "But my confusion about the environment remained," he says, "to get rid of poverty you need rapid industrial growth. Maybe we shouldn't worry about the environment so much, I thought." The mechanical engineer from IIT had still not been outgrown.

When he returned to India in 1980, Agarwal set up the Centre for Science and Environment (CSE) in a cramped little office in New Delhi's Nehru Place and recruited four people to help him. Those were the first five concerned citizens. Agarwal was getting famous. Dressed usually in a khadi kurta and jeans, he was getting to be known as the one who talked a lot and was always ready to stick his neck out. A year later, he attended a seminar in Penang where he read a report on the State of the Malaysian Environment. "Why not a similar one on India ?" he thought. Except India was not exactly the size of Malaysia. The only way to do it and do it fast would be to compile a citizen's report.

The response was phenomenal. Says Agarwal: "What that book did for the first time was that it rammed home the argument that the environment is being destroyed and the poor are the first, sometimes the only people to suffer."

The CSE began to redefine poverty. "It doesn't matter how rich village women may be through development," says Agarwal, "what matters dammit is how long she has to walk to collect fuel and fodder for her family." That is also where his ingenious concept of the Gross Nature Product comes in. It is a concept based on nature which has no price tag on it but which is heartlessly destroyed by the Gross National Product. By '82 people had begun to blame development for their problems. The mood had changed.

It was also time to start work on a second report. However, the picture was still bleak. There had been no reversing of the destructive trends. "Every passing year had meant only worse destruction," says Agarwal. Moreover, he feared something else: "We are reaching the carrying capacity, not of the land, but of women. Even a day before delivery pregnant women are working."

"But what is most frightening," says Agarwal, "is how millions and millions of people are going to survive." By the turn of the century, the cities would have spread like a cancerous growth gobbling up all agricultural land and greenery in sight. "Unless we rethink here, we're going to be in terrible trouble," says Agarwal. Thus, his dream of city centre with their mud houses. "Environment is an idea whose time has come," says the report. But as he looks at it, Agarwal also realises that the battle is going to be long and hard. "Saving the environment is a very long term struggle," he says, "let's be clear on that."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and since 1978, 400 have died in Bhatti. "The master of that dust-choked hell," reveals the report, "is the state itself."

The story of India's environment is one of the cities bleeding the country for their own benefit. Yes, there have been government afforestation programmes but the trees planted—eucalyptus, pine, teak—all serve the needs of urban industry. As the report says: "The very same process of commercialising the forest resource base that led to massive deforestation is also behind afforestation today. India's afforestation is, thus, as anti-people, as its deforestation."

The march toward annihilation and doomsday seems rapid and inexorable. But, fortunately, the report does not hang its head in despair. Between the lines and gloom, there is an understatement of hope, that all is not lost—yet. Almost every chapter—divided into easy-to-digest subjects like land, water, atmosphere, habitat and so on—has paused to think of possible solutions. Indeed the report claims that population is not India's major problem, it is land management: given proper use of land resources, the country could feed well over three times its current population. If the country has enormous problems, it also has enormous potential. One solution could be involving the landless in afforestation. "Some 5 million to 10 million landless families could be settled on these lands, making it the country's largest land reforms programme."

Similarly, through the use of tanks—"a technology as old as the Ramayana"—India could store a quarter of its rainfall and occupy only 3 per cent of the land area. Again, small earthen dams for water harvesting are both, ecologically sound and economically profitable. Then, again, for the success of slum upgrading programmes, the key issue is security of tenure, a system that has worked admirably in Hyderabad. Through its analyses, the report shows the impact that voluntary groups and non-governmental organisations can have in suggesting reforms in the country's environmental structure. As it so succinctly puts it, its role is that of the environmental opposition.

But what is most remarkable about the report is that—unlike government hand-outs—it always keeps people at its centre. It worries about the millions of nomads who have to trudge miles and miles with their cattle as grazing lands degenerate; fisherfolk who find that industrial effluents have polluted their rivers so that no fish will survive and who must now move toward the swelling cities to become bonded domestic servants; tribals who are forced to turn upon the forests they have so long lived in harmony with. It describes their plight poignantly: "Finally when the family has starved for two days, and there is no hope of getting any food, employment or a loan, the tribal family goes into the forest at night where they cut headloads of wood, walk 60 km to the nearest town, sell it at half the price, buy grain at double the price and walk back to feed their children." Many later move into the cities and become slum dwellers, the wretched of the earth who no one loves, "ecological refugees" who have given up the fresh air of the jungles to live in filthy townships.

But if people are at the centre of the report, at its very heart are women. Women, the quiet, always taken-for-granted beasts of burden, most affected by the destruction of biomass. Women in rural areas spend up to 10 hours daily fetching fuel, fodder and water. Even pregnant women work 14 to 16 hours a day, walking 1,400 km a year. Their day begins before the cock crows and ends late at night, before fuel inefficient stoves where they inhale benzo pyrene which in three hours is equivalent to 200 cigarettes. As their men migrate to towns in search of work the load on those bony, bejewelled hands only increases.

If the old world is dead, there are at least faint indications that a new one is getting ready to be born. Most encouraging of all is the increasing concern with the good earth and its bounty. Even if education has not reached the poor, awareness has. Witness the Chipko and Appiko movements where tribals and mainly women, hugged their trees to prevent them being felled. The tribal has now realised that government claims of development only mean money and advantage to some fat man in a far-off city. They no longer want cash compensation for being displaced by dams and mines—they want land for land. Environmental activism has already stopped two dams—Silent Valley in Kerala and Bedthi in Karnataka. Strong protests have also led to litigation against limestone mining in lush Dehra Dun. The report's ultimate message is in its shared statement of concern: "Nature can never be managed well unless the people closest to it are involved in its management." There is still time to act, however gloomy the scenario may look. Otherwise there is worse to come.

—SIMRAN BHARGAVA

BHAWAN SINGH

Millions of nomads have to trudge miles and miles with their cattle as grazing lands degenerate. Women spend up to 10 hours daily fetching fuel, fodder and water.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One worldwide family is on its toes. So that you can sweep your worries off your desk!

That's overnight Skypak service for you!

What does it take to put up your feet and relax? Well, when you have a load on your chest it's not easy. That load could be a small parcel, or a document. Which has to physically reach a certain destination, across a distance, within a next-to-impossible time!

Then it takes TNT Skypak. The most reputed courier service in the world. With 200 offices around the globe. And the nearest one to you just a phone call away!

The moment you dial the local Skypak number and hear a friendly 'hello' a chain is set in motion. A chain that unites as many as 26000 men and women in 48 countries! All of them on their toes!

So, by the time you replace your receiver you can put your feet up. Right on your table.

SKYPAK

when it's wanted yesterday!

203 Jolly Bhavan No 2, 7 New Marine Lines, Bombay 400 020 Phone: 253703, 294454
Telex: 011 3339 SAI IN

• Ahmedabad: 443053 • Bangalore: 568862 • Baroda: 552285 • Bhubaneshwar 53456/55164 • Bombay: 294454/6320881 • Calcutta: 443532 • Cochin: 69012 • Delhi: 6414830 • Gandhidham: 3414 • Hosur 9373 • Hyderabad: 38237 • Kandla: 7437 • Madras: 474507/475091 • Mangalore: 24444 • Mapusa: 2440 • Margao: 2447 • Mysore 24444 • Pune: 54595 • Panjim: 5763 • Ranchi: 20055 • Trivandrum: 65261 • Vasco: 2403 • Visakhapatnam: 62223.

TNT SKYPAK
THE WORLDWIDE COURIERS

Note: We don't carry non-commercial and personal material.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Only when you master the technology of perfecti

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

can you create colour that outperforms nature

Take Research and Development that's a few steps ahead of time, quality control that's rigidly uncompromising, and Simulated Environmental Tests that are more demanding than life, and only then can you create an electronic culture as exclusive as ECIL.

ECIL. Making products whose quality is on par with international standards. Whose levels of perfection improve on a dream. Yes. EC Computers, Control Systems, Communication Systems and Nuclear Instruments today set the pace for a tomorrow that's yet to take shape.

Carrying the hallmark of every ECIL product is yet another sophisticated electronic wonder. The ECTV. In unmatchable colour. And in Legendary Black & White too. Bringing to thousands of discerning homes a heritage of superiority. A legacy of satisfaction. Very definitely a Colour Television worth waiting for....

ECtv SPECTRA

इका EC

Electronics Corporation of India Limited
Hyderabad-500762

ECIL's Colour TV - truly SPECTRAcular !

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ She is a princess, he a commoner—and never mind how it happened, it happened. This year princess Lakshmi of the royal family of Travancore, who is also a painter decided to take a beau—Monu Nalappad, 34, the high profile editor of Kerala's leading newspaper Mathrubhumi Dismayed at her lowly choice, her blue-blooded parents dismissed their journalist son-in-law as a write-off and boycotted the recent wedding that had all the prudes of Kerala's high society shaking their holy heads in horror. Said Nalappad: "We wanted a quiet wedding. We are both against obsolete customs." Quiet though the registered wedding was, quite a few bigwigs turned up including Chief Minister Karunakaran, former maharaja Chithra Tirunal—and Kamala Das mother of Nalappad who suddenly found she had a princess for a daughter-in-law. The blissfully wedded couple have meanwhile moved over to a small home, half the size of the outhouse of the palace.

C. RATHEESH KUMAR

Nalappad and Lakshmi: unconventional start

◆ Most people would blush a brilliant red or fade into a deadly white before they talked of their illegitimacy. Not so Mahesh Bhatt. He first said it—"I am a bastard"—loud and clear in a magazine interview. Then he went and told the full story of his Janam—in a film of the same name which will premier on television this month. "All art is autobiographical. It has to be," said Bhatt. This piece of heart-art features Kumar Gaurav—and it's not another silly teenie-bopper weepie. Gaurav gives a striking performance as an illegitimate child who grows into a film-maker with just one ambition: to get on top of the pop, played by Anupam Kher. Obviously, for both Bhatt and his hero, mum's not the world.

A still from Bhatt's Janam

◆ First Bombay, then London is the way most ambitious Indian models would want to go about it. Aliya Knightley preferred to do it the other way.

Daughter of the London-based Indian Express columnist Phillip Knightley, Aliya walked straight down the continental catwalk, shining armour and all, to hometown Bombay where she has since been luxuriating in Garden silks and Lux bubbles. "London is very competitive and bitchy," she says, "There are thousands of models. Here you have only hundreds." Now Aliya wants to do some more serious work—she has recently begun writing for Mid-day and plans to pursue it regularly. "Oh, I'm just out to have a good time," said the little chip off the old block. Well, when you're 20, tall and gorgeous you can have it any way you like.

Aliya: flying high

◆ The scene was the sedate Uttar Pradesh Vidhan Sabha but the hullaballoo was as exciting as any in a boy's high school classroom. Indeed it could have been a high school class considering the issue at stake was a brilliant first division—N.D. Tiwari's. Flourishing the examination certificate in his hand, Lok Dal whip Satrudha Prakash said stated that the Uttar Pradesh chief minister had passed his intermediate exam in 1982 with a high first division. The star pupil himself did not look so proud. Though the marks were not his, the point had been made: Tiwari has announced an official inquiry into the rampant corruption that has blank school certificates selling on the streets of Lucknow. Later, he said pedantically: "Some people take even politicians for a ride." Though out of class, he was make sure he is still in form.

Tiwari: ruffled feathers

—Compiled by SIMRAN BHARGAVA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

as the sedate dhan Sabha
oo was as ex-
a boy's high
n. Indeed it a high school
, the issue at

ed feathers

iant first div wari's. Flou nination cert
and, Lok D
Prakash said
Uttar Prades had passed h am in 1982
sion. The st d not look n the the point h wari has a fficial inqui nt corrupti school cert
the streets
, he said pe
people t s for a rid class, he s still in for
RAN BHARG

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13076

13075

13074

13073

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

N FOCU

Election

The cam threatened got off to a security an Congress(I) order to let COVER

A Timel

Haryana' survived an Justice Jasw
misdoings c manner in w only fuelled
INVEST

ONTEN

COMMENT...
CAPITALOOK
VOICES .....
INDIANOTES
SPECIAL REP
Hit List: Liv
CURRENT EV
Terrorism: S
Gujarat: Th
Thakkar Co
Grasping
Rajasthan:
Karnataka:
Tamil Nadu
Jammu & K
Kerala: Den
Andhra Pra
Congress(I)
West Benga
COVER STORY
Punjab:
Election
STATENOTES

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

Election Under the Gun

The campaign for the Punjab elections, threatened by violence and calls for boycott, got off to a late start amidst unprecedented security and a widespread feeling that the Congress(I) has fielded weak candidates in order to let the Akalis win.

COVER STORY 56

Living in Fear

The killing of Congress (I) leader Arjun Dass in Delhi focussed uneasy attention on the other prominent targets supposedly on the terrorist hit list. A special report examines how the life-styles of five key targets have changed under the threat of the gun.

SPECIAL REPORT 22

When Bouquets Run Out

For nearly a decade she was the supreme siren of the Bombay film industry, her dazzling physical assets reinforced by her cool professionalism. But where is Zeenat Aman now ? In a candid encounter she reflects on the aftermath of stardom.

CHANGING SCENE 78

A Timely Acquittal

Haryana's wily Chief Minister Bhajan Lal survived another crisis last fortnight as the Justice Jaswant Singh inquiry into his alleged misdoings cleared him of all charges. But the manner in which the inquiry was conducted only fuelled the controversy further.

INVESTIGATION 84

Back to the Battlefield

The crisis in Sri Lanka snowballed as fresh violence erupted in the island. The deportation of key Tamil leaders boomeranged badly, pushing the rebels to the wall and raising fears of a "final assault". An on-the-spot report from Colombo.

NEIGHBOURS 96

Taming the Devils

Arriving in Colombo with the label of World Champions, the Indian cricket team were in for some rude shocks. Outplayed by a Sri Lankan eleven in every department of the game in the first two Tests, Kapil's men sought refuge in blaming extraneous factors.

SPORTS 130

CONTENTS

COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 14
INDIANOTES 19
SPECIAL REPORT
Hit List: Living In Fear 22
CURRENT EVENTS
Terrorism: Shock Tactics 26
Gujarat: The New Force 28
Thakkar Commission: Grasping at Straws 33
Rajasthan: Transfer Spree 39
Karnataka: Janata Jam 40
Tamil Nadu: Return of the Heroine 45
Jammu & Kashmir: Side Show 46
Kerala: Denouement 47
Andhra Pradesh: Fighting Back 48
Congress(I): Big Brother 53
West Bengal: Hard Lessons 55
COVER STORY
Punjab: Election Under The Gun 56
STATENOTES 72
CHANGING SCENE
Zeenat Aman: When the Bouquets Run Out 78
INVESTIGATION
Bhajan Lal: A Timely Acquittal 84
CRIME
Naxalites: The New Offensive 93
NEIGHBOURS
Sri Lanka: Back to the Battlefield 96
SCIENCE
Halley's Comet: In Waiting 100
TRADE WINDS 105
BUSINESS
Industrial Safety: Under a Cloud 106
Voltas: Changes at the Helm 113
MMC: Pruning Plans 119
Wimpy: Burger Split 120
Moulded Luggage: Mobile Market 125
ITDC: Akbar's Loss 126
The Markets: Bulls Retreat 128
The Economy Monitor 129
SPORTS
Cricket: Taming the Devils 130
Racing: Reining In 132
EDUCATION
Bihar: Varsity Row 134
LIFE-STYLE
Mysore Palace: Right Royal Battle 140
SPECIAL FEATURE
Football: The New Mercenaries 144
EYE-CATCHERS 152

Cover Photograph by RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SONY PRES
THE LIGHTER SI

8MM STANDARD SIZE. SONY STANDARD PERFORMANCE.

Sony now puts all its video experience into as little as possible.

Video 8. The 8mm format agreed upon by 127 of the world's leading video-related companies. Utilizing a tape as small as an audio cassette.

Yet while its size is small, its quality is very big. The high-density metal tape delivers a picture as impressive as that of larger formats. And Video 8 employs the same FM audio recording method used in Hi-Fi video recorders.

CCD-V8E

2 KG OF FUN.

Sony's Video 8 camera recorder — the CCD-V8 — offers nothing heavy. Nothing bulky. And nothing complicated.

It lets you effortlessly shoot and record up to 3 hours of great movies with a single Video 8 cassette. And you can immediately review what you've shot through the unit's electronic viewfinder. Or simply hook it up to any TV or monitor for instant playback.

CCD-V8E

TV Picture simulated

ngri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SONY®

PRESENTS
R SIDE OF VIDEO

THE CCD SEES IT BETTER.

The CCD-V8 replaces the conventional pick-up tube with Sony's highly advanced, compact CCD Image Sensor.

The results are a pleasure to see. Better picture resolution. A total elimination of lag and burn-in (those irritating light trails and image ghosts). Improved sensitivity in low light. Plus increased durability and resistance to vibration and shock.

And for even greater picture quality, the CCD-V8 also uses Sony's sophisticated M&F Head.

THE POWER TO GO ANYWHERE.

Six different power supplies give the CCD-V8 the versatility to go where other camera recorders can't. And its compact size and easy operation ensure that it will always add to your fun. Not get in the way of it.

Take it everywhere. Vacationing. Sporting. Outings. Weddings. In the front of a concert hall. On the back of a motorcycle. Even in the middle of a lake.

In fact, just about the only thing CCD-V8 won't do is bore you.

INCOMPATIBILITY? IMPOSSIBLE.

Even if you already own a VCR, Video 8 still offers unlimited potential. The CCD-V8 easily lets you transfer tapes to any other format. And together with its optional Tuner/Timer unit, it can be used just like a conventional home video deck.

SONY'S HISTORY PROMISES A BRIGHT FUTURE.

Sony has long been known as a leading innovator in every area of video technology — from professional to consumer. Which virtually guarantees the success and further development of Video 8 for years to come.

True, it's the world's smallest video format.

But with Sony behind it, it can't be taken lightly.

8 Video 8

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For every moment of your life, in style..

Phagwara

POLYESTER FABRICS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE
VOLUME X NUMBER 18
FOR THE FORTNIGHT SEPTEMBER 16-30, 1985

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA
AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI SUNIL SETHI
SUMIT MITRA
SHEKHAR GUPTA
RAJU SANTHANAM
PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE RAJ CHENGAPPA
BOMBAY JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
WASHINGTON INDERJIT BADHWAR
LONDON BONNY MUKHERJEE

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

DESIGN CONSULTANT AUROBIND PATEL

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK ANUPAMA GOPAL
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN
SURESH UNNY

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA
ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE ANITA BAVEJA

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE, NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-61245 ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A & B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029327. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY ● 13-K COMMUNITY CENTRE, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841, 312070. TRADE: 11-2306 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI ● 8 LAKSH CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 87185, 87745. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, MADRAS ● 74/1 ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46 C CHOWRINGEE, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 443198, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA ● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS (INDIA) LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRAGIC COMMENT

The assassination of Sant Longowal ("Return to Uncertainty", September 15) is more a comment on our existing security arrangements, or rather lack of it, than on the nefarious activities of the extremists. The moment Longowal signed the historic accord, he must have figured on the hit list. Under these circumstances it was the duty of the concerned authorities to see that Longowal was protected.

Madras K.VAITHEESWARAN

HIGH AND DRY

The plight of over 350 second mates of the Merchant Navy ("A Sea of Sorrow", September 15) highlights how miserably the Shipping Corporation of India is functioning. The corporation has shown no interest in the past two years to find a solution to the growing problem.

Second mates who reported back to SCI in mid-'83 were asked to wait for eight months before they were given a call, over 20 months have passed and all are still waiting. To add to the problem, the SCI says that it will take another 60 months before it can employ them. SCI has more than 150 ships and only about 30 are sailing with fourth officers on board. It is difficult to understand why the corporation is reluctant to fill up more than the 100 existing vacancies.

New Delhi SUNIL KUMAR

■ I am extremely grateful to you for giving the rightful exposure to the plight of the second mates. Can one imagine a second mate working for Rs 20 per shift at the Bombay docks. That is what I am doing to make both ends meet. The shipping companies particularly the SCI have deliberately flooded the market with second mates, they made us sign one-sided bonds because at that time they needed us. Now every company related to the shipping industry is exploiting us.

Bombay SURYA NARAYAN SINGH

YOUNG HOPEFULS

It is a healthy and welcoming trend that many of our members of Parliament ("The New Breed", August 31), all newcomers, are showing remarkable progress in their new role. Unlike the professional politicians these newcomers are showing a sincere concern towards the current problems of the people. Still more appreciable is the fact that these persons belong to the Congress(I), a party that has earned the reputation of having MP's for name's sake. I hope these professionals will inspire the others and restore the true spirit of the parliamentary system.

However, I take strong exception to your partisan attitude in selecting only the ruling party members for whom there is no dearth of manpower, resources or influence to get things done. You have done grave injustice to some of the newcomers of the Opposition whose performances in the House as well as in their constituencies are extremely good.

Thanjavur, Tamil Nadu H.SOMASHEKARA

■ India has indeed been awaiting the advent of a competent, educated, action-oriented, zealous young crop to head the seats of government. Perhaps the comfortable economic status in addition to the totally new outlook regarding political ideals of the new breed of parliamentarians should help clean out corruption which is the main shackle that hampers India's forward march. It is not a cakewalk to prove oneself on the political arena, where innumerable critical lenses are focussed, nevertheless the events of the last ten months fill the vacuum of a bereaved nation with a definite sense of achievement.

Nasik VIRA KOMARRAJU

■ It seems that the slumbering Parliament has suddenly got up to do business. In the past the unuttered rule for the MP's of the ruling party was to defend the Government and attack the Opposition. The opposition members had also developed the habit of attacking the Government in all its policy

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you want the heart of India to warm up to your message, mull over these cold facts.

Dainik Bhaskar's circulation: 155,000.
Per copy readership: over 11.
That makes it
the widest read
daily in M.P.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The widest read daily in M.P.

In one year, Dainik Bhaskar's circulation has shot up 57% to 155,000. The per copy readership has always been the highest-over 11. Multiply the two, and you'll know why Dainik Bhaskar is the most influential paper in M.P.

There are, of course, sound reasons for this.

Ruthless reporting.

Dainik Bhaskar has covered recent happenings with cold-blooded objectivity. The Bhopal tragedy was one example. The Government's reservation policy was another.

High credibility with the reader.

Naturally, the reader in M.P. appreciates the way we report. This has important implications for advertisers.

If you're trying to communicate with anybody who is anybody in M.P., Dainik Bhaskar is the clear choice.

And that's a fact. A cold-blooded fact.

दैनिक भास्कर

The newspaper that's making news in M.P.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

matters. But Rajiv Gandhi's catalytic personality and approach to solving problems have given a new impetus to our Parliament.

Nalco Nagar, Orissa — BIBHU PRASAD MISHRA

DUBIOUS REVOLUTION

Your article "Revolution on the Road" (August 31) is quite interesting. It is incomprehensible that the automobile industry in India, which has been producing 'almost junk' over the last 35 years, has suddenly woken up to the need for providing new cars, albeit borrowing outdated technology from every available source from all over the world. Or is it the sign of growth of neo-rich in the country, who are keen to purchase cars to flaunt their wealth.

New Delhi — V.SAGAR

■ With reference to your excellent report "Revolution on the Road" (August 31) there has been an error while quoting our Chairman Mr K.Mahesh. You say that our new brake pads have a 40 per cent longer life span but costs 60 per cent more. The figures in fact are the other way round, the life span is 60 per cent more and the cost increase is only 40 per cent.

Madras — V.R.JANARDHANAM, deputy general manager, Sundaram-Abex Ltd

The error is regretted. —Editor

FIRM STAND

With reference to your report "Maruti:Costly Lessons"(August 31) your correspondent says that he met me and my colleague Mr K.K.Gupta, and quotes Mr Gupta as saying that "buying a Maruti car is inviting an accident. Our budget for this year has been ruined because of Maruti accidents." You also quote me as saying that "of the 625 claims car owners shot till July end, 600 were for Maruti owners. Oriental has shelled out Rs 18 lakh this year to Maruti drivers."

The above statements purportedly made to your correspondent are not true. They are false and denied.

New Delhi — SUSHIL KUMAR AHLUWALIA, senior divisional manager, Oriental Insurance Co

We stand by our report. —Editor

PLUG FOR PRIYA

Referring to your special feature "The Rajani Phenomenon" (August 31), the write-up is highly exaggerated. The article with the eulogising titles like 'Durga' and 'Joan of Arc' look like a plug to help Priya Tendulkar get films.

I belong to the most populous and corruption-ridden state—Uttar Pradesh. And I can say that Rajani is certainly not as great a success as you want us to believe. The truth is that, it is a serial in which they give impractical solutions to some real problems.

Lucknow — DHIRESH BAHADUR

■ Rajani is a new cult, the cult of the superwoman. I wonder whether an image like her inspires ordinary women to struggle in everyday life or whether it only makes us feel acutely inadequate. For we are unable to achieve the sort of instant solutions that Rajani does achieve. On TV she manages to solve things: in real life her solutions are inapplicable. Most of us know that the police is neither sympathetic nor even accessible to the ordinary woman in distress; nor is the press or courts. All these Rajani has used as her 'solutions'. Thus illusions and falsehoods are thrust upon us week after week.

Certainly there is potential in characters like Rajani—at least she is an active, thinking woman. But the parameters within which she acts and thinks are so rigidly defined. She launches attacks on corruption—but never questions its source. She patronises other women. By no stretch of the imagination is Rajani the ultimate in liberated womanhood.

Delhi — DEEPTI MEHROTRA

OLD IS GOLD

It is very disturbing to know that the magnificent buildings like the GPO, high court, the collectorate, Writers' Building, that dominate the Dalhousie Square area of Calcutta are likely to be demolished to make way for skyscrapers ("Wiping Out History", August 31). I am not against development. Multi-storeyed buildings are probably the only solution to the ever-increasing demand for space. But certainly not at the cost of magnificent, historical, colonial structures. Even the alterations and additions to these buildings should be done while retaining the old style and character of the buildings.

Necessary steps should be taken to stop demolition of Calcutta's architectural heritage, otherwise tomorrow Victoria Memorial will be on the hit list.

Nagpur — RAVI K.BHARGAVA

■ Memorandums have been submitted to the appropriate authorities of the city, expressing strong reservations to the proposal to bring down any historical monument. It is felt that the new multi-storeyed buildings besides spoiling the skyline, would also create severe congestion in an already congested area. In view of other repercussions, it is suggested that new constructions be made outside the city's periphery.

Calcuttans have still to recover from the guilt of seeing the destruction of the magnificent Senate Building of the University of Calcutta almost two decades ago. While many countries, including Capitalist and Socialist, have declared entire cities as conservation zones, it is a pity that we cannot even preserve a small area like Dalhousie Square. It is forgotten that these colonial structures need to be protected not for its association with the pre-Independence era but for the sake of history.

Calcutta — YATISH PRASAD

FOLLOW THE LEADER

We are really indebted to you for having published the article on the Punjab & Sind Bank ("Loans to the Dead", August 31) and exposing the misuse of the government-sponsored schemes meant for the benefit of the poor and its exploitation for the benefit of the corrupt officers.

New Delhi — JASBIR SINGH

■ In 1981 several allegations involving misappropriation of crores of rupees were levelled by members of Parliament against Inderjit Singh, the then chairman of the bank. The finance minister assured necessary action after investigation by the Reserve Bank. A senior officer of the RBI was deputed. He submitted his report in early '82. However, the findings did not suit the ministry, so the decision on the report was postponed. The RBI deputed the same officer to conduct a thorough inspection of the PSB. He not only confirmed his earlier findings but also brought to light the serious malpractices by other top officials of the bank. As expected no action was taken against anyone. On the other hand all the involved persons were promoted. If this is the state of affairs at the top level then why blame and punish a 'poor' branch manager like Daljit Singh Bedi. It is a known fact that the juniors follow in the footsteps of their seniors.

New Delhi — SANJEEB MAITRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hunger Amidst Plenty

SUDDENLY, the plentiful availability of food in India has become an embarrassment. The Government has more of it than it wants, and doesn't seem to know how to get it into the stomachs of underfed millions. The procurement and storage agencies have no warehouse space left, and large amounts of wheat are reported to be rotting out in the open. A variety of measures have been proposed in the hasty effort to get rid of the unwanted riches: exports by private traders, exports by the Government, open market sales in the country, and an expanded food-for-work programme. None of them have got very far yet. Private exports have been a non-starter because India's prices are too high for overseas markets, government exports to the Soviet Union, Rumania and elsewhere have run into problems (including that of quality), open market sales are yet to begin, and the food-for-work programme (renamed the National Rural Employment Programme) continues at a relatively insignificant level.

This is both bizarre and scandalous. Some 300 million Indians go underfed every day, without the money to pay for the foodgrains waiting for consumers in government granaries. The stocks, which have increased from 16 million tonnes two years ago to the region of 30 million tonnes now, will cost the Government over Rs 500 crore in storage, handling and interest charges alone this year, and the food subsidy will run up to well over last year's already staggering total of Rs 1,100 crore. More than Rs 8,000 crore of bank credit is estimated to be locked up just now in the grain stocks, as good an example as any of inappropriate use of scarce capital. The situation is now about to get worse, with yet another bumper kharif harvest maturing in the fields. It seems certain that a good part of this harvest will finally rot in open godowns, while episodes like the one in Kalahandi recur every now and then.

There is no excuse for this state of affairs. The present embarrassment should have been foreseen. Private commentators had in fact warned of precisely this. Yet no advance action was taken, and none of the initiatives conceived since April, when the Government finally woke up to the problem of overflowing silos, have led anywhere as yet.

If the failure to act in time makes the Government culpable, its insensitivity to the absurdity of an underfed nation trying to export foodgrains is even less defensible. Exports are not, and should never be, sought as a way of getting rid of unwanted food stocks. In any case, there is no case for subsidising consumers abroad, most of them more happily placed than Indians, by exporting foodgrains at a loss. Measures to increase domestic consumption constitute the only acceptable solution. And the food-for-work programme—which places food directly in the hands of the hungry while giving them work at the same time, work that helps build national assets—should be the first priority. Domestic open market sales are a subsidiary option that will shift the storage burden from the Government to private traders while forcing the open market prices to come down.

The food-for-work programme was first conceived in the late 1970s, when a similar 'problem' of foodgrain surpluses forced the Government's hand. This was gradually wound down to a relatively small-scale operation in subsequent years, when the surpluses were eaten up and the country began importing foodgrains once again. Now the wheel has turned full circle, and the Government should immediately get down to the business of expanding the national rural employment programme, and tackling the administrative problems that led to leakages and corruption the last time around. If stocks have to be drawn down immediately, open market sales can be an effective solution since market prices currently rule higher than the Government's procurement price.

NINAN

Meanwhile, some basic issues relating to Indian agriculture have been raised by the current predicament. The failure of the export effort shows that Indian wheat costs far too much to produce and store. Yet every kilogramme of wheat procured and then off-loaded by the Government bears a substantial subsidy, while upstream raw materials (like fertiliser) are supplied to farmers at a subsidised rate. An international price disadvantage despite all these subsidies (and such hidden benefits as underpriced—if not entirely free—electricity and water) points to some serious flaws in policy, which seems to have fostered a high-cost agriculture that is as uncompetitive as the country's equally high-cost industry. Quite apart from making the question of exports virtually academic, it is an unfair imposition on a low-income economy in which most people spend the bulk of their money on food. The irony is that the country's farmers remain unhappy with the prices they get.

Quite apart from all this, food has now become a major burden on the Central exchequer, with the subsidies on this accounting in a large measure for the mounting current account deficit in the budget. If a good hard look is not taken soon at what has brought about this dangerous and potentially disastrous situation, we could soon have the supremely ironical Indian foodgrain equivalent of the milk and butter mountains in the European Economic Community. That is certainly far better than being an international basket case, but it is not what should have resulted from two decades of the green revolution. And it is not what will, in the ultimate analysis, help feed a still hungry nation.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The latest in a long line of firsts.

- 1979-80: Uptron enters the computer market with the D-10, a data entry system. With over 3500 installations, D-10 is now an acclaimed industry standard.
- 1981-82: Uptron announces the S-800, India's first computer to shatter the Rs. 1 lakh price barrier.
- 1982-83: The Uptron S-850 becomes India's first computer to integrate DP, WP and Graphics.
- 1983-84: The Uptron S-1650 emerges as India's fastest 16-bit multi-user EDP machine.

Now The Uptron S-1600. A 16-bit multi-terminal, desk-top computer that's redefining price-performance ratios.

UPTRON

Uptron India Limited
10, Ashok Marg, Lucknow-226 001

Computer Sales Offices at: Lucknow: 19 Vidhan Sabha Marg, Lucknow-226 001 Tel 47131, 34684. Bangalore: 70/3 Millers Road, Bangalore-560 051 Tel 71919, 28927. Madras: Mowbrays Flats, 282 Mowbrays Road, Alwarpet, Madras-600 018 Tel 454022, 454625. Bombay: 203, Dalamal Towers, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021 Tel 223645, 222561, 231393. Calcutta: 52D Ballygunj Circular Road, Calcutta-700 019 Tel 476859, 483249. Hyderabad: 5-9-12 Samrat Complex, Opp. A.G.'s Office, Saifabad, Hyderabad-500 004 Tel 226085 Delhi: M-41 & 42, Commercial Complex, Greater Kailash Part II, New Delhi-110 048 Tel 6418939, 6411365, 6417125.

ULKA-D-UIL-640

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Red Herring

● Like a bad coin, India's most wanted terrorist Lal Singh seems to crop up everywhere, or so people imagine. He has caught the imagination of the police who blame him for the Makens and Arjun Dass murders, and the public who see a Lal Singh lurking in every dark corner. So it wasn't very surprising that the police last fortnight took serious note of a tip-off that Lal Singh was travelling to Jammu on Indian Airlines Flight 421, which starts from Delhi and halts at Chandigarh and Jammu before reaching Srinagar. Many people on the flight had noticed the similarity between the stocky, wavy-haired passenger occupying the window seat 6A in the Boeing aircraft, and the picture of Lal Singh published in the Delhi papers that morning. The smart passenger, who had a sinister looking scar on the bridge of his nose and was flashily dressed in a pink shirt, grey trousers and white shoes, drew attention by making a couple of trips to the toilet at either end of the aircraft.

Some deplaning passengers must have informed the authorities at Chandigarh of their suspicion because the police went into action the moment the plane took off from Chandigarh for Jammu. Police commandos cordoned off Jammu airport and surrounded the plane the moment it landed. Nobody was allowed off the plane for over an hour and the "suspect" was led away and interrogated. Only after repeated protestations of innocence was the passenger able to convince the police that he was the relative of a local Jammu politician. Obviously, this time Lal Singh turned out to be literally a red herring.

Made to Wit

● Few can remember the witty remarks made by Mrs Gandhi, principally because she made so few of them. Things are different with Rajiv, and the changes in the tone and texture of prime ministerial speeches reflect not just the new prime minister's own style but also the calibre and varied abilities of the men around him. The punchline-packed witticisms on the similarities between politics and billiards, delivered at the inauguration of the world billiards championship in July, were really contributed by S. Vasudevan, joint secretary in the Prime Minister's Secretariat. And the crack about the Indian role in the Boston Tea Party, made during the visit to the United States last summer, was authored by Ambassador K. Shanker Bajpai. But Rajiv has his own personal contributions too, notably the "I have a dream..." bit in his address to the US Congress. And surprisingly enough, the mention of swadeshi in Rajiv's Independence Day speech from the Red Fort resulted from the advice given in the right quarters by a journalist who pointed out that in the centenary year of the Congress, the prime minister should not fail to make a point about the continuing importance of the swadeshi spirit.

Men at Arms

● When phones rang simultaneously in Europe's busy arms bazaar, the message from New Delhi had an electrifying effect: the biggest manufacturers were called over for an urgent meeting. Word went around that India was to clinch a new defence contract. But when they reached New Delhi, there were no contracts to be signed. Instead, the bosses in the Defence Ministry came up with an unusual request: "Please do not offer any more commissions." The reference was to the past practice of the major giants in the arms business who vied with one another in offering huge commissions to middlemen who boasted of high political connections. If that request shocked them, the companies did well to keep a straight face—under the new dispensation all deals with commissions are being looked at suspiciously.

X-Rated

● The film opens on a sinister note. The title flashed on the screen says 'Agent X 1985' and then the camera pans to battle-dressed mercenaries going through their paces with the sound of gunfire in the background. The mystery, however, is not so much in Agent X or the film—a television feature on the notorious Frank Camper, who runs the Alabama mercenary training school where Sikh terrorists, including Lal Singh, were trained—but in the surreptitious rounds the film is making in the capital.

Currently the exclusive property of the Government of India, the film, most of it an interview with Camper, was first shown to the prime minister and his security aides and then screened for selected MP's. But officials have since been acting unusually coy and possessive about the film, having occasional showings for select audiences but acting very hush-hush about where exactly the film was obtained from. It seems to be an uncut version of a television report made by one of the regular US television networks since there is a voice on the soundtrack that keeps chanting: "Okay guys, cut." Since Camper's views have received fairly wide publicity, the film no longer merits any kind of secrecy. Camper comes through as articulate, but contradicts himself when he says that he asks his students to leave their politics at home before they come for training, and that he doesn't knowingly train terrorists. But viewers are still left mystified as to why the government of India seems to be treating the film like it contains Pakistan's latest nuclear secrets.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOES A VITAL CONTRACT HAVE TO BE IN TOKYO BY DAY AFTER TOMORROW?

DON'T PANIC—CONTACT DHL.

AIRFREIGHT-DHL collects consignments from your desk. And hand-delivers them to any desk in the world—with amazing speed.

Your documents and packages are rushed to their destinations across the globe by 2500 on-board DHL couriers, using 111 airlines. In fact, a DHL courier boards a plane somewhere in the world every seven minutes.

Only DHL International has the worldwide infrastructure to ensure such speed, safety and reliability.

A work force of 11,000 direct employees.

Operations in 635 offices from 146 countries.

Every day, DHL International delivers 56,000 items across the globe. The world's first international courier service is still the largest.

We're changing the way the world does business.

AIRFREIGHT DHL WORLDWIDE COURIER

Contact Airfreight Pvt. Ltd. (DHL Courier Services Division) Ahmedabad: 408077, 400211, 400212 Bangalore: 561007 Bombay: Nariman Point: 224190, 230163, 230171, 243519; Ballard Estate: 265761-66; Worli: 4926643, 4926333; Airport: 6121883, 612057 Ext. 369 Calcutta: 442174, 446279, 448401 Chandigarh: 40400 Cochin: 6163, 69477 Coimbatore: Selvalya Bldg., 8/434-D, Trichy Road. Delhi: Kasturba Gandhi Marg: 3311896, 3318945, 3318948; Nehru Place: 6432360; Rajendra Place: Ground Floor, 5, Prabhat Kiran Building. Hyderabad: 225234 Jaipur: 73337 Kanpur: 60245, 67954, 60587 Madras: Commander-in-Chief Road: 812169, 812366, 812169, 82330, 810227; Parry's Corner: 512401, 512269; Guindy: 431349 Pune: Dr. Ambedkar Road: 26071, 26073, 28874; Wakadewadi: 54098 Quilon: 3631, 3632 Ext. 105 Srinagar: 75540, 71268 Trichy: 32244 Trivandrum: 67231, 65863.

Trikaya AF 4.85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Times of India

● Security against hidden terrorists has to be in the form of an offensive. If the state tries to hide behind a wall or in a gigantic foxhole, then wild dreams of hidden danger will be conjured up.

■ RANJIT GUPTA, former West Bengal IGP in The Telegraph

● Under Rajiv Gandhi, the Congress (I) party is being replaced by a modern managerial elite innocent of the mechanics of political action... This way, the party may be reduced to a bunch of sycophants of the type in Bihar who have raised the bizarre suggestion that Sonia Gandhi should be made the party president.

■ NIKHIL CHAKRAVARTY in Mainstream

● Sikhs in general want me to join politics. The AISSF has assured me of financial support if I contest the (Punjab) elections no matter which party I join.

■ BIMAL KHALSA, widow of Beant Singh, Mrs Gandhi's assassin, in Sunday

● The greatest enemy of India today is not Pakistan or China but Indians themselves. No enemy can possibly weaken the country so effectively as Indians can.

■ NANI PALKHIVALA in The Sunday Statesman

● People were sent to the UK to research me and they did everything short of finding out what time I go to bed. But eventually truth won. Today, I am appreciated for what I have done.

■ SWRAJ PAUL in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● We acquired arms training from the PLO*—one of its constituents the* PFLP*—and some African and Western countries I can't name.*

■ UMA MAHESHWARAN, leader of PLOT, Tamil militant group, in Current

● In my estimation there are only five great media institutions in the modern world...the BBC, Time magazine, Wall Street Journal, The New York Times and Ananda Bazaar Patrika.

■ AVEEK SARKAR, editor of Ananda Bazaar Patrika, in The Week

● A lot of people told me that in the World Cup final in Australia I played for that Audi. Why not? It's a gorgeous car. I was willing to pat half-volleys but I damn well was not going to get out.

■ RAVI SHASTRI in the Express Magazine

● Till I was 17 or 18, I was very innocent. Till that age, I didn't know what it was all about, the heartaches and pain and love. Then, when I learnt about these things, I got stuck forever.

■ REKHA in The Hindustan Times

● People here don't believe in talent. Only star value. One hit and they run after you. One flop and they are all gone.

■ PADMINI KOLHAPURE in Filmfare

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The spirit of adventure has 'AMCO' written all over it

When it's time to enjoy, make sure there is no hassle on the way. Make sure you have the power of AMCO, the new generation batteries, built with the latest technology of Yuasa, the world's largest manufacturer of motorcycle batteries, and a leader in a variety of automotive and industrial batteries.

AMCO-YUASA tie-up

As a leading manufacturer of automotive, locomotive and industrial batteries, catering to the OE, Replacement and Export markets, AMCO has always been in the forefront of technology. Today AMCO is upgrading its proven technological excellence by utilising the best of Yuasa's technology – to bring to you the most advanced batteries for the new generation two-wheelers, four-wheelers and other equipment.

What's more, with Yuasa's expertise, AMCO is also modernising its facilities for its new breed of products and technology.

The products are also being backed by specialised after-sales service facility through AMCO's 600-strong dealer network and nation-wide service outlets.

Yes, when it comes to batteries, trust AMCO – always on the go – meeting tomorrow's challenges today.

AMCO : where the action is

MR. A. SIVASAILAM
Chairman, AMCO Batteries Ltd.

MR. YUICHI YUASA
President, Yuasa Battery Company Ltd.

MAC/AMCO/505

AMCO Batteries Limited Bangalore.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Like the coconut, polyjars made of PIL's Hostalen,® find endless uses. They guarantee the purity of

We're making sure shoppers get more

Time was when the housewife was impaled on the horns of a dilemma. An acute tinplate shortage had resulted in a ban on the packaging of vanaspati in quantities of 1 kg. or less. So, the middle-class housewife either had to go in for the large dabba or buy loose. And that meant the risk of getting adulterated vanaspati.

Then PIL changed all that. Manufacturers could make tamper-proof polyjars from Hostalen. And the housewife could be sure she got what she asked for. And more.

Revolutionising the packaging industry

Hostalen polyjars revolutionised ideas about packaging. It soon proved it was an ideal replacement for scarce raw materials like tin-plate and glass. For, besides saving the country precious foreign exchange, it cut costs all round.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

they store. Are innovatively re-used in the household. And can be re-cycled.

sed less energy to make. It ough and resilient enough to ckpiled without fear of ge. And since it was light, it ght costs considerably. It d be made tamper-proof by the facturer. And could be re-used essly as a container in the hold. Finally, it could be ably re-cycled to make other ucts.

Hostalen–it's all around you alen well merits the term der material'. A material which, in some form or the other, touches a part of your everyday life. As a crate for fruit or farm produce or as a container for food. As a pipe that can transport anything from liquids to gases. Or as a suitcase that can take the hard knocks of travel.

PIL—better ideas for a better life

As in packaging, so also in other vital fields, we're improving the quality of life. Through superior products. And the know-how gained in 20 years of grappling with complex problems.

PIL POLYOLEFINS INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Matatlal Centre, Nariman Point
Bombay 400 021

Hostalen® is the registered trademark of Hoechst AG, West Germany

PIL–Technology for a better life

than they ask for

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The tyres we race are the tyres you buy

It's true! The very same tyres that you use on city-roads, are repeatedly tested by MRF on race and rally tracks around the country.

There's a simple reason why. On a race-track a tyre is subjected to severe torture and strain. In just six hours on the track, a tyre goes through more than half its life. Something that would take more than a year on a city road.

Which means we get our test results that much faster. And you get an improved product that much quicker.

It's a testing technique developed by our collaborators B F Goodrich of the USA, people who build tyres for the NASA Space Shuttle Programme.

And since MRF tests city-tyres on the race-track, you can be sure that when we win, you too are winning. With tyres that are setting new standards for grip, handling, mileage, durability and sheer staying power.

At the end of the race, it's over to the MRF technicians... Testing for heat build-up in a tyre with an electronic pyrometer.

The race-track is our laboratory

MRF TYRES

Tyres with Muscle

MRF Tyres are made in technical collaboration with the BF Goodrich Company of U.S.A.

LINTAS-M MRF NCT 17a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FERRYING PAINS

■ One of the get-away-from-it-all places for the Bombay-bruised is Manori, a quiet island approached by a ferry. The women of Manori carry their vegetable and fish produce every day to town, crossing the water in a boat which looks as if it's going to sigh and sink any minute. However, as the fare on this boat is one-tenth that on the bigger and much more secure water sprite run by BEST, nobody minds.

Last fortnight, however, the rickety raft broke down and the grumbling women, laden with dried fish and fresh vegetables were forced to take the BEST ferry. The conductor licked his chops and went energetically clambering over baskets to demand his Rs 1.60 from each passenger, plus an additional charge for the luggage.

The journey doesn't take five minutes and almost half the women had still to cough up when the ferry was close to land. Already, some of the women were grinning widely at the free ride, when a sharp order from the conductor made the helmsman spin the wheel around; the ferry took off for open sea and stayed there until everybody—men, women, children, dried fish and damp pumpkins—had paid up. That's called being taken for a ride.

LANGUAGE HACKS

■ The pitfalls of translating from one language to another are well-known. But how deep they are has become bewilderingly clear to a group of Ahmedabad students who began to give the much-delayed SSC examinations last month. The very first question paper—physical education theory—was laid out in both Gujarati and English and while the Gujarati section was comprehensible, the English section, to put it mildly, was not. Samples:

When gate bones points?

In the game when the ball are broken? What will you do?

How will given number of winner in the 100 metres run?

What are the timing of men and women in kabaddi?

And so on and so forth.

Frantic querying ascertained that the questions had been translated by a group of clearly asinine hacks. But the paper had to be answered and after much heart-searching over whether 'when gate bones points' referred to the bonus points one gets or gate in cricket, the students read the questions in Gujarati and answered them in English. What mark men gate afterwards is yet to be made clear.

STICKY OFFERING

■ There are few Ralph Naders in this country and the name of the game in bazars, big and small, is adulteration. Thus, stones find their way into rice, yellow powder into turmeric, etcetera, etcetera. The authorities, in this as in everything else, seem to be ineffectual.

But there is one gentleman who is not: the municipal health officer of Shimoga in Karnataka. He received information that a group of grocers were selling junk butter in Gandhi Bazar. Gathering a posse of babus, he rushed to the bazar and caught the merchants of melange red-handed. Ordinarily, he would have jailed them and asked for a heavy fine to be levied but he was an imaginative person and decided to try God when everything else had failed.

So he took his guilty group to a nearby statue of the god Basava and made them swear a majestic oath that they would never, never, never again in their lives mix anything into anything—except for gin and lime. They swore, so help them Basava, and in a grand if sticky finale, the entire mound of adulterated butter was poured over the statue as an offering. What the God felt about such tainted libation has not been recorded.

SOUND TRACK

■ The night locals in Bombay are usually the haunt of beggar-singers laden with all kinds of instruments from a battered harmonium to a tuneful violin made from an earthen pot, a bit of wire and a slat of wood. The audience consists of third shifters going home, drunks and the homeless.

Last month, the 12.15 a.m. from Borivli to Churchgate had a smattering of the city's low monde. At Mahim, a blind harmonium hacker got on from one entrance of a carriage and a tanpura thrummer, one leg missing, from the other. Both nearly came to blows—obviously one was poaching on the other's territory. The motley residents of the carriage called for a contest to decide who would work the carriage.

The blind man's fingers raced as they never had before over the keys, his voice rising sonorously through the octaves as he sought to drown out the endearingly monotonous twang of the thrummer and his partner's drumming on a Postman oil tin. In the end the blind man won—but alas, there were only two stations left and half the audience had gone.

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

LINTAS-M MRF NCT 17a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

camlin UNBREAKABLE PENCIL

The extraordinary pencil that lasts as long as two ordinary pencils.

Camlin unbreakable pencils. Highly compressed lead and carefully seasoned wood bonded together by a special process perfected only by Camlin.

So the point never breaks. While sharpening, or in normal use. That's why Camlin unbreakable pencils last longer — twice as long as ordinary pencils. Nine attractive designs to choose from.

camlin

Makers of India's first unbreakable pencil.

Camlin Private Limited,
Pencil Division, Camlin House,
J.B.Nagar, Bombay 400 059.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PIPELINES ARE LIFELINES

Our Engineering role of national development in making India stronger started 40 years ago, by laying more and more pipelines for water, sewage, oil and gas through natural obstacles like swamps, river and sea.

Besides laying PIPELINES
M.S.C. builds major plants for THERMAL POWER
○ HYDRO POWER, ○ FERTILIZERS
○ OIL ○ GAS ○ PETROCHEMICALS
○ SEWERAGE ○ WATER SUPPLY
○ AIRPORT TERMINALS ○ RUNWAYS
○ MULTISTORIED BUILDINGS AND MARINE, works.

We handle major turnkey projects with our profound dedication, ably supported by engineering professionals and equipment resources.

MOHINDER SINGH & CO.
ENGINEERS & CONTRACTORS
1107 AKASHDEEP BUILDING,
26-A, BARAKHAMBA ROAD
NEW DELHI-110001 (INDIA)
TEL. 3315203 ● 3310903

M.S.C. — A SYNONYM FOR CONSTRUCTION EFFICIENCY, PERFORMANCE AND EXPERTISE.

3. ADVTG—MSC—85/101

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HIT LIST

Living in F

THEIR life is as vulnerable as that of a silkworm, protected only by a cocoon of security. On the wide sunlit streets of New Delhi's VIP districts, their homes, looking deceptively secure from outside, are stalked by death night and day. The prime minister, his cabinet colleagues, a few secretaries to the Government, some MP's, some Congress(I) leaders and businessmen—altogether 106 people in the capital now live permanently in the shadow of assassination. Though life flows on as usual, and public postures are maintained somehow, fear permeates even their households, altering life-styles, affecting expressions and attitudes, and breeding gloom.

Lalit Maken, Arjun Dass—the roll of death in the past two months has been like a memento mori, heightening the fear and consequently drawing the security nets closer and thicker. Altogether 2,000 men, armed with Sten guns, carbines and West German sub-machine guns, and using nearly 500 vehicles, guard the lives of the threatened men. The personnel are drawn from as many as five separate agencies—the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF); the Border Security Force (BSF); the Intelligence Bureau (IB); the Delhi Armed Police (DAP); and the newly-formed crack unit under the Cabinet Secretariat, the National Security Guards (NSG). Twice bitten, and now very shy, the gun-toting Praetorian guards of the capital's high-risk citizens are now an omnipresent tribe, escorting their charges

> "It is over a year now since I've been to a movie. Yes I'm safe. As safe as Lalit or Arjun felt perhaps."
>
> JAGDISH TYTLER

to every destination, frisking even the nearest of relatives and taking security not only up to their doorsteps but right into their living-rooms and bedrooms.

There are, of course, categories involved in the threat assessment of the men in the net. The "Very Very High Security Risk" (VVHSR) category, which really involves people thought to be at the very centre of the terrorists' gun-sight, includes but a handful of people—the prime minister; Home Minister S.B.Chavan; Agriculture Minister Buta Singh; Parliamentary Affairs Minister and prominent Delhi MP H.K.L.Bhagat; Cabinet Secretary

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

n Fear

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

P.K.Kaul; Home Secretary R.D.Pradhan; and All India Congress(I) Committee (AICC-I) Joint Secretary Jagdish Tytler, who is also a prominent Delhi MP and a well-known butt of terrorist revenge.

There is a middle category of "Very High Security Risk" (VHSR) people which, apart from other ministers and secretaries to the Government, includes men like Sajjan Kumar and Dharam Dass Shastri, former Delhi MP's who, through the controversial report compiled by the People's Union for Civil Liberties (PUCL) and People's Union for Democratic Rights (PUDR), had been implicated in the riots of November last year. This category also includes Delhi Sikh leader Jathedar Rachpal Singh; city Mayor M.S. Saathi; as many as four metropolitan councillors; and, oddly, Tejwant Singh, managing director of the Skipper group of companies, the builders who were instrumental in the reconstruction of the Akal Takht Sahib at the Golden Temple in Amritsar as a part of kar seva.

Tired within but anxious to put up a brave front, the men in the security cordon are exposed to a harrowing nightmare. Together they form a touching mosaic of men under mental siege, caught as though in some dark tunnel of history that shows no exit door. Some examples:

JAGDISH TYTLER: The two-storeyed house of Tytler in the Karol Bagh area is now conspicuous even from a distance. There are five security vehicles, including a CRPF van, constantly parked in front of it, with armed DAP men posted every 10 yards along the pavement.

A brand-new red intercom kept at the gate enables the NSG commandos to pass on the caller's name. If the visitor, at this stage, cared to look sideways, he would invariably find at least two Sten gun barrels sticking out of the waiting vehicles and firmly aimed at him. Once cleared at the gate, the men with the metal detectors have their turn to work over him. Thereafter, two of Tytler's own followers, drawn from the Youth Congress(I), question the guest closely before showing him into the residential area. "I am sorry", says an amiable Tytler, "but I hope you'll agree that all that precaution is really necessary."

Nobody will really disagree with him. Last fortnight, Tytler received at least half a dozen threatening telephone calls from Montreal, New York and London, apart from the countless menacing letters that he keeps receiving from Punjab and the rest of the country anyway. The language differs, but not the content. Besides, some letters pointedly refer to the PUCL-PUDR report on the riots which contains an annexure giving a list of "those alleged to have instigated violence and/or protected alleged criminals". Tytler's name is sixth on that list.

The evidence produced in the report in justification of including Tytler's name in the list is tenuous. The only testimony that has been cited is that of a letter to the PUCL saying that Tytler had barged into a press conference of the then commissioner of police, Subhash Tandon, on November 6 and had told Tandon: "By holding my men you are hampering relief work." Latching on to this sentence it went on to insinuate that Tytler was actually interfering in police work or even trying to get his men, arrested for having participated in the riots, released.

But Tytler, who admits having spoken those words, explains that the "men" are neither his private goons nor those detained for rioting, but the 350 Sikh refugees waiting at Sadar police station to be shifted back to their homes at Malkagunj and Roshanara Road areas under police guard. According to him, the Hindu leaders, who had come at his behest to take the marooned Sikhs back home, were waiting at the police station, but the authorities were repeatedly failing in their promise to provide CRPF pickets for the Sikhs. "It was at this point that I barged into the commissioner's room and told him the exact words—by holding my men you're hampering relief work," Tytler says.

It is indeed hard to assume Tytler to be a Sikh-baiter. He is himself a Sikh by birth whose father was killed during the Partition riots at Kunjrawalla across the border. Tytler was only three when his mother, a devout Sikh, crossed over and came to Delhi. His marriage to Jennifer, who is now the principal of the Tytlers' family school, was solemnised according to Sikh rites, by the Granth Sahib.

The charges against him may be debatable, but the threat to his life is real. As MP from the Sadar constituency, he has to meet at least 300 people daily which he mostly does at home; visiting his office at Gurudwara Rakabgunj Road only on

> "No Congressman is ever afraid of terrorism."
>
> H.K.L. BHAGAT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

unscheduled timings and in cars that he keeps changing, borrowing them from friends. For him, the front balcony to the house is out of bounds. "It is over a year now that I have been to a movie," he says. Friends and relatives have now stopped calling the Tytlers over for a dinner because "I hate to be conspicuous with even my hosts being frisked for security reasons". Worst of all, Tytler, who is 41, confides that he has written out his will and has transferred his joint accounts in the name of his wife. Does he feel safe with all the securitymen guarding him with such demonstrated vigour? "Oh yes, I'm safe," says he with a wooden smile, "as safe as Lalit or Arjun felt, perhaps."

"I'm now only an ordinary citizen. But it is always good to a take few precautions."

DHARAM DASS SHASTRI

"I have stopped going out anywhere now. I don't even go to my bank."

TEJWANT SINGH

DHARAM DASS SHASTRI: The charge of involvement in the riots cost Shastri his nomination from the reserved constituency of Karol Bagh. "Now it may cost me my life," says the bearded, bespectacled Harijan leader of the Congress(I). Immediately after Arjun Dass's killing, the security ring tightened around Shastri, with BSF commandos trailing him everywhere in a hired car with a DLY licence plate and DAP personnel wielding metal detectors checking every visitor.

Again, the anonymous telephone calls to Shastri reiterate his role in the November riots and cite the PUCL-PUDR report as the source of information. The report says, in a chapter entitled "Role of Congress(I)": "Similarly in Anand Parbat, Congress(I) councillors like Bhairava, Mahendra and Mangat Ram, considered to be loyal followers of the Congress(I) MP Dharam Dass Shastri, were named as the main culprits. In Prakash Nagar, Congress(I) people were carrying voters' lists to identify Sikh households."

Shastri's contention is that the people named in the report as councillors from Anand Parbat are actually not so and there is no area called Prakash Nagar in Karol Bagh. "The entire PUCL-PUDR report," according to him, "is a figment of imagination of a handful of people who were trying to fish in troubled waters."

But the justification offered by him is unlikely to cut ice with the authors of the so-called hit-list—the dark merchants of death constantly lurking in the background. "I'm an ordinary citizen now, not an MP. But I am not demoralised," says the dapper politician, clad in his trademark safari suit. But the peppy words only highlight the fear inside. Shastri has stopped attending the family's cooking gas agency and makes public appearances only rarely, knowing that it might result in his presence gradually fading away from public memory. "It is always good to take a few precautions," he mumbles while boarding the car, with the security vehicle in tow, that would carry him from the "political office," far from his former constituency, to his fortress-like home.

H.K.L. BHAGAT: The spacious bungalow of the Union minister for parliamentary affairs, on Prithviraj Road now resembles a busy forward army outpost. Its lawns are dug up for the laying of high-voltage power cables that would light up the front. Inside, one hears the constant tap of the mason's hammer: a baffle-wall is coming up here; a badly-exposed window is being sealed up there; at another corner, a reinforced concrete sentry-box is being installed. The NSG commandos in their black dungarees, wielding machine pistols, are visible not only on the lawns but right inside the house. Bhagat functions mostly from home these days, and feels caged. Last fortnight he gave way to his yearnings and, as it is his old habit, took an hour off to join friends at a coffee house—his regular haunt on Sunday mornings for the past 20 years. But the securitymen encircled the place, checked every corner of the restaurant with bomb detectors, and waited outside with guns at the ready until the object of their vigilance left the place. It made no one happy: neither Bhagat nor his friends.

The PUCL-PUDR report mentioned Bhagat as having had an indirect hand in the carnage in the trans-Yamuna area, particularly the worst-affected Block 32 at Trilokpuri. But Bhagat's associates say that the Labana Sikhs residing in that area were all resettled by Bhagat himself from their earlier dungeon-like homes at Kasturbanagar. More significantly, in December 1984, barely eight weeks after the carnage, the voters of the same Block 32, who were carried from their camps under police escort to the polling booths to exercise their franchise, cast 95 per cent of their votes in favour of Bhagat. The question asked by Bhagat's supporters is: if he had really been responsible, directly or otherwise, for the mayhem why did he still remain so popular?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Yet Bhagat's name tops the PUCL-PUDR list of "politicians who had instigated violence" which, he insists, is "the source-material for the terrorists' hit-list, if any." Like all politicians haunted by the fear of a sudden strike, Bhagat too is struggling to pass it off as business as usual, being occasionally seen at public places, just as he spiritedly turned up at the funeral of Arjun Dass at great personal risk. But household members testify that his hours of meditation at the family temple inside his personal residence at Model Town has gone up. On the wall of his bedroom is hung a portrait of Guru Nanak—his lucky mascot—within a day of installation of which he was appointed a minister. He prays by its side every morning now. He is no longer his old, ebullient self, full of good humour and loquacious defence of his party. He has of late become forgetful, petulant, morose—like a man who has not slept well for quite some time. He gives a start even when a family member suddenly enters his room, for the perfectly innocuous purpose of serving tea to him and his guests.

TEJWANT SINGH: With his flowing salt-and-pepper beard, 45-year-old Tejwant Singh, managing director of the Skipper group of real estate and construction companies, looks every inch the merry businessman hardly perturbed by the political turmoil all around. But informed people know of Tejwant Singh's contacts in the Congress(I) and his long-standing friendship with Buta Singh, the Union agriculture minister, as well as with President Giani Zail Singh. But his friendships alone would not have brought him into the vortex of terror had he not taken up the job of re-erecting the Akal Takht Sahib in Amritsar after Operation Bluestar. Charging not even a paisa, Tejwant Singh personally supervised the reconstruction of the 17th century temple, made of white marble and plaster. "I did it in the spirit of kar seva. If my own house needs repairs, shouldn't I carry them out ? If my Guru's house is in disrepair, isn't it my duty to see that things are put right again?"

But his name was mentioned in the press, and he got immediately bombarded with threats. And, after the assassination of Arjun Dass, the contingent of BSF and DAP guards promptly took up posts, guarding his office on Barakhamba Road and his palatial house on Prithviraj Road. "I've stopped going out anywhere now. I don't even go to my bank," he says with the embarrassed smile of a man unused to functioning through troubled times.

BUTA SINGH: "Traitor". "Dog of India". "Death to you". These are but some of the mildest endearments that mark the threatening letters pouring in hundreds into the house of Buta Singh, Union agriculture minister and the lone Sikh in Rajiv Gandhi's Council of Ministers. A devoted Sikh, and a sturdy Congressman who had not yielded an inch even after being excommunicated from the panth by a hukumnama, Buta Singh had been rated by intelligence services as one of the most likely targets of terrorist attack. And he has lived so long in the shadow of death that it has altered his attitude to life.

Every evening, he listens to the kirtan sohla which is indeed his own benediction. "I belive in the words of the Gurbani that say the time of your death is destined and is more definite than the time of your birth," he says. But there is much more than sheer fatalism that marks the current life of Buta Singh. He still visits Punjab, having gone to his home state four times since the July accord between the Centre and the Akali Dal. But he meets people only in closed offices, or within the secure innards of an agricultural university. He mostly flies, and his tour schedules are seldom announced. Buta Singh can no longer pray at the gurudwara with his family members. "I go alone, say my prayers, and come back. I cannot go at fixed times."

His residence on Ashoka Road is guarded by nearly 100 securitymen who frisk over 200 visitors, mostly Sikhs, who see him every morning. He has recently been advised to see fewer people but that is a tough demand considering the fact that there is no other Sikh leader of comparable stature in the Government. Even last year, he was in sole charge of the largest post-riot relief camp at Gurudwara Nanaksar in Wazirabad where 10,000 refugees were concentrated. As works and housing minister at that time, he handed over flats at Trilok Vihar to the 300 widows who had lost their husbands and other relatives during the riots.

In the game of survival against terrorist attacks, risks are always high. "But the spirit," Buta Singh said, "always dies earlier than the body." The politicians in the terrorist death row are trying to fight off this agonising death of the spirit, but with varying degrees of success.

—PRABHU CHAWLA and SUMIT MITRA

"The spirit always dies earlier than the body."

BUTA SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TERRORISM

Shock Tactics

IF THE assassination of Sant Longowal gave grave cause for concern in government circles, worse was still to come last fortnight when terrorists struck again in the heart of the capital in broad daylight, gunning down Congress(I) councillor Arjun Dass. Timed as it was when elections had been announced in Punjab and less than five weeks after the brutal shooting down of Congress(I) MP Lalit Maken and his wife, the dramatic killing set off panic buttons in the North Block nerve-centre that houses the Home Ministry: officials responsible for security were severely reprimanded by Home Minister S.B.Chavan and overnight the capital was converted into a fortress with gun-toting policemen taking up vantage points, for the second time in five weeks.

Under pressure to produce results the Delhi police swung into action making wholesale arrests including that of Jagdish Singh, described as a prominent wanted extremist after he consumed poison in the form of potassium cyanide powder kept in his shirt pocket and killed himself within minutes of his detention. But in a move that evoked sharp criticism from a section of the Sikh community, Harmeet Singh, a Delhi University lecturer along with five others was picked up and booked under the Terrorists Act. Harmeet Singh was an active Akali Dal(Longowal group) leader in Delhi and although he had known Bhindranwale initially, was said to have severed all connections with extremists of late. His colleagues in the college have condemned his arrest but the police justified the move on the plea that those arrested were closely associated with Jagdish Singh.

Despite the crack-down the police were able to come up with nothing new and had practically no leads to follow in the Arjun Dass killing except to form the most obvious conclusion that it was the handiwork of terrorists who saw both Maken and Dass as having allegedly played a leading role in the anti-Sikh riots immediately after Mrs Gandhi's assassination. Initial police investigations have again raised the suspicion that Lal Singh, the US mercenary camp-trained terrorist, also accused of the Maken killings, may have been one of those involved. His photograph was identified by Shyam Sunder, an ex-policeman who witnessed the Dass slaying and actually chased the assailants for a while before being driven back by gunfire. Besides the manner in which the hit was effected was almost a repeat of the Maken incident, where a stolen two-wheeler scooter was used, with two men doing the firing while the third remained on the scooter all set for a quick getaway.

In some respects the Dass killing was more daring. The office where he was gunned down is in the centre of a market-place less than 100 yards away from the busy Safdarjung flyover which, at that hour of the morning, was thronged with office-going traffic. That the killing was professional was proved beyond doubt because the terrorists relied on speed and were obviously trained marksmen. One of them first shot the security guard dead at a pace of about 15 feet before spraying the other occupants of the office with a Sten gun.

But what the slaying also revealed was the undoubtable fact that the Delhi police are just not equipped to cope with terrorist attacks of this nature. Dass was provided with a bodyguard armed only with a pistol. Further, the Delhi police

LONGOWAL INQUIRY

Gross Failure

IF THE Government is serious about tackling the terrorist threat, then it would appear to have some embarrassing basic lessons still to be learnt. The detailed inquiry into the assassination of Sant Harchand Singh Longowal on August 20 has revealed that there was "gross failure" on the part of the massive security detail assigned to protect the life of a man who was then recognised as the number one terrorist target after Rajiv Gandhi and President Zail Singh. This included 200-odd police and CRPF jawans led by Superintendent of Police Jeet Singh and a dozen Punjab Armed Police (PAP) commandos who comprised the inner security cordon. The Punjab governor's security adviser, Lt-General Gauri Shankar visited Sherpur, where the Akali leader was gunned down, on three separate occasions in the course of his detailed investigation, and has come up with findings that are shocking.

These include the fact that none of the commandos were anywhere near Longowal. According to one senior source, they were actually sipping tea at a roadside tea-stall when the first shots rang out. Jeet Singh, the man in charge, was some distance away, relaxing in the house of a friend in the village and only reached the spot after the assassins had fled. "We never in our wildest dreams expected such a cavalier attitude," admits a senior Punjab security officer. Jeet

Longowal's PAP security guards relaxing after the accord: 'gross negligence'

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Dass' office after the terrorist attack (right); and grieving relatives at the funeral moved with unaccountable sluggishness from the time the incident was first reported to the control room. The incident occurred at 9.20 a.m. when three men in a green-coloured scooter drove into Laxmibai Market where Dass' office was located. The killers had chosen the time well, just before the shops were due to open. Dass himself was sitting in his chair with a diary opened in front of him. Others in his office were Baldev Raj, his younger brother, Mukesh Bhatt, his personal assistant, Rajendra Upadhyaya, a job seeker and Mahadevi and Parvati, two women who had come to see the councillor.

Upadhyaya and the two ladies were sitting on a bench outside with the security guard standing a few feet away. In the words of Upadhyaya there was initially nothing suspicious about the two clean shaven men, one carrying a bag, who drove up to the office. They asked him whether Dass was in the office. When Upadhyaya replied in the affirmative one of the assassins whipped out a revolver from the bag and shot the security guard, constable Vijendra Singh, who did not even have time to reach for his pistol. The killers then entered the small cramped office where Arjun Dass and the others had little hope of defending themselves or escaping the sudden hail of bullets. When the police reached the spot, the bloodstains and some 29 spent bullets were the only evidence left of the brutal and merciless attack.

The irony was that the shooting attracted no attention with the main road barely 50 metres away and the scooter-borne assailants merely joined the busy traffic going towards the Safdarjung flyover and vanished literally into thin air. The police reaction no doubt helped in the escape. The control room was informed at 9.25, five minutes after the incident and a police jeep was dispatched. Simultaneously, the district police was informed. But it took them several minutes to verify and report back to control. The other districts were informed at 10.15 a.m. and road blockades were set up by 10.30, exactly one hour after the incident by which time the terrorists had ample opportunity to abandon the vehicle and make their getaway.

ngh, along with DSP Balwant Singh, head constables Kewal Singh and Kartar Singh and a constable have been dismissed. Five others have been suspended.

But what has really baffled everyone, including Governor Arjun Singh, is the fact of Jeet Singh being put in such a sensitive position. Jeet Singh had earlier worked under Simranjit Singh Mann, the Punjab police officer who resigned after Operation Bluestar and is now detained under NSA. Further, Jeet Singh's screening for the post of security head for Longowal revealed many shortfalls, none of which seemed to have been taken into account. More intriguing is the fact that key terrorist Sewa Singh, an ex-constable, who allegedly masterminded a number of murders in Punjab and has now fled the country, was Jeet Singh's personal bodyguard when he was DSP in Faridkot. In a previous screening exercise, the committee had recommended Jeet Singh's compulsory retirement but strings were pulled and instead he was posted to the PAP.

The sorry tale does not end there. Twice, during meetings of security officials to discuss Longowal's protection, state intelligence chief, M.C. Trikh asked his colleague in the PAP, IG (operations) K.P.S. Gill, not to assign Jeet Singh the task since his record was questionable. Gill had agreed and another officer, Gurbachan Singh Mann, had been selected in his place. For some still inexplicable reason, Jeet Singh was posted instead on August 19. The same day, the state CID sent an urgent signal demanding his replacement. Gill reacted to the message and replied that he would be replaced after three days. The delay was to prove tragically fatal.

— GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The only positive element in the killings was the tightening up of police procedures. Police Commissioner Ved Marwah has initiated measures to reduce the response time in the control room as much as possible, now geared to within three minutes of a telephone call. A system of mobile patrol cars constantly on wireless standby has also been introduced so that police vehicles can reach the spot within minutes of an incident. But clearly the Government is at fault for failing to respond to frantic pleas for an overhaul of the existing police system.

In a letter to the Ministry of Home Affairs and the Delhi Administration some weeks before the Dass killing, Marwah had suggested a thorough overhaul of the Delhi police. He had pleaded that instead of posting guards armed only with pistols there should be at least two guards, one armed with a Sten gun. He also re-emphasised the need for more and faster vehicles and more up-to-date communication equipment. Delhi Administration officials however denied that there was any move initiated by Marwah, as reported in the media, to bring in officers with the right training from outside.

After the incident officials in the Home Ministry are now examining schemes to set up specific anti-terrorist squads in strategic cities. The other aspect is better communication and proper briefing. Most of those manning the roadblocks set up an hour after the Dass killing did not have a clue as to who were to be stopped. A few had been told to stop all two-wheelers but generally only those driven by Sikhs were stopped when it was well known by then that the terrorists were clean shaven. Says an intelligence official: "A useful roadblock within minutes of the incident over a 5 km area would have been sufficient."

Police officials investigating the murder, however, seemed confident that the interrogation of those arrested so far would provide vital clues. Meanwhile security measures have been beefed up for others on the extremist hit list. The residences of MP Jagdish Tytler, former MP Dharam Das Shastri and Minister for Parliamentary Affairs, H.K.L. Bhagat—named in the PUCL report as having masterminded the Delhi riots—have been provided with security guards from the specially-trained Special Frontier Force, the crack commando unit. But eventually, that, as the Dass murder demonstrated, is a case of too much too late. —RAJU SANTHANAM

GUJARAT

The New Force

IRONIES never cease in politics and the latest in Gujarat, which is ruled by its first-ever tribal chief minister, is that the installation of Amarsinh Chaudhary has led to the re-emergence of the powerful high-caste Patel community as a dominant social force. And the man who symbolises this Patel power, and who has emerged as the power behind Chaudhary's throne, is the Health Minister, Vallabhai Patel, 62, a frailly-built farm leader from Saurashtra.

Vallabhai: power behind the throne

Chaudhary's predecessor, Madhavsinh Solanki, had deliberately alienated the prosperous Patels—and paid the price for it—but it is clear Chaudhary will not make the same mistake.

In a way it was inevitable that the "Chhote Sardar," as Patel is affectionately called by his clansmen, would shoot into prominence after Chaudhary took over in early July. The two major problems that he inherited from Solanki—the anti-reservation agitation and the strike by high-caste government employees—were largely a legacy of Solanki's confrontation with the Patels. And Vallabhai Patel proved crucial in getting both sets of agitationists around. First he won over Shankerbhai Patel, the leader of the Parents' Association spearheading the anti-reservation agitation, to score the Chaudhary Ministry's first major breakthrough within days of taking charge. Then, in under a month, Patel, in collaboration with Finance Minister Arvind Sanghvi, persuaded the government employees to call off their 73-day strike.

But Patel's crucial role in the twin breakthroughs, which brought peace to the state barely received the attention it deserved. His new-found importance was more than evident when the land-grab scandal involving an influential industrialist Popatbhai Patel, hit the headlines (INDIA TODAY, August 31). Popatbhai was arrested by Rajkot Collector Devendra Kumar Sikri but Patel barely concealed his intervention in favour of his friend which led to the industrialist's prompt release. His move somewhat sullied his reputation and today Patel looks back upon it with regret. As he said: "I will now try not to say anything like this again. I am new to the ministry and do not know what I should not say."

Starting out as an instructor in his native village of Koliyakhad in Rajkot district with the Gujarat State Cooperative Union, Patel grew into a major figure in the cooperative movement in the state when he started the Rajkot Lodhika Sangh, which is now the largest cooperative of groundnut farmers in India. With the groundnut farmers firmly behind him, he entered politics in the '70s when he realised that entering the portals of power was the surest way of guarding his constituency's interests. He often said publicly that ideologically he belonged to no party; he was in politics only because it was pragmatic to be so. Thus from an independent MLA he switched to the Janata Party when the Babubhai Patel ministry was in power in the mid-'70s, redesignated himself as an independent when the Janata moon waned and finally joined the Congress(I).

As a farm leader he was known for his hard work and his mastery over details but as a minister he has failed to impress bureaucrats. Senior health ministry officials say that their minister spends most of his time pleasing party MLA's by transferring officials on their recommendations. Vallabhai's "mercurial" temperament has also attracted flak since it has resulted in impractical and often illogical decisions being taken. However, with the Patel lobby backing him to the hilt, he is batting on a very good wicket. And as the land-grab scandal indicated, what matters these days is not what or whom a person is but the backing behind him.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"...Saturday night SOS from Delhi.
Banks, travel agents—all closed.
GOT ON THAT PLANE THANKS TO MY DINERS CARD!"

An emergency situation that demands your presence out of town could develop anytime—even on a weekend. And unless you keep large sums of money lying around at home, you could well miss that vitally important flight.

Of course, you could have a Diners Club Card which would buy your air ticket—and give you an automatic free flight insurance of Rs.1 lakh as well!

Pays for itself many times over—more value-for-money than money:

- Special discounts at hotels abroad
- Is secure against loss or theft
- Eliminates commission on Citicorp Travellers Cheques bought from Citibank branches
- Gives you a Consolidated Statement of Account every month. And of course you get your charge slip and bill at the member establishment

DINERS CLUB INTERNATIONAL

Diners Club India Private Limited
Raheja Chambers, 213, Nariman Point
Bombay 400 021. Tel: 244949

B 3/61 Safdarjang Enclave
New Delhi 110 029 Tel: 602565

I would like to be a member of Diners Club and enclose my cheque for Rs.900 towards Entrance Fees and Annual Subscription

NAME

ADDRESS

PIN CODE

TELEPHONE

DATE

SIGNATURE

I understand that if Membership is not granted I will be refunded my payment of Rs.900 immediately

COUNDT 8

THE DINERS CLUB CARD-YEARS AHEAD OF CASH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Geometric designs have always been there. Right now they are on top."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The geometry factor in art, introduced by early Egyptian architects and artisans, has had a lasting impact on aesthetic concepts of today.

In fashion, the elements of geometry come as a liberating relief from the dominance of floral patterns. The geometric line becomes the fashionable stripe, the point and circle, a dot, the square, a check. Add to these the cube, zig-zag, diamond and arc and we have a panoply of shapes, simple yet permanent. Since these shapes are fundamental, they allow ground colours to have full play. "Geometric" is the new story line for Garden-Vareli fabrics — trendy, futuristic...in keeping with the image of the modern woman as a liberated one."

Praful A. Shah, Managing Director, Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd.; Chairman, Vareli Group.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There's something new coming out of the blue, mates. A fresh new experience. A great new feeling.
It's for all those hearties who like to play it cool. Cordially.

PREMIUM
BLUE RIBAND

Lime Juice Cordial

MARKETED BY
Phipson & CO. LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THAKKAR COMMISSION

Grasping at Straws

THERE could, paradoxically enough, be no better way of keeping alive the memory of the late prime minister Indira Gandhi than by the various commissions and hearings established to probe the manner of her death. In one corner of the capital, the judicial trial of Satwant Singh, one of her suspected assassins, has laboured into its sixth month of prolonged hearings. In the centre of the city, in one corner of Vigyan Bhavan, the Anand Ram team set up late last year to probe the possible contours of the conspiracy, is still to submit its findings. And in another corner of the Vigyan Bhavan complex, the Justice Thakkar Commission set up to examine the security lapses that led to the assassination which was to submit its findings by May 19, has sought a six-month extension.

In the light of the growing menace of terrorist attacks on well-known public figures, the Thakkar Commission's report has perhaps acquired the most urgency. But so far, the in-camera hearings have revealed sadly little. The commission headed by Justice M.P. Thakkar, a sitting Supreme Court judge, was set up in the middle of November last year to examine the following points: the delay on the part of doctors to attend to Mrs Gandhi at the All India Institute of Medical Sciences the lapses on the part of security personnel; the sequence of events leading to Mrs Gandhi's assassination and the conspiracy behind the murder.

With the commission yet to get a detailed report from the Anand Ram team regarding the conspiracy surrounding Mrs Gandhi's assassination, it is likely that it may not be in a position to establish the involvement of other assassins in the plot, if any. The commission has recorded the statements of the doctors who attended on Mrs Gandhi and Delhi police personnel and obtained testimony from several policemen who are likely to be cited as key witnesses. Recorded statements include those of S.R. Gupta, deputy commissioner of police, who was in charge of security at the prime minister's residence. H.D.Pillai, the additional commissioner of security (both of whom were suspended), Subhash Tandon, the then commissioner of police and R.K. Dhawan.

The questions are obviously based on investigation done by the Anand Ram team and the testimony of witnesses. So far, the trend of testimonies obtained by the commission appears to suggest that: Sikh security personnel were visibly upset over Operation Bluestar, a fact not reported at a sufficiently high level; Sikh guards had been removed from the prime minister's house immediately after Bluestar and retained following a protest by the prime minister herself; practically no intelligence existed about a possible attack on the prime minister by her own guards.

Going by the kind of evidence tendered before the commission nothing seemed to go right with those entrusted with the prime minister's security. Barely a few days after Operation Bluestar in June the Sikh security guards in the prime minister's house were removed. But on June 19, R.K. Dhawan called a deputy commissioner in charge of security and asked him why the Sikhs were removed. The police officer reportedly confessed that this was done as a precaution. Dhawan is said to have conveyed Mrs Gandhi's displeasure. The official was asked to show a list of the number of Sikh security guards on duty. There were nine (out of about 400). Dhawan then told the official that by lunchtime the guards would have to be posted back in prominent places so that they were in full view of Mrs Gandhi. The order was implemented.

Justice Thakkar: pursuing red herrings

HARI OM GULATI

Subsidiary concerns and the delay on the part of the Thakkar Commission have raised doubts about whether the probe will eventually be able to come up with anything concrete.

Two senior officials, Pillai and Subhash Tandon, protested against the decision at a meeting on June 22 where M.M.K. Wali, the then home secretary and R.N. Kao, security adviser, were present. The officials have told the commission that they had opposed the decision and their suggestion that the move should be reconsidered was turned down. The officials were prepared for a compromise—the guards should be increased so that the Sikhs could be kept under watch. Another reference to the Sikh personnel in the prime minister's security cordon was made in the middle of July, this time by the Intelligence Bureau (IB). In a message to the security head of the Delhi police, the IB pointed out that there should be a check on the Sikh security guards in the prime minister's house. The IB report apparently did not specifically refer to any threat but based its report on a general assessment of the situation—actually within days of the hijacking of an Indian Airlines aircraft by, among others, a security guard attached to former law minister Jagannath Kaushal. The IB request, according to a letter written by the Delhi police, was agreed to. But whether this was actually done remains a matter of conjecture.

The security district to provide protection to the prime minister at her residence, office and her room in Parliament House, was provided with four men specifically to undertake checks on her security personnel. Besides, there were about a dozen officials of the Special Branch inside the prime minister's house who were assigned solely for picking up local intelligence. Clearly, they failed to do so.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The commission also appears to be examining in detail the manner in which both Satwant and Beant exchanged duty so easily and found locations at the gate where Mrs Gandhi was shot. There was a provision for an armed sentry and a plainclothesman at the gate. Satwant, who was in the outer perimeter, told a head constable looking after the duty chart that he wanted to be close to the toilet since he was suffering from diarrhoea. Beant told another duty officer that he wanted to report on October 31 instead of the previous day and work on the 7.30 to 1.30 shift.

The basic point, says a senior security official was whether there was any intelligence at all on the possible involvement of Sikh guards in the prime minister's house. In the evidence tendered before the Commission both Tandon and Pillai, the head of security, have pointed out that the IB had no knowledge of any threat from her own guards. The only threats mentioned by the IB were from terrorists who had escaped during Operation Bluestar, others who were abroad and deserters.

"The entire security was geared to face a threat from outside", points out one official, "which was why the forces were beefed up, the road leading to 1, Safdarjung Road was blocked and any number of escorts and special task forces were provided to Mrs Gandhi on her visits outside the house or office. According to some of the officials, she was not happy about the extra force used. When she realised that the road to 1, Safdarjung road was blocked she refused to hear of it. Security officials then approached Rajiv Gandhi and got him to convince her that it was necessary. The main difficulty for the Commission would be in detailing the administrative and security lapses in the context of her preferences as opposed to the action of individual officers.

That there was enough scope for confusion resulting in the conflict between the IB and the Delhi police is easier to establish. All orders were passed in the name of the Delhi Administration held accountable for the prime minister's security, but neither then Lt-Governor Gavai nor the Union home secretary ever attended any meetings connected with her security. There were only two officials who attended all meetings, Tandon and Pillai. The meetings were also attended by B.M. Kapoor, then director of the IB and S. Ramurthy, joint director IB, specifically involved with the prime minister's security. The IB has an important advisory role vis a vis the police. In legal terms it had no accountability but in reality it became a powerful body whose advice was at times virtually an order. Disclosed one official: "Security officials were pulled up by the IB when the prime minister's car missed stopping at a particular point by a few feet, how can they now get away and say we were mere spectators?"

BHAWAN SINGH

The commission has appeared more obsessed with the role of Dhawan than with security failures.

What made the confusion worse confounded was that there were too many cooks stirring the broth; the special security district of the Delhi police, later the Special Task Force of the IB and finally the National Security Guard under an official from the Research and Analysis Wing (RAW). What added to the confusion was that in the general post-Bluestar panic, advice on security matters was coming from all directions. For instance, during the security arrangements connected with the Independence Day function, security heads in the Delhi police and the IB were surprised when told that certain additional security arrangements were being contemplated by Dr P.C.Alexander, the then principal secretary, and then home secretary Wali. One of the proposals was to have a bullet proof glass cage behind which the prime minister would be seated. The proposal was rejected by security officials. Officials point out that by then there were too many "experts" who thought they knew everything about security, often offering contradictory advice.

With the commission already under the pressure of time, it may not look into these aspects in any great detail. But some officials who are in the dock for their alleged security failure are demanding a thorough examination of the facts. Besides Pillai and Gupta, others who were suspended or transferred were Tandon, Ramurthy and Kapoor.

Moreover, the commission so far has appeared more obsessed with the role of Dhawan than it is with security failures. He was basically questioned on whether Mrs Gandhi was scheduled to step out of her house at 8.30 in the morning to meet Peter Ustinov at Akbar Road. Her diary, maintained by Dhawan, showed that the timings were changed. Was the decision to redeploy Sikh security guards taken by Mrs Gandhi and conveyed by Dhawan or did he do it on his own? And did Harinder Singh, then first secretary in the Indian embassy in Oslo, actually recommend to Dhawan that Beant should be taken to Oslo. Dhawan has replied that the timings were changed because of an unexpected delay; that Mrs Gandhi conveyed important matters like security details through him and that he did not know Harinder Singh at all.

Such subsidiary concerns and the delay on the part of the Thakkar commission have raised doubts about whether the probe will come up with anything concrete or even suggest long term measures to improve security. The commission's adviser, T.N. Subramaniam, is a retired intelligence official unfamiliar with specific security matters. Officials called before the Thakkar Commission have complained about the manner in which they are being questioned, which is more in the nature of a witch hunt than identifying and plugging security loopholes. The conclusion at this point is that the only probable outcome of the probe will be that some more heads will roll with nobody any the wiser.

—RAJU SANTHANAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Is it wood?
Is it cloth?
Is it leather?
Or, is it...

You can't tell the difference! Raw-silk partitions, wood panelling, leather desk-tops, mirrored finishes, cane-work.

With Dynadecor, for the first time, you can laminate your interiors without feeling second rate. And reap the benefits of scratch proof, heat-proof, easy-to-maintain, corrosion-resistant and cost-efficient surfaces.

No empty promises there. Because Dynadecor laminates are born of the technology of a 100-year old world leader– Dynamit Nobel of West Germany.

Result : a unique mould plate design process and an innovative resin system give Dynadecor laminates durable finishes not yet achieved in India and superb anti-abrasive qualities.

Feel a Dynadecor laminate and you can tell the difference.

Hi-tech quality that shows even on the surface.

dynadecor

dy® dytron (india) limited

Registered Office :
14-15, Old Court House Street
Calcutta - 700 001

H.O. & Works :
Industrial Growth Centre
Plot No. 'L' P.O. Kalyani
Dist. Nadia, West Bengal.

ACIL/DY-1/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Plane reason why there's no competition.

That's right! Every single Dynadecor laminate sheet is a perfect plane. Which means no ripples, knots, laps or splits on table-tops, partitions, etc. Ever.

No other laminate maker can boast of achieving such dimensional stability. Because no other laminate maker has access to the technology of a world leader like Dynamit Nobel of West Germany.

Dynadecor laminates begin with layers of the highest quality core material, of just the right grammage. They are impregnated with Dynamit Nobel's patented resin formulation, checked by a Beta-gauge. After building up and pressing, they undergo curing cycles researched and found to result in the best laminates. And all through, Dynadecor laminates are checked for quality by the latest on-line machinery.

Now it should be plain why they have no competition.

Hi-tech quality that shows even on the surface.

dynadecor®

dytron (india) limited

Registered Office :
14-15, Old Court House Street
Calcutta - 700 001

H.O. & Works :
Industrial Growth Centre
Plot No. 'L' P.O. Kalyani
Dist. Nadia, West Bengal.

ACIL/DY-2/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJASTHAN

Transfer Spree

HERE today, where tomorrow? That is not an idle question among Rajasthan's three lakh plus government employees as large-scale transfers carry on well into September. Mass transfers are the rule in most states, and Rajasthan is no exception, but two factors make the ongoing changes in administration stand out. For one, the sheer number has been higher than in recent years and, for another, the period over which they have been carried out has been unusually extended.

No estimates or even guesstimates of the number of employees transferred are available. Indeed, there cannot be for, as an official says: "The ministers themselves do not know how many people they have shifted." However, figures involving senior officials give some indication of the scale. Twenty- three out of 27 district magistrates, 22 out of 27 superintendents of police, 19 out of 27 secretaries to the Government and 12 out of 16 special secretaries have been shifted out this year.

To start with the transfers did not evoke much comment. After Chief Minister Harideo Joshi was sworn in on March 10 this year, a reshuffle at the highest level of bureaucracy was expected. And so it happened that the chief secretary and the director-general of police were changed. Moreover, the summer is the traditional period for effecting transfers. What did invite comment was the manner in which they were conducted. Ruling party legislators made a beeline for Joshi because he had under his charge more than three dozen departments including major ones such as home, public health, engineering and general administration (INDIA TODAY, July 15). This situation still persists as the much expected cabinet expansion is yet to take place.

There are obvious advantages in this for Joshi: by obliging the MLA's with officials of their choice the chief minister earns their obligation. The problem has arisen because neither Joshi nor his ministers seem to have had either the heart or the courage to put their foot down. June end brought a government ban on transfers on the eve of the delayed assembly budget session but that was not the end of the matter. In early August, obviously under political pressure, Joshi lifted the ban and opened the floodgates all over again.

Now the rot has gone deep and wide. Let alone legislators, even sarpanches of villages have arranged transfers of accommodative patwaris. In one case, orders from the Chief Minister's Secretariat related to a lowly nakedar from a municipality. For the entire range of government employees—clerks, teachers, assistant sub-inspectors of police, sales tax inspectors, doctors, engineers et al—the two magic words are pull and push. In 'lucrative' departments such as education, police, irrigation, public health and engineering, the transfers on ministerial instruction easily outnumber routine transfers ordered by department heads which conform to established rules and procedures.

> No guesstimate of the number of employees transferred was available as the ministers themselves do not know how many people have been shifted.

The official explanation is that most officials were due for transfer anyway but there are innumerable cases where logic is significantly absent. In at least ten cases, cancellation orders came on the heels of shifting orders. Rajendra Pal Singh, managing director of the Rajasthan Small Industries Corporation, was made special secretary, relief, but was back within days at his old post. Four Rajasthan Administrative Service officials were transferred between end June and early August but the orders were cancelled later on. The transfer orders of five young IAS officers were cancelled within two weeks of being issued. One of them was shifted from Jhalawar to Kota to Jalore and to Jaipur in the one month.

The process has been so illogical that Governor O.P. Mehra, who has to approve transfers of all senior personnel, has made bitingly sarcastic comments on several lists of officials put up to him. In at least one instance the governor intervened to stop the unjustified transfer of an official in the Public Works Department. Yet, considering the mess, Mehra has shown considerable restraint in avoiding a confrontation with the Government by exercising his prerogative only sparingly.

If the number of politicians including legislators hanging around ministerial chambers is any indication, arranging transfers has its own rewards. Indeed, according to one Congress(I) leader, Joshi has received several complaints of his partymen influencing transfers for monetary gain. But the crucial question is whether Joshi will care to act against them and thereby demonstrate some political statesmanship.

Transfers have meant considerable hardship for parents whose children are at school since the academic session has already begun. Naturally, official work has taken a back seat. In the words of a senior official: "The major preoccupation of officials at this juncture is to keep their seats secure. And to be honest, I don't blame them." Cynicism in bureaucratic ranks has fathered many wry 'transfer jokes'. One of them goes like this: When should a transfer be taken seriously? If cancellation orders do not follow within 30 days.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

Chief Minister Joshi: illogical moves

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Janata Jam

WHEN Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde was asked to participate in a fancy dress competition for the annual legislators' day celebration in Bangalore last week his choice of a costume in a way reflected the political role he has typecast for himself. Dressed in brilliant red, he came as Veerabhadra, the mythological deity in Yakshagana plays who destroys all evil. And as Hegde, his face covered with layers of red and white paint, pranced around brandishing a sword, many of his erring MLA's did not fail to get the message.

For the evil that Hegde was warding off in real life did not stem as usual from the Congress(I) but from his own partymen. Only a week before a local newspaper had reported that the powerful Vokkaliga community lobby led by Public Works Minister H.D. Deve Gowda had met over dinner to voice their discontent over Hegde's leadership. To add to Hegde's discomfiture, members of the Congress(I) in the legislative council were on their feet demanding to know how stable the Government was after the so-called Vokkaliga "revolt". Belittling the whole episode, an unruffled Hegde told them: "There is no conspiracy against me. There is no need to have one because I have said earlier that I would not cling to the chief ministership but would give it up before my five-year term was over."

But backstage a different kind of drama was being enacted. A visibly upset Hegde called up the 24 Janata Party Vokkaliga legislators who attended the dinner and asked them to explain their behaviour. Reportedly, Hegde told them: "It (the meeting) has damaged the image of our party and introduced an element of uncertainty. We must stand united." And then he added: "If it's a question of leadership I will resign as chief minister here and now." That dire threat had its effect and in the next few days all the MLA's involved denied that any rebellion was brewing. Said a chastened Deve Gowda: "Do you think I am a fool to question Hegde's leadership? We all know what happened to the Janata Party (when they ruled at the Centre) in 1977."

Although Deve Gowda now describes the dinner as only a "social gathering" no one has any doubts about its true purpose. Ever since Hegde romped to power again in March last with an absolute majority of 139 in a house of 224, the state's two major communities, the Vokkaligas and Lingayats, have been grumbling about the second-class treatment they have been getting. In his torrid first term, Hegde was accused of pampering these two communities but in a bid to shake off this image, this time around he gave equal representation to all sections when he formed his 30-member ministry. Although between them the two major communities constitute two-thirds of the party strength in the Assembly, they had to be content with seven ministers each. The backward classes with only 29 MLA's were given eight ministerial berths and the Scheduled Castes with 22 MLA's were given six. Says Hegde: "I gave a definite backward class tilt because for years these sections of the society have been neglected and it was time they got a fair deal."

MUSHTAQ AHMED

Hegde with Deve Gowda in happier days: the 'enemy' within

But this approach has led to a lot of heart-burning among legislators from the major communities. This surfaces mostly as pointed criticism of some ministers. Home Minister B. Rachaiah, who belongs to a Scheduled Caste, has been the target of sustained attack from the major communities, who accuse him of propping up officers from his caste group. They are upset that he has not acceded to any of their requests for transfer of officials. Education Minister M. Raghupathy, a backward class leader, has been subject to severe criticism for trying to fix the quota of reserved seats for students on the merit list at 60 per cent in the private capitation fee-based engineering colleges. Since many of these colleges are owned by the major communities they see it as an attack on their interests.

However, the Vokkaligas' grouse is that Hegde himself has been giving them short shrift. They are upset that although he had agreed to sanction a medical college for their community it has so far not materialised. Recently they lobbied for the post of vice-chancellor of the Agricultural Sciences University in Bangalore for one of them but were irked when someone belonging to a minority community was appointed. Deve Gowda's main complaint is that although he was party president for the last assembly elections Hegde has not been giving him the importance he deserves and has not been consulting him as frequently as he would have liked. Deve Gowda's detractors say that he bears a grudge because Hegde did not make him number two in the ministry.

With Hegde planning to quit before his term ends, the question is naturally important. Disclaiming this, Hegde says: "I have told my colleagues that it is not a matter as to who is closest to the leader but who is closest to the people that would finally decide my successor."

But what has a lot of senior partymen worried is the lethargy that seems to have set in after their stunning victory in the assembly elections. Said a worried Patel: "Without the threat of a common enemy like the Congress(I), I find that the team spirit that we had has decreased. We don't seem to be growing at the party level and consolidating our gains." Hegde also showed awareness of this downtrend when he said: "Once the war was won everyone seems to be complacent. But I have told my partymen recently that we should not lose the momentum we had gained in our first term." Although Hegde, on turning 58 last fortnight told his friends, only half in jest, "I have reached the age of superannuation," he has plenty of work to do before he can retire in peace.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Now who'd want to hurl a stone at such a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, they might.

Some of your neighbours for instance. Who may have seen your new ONIDA. And envied its classy, futuristic looks, the most astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote.

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

In case you want more details rush to the nearest Dealer.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Asian Paints: trying to imitate an egg. An egg?

The egg represents nature's perfection. Something that's almost impossible to achieve. But it's a worthy goal to strive for.

Over the years we have believed that excellence must be reflected in everything we stand for: our products, our services and our organisation. And to do that we have had to constantly change, and adapt to tomorrow's needs. Your needs.

True, Asian Paints is the largest paint company in India. Yet being the largest is not enough. If it were so, our plans and ambitions would have stopped when we became the No.1 Paint Company in 1967. It was a big moment. But it was only a moment in our quest for perfection.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

asian paints

Leadership through excellence.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

OBM/5675

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

First in India !
Hi-tech Patti with Low Loss Copper Choke

GENELEC. On giving tubes a longer life.

Genelec Choke
- Consumes only 9W of power as compared to an average consumption of 14W.
- 40% energy conservation over other chokes.
- Unique, screwless wire connection, locks wires in place.
- Choke guaranteed for 5 years.

Genelec Starter
- Unique nylon housing makes it totally safe and dent-proof.
- Starts tube instantly, without flickering. Thus ensuring a longer life for the tube.
- Radio interference-free performance.

Genelec chokes and starters are available for your existing fittings.

GENELEC
A GEC Associate
Lamps & Tubes

Switch to Genelec and see the light.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ACIL/GEN-1/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Scorp News Agency

Jayalalitha with well-wishers: dramatic comeback

TAMIL NADU

Return of the Heroine

IT HAD all the glycerine-charged melodrama of a Tamil tear-jerker. When AIADMK MP Jayalalitha Jayaram finally made her comeback as the party's propaganda secretary last fortnight, it was to thundering applause and welcoming cheers. For the glamorous leader, it was sweet revenge since the loser this time was none other than former state information and religious endowments minister R. M. Veerappan, who is her implacable foe within the Opposition. And when, within five days of her reinstatement, Veerappan celebrated his shastipurthi (the all-important 60th birthday), Jayalalitha showed that she can be magnanimous in victory when she first chose to call on him before going to the party headquarters in Lloyd's Road where her entry had been banned for the year she has been in limbo.

The decision of AIADMK leader M.G. Ramachandran to rehabilitate his protege to the number two spot in the party showed that the chronically ill leader had lost none of his guile. Even as it became certain that Veerappan, who held the crucial portfolios of information and religious endowments, had hopes of becoming number two in the AIADMK, MGR pulled the carpet from under his feet and reinstated Jayalalitha in the post. A Veerappan-inspired campaign had forced her to shed a year ago. Veerappan and his men had to swallow the public rebuff. As party General Secretary S. Raghavanandam, a Veerappan loyalist who cut a sorry figure when he tried to garland Jayalalitha at her office, said with a poker face: "It is our revolutionary leader MGR's order and I am only too willing to implement it." It was also that Jayalalitha was not going to rub salt on open wounds. Unlike the fire she had been breathing in her days in the wilderness, on this occasion she would only say: "I am overjoyed. I owe everything to my leader, MGR."

But despite the element of drama, the reinstatement was not altogether unexpected. Jayalalitha had submitted her resignation last year in the face of mounting opposition to her from a section of the party led by former food minister S. D. Somasundaram. Somasundaram had quit the party but Jayalalitha's detractors got their pound of flesh when they forced her to quit as the propaganda secretary. She had then tried to put on a brave face. As she said: "MGR has himself asked me to resign from the post to placate some ruffled feathers in the party. He has assured me I would be restored to the post after some time." But it was a setback for the former actress who had hoped to follow her mentor into the highest corridors of power.

As it turned out, the reinstatement did not come as easily. For quite some time, she could not even get to see MGR. Reports of MGR not being able to function made matters worse for her. On the other hand, Veerappan and his men seemed to be gaining a hold on the party and the cabinet. There were even rumours that it was only a matter of time before she joined the Congress(I). Thoroughly demoralised, Jayalalitha shut herself up in her bungalow and became a virtual recluse.

But with her reinstatement last fortnight, the wheel had come full circle. And as if to vindicate her, Veerappan was stripped off his cabinet portfolios which the chief minister took over himself. He was given charge of the relatively insignificant departments of planning, archaeology and passports. Remarked a party leader close to Jayalalitha: "With this MGR has virtually anointed Miss Jayalalitha as his successor."

However, the Veerappan camp view the situation differently. While they grumbled about Jayalalitha's reinstatement, they saw the change in Veerappan's portfolios as a positive omen. The more so since simultaneously, MGR had entrusted the prestigious excise portfolio, which he held himself, to Veerappan's lieutenant, V. V. Swaminathan, the handlooms minister. Argued a top AIADMK leader of Veerappan's camp: "The planning portfolio has so far been held only by chief ministers in Tamil Nadu, like Anna (C. M. Annadurai), Karunanidhi and MGR himself. So Veerappan has now been given a traditional chief minister's portfolio."

Whether that was MGR's intention or not is still not clear. What is clear is that the party's internecine troubles are far from over: they have only begun now. As Agriculture Minister K. Kalimuthu puts it: "This is a testing time for the party. MGR, like Lord Shiva, has swallowed poison to save the party."

—S.H.VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAMMU & KASHMIR

Side Show

THE JUDICIARY and the legislature were set irrevocably on a collision course in Jammu and Kashmir last fortnight. Justices M.L.Bhat and S.M. Rizvi, comprising a division bench of the J & K High Court, took the first step to set up this confrontation on September 9 when they stayed the suspension orders on three MLA's ordered by the Assembly. The next day the Assembly resolved to ignore the court's order and passed a resolution describing it as a "grave interference with the sovereignty, supremacy and dignity of this House and its internal working."

It soon became clear that the executive would be siding with the legislature. When two of the three MLA's, Piyarelal Handoo and Mohammed Shafi of Dr Farooq Abdullah's National Conference (NC-F), tried to enter the Assembly in Srinagar armed with the stay order, they were arrested by the police on charges of violating traffic. The third MLA, Bhim Singh of the Panther's Party, was held in Anantnag on charges not immediately clear. And with Handoo filing a contempt charge against Speaker Mangat Ram Sharma, Deputy Chief Minister Devi Dass Thakur and four others and state Advocate-General Muzaffar Baig moving an application challenging the stay order, it was clear that the confrontation would get more severe.

A face-off between the legislature and judiciary is not a rare event in the country—several such cases have even gone up to the Supreme Court and just two months ago the two institutions were on a collision course in Tamil Nadu (INDIA TODAY, August 15)—but this is the first such case in this sensitive state. More importantly, since all the suspended MLA's belong to the Opposition the case was seen as yet another skirmish in the continuing battle of attrition between Abdullah and Chief Minister G.M.Shah. The 19-member Shah Ministry has been hanging on to power only because it enjoys the support of the 25-strong Congress(I) group in the 78-member Assembly. But with reports from Delhi that the Centre, reportedly urged by Governor Jagmohan whose dissatisfaction with Shah is no secret, had decided to dismiss the ministry and impose President's rule, the continuation of Shah in power seemed in doubt. And with the 32-member NC(F) group giving notice of a no-confidence motion against the Shah Ministry, and Abdullah moving a no-confidence motion against the speaker, the confrontation between the legislature and the judiciary only added to the politically surcharged mood in the valley.

BHATT

RIZVI

The confrontation between the judiciary and the legislature is a side show: it will be resolved the day Delhi pronounces judgement on the wrangle between the two claimants to the legacy of Sheikh Abdullah.

SHARMA

THAKUR

The situation had long been in the making. It all started on August 17, the first day of the budget session, when, following pandemonium in the House, the Assembly passed a resolution moved by Thakur asking for the suspension of the three MLA's for the rest of the session. Thakur later explained that he named Handoo and Shafi because they had "instigated" the Opposition to create bedlam in the House but the two NC(F) leaders charged that Thakur had directed his ire on them because they had asked embarrassing queries in the question hour earlier. However, there was no denying that there were several oddities in the whole sequence of events. Contrary to normal procedure, the members were not named by the speaker before they were suspended. Again, it was not the speaker who suspended them but the House. And the resolution was moved by somebody who is not even a member of the House: Thakur is an MLC. And, finally, two of the three suspended, Handoo and Shafi, were not even present in the House, having staged a walkout earlier.

Speaking to INDIA TODAY, both Sharma and Thakur were at pains to defend their roles. Claiming to be "impartial", Sharma defended the departures from the normal procedure by saying: "The rules of procedure are framed by the House and they are relaxed so often." Pointing out that all the suspended members were his personal friends, Sharma added: "It was the House's decision to suspend them, not mine. Naming of members is just a technicality; there was no constitutional violation involved in the decision." Thakur, who was holding charge while Shah was away on Haj, argued that the Constitution gave him the "right" to participate in all the proceedings of the Assembly, including the right to move motions. Similarly refuting that there had been any irregularities, Thakur pointed out that the rule (Rule 411) governing the procedure for suspensions only conceived of a particular contingency. "It does not mean that in no other case could you suspend a member. I could gag the speaker's mouth to prevent him from naming me. Or somebody could murder him before he could name the member. Would you then argue that the member cannot be suspended merely because he was not named ?"

The three suspended MLA's moved the court asking for a stay of the suspension order. Procedural wrangles —including a minor confrontation between the judiciary and the legislature over the court's request for records of proceedings of the House and the Assembly's decision not to comply— delayed the hearing of the arguments on whether the court should admit the petition. When the arguments were finally heard, on September 2 and 3, the small courtroom in the J & K High Court complex was overflowing on both days. Advocate-General Baig, who was called by the court to assist it but in effect led the team of lawyers for respondents Sharma and Thakur, argued that the "inherent powers" of the House gave it the right to deviate from procedures. Besides, he added, at best the House's decision amounted to an "irregularity" and the court was not empowered to adjudicate on that matter.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The portly Handoo, a former law minister who argued his own case, and his lawyers argued that the House's decision amounted to an "illegality" and not just an "irregularity". "If I was suspended for the rest of my legislative career, would it not come under the court's jurisdiction ?" he argued in the course of an impassioned submission. Besides, he asked, how could he be suspended when he was not even present in the House ? "Even Raj Narain has not faced this kind of suspension," Handoo pointed out to an amused court. In his final submission, Baig argued that either the court should grant the petition or reject it; there would be little point in admitting it and posting a date for the hearing as the Assembly's session is to conclude on September 24.

In the eventuality, the division bench's judgement struck a middle path: it stayed the suspension with the rider that the three MLA's would not have voting rights. Admitting the gravity of the matter, it recommended to the chief justice that he constitute a full bench to consider the petition. While the judges conceded that they were "conscious of the limitation on our powers" to adjudicate on assembly proceedings, they ruled that if any citizen, including a legislator, brought a complaint about any illegality in a proceeding which would affect his right or privilege, the complaint needed to be examined by the court. The judges pointed out that in the lack of details of the House's proceedings, the court did not know why and how the members were suspended. As they said: "Whether they were suspended for staging a walkout or for interrupting the deputy chief minister is not known."

Even as the decision of the chief justice was awaited it was evident that tempers would take time to cool down. Two days after the judgement, Abdullah and Shah exchanged angry words in the Assembly over the arrest of Bhim Singh. The confrontation between the judiciary and the legislature is only a sideshow: it will be resolved automatically the day Delhi pronounces its judgement on the long-drawn-out wrangle between the two claimants to the legacy of Sheikh Abdullah.

—AJAY KUMAR in Srinagar

C. RATHEESH KUMAR

Moopanar(second from right) with Kerala Congress men: crisis averted

KERALA

Denouement

SOME dawns also signal the beginning of the end. For the Kerala Congress, the denouement last fortnight of its conflict with the Congress (I) over the reinstatement of former electricity minister R.Balakrishna Pillai, was more than a mere setback. The party, which had threatened to wreck the ruling United Democratic Front (UDF) over its demand for Pillai's reinduction, in the end tamely agreed to leave the decision to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi without even setting a deadline for the decision; thus leaving it patently clear that the winner in the latest UDF wrangle was Chief Minister K. Karunakaran. It also denoted that the political career of Pillai was now approaching its sunset.

Never before in his 40-month tenure had Karunakaran cut to size a party in his coalition so effectively. Said Home Minister Vayalar Ravi, a known Karunakaran baiter: "Hats off to Karunakaran. But for his rigid stand on the Pillai issue we would have once again buckled under to the Kerala Congress." And admitted Baby John, leader of the Revolutionary Socialist Party: "Karunakaran has humiliated the Kerala Congress so badly but even then they are hanging on to him."

Ironically, it was Karunakaran's opponents who made matters easy for him. CPI(M) General Secretary E.M.S. Namboodiripad repeatedly declared that there was no question of the opposition Left Front accommodating the Kerala Congress if it broke away from the ruling coalition. As John told INDIA TODAY: "Let alone a green signal there was not even an orange signal from the Left Front to the Kerala Congress asking it to switch sides."

Karunakaran's strategy was masterly. Even after the court ruled that it was for him to decide if Pillai had violated the oath of office by making a reportedly anti-national speech, Karunakaran kept insisting that the issues involved were legal, not political. Of course, the decision to refer it to Rajiv gave the lie to his contention but Karunakaran was unfazed. In fact, he tightened the screws on the Kerala Congress by promising a judicial inquiry into the leaks in the Edamalayar hydro-electric project which came up under Pillai's tutelage.

It was left to firebrand Marxist MLA M.V.Raghavan to give the final twist to the story. Speaking in the Assembly, Raghavan alleged that G.K.Moopanar, the AICC(I) general secretary who finally got the breakthrough, had blackmailed Kerala Congress strongman K.M.Mani and others into submission. Said Raghavan:"With Moopanar came an officer of the Central Intelligence Bureau who threatened to expose the financial deals of Mani and others, which would have finished them politically."

There was no response from the Kerala Congress to Raghavan's allegation. But the rank and file of the party are fed up with the bad publicity and it would come as no surprise if Pillai is dropped from the party. As the dust slowly settled on this skirmish, for the first time Karunakaran seemed convincing when he predicted that his ministry would survive its full term.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

Fighting Back

THE COUNTRY's Harijans, in the recent past, have been fleeting occupiers of newspaper headlines. They flash to the very top of the front page when, as often happens, they are victims of social oppression and leaders of political parties rush to share their grief. No longer: the Harijans of Karamchedu in Andhra Pradesh, five of whom were killed by Kamma landlords two months ago, are bent on proving that hypocritical commiseration by political parties will not be their only legacy. Even the farcical fate of the state Government's attempt to set up a judicial inquiry commission—last fortnight the second of the judges named to head the commission turned down the job—has not deterred them. More than 500 Harijans of the Madiga sect had fled Karamchedu, in Prakasam district, after the atrocity. They settled down in Chirala, 8 km from Karamchedu where under the auspices of the Karamchedu Victims Relief Committee, they proceeded to buy eight acres of land from Rs 1.20 lakh received in donations and started building their new homes. And as they made it clear that they would not accept any official help they gave their new village the name, Vijayanagar.

Last fortnight, it became evident that unlike the victims of equally outrageous acts in places like Belchi, Pipra and Narainpura to name but a few, they were determined to turn their personal tragedy into a social movement for Dalits in Andhra Pradesh. Harijan representatives from all over the state gathered at Chirala on September 1 and sent out a call for a rail and rasta roko agitation on September 8 which, when it occurred, disrupted rail traffic as far away as Hyderabad. An all-India conference of Harijans is scheduled to be held at Chirala next month. The Karamchedu Harijans have three demands: that the real culprits be brought to book; the investigation of the incident be transferred from the state Crime Branch to detectives of a Central Government agency and, more importantly, that aid be given to permanently rehabilitate the Harijans at their present camping site in Vijayanagar. The Harijans are firm that there is no going back to Karamchedu.

S.V. ANJAN BABU

Harijans' commune at Vijaynagar (above); and Rao: a new awakening

The unity and the defiant spirit of the residents of Vijayanagar is truly amazing. They have little else to sustain them: Vijaynagar has four thatched huts currently under which the displaced rest, and an open community kitchen to serve them rice or gruel twice a day. The credit for this largely goes to Kathi Padma Rao, a 32-year-old Harijan teacher who heads the Relief Committee.

Says Rao, who was instrumental in the purchase of the Vijayanagar land: "The callousness of the Government has come in handy for us Dalits to build a strong social movement against injustice. Even the 49 Harijan MLA's in the Assembly have failed the Karamchedu victims. We have to take up the movement for justice and a new awakening ourselves." The remarkably articulate Padma Rao studied Sanskrit and now teaches at the S.B.S.College in Ponnur, 34 km from his native Chirala in order, he says, to "understand the Hindu texts for interpreting the role of the Harijans in ancient Indian society." Added Rao sarcastically:"We are thankful to the Kamma landlords of Karamchedu for making more Harijans aware by chasing them out of the village."

And it is clear that their wounds are still fresh. "We have been humiliated and cannot live with dignity among those brutes," says Duddu Sulochana, 24, who was molested and lost her husband Ramesh in the attack. She had been married for less than a year. "What is the use of going there, he lies buried here in Chirala," she sobs. The victims are also sore at what they perceive was the nonchalant way the chief minister handled the situation. Recalled an angry Duddu Veeramma, who was discharged from the Guntur hospital last fortnight: "He came to offer us fruits when our insides were burning at the outrage."

The Kammas of Karamchedu, however, accuse Padma Rao of trying to make political and possibly monetary gain from the tragedy. Their spokesman is Jagarlamundi Madan Mohan Rao, 70, chairman of the village peace committee. He described the attack on the Harijans as "unfortunate," but added: "Our youth should have been restrained, but what could they do when they were attacked? If we treat Harijans badly the Malas (another Harijan sect of the village) should have deserted the village but they are all here." But said a Mala who refused to be identified:" We are not in a position to leave and find work elsewhere. But if we are certain about refuge we will leave."

The irony of the situation is that inter-caste relations were quite good in Karamchedu before the attack. Untouchability was unknown, and the Kammas drew drinking water from the same pond as the Harijans. So, with the chances of a judicial inquiry seeming quite remote, the investigations by the state Crime Branch are being eagerly watched in the hope they will unearth what it was that actually brought on the mayhem. Sixty-six of the 75 suspects are already in police custody. But with controversy even over which agency should do the investigations, and the victims blazing a trail, Karamchedu seems destined to become an important landmark in Harijan history.

—AMARNATH K. MENON in Chirala

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why write when you can type?

It's easy to learn when you have Remington.

Typing is today's way of writing—letters, notes, articles, anything. It's quicker, neater, more efficient than writing by hand. And now—it's easier too, with Remington Travelriter, the tough little compact that's priced within easy reach!

FREE with every Remington Travelriter
Easy-to-follow booklet on Touch Method Typing available on request from all Remington offices.

REMINGTON
Travelriter

The typewriter for everyone

CLARION C RRP 2

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

They just found out. There's a killer in the room.

ta's - ST.358.85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

They settled down, cosily snuggled up, to watch a movie on TV. And soon everything became so real, the old lady's rocking chair seemed to be creaking in that very room! Every footstep echoed near them A little rustle made them jump. And when the killer quietly stepped out of the closet ...!

That's what happens with Sears TV. The images are so clear, they seem to fill your room. The colours so alive, you want to reach out and touch them. And the sounds so real, they keep you on the edge of your chair!

Sears Colour TV. Bringing you advanced internationc technology. Quality that is closely monitored at every stage of manufacture. And a performance so exquisitely perfected that it becomes hard to tell th programme from real life!

Wouldn't you love some real life entertainment? Today!

When it happens on a Sears TV, it happens to you.

SEARS ELCOT*

A joint sector enterprise with the Govt. of Tamil Nadu.

123 A/3 Lattice Bridge Road
Thiruvanmiyur, Madras 600 041

BRANCHES

Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi, Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Mangalore, Hyderabad, Vishakapatnam, Madurai, Cochin, Calicut, Ranchi, Dehra Dun, Goa, Jaipur.

*SEARS is the trademark of Ceral Electronics (Pvt) Ltd., owned and managed wholly by Indian entrepreneurs.

omain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nerolac paints protect. Beautifully.

At Goodlass Nerolac we believe that a paint must do more than just coat a surface beautifully. So we've taken our paints one step ahead. To give your painted surfaces the best protection against the corroding effects of weather and time.

Protection offered by India's largest-selling industrial paint company. Protection that's enjoyed by 2 out of every 5 scooters and mopeds and sought for many more industrial applications everyday.

Protection already trusted by many reputed clients, including Godrej, Maruti Udyog, Bajaj Auto, Telco, Kelvinator, Mahindra & Mahindra and OGI.

Protection constantly being perfected in our R & D labs... to give you the technological edge. In industry. And in more and more beautiful homes too.

Decorative Paints:
Emulsions. Enamels.
Distempers.
Specialised Industrial Paints & Pigments

NEROLAC PAINTS Technologically too, always a shade better.

everest/85/GNP/383

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Times of India

CONGRESS(I)

Big Brother

GIVEN the common snide asides about the prime minister's "computer boys", it was a move fated to be viewed with suspicion. When, on August 30, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi told the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party (CPP-I) that the party's 558 MP's would soon be receiving a computer form asking for information about them and their work, he took care to spend over 10 minutes on assurances that the exercise was not meant to keep a watch on them. Yet, predictably, when the Indian Express flashed the news, the headline was "Computer to watch Cong(I) MP's". The report went on to allege that not only would the computer give "periodic warnings about the lapses" of MP's, it would also store details of their "adverse activities". And The Times of India followed up with an editorial calling the move "wrong" and "dangerous"; the first because it implied that Rajiv did not know his party and the second because it would make the party even more docile.

Party leaders were quick to the defence. Refuting the contention that dossiers were being readied, AICC(I) General Secretary Srikant Verma asked: "If the idea was to keep a watch, would we ask the MP's themselves to provide the information?" CPP(I) Secretary Hari Krishna Shastri, who sent out the forms and had sat in with Rajiv and his Parliamentary Secretary, Oscar Fernandes, on meetings to work out the questionnaire, was even more defensive. "What the newspapers have said is all rubbish," he maintained. To start with, using computers was nothing new for the Congress(I): two years ago when Rajiv, as the party general secretary, had held his famous inquest at the Jawaharlal Nehru Stadium, the voluminous mass of information supplied by partymen in response to the 20-page questionnaire had also been fed into a computer. "What is wrong with using a computer in this age ? Even private organisations have similar data banks," argued the 47-year-old son of Lal Bahadur Shastri.

Nor, said Shastri, was there anything new in asking MP's to provide information about their activities. In fact, the present move is the second step in an exercise initiated over two months ago. On June 29, Shastri had sent MP's a circular asking them to report on their visits to constituencies after the budget session of Parliament and listing 13 specific queries for which answers were sought. Over 250 MP's had already responded; the rest are expected to send in their constituency reports with the new forms by the end of the month. The two reports will then be married, and the data fed into a computer.

Giving the rationale for the data bank, and refuting the suggestion that dealing through a computer would distance Rajiv from his MP's, Shastri told INDIA TODAY: "The Prime Minister knows every MP by name but he cannot remember everybody's problems. He wants them to be more effective at the grassroots level but he does not want them to come to him with the same set of complaints every second day. As he tells them, "when you write down your complaints, it will help me get a feedback and it will help the Central and state Governments to check on what happened to your complaints."

Yet, misgivings persisted about who was really behind the move and to what purpose. If this was an exercise that concerned only the CPP(I), why were the "instant needs of the Prime Minister's Secretariat" mentioned in the backgrounder with the form? Shastri's covering letter with the forms also drew adverse comments. Asked a senior party leader: "Where was the need to invoke the name of 'our leader Rajiv*ji*' and the 'high command' if this is only a routine exercise?" But much of the sniping emanated from within the party itself. A senior leader closely associated with the exercise blamed one of the CPP(I) secretaries for wrongly briefing the press. Said he: "This gentleman is one of those who do not want the prime minister to succeed. There are many such elements in the party, mostly in the upper House."

Ironically, there is little in the eight-page form that can raise anybody's hackles. As senior parliamentarian Bali Ram Bhagat said: "Most of the information sought can be got from any 'Who's Who'. With the limited space that has been given, I am afraid most of the answers are going to be too general to be of much help." It will also be odd if MP's were to conclude, on the basis of this questionnaire, that they are being closely watched. Denying that the form had caused him any worry, Bairwa Banwari Lal, MP, said: "This exercise is like a bania's hisab (trader's bookkeeping): to find out if there has been any money misspent. What can be wrong with that?"

Yet the impression would not go away that there is more to this exercise than meets the eye. In a way, Shastri only confirmed the suspicions when, at the end of a lengthy session, he exclaimed: " How else are you going to keep a check on your MP's and MLA's?" The truth probably is that Rajiv and his advisers want to turn the average Congressman from a parasite to a true people's representative. To that, nobody can have objections, except, of course, his partymen.

—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Great Computer Base.

How Minicomp installed the maximum number of IBM Compatibles — more than all the other manufacturers put together.

Minicomp Pvt. Ltd., have always believed in firsts.

Minicomp pioneered the Personal Computer era in India, and in the process established themselves as leaders, by introducing the Neptune PC and PC/XT (Compatible to the IBM PC and PC/XT).
Minicomp were the first to introduce "networking capabilities" in personal computers in India.
Minicomp are the first to offer the powerful Neptune AT in India. (Compatible to the IBM AT).

And, some other outstanding points worth remembering:

- Over a 100 personal computers sold in the first year of operations.
- The largest installed base of IBM Compatible computers in India.
- Offices in major cities, resident engineers and a large team of qualified competent back-up men to provide immediate and efficient after sales – service.
- A direct technology link in the U.S.A.

"Programmed" to lead.
"Committed" to service.

NEPTUNE
BUSINESS
COMPUTERS

MINICOMP PRIVATE LTD.

Unit No. A-1, Udyog Sadan 3, Marol MIDC, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 093.
Tel: 6300494/6301748/6320413 Telex: 1172183 NEPN IN Grams: NEPNOASIS
D-11/13, Everest, Tardeo Circle, Bombay 400 034. Tel: 4940585

IBM is the Registered Trade Mark of International Business Machines Corporation.

Canco/MC/4/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

Hard Lessons

THE WROUGHT iron gates to Calcutta University's College Street campus are more often than not kept firmly closed these days. For, it's not academics that dominates the university today but politics. Specifically, a bizarre gladiatorial contest between a dour professor of economics, the present vice-chancellor, and the Marxist goliaths of West Bengal. The issue is: who will run the university, the Left Front Government or the vice-chancellor with the help of the Centre? Not surprisingly, in the past six months, the university is estimated to have functioned for only 64 days, the other days being taken up with strikes, demonstrations and gheraos. By last fortnight there was little sign of any decisive end to this frustrating impasse. State Higher Education Minister Sambhu Ghosh and Vice-Chancellor Dr Santosh Bhattacharya flew to Delhi to present their respective cases, but clearly the Centre was not keen to get enmeshed in the wrangling.

For the moment, the advantage seems to be with the vice-chancellor and his Congress(I) supporters. Under fire from the Marxists Dr Bhattacharya has for the first time succeeded in putting his opponents on the defensive. Even since Congress(I) MP's, their supporters in the university syndicate council and the vice-chancellor suggested last month that only central take-over could salvage the university, hardly has a day gone by without some Left Front leader declaring that the take-over will be resisted. And what really began as a petty power battle has now assumed more general and larger overtones.

The latest crisis surfaced when Dr Bhattacharya decided to suspend five university employees, all CPI(M) supporters, who had allegedly submitted false credentials to keep their jobs. Knowing that the pro-Left Front university syndicate would never approve such orders, the vice-chancellor invoked his emergency powers. The CPI(M)'s reaction was predictable. "The university is not the vice-chancellor's father's property," CPI(M) leader Anil Biswas thundered. "Dr Bhattacharya is misusing his powers," Sambhu Ghosh echoed. But Bhattacharya, who met Union Education Minister K.C. Pant in New Delhi last fortnight, has, however, made it clear that he has no intention of resigning. In a statement issued at the insistence of the University Senate Council, he said: "I did not accept the post of vice-chancellor on the supposition that the Centre would come to my aid in case of a crisis." This effectively scotched earlier reports suggesting that he would resign.

Although the Centre will have to pass an act of Parliament to make Calcutta University a Central university, it will have no problem in declaring it an "institution of national importance." In this event, the Calcutta University Act 1979 will remain intact and the Centre will only have to put in as much funds as required to maintain it. The Centre would nevertheless have the crucial power of ultimately deciding disputes in the university. Till now no university has been declared an institution of national importance, this status hitherto being reserved for institutes like the Asiatic Society, Tata Institute of Fundamental Research and the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre.

PRABUDDHA BOSE

Ghosh (left) Bhattacharya and Calcutta University: bizarre contest

The Marxists, on the other hand, have tried to scotch the prospects of a take-over by accusing the Centre of trying to usurp the powers of a state government. Other, like former MP Satyasadhan Chakraborty, have even suggested that the Central move appears to be aimed at curbing the "aspirations of Bengalis". But as K.C. Pant told Sambhu Ghosh last fortnight, the best course for the Left Front Government would be to ensure that the university crisis is defused rather than to insist that the Centre should not interfere.

"If Left Front leaders find themselves pinned down they have only themselves to blame," says former Jadavpur University vice-chancellor Arobindo Basu, pointing out that Dr Bhattacharya was never a Congress(I) supporter, having been a Marxist all his life. He had become anathema to the Marxists simply because he was chosen to be the vice-chancellor by former West Bengal governor A.P. Sharma, who wanted to snub the Left Front by not accepting their particular candidate, Ramen Poddar. And since then, adds Basu, "he has been systematically harassed, insulted, and prevented from discharging his duties."

At the very first syndicate meeting Bhattacharya attended, after his appointment in February 1984, former MP Somnath Chatterjee, humiliated him by demanding that he pass a resolution condemning the governor for the appointment. Last month when Chief Minister Jyoti Basu accused the vice-chancellor of having taken decisions that "have not contributed to the maintenance of normality," Bhattacharya countercharged by saying that the state Government was trying to stall all his moves for toning up the university administration.

But with the damoclean threat of central take-over hanging over them, the Marxists seem to have mellowed. Last fortnight, Sambhu Ghosh after returning from New Delhi, told the state Assembly, in a distinctly non-aggressive tone, that the Union Government was being given a false impression about affairs in the university. "The state Government has taken several steps to solve the university's problems," claimed Ghosh, "but the vice-chancellor's adamant attitude is preventing a solution from being reached." But no matter what stance the antagonists now take, it seemed inevitable that Calcutta University will continue to be a busy political arena for some time to come.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB ELECTION

RAGHUNANDAN Lal Bhatia, the Congress(I) candidate for the Amritsar Lok Sabha seat, last fortnight nursed a bout of 'flu. It was a nasty attack but an insignificant medical problem compared with the bullet wounds left him by two terrorists last April. His house is now heavily guarded and no one can talk to him without the disconcerting shadow of an armed personal guard looming over. "Due to the shortage of time, it may not be possible for me to reach everybody," Bhatia says about his campaign. "We have a kind of division of labour among ourselves, my campaign workers will take my appeal to every home."

Across town, Sat Pal Dang, the Communist Party of India's assembly candidate for Amritsar West, is bolder in his approach. "We have our comrades who keep watch," he says "We will organise public meetings but not late at night. What we've agreed upon is no meeting after 8 p.m."

In the southern part of the state, in the Akali-dominated Malwa region, Akali leader Surjit Singh Barnala drives about with the security usually associated with the prime minister. His visitors are subjected to a metal detector search and his son functions as chief of security, looking after a score of armed men who cling to Barnala night and day. "Earlier we used to go door to door," says the Akali leader, but now he doesn't "feel so free".

In Gurdaspur town, headquarters of one of the most unsettled districts in the state, Akali election agent Harbinder Singh says his party is keeping a close watch on possible terrorists. "We are organising the least number of public meetings," he says.

Suddenly, the reality of an election in strife-torn Punjab in the wake of political assassination, terrorist killing and threat of boycott, was driven home with unpalatable force last fortnight as some 863 assembly and 74 Lok Sabha candidates, vying for 117 assembly and 13 Lok Sabha seats, for the first time came face to face with the task of conducting their campaigns. There were some, like Akali candidate Amarinder Singh who got going quickly in Talwandi Sabo in Bhatinda district. There were others, like the Congress(I)'s Patiala aspirant Brahm Mohendra and Ludhiana Lok Sabha contestant Joginder Paul Pandey, who declared themselves men of the masses, unwilling to surround themselves with security details.

BHAWAN SINGH

But for most others, the images of the election were starkly different. To be sure, there is the redoubtable 'hand' of the Congress(I), the 'scales' of the Akali Dal and innumerable other temporary electoral identities dealt out by the Election Commission. In some places a few flags flutter alone atop cycle rickshaws or the occasional shop. All this will undoubtedly change closer to polling day, September 25, but last fortnight, with a mere 12 to 15 days to go, these candidates and their campaigns remained largely closeted behind the doors of their homes, in makeshift campaign headquarters or in cruising cars packed with supporters brandishing weapons.

Instead of the routine paraphernalia of electioneering, the carnival-like atmosphere, the noise and dust of campaign caravans gridding the area day and night blaring music and unending harangues from candidates, the reality of the election was being symbolised by images of another sort. Paramilitary forces showing the flag in Amritsar, for instance. Convoys of the Provincial Armed Constabulary from Uttar Pradesh making their way up the Grand Trunk Road. Armed pickets at crossroads, dotting the towns in sensitive spots. Streets by and large deserted after 8 or 9 p.m. And the ubiquitous Sten gun, the carbine, the pistol, the rifle, slung across shoulders, held loosely in the hands, or

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNDER THE GUN

The images of the election are starkly different: the ubiquitous Sten gun, the carbine, the pistol: images symbolising the one occurrence that a democracy can well do without.

Armed guards surround an Akali delegates' meet; and (right) S.S. Barnala preceded by his son, Gaganjeet, holding a gun tucked into waistbands. Images that make up a mosaic that signals confrontation and the danger of violence just as much as the Government's determination to combat it and protect both candidates and the public. Images, above all, symbolising the one occurrence that a democracy can well do without: an election under the shadow of the gun.

BHAWAN SINGH

"I would not be surprised if there is selective killing," said a senior police official in Chandigarh. "The idea would be to disrupt the elections and to prevent people from coming out to vote." The blood-letting has never really stopped in

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Punjab. If there was a pause in the months leading up to the July 24 accord, it was only because everything about the state was uncertain. Then the drum began to roll: Lalit Maken, Longowal, B.K. Khullar, Arjun Dass were killed in quick succession. An attempt was made on the life of former Ludhiana senior superintendent of police (SSP) A.P. Pandey. No less than nine incidents took four lives on September 3. Another man was killed in a terrorist act a week later. And suspected terrorists, who were picked up in Delhi, revealed alleged plans to blow up the Shan-e-Punjab, a fast train between Delhi and Amritsar.

Intelligence sources in the state fear that violence will build up as the campaign intensifies, that the last one week before campaigning closes on September 23 could be one of the bloodiest. Attempts may be made on the lives of candidates to force the elections to be countermanded. Voters may be forcibly prevented from going to poll. Bombs may be thrown in public or at polling stations to create a psychosis of terror. Some of the action, they fear, will be from isolated gangs who are operating from hide-outs in relatively inaccessible riverine areas along the Beas,

CAMPAIGNS

Hamstrung

THE SIGHT is awesome; a fast-moving phalanx of six cars that comes barrelling down the road, imperiously muscling every passing vehicle off the side and then sweeps past leaving people wondering about the identity of the VIP hidden behind the tinted glass windows of the central car. People living around Barnala town in Punjab's Sangrur district have a fair idea who the VIP is because the high-security convoy invariably starts from a newly-built house on Bajakhana Road on the town's outskirts owned by Surjit Singh Barnala, acting president of the Akali Dal and inheritor of the slain Sant Harchand Singh Longowal's bloody mantle.

The house is literally a fortress; the high front wall has crenellated battlements and a front gate of solid wood with a smaller door set into it. Both are kept bolted from the inside. The place is crawling with commandos and one of them attaches himself to any visitor the moment he crosses the road towards the gate. On knocking, the small door is opened from inside by a Sten gun-toting commando. Wary eyes watch every movement as the visitor steps through the door into the courtyard. In a guard room, police inspectors are at hand to conduct a metal detector check, and cleared through this outer ring, the visitor is escorted towards the house porch where Barnala's son Gaganjeet waits suspiciously, right hand hovering near the butt of a .28 calibre revolver sticking out of the front pocket of his blue jeans. Gaganjeet has taken charge of the security cordon around Barnala; he is helped by a young Chandigarh law graduate who paces up and down the front verandah carrying a short barelled 15-shot Winchester carbine. Shades of the wild west! The whole place is bristling with firearms—revolvers, carbines, ancient .303 rifles and Sten guns by the dozen. Gaganjeet proudly proclaims that the security provided to his father is as tight as the President and prime minister's security. To that he has added his own services and those of his friend. There are a couple of hot lines linking Barnala's house to Chandigarh and Sangrur and a huge standby generator in the corner of the compound in case of a power failure.

All this is not surprising because Barnala today is Punjab's most protected politician. A bullet-proof vest of the kind that could have saved the life of his predecessor Longowal, adds some bulk to Barnala's narrow-shouldered frame. Longowal had put his faith in God but neither Barnala nor the authorities responsible for his security are prepared to tempt fate this time. This is why few people are allowed near him; all visitors must wait in the verandah in plain sight of the securitymen. Punjab police commandos become instantly alert the moment Barnala emerges to greet visitors; two of them start whispering into walkie talkie sets. There is a flurry of action because Barnala has to drive to nearby Kaimbowal to meet the party nominee for the Dhanaula constituency. The head of the security team, a deputy superintendent of police, instantly gathers the commandos around him and drawing diagrams on the ground with a stick, explains the positions they are to take. Even though Gaganjeet has agreed, the security men are not too happy about our car following the convoy. Two new white ambassador cars are parked near the porch, both with blank number plates and shaded windows. Barnala gets into one and the convoy is on its way piloted by a red-flag jeep which signals all approaching traffic to pull over to the side. After the jeep comes a green ambassador carrying commandos followed by Barnala's unnumbered car and another green commando car with gun barrels sticking out like so many antennae. The destination is kept deliberately secret and only the driver of the lead car knows where they are headed. While Barnala's white ambassador drives on the left side of the road, the two green escort cars hug the right verge forming a barrier between the VIP car and oncoming vehicles on the other side of the road. The whole convoy moves at around 90 Km an hour often Barnala's house is literally a fortress; wary eyes watch every movement through the door into the courtyard where police are at hand to conduct a metal detector check.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

for instance. Such groups, they believe, were responsible for some of the stray incidents last fortnight, particularly one in which the terrorists warned the fear-stricken people of a Hoshiarpur village not to allow the Government to set up polling stations in the vicinity.

But a surprisingly large number of politicians—and common people—now seem to be convinced that a greater threat comes from terrorists who have slipped across the border from Pakistan. "We have definite information now that some 40 motivators have crossed over in the last few weeks," the official says. For evidence, officials refer to interrogation reports, such as that of Sarabjit Singh (INDIA TODAY, September 15), some of which provide remarkably vivid details of the experience of those who appear to have crossed into Pakistan. "There is a distinct pattern in the killings," alleges a senior official in Chandigarh who believes that some of the young men who fled into Pakistan after Operation Bluestar in June 1984 have been trained as motivators to recruit young hot-heads with no previous activity or complaints against them to carry out acts of terrorism. The pattern, he says, has been noted in incidents since

BHAWAN SINGH

Frisking audience at a poll meeting

leaving us way behind

When the convoy arrives at the destination, Kaimbowal gurudwara, the commandos ring Barnala facing outward and Sten guns ready. The same thing happens on the way back when the convoy makes an unscheduled stop at a railway crossing. This time, however, Barnala is in one of the green cars which is effectively cordoned off on both sides and other vehicles are made to stop some distance away. At Kaimbowal everyone entering the Akali chief's room was searched and two armed Akali jathedars were made to hand over their revolvers to the security inspector.

All this is bound to prevent effective public contact with the Akali chief. Says Barnala: "It is not easy to approach the public as we used to do but we will hold public meetings." He plans to travel around and address one meeting in each of the 100-odd constituencies his party is contesting. "We are cautious and the public too is cautious." Will the tension and fear of violence affect voter turn-out? "Not at all," says Barnala. On the contrary, he argues that it will be higher than before. "After a period of turmoil the people want we should succeed."

The fear of low voter turn-out is very real. As one voter told B.S. Ramoowalia, Akali(L) general secretary and candidate for the Sangrur parliamentary seat: "You wear a bullet-proof vest, but what about the voters, they remain vulnerable." Ramoowalia, who is high on the hit list, wears a bulky white vest, a part of which shows under his open collar. But unlike him, not all candidates wear the vests supplied to them, partly because of pride and partly to appear macho and unafraid. This category includes Amrinder Singh of Patiala, one of the newest stars of the Akali Dal(L). He goes around the Talwandi Sabo constituency dressed in a thin white kurta saying he has nothing to fear from the youth as he has been helping to fight their cases in the special courts. Inspite of this, two armed ex-servicemen stand guard by his side, one of them holding a mean-looking Mauser pistol of the type made famous by James Bond. The presence of his personal guards and a Matador van with policemen which follows him everywhere suggests there is danger. Why then does he not wear the vest? "The Punjab authorities should make it compulsory for all candidates and political leaders campaigning in Punjab to wear bullet-proof vests," suggested a retired army officer who saw Amrinder Singh campaigning in Talwandi Sabo. This view is echoed all over the state by people who would like to see this election pass with the minimum of bloodshed. Leaders like Amrinder Singh who represent recognised parties are all the more vulnerable to terrorist attack and it is their job as much as that of the police to make the terrorists' task more difficult. But villagers are allowed to approach Amrinder, jostle him and one baazigar acrobat even performed somersaults inches away from the royal nose. He addresses little corner meetings of 100 to 200 people in the villages and reminds them that this is Punjab's most crucial election. How they vote will determine the state's future and also the future of the 32 lakh Sikhs in other states.

In any case Talwandi Sabo is in peaceful Bhatinda district which has seen little terrorism so far. In northern Amritsar, which has seen some of the worst, candidates like the Congress(I) Lok Sabha aspirant Raghunandan Lal Bhatia are taking no risks. A sandbag emplacement shelters armed policemen outside his Mall Road house. Bhatia, an AICC(I) general secretary, was lucky to survive one attempt on his life and now an armed personal bodyguard dogs his every footstep. Whether it is in the airy verandah or in the drawing room, the bodyguard stands within arms reach of Bhatia and looks over the shoulder of any visitor who comes to meet him. Sten gun snouts protrude from the windows of Bhatia's car wherever he travels.

Other Congress(I) candidates are not so particular, even those who have the resources to arrange an elaborate security cover. Young Bubbly Brar, Congress (I) Lok Sabha candidate from Faridkot, the home town of President Zail Singh, drives around in the back seat of her Fiat car accompanied by a single armed guard in the front seat. This kind of guard has only a limited use. He can keep an eye only on the front while Brar is vulnerable to an attack through the rear windscreen. At the very least there ought to be a security car following behind to prevent someone taking a pot shot at the candidate from the back.

Lapses, loopholes and oversights such as these render the coming poll in Punjab vulnerable to disruption by terrorists. And as long as they continue, the lives of the candidates contesting the poll will remain in jeopardy as also the prospects of Punjab returning to peace and normalcy.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The Punjab-Pakistan border overgrown with tall elephant grass

January, and it is worrying the authorities. The killers of Longowal and those who made an attempt on Pandey's life were young men on whom the police had no information.

The Government's well-advertised move to seal the border is aimed at preventing any more such traffic, but local police affirm that they aren't very sanguine about it. Villagers in Gurdaspur district affirm this impression. Says D.N. Sharma, sarpanch of Chhonhar village close to Dehra Baba Nanak: "People go across the border like they're going to the market!" In fact, the authorities have placed a ban on movement within 500 metres of the border between 6 p.m. and 7 a.m., and only villagers who own fields in this zone are allowed to enter it during the day—and that too with written permission. The border has been handed over to the army for the duration of the election, and government sources affirm that large numbers of smugglers and other criminal elements have been apprehended in the past few days. Even so, as a senior intelligence official said: "It is just not possible to seal the border effectively. From crossing over into Punjab, the terrorists are now coming in through Kathua (near Jammu) and Ganganagar (in Rajasthan)."

Consequently, far greater attention is being paid to what can be done to contain the violence that is widely expected. "At the moment, our entire effort is to safeguard the candidates to ensure that nothing goes wrong," says Punjab Home Secretary N.N. Vohra. Each candidate is being given two official gunmen who have been put through a crash course in weapons training. In addition, each candidate has been asked to name up to five licensed weapon owners who can be vetted and permitted to carry weapons in public for his protection. A car and an additional five-member police guard which stays with the candidate night and day completes the complement. To make campaigns somewhat safer, candidates are being asked to tell the district authorities of any big meetings they plan at least two days in advance. They're being asked not to use religious places like gurudwaras for their meetings, nor campaign after dark, nor use communal language or appeals. Even so, as a senior police official warns: "There is no foolproof method of securing everyone."

The border has been handed over to the army and a large number of smugglers and criminal elements have been apprehended in the past few days, but intelligence officers admit that it is not possible to seal the border totally.

Still, as the election draws near, the show of force is likely to be impressive. Amritsar district, which is among the more difficult, has some 40 companies of paramilitary forces, each with 60 to 80 men, already in position. Another 30 companies are being inducted and will be deployed on mobile patrol, particularly just before and on election day escorting ballot papers, protecting the 1,629 election booths that are to be set up and then seeing the ballot papers safely into the counting houses. Deputy Commissioner Ramesh Inder Singh says that there are some 20,000 retired servicemen in the district and that some of them will be asked to volunteer for patrolling and security duties if they are required—after their credentials have been checked out. "Such precautions have never been taken before," he says, "but we are taking them to our satisfaction."

In neighbouring Gurdaspur, widely believed to be the most disturbed district in the state, some 3,500 policemen will be on duty in election week, and the authorities have classified some 120 villages of the district's 1,500 as particularly sensitive. The district has 68 assembly and five Lok Sabha contestants but, as SSP J.P. Birdhi says: "Unless and until the villagers cooperate with the administration and unite to fight it, I don't think terrorism can be stopped."

It isn't only the terrorists who seem determined to sabotage the elections. The United Akali Dal (UAD) of Bhindranwale's father, Baba Joginder Singh, last fortnight assembled some 8,000 or more slogan-shouting young men in the Golden Temple and showed it meant business in calling for a boycott of the election. The UAD's fighting arm, the All-India Sikh Student's Federation (AISSF), which describes the accord as a "sell-out", says that it has already begun to mobilise volunteers in the villages to "persuade" people not to go out and vote. Says AISSF Convenor Harminder Singh Kahlon: "We are setting up five-member committees in each village to propagate our view that the accord is a total sell-out of the Sikhs and we should not participate in the election." He denies that AISSF will forcibly stop voters from participating. "We don't believe in that. If we educate people, it will be enough," he says. Like the militant students, the Baba himself is convinced that many Sikhs will not vote, "not those who are real Sikhs," he told INDIA TODAY.

At the same time, the UAD and the AISSF don't seem to be averse to the idea of talks with the Government. Dr Bhagwan Singh, acting president of the AISSF says: "Just as the Assam students were taken into confidence, the prime minister should take the AISSF people into confidence, reopen the accord and

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I thought Superlac would just transform our walls...

...but look what it's done to my husband."

"It was real magic. The dull walls suddenly sprang to life. The patchy surface gave way to a smooth, beautiful look. The pretty pastels made our house so inviting, so good to live in. 44 exciting shades to try out new decor ideas with. Pale Corn. Horizon Blue. And so easy to keep spotlessly clean. Even the children can do it with a little soap and water. No stains. No damp. It was wonderful!

"What was even more wonderful was the effect it had on my husband. He was a changed man. Bringing me flowers. Buying up the market. I've even heard him humming in the bathroom. Honestly, I never imagined what a plastic emulsion like Superlac could do to our lives."

That's Superlac. An extraordinary wallpaint made by one of the leading paint companies in the country today. People who've been perfecting the art of paint making over the years. The Shalimar people.

Try Superlac. And just watch your world change!

SUPERLAC

Acrylic Plastic Emulsion

Shalimar Paints

Wall time favourites

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SPL-5882

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some days are so hot, you get running warm water without switching on the geyser.

That's the kind of heat only Amtrex can handle.

Amtrex is specially designed to handle temperatures as high as 45°C. It cools effectively even in peak summer — when all other machines struggle to cope.

Most air conditioners work well when it isn't too hot — but they can't handle more than 40°C. When temperatures rise above 40°C, you need a machine with greater cooling capacity.

Extra cooling power

At very high temperatures, Amtrex keeps you really cool. In Delhi, for instance, Amtrex survives peak summer without the help of water. In cooler cities like Bombay, the extra capacity of Amtrex makes it the most effective. Even on the hottest day of the year, even in overcrowded rooms, Bombay will never use the full cooling power of Amtrex.

This extra cooling power is generated by giant-size cooling coils, and an optimised air conditioning cycle that cools more air, faster.

Who's bought Amtrex?

Amtrex has already found its way into some of the best offices and homes in India. Gwalior Rayon Silk (Wvg.) Co. Ltd. Hoechst India Ltd. Diners Club India Pvt. Ltd. Bank of India. Ahmedabad. Orkay Polyester Ltd. Indian Merchants Chamber. Shri Dinesh Mills Ltd. Crown TV — Televisions and Components Pvt. Ltd. Alliance Francaise. Lohia Machines Ltd. Hinditron Computer Systems Pvt. Ltd. Saurashtra Paints Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

After sales service

Although you'll hardly ever need it, we're on our toes all the time. 7-days-a-week service. Complaints attended to within 24 hours. And if your machine has to be taken away, we even give you a standby unit.

Address your enquiries to:

Akik Enterprises (A Division of Akik Pharma Chem Pvt. Ltd.)
Wall, 3rd floor, Near H.K. House, Ashram Road, Ahmedabad 380 009. Tel: 447535, 406077, 406956.

Branch Offices: Bombay, Delhi, Madras, Baroda, Hyderabad, Bangalore.

AMTREX

Air conditioners
0.5, 1, 1.5, and 2 tonnes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EVER SINCE I DISCOVERED RAYMOND'S READYMADES, IT'S GOODBYE TO STEREO-TYPES.

Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

Raymond's Mens Wear

Location courtesy: The Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

discuss things." The Baba declines to discuss outstanding issues with journalists saying that he's prepared to talk only with someone who can do something about them, though he does indicate that they have to do with the treatment of army deserters, the political activists still imprisoned and alleged police repression. AISSF spokesmen also include the Anandpur Sahib resolution and the canal waters dispute among the issues that still need to be thrashed out.

Such talks aren't likely in a hurry and the authorities and political parties are convinced that the boycott threat will be contained. Congress(I) candidate for the Gurdaspur Lok Sabha seat Sukhbans Kaur echoes a widely held view when she says: "There's going to be no boycott. I think the Government will ensure that the people can vote." But it isn't a threat that is being taken lightly.

The surprise of the election was, of course, the extraordinary numbers of would-be candidates who presented themselves to both the Congress(I) and the Akali Dal(Longowal) for tickets—and the unprecedented flood of independents standing—raising the number of contestants to 863 for the assembly compared with the previous maximum of 722 in 1980. Obviously, fear of the terrorist, of violence and personal harm, hadn't kept aspiring politicians at bay.

For both the leading parties, making final selections wasn't easy. They've either been caught up in unabashed factionalism or tainted with allegations of terrorist or criminal connections and corruption. The Akalis, for instance, had just about put their house in order when Longowal was assassinated. And even as his funeral pyre smoldered, his soothing, restraining hand snatched away from the party, the bickering broke out once again. It took a marathon 60-hour screening session in Ludhiana to produce a list of 93 assembly and 11 Lok Sabha candidates. Sighed an exhausted Barnala: "We have spent so many hours discussing the merit of each candidate. We have the right candidate at the right place."

No sooner were the words out of his mouth than the tremors of protest began. And a day before the last date for withdrawals — September 5—almost the entire Akali flock was back in the Canal Rest House in Ludhiana ostensibly to collect their official nomination letters to deliver to the election officers—but also on hand to prevent any last minute reshuffle of candidates. They needn't have bothered: only former chief minister Prakash Singh Badal, now somewhat isolated from the main Akali leadership, was inside the rest house. The list was being given its final scrutiny by Barnala, former finance minister Balwant Singh and the party's young rising star Sant Ajit Singh, head of the party's parliamentary board at another rest house some 30 km away.

Militants raising pro-Bhindranwale slogans at the Golden Temple

The AISSF, which terms the accord a sell-out, is setting up member committees in villages to 'persuade' voters to boycott the election.

The final list of 102 candidates shows that the Akalis have given its various factions due representation, but that some have got more than others. Barnala, Balwant Singh and former education minister Sukhjinder Singh, leaders who owed their primary allegiance to Longowal, cornered about 65 seats. Badal's nominees number about 15, former speaker Ravi Inder Singh's around seven and newcomer Amarinder Singh's nominees five. Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC) President Gurcharan Singh Tohra who along with Badal reached an understanding on the accord on the morning of Longowal's assassination, has some dozen nominees.

The party has some problems with rebel candidates but in acknowledgement of Longowal's highly effective wooing of the Hindus of Punjab is now seeking to project a secular image, to show that it is not a Sikh party but one that can represent all Punjabis. Says Surendra Pal Singh, candidate from Nur Mahal in Jalandhar district: "We are a secular party because Guru Gobind Singh was secular." Apart from leaving 10 seats to the Janata Party, it has put up five Hindu and one Muslim and one Christian candidate. It has also put up non-Jat Sikh candidates from the tarkhan or carpenter community, a move aimed at weaning away sections of the Sikhs that have voted Congress(I) in the belief that the Akali Dal is a Jat-dominated party.

If the Akali lists proved problematic, the Congress(I) list has proved traumatic for the party in the state. The procedure was a long, well thought out one—but the end result has left the party stalwarts in the state isolated and brimming with resentment. To begin with, the Congress(I) sent large numbers of 'coordinators' to the state for six to eight weeks to investigate conditions on the ground and assess the state of the party after three years and more of violence. Then, shortly before the elections were announced, some 40 MP's did the rounds, each assigned two or three constituencies, to report on candidates' reputations and winning chances. The intelligence agencies are reported to have pitched in but none of these reports was shown to the nine-member state election committee which screened some 1,037 applications along with three parliamentary board members, Kerala Chief Minister K. Karunakaran, Minister of State for Social Welfare Mrs

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

M. Chandrashekher and former Union railway minister A.B.A.Ghani Khan Chaudhury who sat up with the committee two days and nights.

In the end, however, it was the prime minister and his advisors who determined the candidates, bringing in 80 new faces among the 117 assembly candidates, slashing 27 sitting MLA's and at least seven ministers in the Darbara Singh government—including the former chief minister himself. The reason, as a senior Congressman explained, was simple: the high command had decided to eliminate the party's rampant factionalism and rid it of elements suspected to have connections with terrorists or criminal elements.

Not unexpectedly, the list of newcomers and political novices has given rise to a widespread impression that the Congress(I) has put up weak candidates in order to let the Akali's win and form the Government. The party suspects that the campaign is being fanned by disgruntled former strongmen who have been cast aside. But there's no doubt that a growing number of voters and opinion makers in the state are convinced that there is some sort of secret understanding between the Congress(I) and the Akali Dal.

The refrain is common. A Dehra Baba Nanak farmer, Bawa Singh, says bluntly: "The Congress party has decided to hand over the Government to the Akalis." A Gurdaspur Congress(I) lawyer says:"I've been arguing that we should put up strong candidates, mobilise Sikh opinion, otherwise we will lose whatever gains we've made among the Sikhs." In Faridkot town, a watchmaker opined that there was no longer any difference between the Congress and Akali candidates, and a senior Akali leader who has his own reasons to be dissatisfied declared in Ludhiana:"This isn't an election, it's a friendly contest."

If much of this is orchestrated, there's also a feeling that the Congress(I) is handing membership of the assembly on a platter to the Akali stalwarts—men like Barnala, Balwant Singh, Sukhjinder Singh, Ravi Inder Singh, Sukhdev Singh Dhindsa and some others. But as Bhatia, the Congress(I)'s Amritsar candidate says:"Frankly speaking, we've always had difficulty in the Malwa belt (south of the Sutlej), I don't subscribe to the view that we have weak candidates. At no stage were there any instructions to this effect."

Sparrow retorts that the allegation is "utterly wrong" and says that he is "absolutely happy" with the list even though some two-thirds of the recommendations he and his fellow selectors sent up were not accepted. Former foreign minister Swaran Singh says there is no harm in giving new candidates experience when they are faced with stalwarts. Says he:"There is no understanding between the Akalis and the Congress. Whether a candidate is strong or weak isn't the issue, people will vote for the party, for Rajiv Gandhi." But he does concede that if the feeling gains wider currency, it will damage the Congress(I)'s poll prospects, keeping back some wavering supporters who may feel they'd rather not vote if the party isn't serious about forming a government.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

There is a widespread impression that the Congress(I) has put up weak candidates in order to let the Akalis led by Barnala form the Government...

As it is, the election seems to have brought about a complete polarisation of the vote. Had Longowal been alive, some Hindus might well have voted for his party. But last fortnight, with the election tempo still to pick up, people across the state seemed to feel that Hindus would vote for the Congress(I) and the Sikhs largely for the Akali Dal. The two communist parties have decided to fight the election together for the first time and this, says Dang, will help them consolidate the 8 to 10 per cent of the vote that traditionally belongs to them. But he concedes that "when communal polarisation takes place, the Left is bound to suffer." With the emergence of such groups as the Shiv Sena in Gurdaspur and Hoshiarpur districts, the Bharatiya Janata Party may pick up some strength, but there's a widespread feeling that the election might see an out and out communal polarisation on election day.

INTERESTINGLY enough, this polarisation is now tending to be a political phenomenon. The long night of personal Hindu-Sikh animosity seems finally to be coming to an end, and social barriers between the two communities are finally eroding. "The wedge is still there—but it is a bit blunted after Longowal's death," says a retired major general in Chandigarh. Adds state CPI Secretary Avtar Malhotra: "Longowal's death has helped weaken the divide between Hindus and Sikhs. It has created a better environment, when the tallest leader of the Sikhs sacrificed his life for national integration." The feeling is confirmed by S.S.Bal, vice-chancellor of Guru Nanak Dev University: "The Hindu-Sikh divide is much narrower. I know because they've now begun to talk politics together." The presence of large numbers of Hindus at Longowal's bhog is indicative of the change of heart in that community. Similarly, among the Sikhs the accord seems to have finally displaced the feeling that the Government was dragging its feet in order to humiliate the community.

All of which makes for an atmosphere that is, but for the threat of violence, finally conducive for elections. Says Governor Arjun Singh: "I think people were fed up and wanted a change for the better. By and large, people would like the election to go on and finish successfully." After three years and more in suspended animation, Punjab is finally stirring with a sense of hope. That springs not only from what politicians and administrators now say, it is confirmed in virtually every chance conversation with people across the state. Many feel that the election should have been delayed till after the accord could be consolidated. Indeed, some Akalis privately still grumble about the timing, arguing that even Longowal had argued for a delayed election but more and more people seem to concur with Dr Attar Singh of Punjab University, Chandigarh, an Akali supporter who says: "In the first instance I wouldn't have gone in for it, but once announced, there's no escape from it." Balwant Singh, one of the chief architects of the accord, believes "the feeling is going around that violence is no solution, that we must find a solution in constitutional terms, that elections do provide a certain solution."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Reservations are prevalent in areas where terrorist tensions run high—as in Gurdaspur. A Kalanaur shopkeeper says that there is a real fear that elections will invite terrorist action which in turn will bring down the firm hand of the police and reprisals which will alienate more young boys thus completing the vicious circle. Some 142 youths are missing from the district and the villagers argue they ran away—not all to Pakistan, many to other parts of the country—because they feared maltreatment at the hands of the police. But near Kalanaur, sarpanch Sohan Singh of Shahpur Goraya, a village just 8 km from the border, feels convinced that the elections should—and will—go through as announced. "Some say they won't let the elections take place, others that they will. The Government is holding them so they will happen," he asserts.

...State Congress chief Sparrow staunchly denies this but other partymen concede that if the feeling gains wider currency, it will damage their poll prospects.

But qualms of this kind aren't predominant in most other districts where people talk about only a "handful" of people opposing the accord or the elections. "Students don't believe in violence, they have to pass exams, and they're not for agitation," says Nirmal Singh, a Phagwara travel agent. In nearby Ramgariah College, the state president Makhan Singh Sadhu of the CPI(M)-affiliated Students Federation of India, which claims 50,000 members in the state, said: "We support the accord. It was a source of great relief among students." Concurs Jalandhar farmer K.S.Mann: "People were fed up with the tension. The farmer's position is now the same as that of the trader in the town: he has to get three crops and cannot waste time agitating."

More promising signs of normalcy come from other quarters. Longowal's bhog attracted some two lakh people; the pro-boycott meeting in Amritsar only a fraction of that. There is some evidence that people at large are now willing to stick their necks out and cooperate with the police in apprehending terrorists. In one incident in Haryana village in Hoshiarpur district, a suspected terrorist was overpowered when he attempted to snatch a scooter. "Only a handful of people talk about Bhindranwale any more," says Jathedar Mukhtar Singh from a village near Amritsar, "but they know they can't find a man like Longowal." Displaying a commendable knowledge of history, he likens the Punjab accord to the agreement signed between Ranjit Singh and William Bentinck in 1831. The spirit of Longowal is clearly on the ascendant, which leads an official to ask metaphorically: "Whom will Punjab canonise, Longowal or Bhindranwale?"

Not surprisingly, then, both the Akali Dal and the Congress(I) have made the Rajiv Gandhi-Longowal accord the centre-piece of their election platform. All Akali candidates are sworn to support it, but the Akalis are aware that the accord didn't tackle each and every one of the issues that they originally brought up, such as the persons still in jail after Operation Bluestar and the treatment of army deserters. These are still live issues with the UAD, and the Akali Dal manifesto promises a general amnesty if the party is brought to power and an inquiry into all the violence in Punjab these past years.

Both the Akali Dal and the Congress(I) say they will also appeal for Hindu-Sikh amity and pledge themselves to the economic development of the state—all additional reasons for the widespread feeling in the state that the two parties do indeed have an understanding or that with the vote communally divided, they will eventually end up forming a coalition government. Indeed, there is a current feeling that the interests of the state might be best served by this but, as Swaran Singh says: "It is too early to talk about coalition. In any case, it is very difficult to forge a coalition between two parties who think of themselves as alternatives."

Some people are beginning to wonder what will happen if the Akalis, who have never before won more than 58 seats and that too with the support of the then Janata Party in 1977, aren't able to make a government. Balwant Singh says flatly that this will be taken to be a rejection of the accord by the Sikhs, an interpretation which would give muscle to the UAD which has called for a boycott, but Congress(I) spokesmen deride this claim, saying that the accord is the centre-piece of their party's campaign and whichever party loses, the accord triumphs.

That triumph will be meaningful if the terrorists and the boycotters are kept at bay, if the election goes through reasonably smoothly, if there isn't too much blood letting, if Punjab is prevented from becoming another Assam with a farcical election and a ministry without popular sanction. The fear of violence may well ensure a low turnout in the elections, but this only serves to emphasise the gamble that Rajiv Gandhi has taken in his attempt to put Punjab back on the rails. After all, it is the accord which is the issue of the election and and if the election isn't credible the accord could suffer.

No matter who wins, the future is daunting. There are still militants to pacify, terrorists to combat and issues to tackle. But, as Vice-Chancellor of Ludhiana Agricultural University, Sukhdev Singh says: "There can be no two opinions that the ultimate stability will be with a popular government." Whether that stability will be achieved, the next two weeks will show. But after years of despair and turmoil, it is at last possible to travel through Punjab and return with the stirrings of optimism.

—SUMAN DUBEY with GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB ELECTIONS

Growing Polarisation

IN MOST elections, the ultimate question is: who will win? That may be true of the Punjab election as well, but it is an election with a difference. After three years of turmoil, the more pertinent questions are: will the elections produce a credible government? Will the Government restore stability and the normal democratic processes?

Punjab has other unique facets. Each vote cast, irrespective of the party it goes to, will be a vote for the Rajiv Gandhi-Longowal accord. A vote deliberately held back will be a plus for the poll boycotters led by Baba Joginder Singh's United Akali Dal. In Punjab, the percentage of electors who exercise their franchise—the turn-out rate—has traditionally been high. In the last two Lok Sabha elections in 1977 and 1980, the turn-out rates were 15 per cent and 6 per cent higher than the corresponding all-India averages of 55 per cent and 56 per cent. The state's relatively higher per capita income and the strong links between the two dominant political parties, and religion, caste, language and occupation may have something to do with it. But it is clear that if there is no widespread violence, a turn-out as high as 63 per cent—the state's average in the 1980 general elections—would indicate the people's emphatic support to the Rajiv-Longowal accord.

In the first instance it would seem that the Assam elections of 1983 hold some clues to the outcome of the coming polls in Punjab. Assam too was rocked by violence—if anything, with wider participation—and the elections were held in the third week of February 1983 in the face of a strong call for boycott of the polls. The outcome of those elections was far from gratifying: polling had to be adjourned in 16 constituencies, was countermanded in one and the turn-out was an abysmal 33 per cent compared to a normal level of above 60 per cent in the state. The Assam elections produced anything but a credible popular government.

However, on closer scrutiny the similarities between the Assam of 1983 and the Punjab of 1985 seem to be superficial. In the first place, the Punjab elections are preceded by an important accord between the two principal actors, there was no similar pre-election accord in Assam in 1983. Secondly, going by the number of nominations filed, the Punjabis have taken to the election with much more enthusiasm than the Assamese did in 1983. More pointedly, in Assam there were four constituencies where no more than one candidate filed his nomination and the elections were uncontested; no such thing has happened in any constituency in Punjab.

Perhaps there may be a closer parallel between the Punjab of 1985 and the West Bengal of 1972. The Bengal elections of 1972 followed Naxalite trouble in some districts in the state. In two of the districts affected by terrorism—Jalpaiguri and Midnapore—the turn-out fell from 62 per cent and 72 per cent in 1969 to 55 per cent and 58 per cent in 1972. Even if Punjab goes the way of West Bengal, the credibility of its government will not be seriously impaired.

With every election there is growing evidence of increasing polarisation in Punjab politics. The proportion of total votes shared by the Congress(I) and Akalis between themselves in the vidhan sabha elections has progressively risen from roughly 57 per cent in 1967 to 72 per cent in 1980—1977 being an aberration due to the Janata-Akali electoral adjustments. The Lok Sabha results tell a similar story. This tendency towards polarisation is corroborated by the high and increasing value of the index of opposition unity—the proportion of total non-Congress(I) votes going to the major Opposition in a constitu-

Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

ency—in Punjab of late.

Past voting behaviour does not reveal whether the communal divide will be accentuated in the coming election. There does not seem to be any simple correlation between the religious composition of the population in any individual district and the percentage of votes polled by either of the two parties. For example, according to the 1981 census, Hindus constitute as little as 22.5 per cent and 20.6 per cent of the total population in the two districts of Amritsar and Faridkot respectively. Yet in the vidhan sabha elections of 1980, the Congress(I) got as much as 45 per cent and 44 per cent of the popular vote. Contrary to political folklore, the districts of Gurdaspur, Amritsar, Jalandhar, Kapurthala and Hoshiarpur to the north of the Sutlej and Ludhiana adjoining it—with a total number of 64 assembly constituencies—which contain a predominantly Sikh population, constitute the traditional strong support base of the Congress(I) Party in Punjab.

But it is possible to be more definite about the index of opposition unity. In 1977, the Akali alliance with the Janata Party contributed partly to Congress(I) support dropping from 46 per cent in 1971 to 35 per cent. The Congress(I) mustered 49 per cent of the all-India vote in the parliamentary elections of December 1984 and this time there is a Janata-Akali accord on the distribution of parliamentary seats. If the percentage of votes for the Congress(I) were to come down from its 1980 pinnacle of 53 per cent by as much as 3 per cent, keeping in view the Janata-Akali electoral understanding, in normal circumstances we would not expect the Congress(I) to get more than eight seats compared to the dozen that it held in the last Lok Sabha.

Swings or changes in the percentage of votes in favour of the Congress(I) or against it, follow a distinct geographical pattern in Punjab. Past voting behaviour shows three zones of homogeneous swings: one of moderate swing and the other two of extremes. The electoral outcome in Punjab crucially hinges on the kind of swings that these three zones—shown in the map—are going to experience.

No two successive elections in Punjab have seen the same party come to power. Going by this historical regularity the odds are with the Akali Dal. However, a scrutiny of the 1980 result shows that the Congress(I)'s victory in 1980 was slender enough in spite of the pro-Congress(I) wave of the time. A sensitivity analysis shows that at a slightly higher level of opposition unity than in 1980, a one per cent swing away from the Congress(I) can upset the Congress(I) applecart in the vidhan sabha.

—ASHOK LAHIRI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The company that brought core technology to the forefront, now brings telecommunication to the fore...

One word has taken ESCORTS to the forefront in India . . . ENTERPRISE.

A commitment that has redefined the frontiers of progress in agriculture, transport, industry and ship repair.

ESCORTS' commitment to these vital sectors has been not only by imbibing advanced technologies, but also by adapting them to suit Indian requirements.

A process which continuously offers an access to some of the best names and technologies worldwide.

MAHLE-pistons, FORD-tractors, YAMAHA-motorcycles, J.C. BAMFORD-excavators, RANSOMES & RAPIER-cranes . . . technologies from Germany, U.S.A., Japan and U.K.

And now JEUMONT SCHNEIDER of France—world leader in telecommunication and office automation technology.

This collaboration promises to usher in a new state-of-the-art technology in telecommunication with electronic PABX (Private Automatic Branch Exchanges) and allied systems.

Indeed, ESCORTS' commitment to technology begins by being upfront, because to compete in the future, one cannot exist with the past.

ADAPTING ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY FOR INDIA'S CORE NEEDS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JEUMONT-SCHNEIDER

THE FIRST IN DIGITAL PABX WORLDWIDE

ESCORTS LIMITED
Electronics Division,
18/4, Mathura Road,
Faridabad 121 002.

LINTAS(D) ESC ED 1 258

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Name Game

IF BATAVIA can be renamed Jakarta, Peking can become Beijing and Lyallpur become Faisalabad, why can't Patna get back its old name of Pataliputra? And before you can ask that trite question—"what's in a name?"—Lt-Gen (retd) S. K.Sinha will point out the rechristening of Benares as Varanasi, Baroda as Vadodara, Poona as Pune and Vizagapatnam as Vishakhapatnam. He has a point and last fortnight he tried to drive it home when he led a two-lakh signature campaign to Mayor K. N. Sahay in support of his suggestion.

S.K. Sinha

For quite some time, the self-professed "son of Bihar" has been leading a one-man crusade for reaffirming pride in the state's lost heritage. Sinha had launched his campaign early last year, saying that the name would be a constant reminder that this city was once the capital of the illustrious Magadha empire. The response, Sinha claims, has been massive.

House-Warming

MUSH doesn't belong to just Mills and Boon and politicians too are made of flesh and blood. So if a leader gets emotionally attached to his government bungalow, you can't really blame him. S. Bangarappa will tell you that. The ubiquitous Karnataka Opposition leader made it known last fortnight in the Vidhana Soudha that he has a yen for a government dwelling and not just any dwelling would do.

Bangarappa complained that it was now six months since he was elected leader of the Opposition and the Government was yet to allot him an official residence. And he would have no other house, he said, except the one he occupied as revenue minister under Gundu Rao four years ago. After all, he had lived there so long he had naturally grown attached to it.

D. BADURAJ

Veeranna with family: dishoused

But the house that Bangarappa wanted was already occupied by K. Veeranna, the state's minister for small savings and prisons. Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde politely requested Veeranna to vacate the bungalow and move into the state guest-house till he could find him another place.

But while Bangarappa's problem is solved, Veeranna's troubles have only begun. So small are their two rooms in the guest-house that Veeranna and family find themselves bumping into the furniture and one another. And food is so expensive at Rs 75 per meal that the minister's wife has been forced to get two kerosene stoves and start cooking in the bedroom. There is one consolation though: Veeranna is saving the Government some Rs 4,000 per month by way of rent. After all, he's not the small savings minister for nothing. But some would call that carrying devotion a bit too far.

Travails of the Tuskers

AMBER was red last fortnight thanks to a jumbo-sized problem. When Moti the elephant died and raised a stink at Amber in Rajasthan, for days, citizens of this ancient Rajput capital moved about with hankies on their noses and no one was willing to give the jumbo a funeral. While the huge carcass lay rotting, the elephant's owner and civic authorities haggled over whose responsibility it was to cart it away. Finally, the tusker's owner managed it with the help of a contractor who charged a whopping Rs 1,000 for the formidable task.

SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

Jaipur's Jumbos

The incident may or may not have grabbed provincial headlines but it certainly focussed attention on the plight of Jaipur's 39 or so elephants, who now live in the more squalid part of the walled city called Mohalla Mahawatan. Though it still remains the elephant stable of the country, the city has become increasingly inhospitable to its gargantuan residents.

If tuskers can still be seen in the city, it is only because of the tourists. Enterprising mahouts have for long cashed in on the foreign tourist's penchant for Raj remnants and made a living by hiring out elephants for joy rides. But the going is not easy.

For each trip, a mahout has to pay five rupees to the state Archaeology Department, another five to the local authorities and a massive Rs 15 to the middlemen travel agents. And not to mention the cost of maintaining the beasts, which leaves the poor mahouts with practically nothing. Their feed alone eats up whatever little is left of the day's earnings. "At this rate," Abdul Rashid warns, "the elephants will start vanishing from the city." Hopefully not in the manner that Moti did.

Hustling the Hustlers

IN CALCUTTA, as in every other metropolis, the world's oldest profession has spilled out on to the streets. Though streetwalkers are nothing new to the city, of late their breed has burgeoned. Overcrowding and high maintenance costs have forced them to move from their traditional kothas and backlanes to the busier thoroughfares. So the flesh trade has now shifted from the notorious Sonagachhee to the bustling sidewalks of Chowringhee. And none's the happier for it. Least of all the custodians of law and order.

The incensed policemen are determined to give the prostitutes a run for their money. So it was all hellfire and brimstone when the khaki crusaders swooped down on these "corrupting influences" recently. The city police's detective department announced that it had taken a "serious view" of the alarming rise in indecent public behaviour with prostitutes openly soliciting customers at streetcorners and crossroads.

The police rounded up as many as 75 streetwalkers in one fortnight alone. But the defenders of the law are often defeated by the law itself which believes in taking a not-too-harsh view of these "fallen women". So it was not long before love's labour was lost and the hustlers were back hawking their wares.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Need we say a word about the new Technika Core."

Mr. A. Harada, Japan
Technical Advisor

The TECHNIKA Colour TV—the premium CORE 207R3E model in the TOSHIBA range is a product of the finest Japanese technology. TOSHIBA quality is proven, trusted and tried-across the world and is what makes the Technika the finest colour set available to you.

A hi-tech product of the 85's, the TECHNIKA CORE 207R3E offers a unique visual experience in colour viewing with features to match.

- An exclusive in-built non glare screen to protect its colour tube and safeguard it from dust.
- A magnificent, stylish, fully moulded High Impact Styrene cabinet. A sleek sophisticated Bottom control panel, to allow unhampared "full-screen" viewing pleasure.
- 12 Channel Soft-touch Selector with Electronic Tuning.
- Cordless full function Remote Control. Also available without Remote.
- Blackstripe fast warm-up picture tube.
- Super-wide automatic voltage regulator.
- Fully tropicalised set to work under the most rigorous Indian conditions.
- An "After-Sales" service team comprising of company personnel specially trained by Japanese Engineers to provide instant service whenever needed.

The TECHNIKA CORE 207R3E. A whole new dimension in TV viewing. Simply because it is "The original"

technika
CORE 207R3E

Japanese technology -- to the Core! TOSHIBA.

Mfgs. BOLTZEN PVT. LTD.
A2/8 Safdarjung Enclave, New Delhi-110 029. Tel 602430, 608516, 605451

HURRY!
Special Introductory Offer for limited period only.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The citizens of Paris hated the Eiffel Tower. Soon after it was built in 1889, there was a public outcry to 'demolish the monster'. It survived, however–and is now recognised as a marvel of construction and design. Every day, thousands of sight-seers climb to its summit for a bird's-eye view of Paris... on a custom-built elevator created by Otis.

O

Otis is the world's unchallenged number one in vertical transportation: twice as large as the largest competitor, and a major force in 130 countries. In India, Otis uses the very latest international knowhow... perfected for Indian conditions through indigenous research.

For over 30 years, Otis has been India's biggest name in vertical transportation: over 10,000 installations backed by 49 service centers across the length and breadth of India.

T

Otis is a subsidiary of the United Technologies Corporation, which spends over 2.5 million dollars every day on research alone... one of the largest research budgets in the world.

Otis-India has harnessed global technology to develop elevators for diverse needs. High-speed elevators for skyscrapers like the NDMC-Civic Centre, New Delhi. High-technology elevators for national projects such as the Space Centre, Shriharikota. Micro-level stretcher elevators for medical centers like the National Hospital, Bombay. Sleek glass elevators for hotels like the Holiday Inn, Bangalore. And the latest breed of escalators for public places like the underground railway stations in Calcutta.

I

The Otis Test Tower on the outskirts of Bombay is the only one of its kind in the country — and the tallest among all Otis research centers worldwide.

Add to this the world-famous "Otis Maintenance"... and you'll agree it's worth planning well in advance for an Otis.

S

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

OTIS The international number one.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tata... Tata Bearings.
The name instantly conjures up a vision,
a promise of progress... the assurance of a new era in the world of bearings.

Tata... the name that has been at the core of industrial India for decades.
Tata... the name that spells quality and reliability.

Tata... the name that is equally well-known as a pioneer in precision rolled rings.

ONCE IN A WHILE

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And, so, from rings to bearings... a step forward, but with the strength of Tata Steel, surely the beginning of a new movement in bearings!
Tata Bearings... born to set the pace.

TATA
BEARINGS
Born of steel... born to lead.

LEADER IS BORN...

A Division of
TATA STEEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

ZEENAT AMAN

When the Bouquets Run Out

IN 1972 she was the doped-out flower child in Dev Anand's Hare Rama Hare Krishna who made chillums respectable. In 1978 she turned stark ethnic for Raj Kapoor's Satyam Shivam Sundaram by donning a scrap of a sari that revealed more than the movie itself. Two years later she was the swinging crooner in Feroz Khan's Qurbani and had the whole nation hooked on disco fever while she flung her sarong to the winds. But where is Zeenat Aman in 1985 ? What is the face, the life, the lot of a sex symbol like five years later?

The face has now frozen into a Lakme mask of beauty, but it could be Lux. The famous bosom juts out modestly from a Pattaya Beach T-shirt her current boyfriend bought her on holiday last month. And the waist, belted into rippingly tight jeans, is still breathtaking, for no other reason than it belies rumours of a three-month pregnancy. Recently when Bombay's film press ran stories that she was going to have a baby, the irony was that the news no longer made magazine covers. Sandwiched in black-and-white obscurity between full-colour exploits of the younger breed in Stardust — is that how an erstwhile national bird of India begins to shed plumage ?

Not quite. Now 33, Zeenie Baby continues to live in the tiny, two-bedroomed flat she has shared with her mother since she was eight. Its two remarkable features are the absence of any visible sign of a career in the movies: no bouncer at the door, no tacky trophies, photographs or mementos of the Big Time on the shelves or walls. And its air of unflashy discretion is accentuated by its sparkling cleanliness (boxes of tissues and serviettes conveniently placed, and Miss Aman on all fours trying to asphyxiate a single fly with a spray gun).

Over tea, she coolly reflects on the aftermath of stardom. "What's changed is not having your name on the marquee, not having a million people following you around and not having 500 bouquets arrive on your birthday. But I'm the sort of person who when I got 500 bouquets used to remind myself of the day when I'd get 50. Now if I get 50 I laugh and say, 'Watch out, you'd be lucky if you get five next year'. I've always been quite practical about my life, level-headed, down-to-earth. I'm the never-look-back type.

"And yet the things that really matter haven't changed. I've never had sycophants or chamchas hanging around, so my friends remain the same. I've never flaunted money, so I continue to live exactly the same way. As for work, I don't really want it, I don't need it. I've done it all, seen it all. I worked like a horse with blinkers on for 15 years, waking up each morning, putting on makeup, rushing to the studio, learning the lines, taking off the makeup and sitting with an Urdu tutor in the evenings to improve my diction. I had no time to think. The magazines used to call me 'Miss Professional' but I worked so hard to be successful that it was like going back to school. I missed all the things that young girls enjoy most. I missed all the years of being a teenager."

She laughs, speaking softly, in faintly American-accented English, looking you directly in the eye and inwardly scrutinising each question for a thorough but thoughtful answer. It's the demeanour that once created the popular impression of a ruthless, calculating, high-spirited adventuress who swung from one movie moghul to another with the dexterity of Tarzan in the jungle, who went through one male star after another like a dose of salts but always remembered to collect her dues from producers in time. But she was the one who got away: never had nervous breakdowns, never whined when the lovers went back home, did not seek refuge in drugs or religion, and now, has the good grace to coolly dissect it over an exquisitely-poured cup of tea.

She realises that she's one of the few successful female stars of her generation who has neither cracked up nor is on her way to becoming an exotic basket case. "You know why stardom screws up people ? Because it gives you too many choices. As a 20-year-old I was making as much money as, well, as much money as it was possible for a 20-year-old to make in India. That sort of thing could drive people nuts. But I put my money in the bank. I came from a matriarchal family, and was always treated as an individual. I never kept a secretary. My Mum and I handled every producer ourselves, right in this sitting room. So when people ask me today, 'What are you worth ?', my answer is, 'Money in the bank'."

But the Zeenat Aman the public knew, and hungrily devoured, was made up of more than sugar, spice and hard cash.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

With Raj Kapoor (top); Praveen Babi and Shabana Azmi in Ashanti and Amitabh in Lawaris

kittens. "There may not be another generation of stars like us. Amitabh and Rekha, Hema Malini and I, only because the face of the film industry is changing with video and TV. But that doesn't mean the film industry will die. It doesns't mean there won't be more stars. In India there will always be hero worship."

Almost disinterestedly she concedes that her arrival on the film scene may have helped change conventional stereotypes of the woman's image: "Before us there were either the saintly heroines or the nasty vamps. Parveen Babi and I brought in shades of grey." But while Babi ended up a victim of the system, Zeenat Aman insists she'll be around. "I'll always find work because it's the only business I know. I'm not looking for work today but if I need it tomorrow I'll go out and get it. Obviously I can't be a 24-year-old's leading lady nor can I play his mother. It's a bit unfortunate that just when one has the histrionic experience and enough glamour, there aren't any of the older-women parts so common in western cinema. But age or ageing doesn't bother me. And if I can't find parts I'll go into film production, TV, advertising, anything."

What obsesses her these days is the thought of being a wife and mother, her doubts typical of any 30-year-old professional making the transition. "I want to be married. I want to give it my best shot. It's something I want badly but am terribly afraid of — the thought of being accountable and answerable to one person for the rest of my life." Six months ago she broke away from a two-year-old relationship with a Canadian that was most likely to end in marriage because it meant going to live in Canada. It was not only that a relationship with an Indian intervened but that she couldn't give up Bombay, "all the humidity and hell of it, the little street urchins who follow me squealing Dekho, dekho Zeenat Aman jaata hai." She doesn't know where the new relationship will take her.

But she does know that "for the first time in my adult life I have the time and chance to live an average, normal life. For me it's the biggest change. Sometimes I just want to lie in bed all day, and do absolutely nothing: no shooting, no make-up, no producer hanging outside. Sometimes I don't want to leave the house for days. Maybe, I will go off and get married. Maybe I'll go ahead and have a baby. Who knows? I'm a woman of substance now."

—SUNIL SETHI in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Management of Escorts Limited thanks over 25,000 investors for their overwhelming response to the offer of Rs. 20 crores Non-Convertible Debentures which has been subscribed for over Rs. 30 crores.

ESCORTS LIMITED

REGISTERED OFFICE: H-2 Connaught Circus, New Delhi-110 001

PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's First Microprocessor Based Electronic PABX. From BPL.

The country's first indigenous Microprocessor based Electronic Private Automatic Branch Exchange [EPABX] comes from BPL – the first Company in the private sector to secure an industrial licence from the Government for the manufacture of EPABX.

BPL's EPABX, field-tested and proven, is working satisfactorily in several locations. Offering upto 237 internal and 64 external lines, it caters to your vital communication needs and boosts all-round productivity, accelerates decision making and controls telephone expenses.

With an experience of nearly 2 decades in electronics and over a decade in communication, BPL is indeed a force to reckon with in these fields. Further, BPL's comprehensive in-house systems and engineering capability has helped integrate computers and communication.

BPL's Power Line Carrier Communication System and Switching Equipment have been performing effectively since 1972, in almost every electricity board in the country. That's not all. BPL's Electronic Private Automatic Exchange which provides voice and data communication has been installed in many reputed Government and Private organisations as well.

Apart from the Electronic PABX, BPL's existing Business Computers, Word Processors and Automatic Plain Paper Copiers provide a single source integrated solution to meet today's office automation requirements.

The Electronic PABX manufacturing facility is supported by seven integrated factories, three R & D units, in-house manufacture of critical components, comprehensive tool rooms and PCB plants.

The Electronic PABX from BPL – The Single Largest Integrated Source of Office Automation Products in India.

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

Computers ● Communication ● Components

Instrumentation (Industrial, Medical & Measurement) ● Office Automation ● Consumer Electronics

BPL 1150

Central Marketing Organisation: BPL-Centre, 32, Church Street, Bangalore-560 001. Tel: 52321/2/6. Tlx: 0845-511.

Branch Offices at: Bangalore, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, New Delhi.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAJAN LAL

A Timely Acquittal

AN EXONERATION, taking place in undue haste and in questionable circumstances, creates more doubts than clearing them. This is precisely what happened last fortnight when Jaswant Singh, the special judge to whom the Union Government had referred the opposition allegations of corruption and nepotism against Bhajan Lal, the Haryana chief minister, gave him a clean chit holding that there was no prima facie case against him. In reality, the inquiry followed no procedure, left gaping holes in evidence-collection and left a murky trail of controversy. Principal Correspondent SUMIT MITRA and Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA investigated the manner of the inquiry and its real worth in the context of the political battle in Haryana. Their report:

BHAJAN Lal has done it again. The wily Haryana chief minister, who had once been an amateur wrestler, trapped his adversaries in an immobilising grip last fortnight as Jaswant Singh, the special judge appointed by the Central Government to look into the Opposition charges of graft and nepotism against him, submitted that there was no prima facie case in the complaint.

"I am vindicated. I hope all rumour-mongering about me in the media and elsewhere will now stop once for all. I hope there will be no more of character assassination." These were Bhajan Lal's words at an exultantly summoned press conference at Delhi's Haryana Bhavan where he raved and ranted against Lok Dal leaders, and regaled the audience by digging up faded records from the past that suggested, among other things, that Devi Lal had once betrayed the freedom movement to the British, and that Charan Singh had connived in his wife's wrong-doings. When someone asked if he had anything particular against Charan Singh, a former prime minister, he testily replied: "I am talking about Charan Singh's wife, not his concubine."

He could be forgiven his excessive outbursts since his exoneration could not have been timelier. The Rajiv-Longowal accord on Punjab, concluded in July without regard to his repeated strong views on the subject, had put him in a tight spot. And just while his stock appeared to be tumbling, came the 53-page charge-sheet to the prime minister, signed by 22 opposition MLA's of Haryana and 25 opposition MP's including Charan Singh, Jagjivan Ram and Madhu Dandavate. The sheer fact that Rajiv took notice of the charges and ordered an inquiry gave Bhajan Lal a few anxious moments, at least sealing his lips in the sensitive weeks following the Punjab accord. And then, just as everyone began to doubt whether the chief minister may not after all manage to stand up again in the arena, he stormed back into the battle with all of his guns blazing.

His reprieve also provided a shot in the arm for his party in Hindu-dominated Haryana where it has faced much flak as a result of the accord, which is generally viewed as a sop to the Sikhs. And it was just as well that Jaswant Singh held him not guilty because otherwise the winning chances of the Congress(I) could have been undermined by just that much of extra baggage.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"I am vindicated. I hope all the rumour-mongering about me... will now stop once for all. I hope there will be no more of character assassination."

BHAJAN LAL
chief minister, Haryana

The main plank of the charges against Bhajan Lal was that he had allowed Anoop Bishnoi, married to his daughter Roshni Devi in 1981, to acquire an industrial empire in the few years since the marriage. The next part of the allegation referred to reported instances of individual corruption, of grabbing land in the names of relatives, illegally acquiring municipal plots, allotting coal rakes to non-existent firms, rack-renting nationalised banks to fill private coffers, and misusing power in general.

The inquiry was politically effective but the manner of its conducting raised more questions than it answered. In fact, it was not even a proper inquiry done by a commission constituted under the Commission of Enquiry Act, 1952. Thus, no procedural obligation, such as hearing both the parties in detail, summoning witnesses on both sides, and even-handed weighing of the conflicting arguments, was adhered to. The slapdash manner of the inquiry is evident from the lightning, if not unseemly, speed with which it was conducted. The memorandum was presented to the prime minister on July 4; acting on it, K.P.Singh Deo, Union minister of state for personnel and administrative reforms, wrote to Jaswant Singh on July 27 asking him to conduct a "preliminary inquiry", adding that his name had been suggested to the Government by the Chief Justice of India, P.N.Bhagwati; the Government notification was gazetted on July 31, with Jaswant Singh taking charge the following day. And, in 29 days flat, he had typed out, with the help of four stenographers, the 150-page report, divided into two parts and bound in blue covers. Said Charan Singh: "This is justice in the computer age. Even an inquiry against a village chowkidar takes a longer time."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE STYLE of the inquiry could not but be unique because it was, technically, not at all an inquiry but only a reference. Without concealing his embarrassment, Jaswant Singh himself admitted to INDIA TODAY: "I tried but could not find any parallel to it. The S. R. Das Commission against Pratap Singh Kairon; the Vaidyalingam Commission against Morarji Desai and Charan Singh... nothing provided an exact model. So I had to evolve my own procedure." And the procedure he evolved was as follows:

- a notice was first served on each individual memorialist, asking him to file a supplementary statement if he so wished;
- Bhajan Lal was given a copy of the memorandum, and he filed his reply. Anoop Bishnoi also followed suit; (altogether 23 memorialists appeared before Jaswant Singh on August 12, and, as the judge says with a hint of disdain, "submitted something in writing");
- when the memorialists demanded a copy of Bhajan Lal's reply, the judge refused saying it was "confidential", and narrated to them only the substance of the reply, or what he deemed to be its substance;
- then he summoned "original documents", or, in other words, documents that appeared to him to be original and not what the complainants wanted to be produced before him;
- he invited 18 people, including Bhajan Lal, Bishnoi, and a host of officials all of whom had been indicted in the complaint for being the accomplices of the twosome, to depose before him.

At the end of this rather bizarre exercise, Jaswant Singh remarked with discernible self-approval: "I got down to the task of dictating my report." The Opposition rightly felt cheated. S.C.Mohunta, deputy leader of the Lok Dal in the Rajya Sabha, said: "It is a fraud on the people. Besides, it violates the principle of natural justice, not to speak of its turning the Evidence Act upside down. How can an accused person be let off only on the strength of his own evidence, without giving the prosecution a chance ?"

HARI OM GULATI

The S.R.Das Commission... the Vaidyalingam Commission... nothing provided an exact model. So I evolved my own procedure."

JASWANT SINGH
special judge

Mohunta cited the example of the Antulay trial in which a private complaint activated the court to order a suo moto inquiry, and observed that "it leaves us with no option other than securing legal redress".

It baffled even the Law Ministry why Rajiv, in post haste, short-circuited judicial procedures and chose instead to merely refer it to a retired judge. Jaswant Singh, who is 71 now, was of course suggested by Chief Justice Bhagwati but apparently no notice was taken of his advancing years, of his rather undistinguished stint on the bench of the Supreme Court between 1976 and 1979, and the fact of possible aberrations arising out of his accepting, almost without a break, assignments proffered by the state. From 1980 till last April, Jaswant Singh headed a committee for reorganisation of the high court benches, entitling him all these years to the salary and perquisites paid to a sitting judge of the Supreme Court. Besides, his son, Anil Dev Singh, a senior advocate at the Supreme Court, was a panel lawyer for the Haryana Government: he relinquished his charge only on July 31, the day of his father's appointment. Said legal wizard and BJP Vice-President Ram Jethmalani: "It would have been only proper if a sitting judge of the Supreme Court, or even a retired judge with indisputable pre-eminence, had been chosen for the work."

Jaswant Singh's report, however, was a closely-guarded secret. Only five copies were made. The judge retained one copy, the rest being submitted to the Department of Personnel and the Prime Minister's Secretariat. Within an hour of its submission, however, the government-controlled radio and television were reporting only its convenient conclusion—that the inquiry found no prima facie case against Bhajan Lal. It was a calculated leak, aimed at drawing propaganda mileage and concealing the distressing fact that the report, as the Opposition claims, might have been just a politically expedient cover-up shrouded in impeccable legal phraseology.

The key sentence that recurs time and again in the 19 chapters of the report is that it is based on, in Jaswant Singh's words, "material made available to me". This statement alone is an admission of the passive nature of the inquiry, an owning up of the fact that it accepted what Bhajan Lal deposed, barring the memorandum that obviously started it all. Despite this inherent shortcoming that stymies the inquiry, there were some obvious contradictions. For example:

- the memorandum charged that Bhajan Lal had acquired, through a fraudulent sale deed and by a benami purchase in the name of two allegedly non-existent people, Hardwari and Het Ram, a large tract of prime commercial land at Fatehabad from the Haryana

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"This is justice in the computer age. Even an inquiry against a chowkidar takes a longer time."

CHARAN SINGH
president, Lok Dal

Urban Development Authority, a state government undertaking. But, while investigating into the charge, Jaswant Singh was merely content with seeing the signatures of these reportedly non-existent people on the sale documents and never cared to summon the duo as witnesses, thus taking the chief minister at his word;

► regarding the charge that Bhajan Lal had improperly allowed a valuable piece of land at the Hissar bus-stand to be allotted, at nominal rates, to a charitable trust favoured by him, Jaswant Singh called only the transport secretary to the Haryana Government, a creature of the Bhajan Lal administration, and never summoned others bidding for the same piece of land, who would have been the natural prosecution witnesses. This is despite the clear imputation in the complaint that the charitable trust had no past record of philanthropic work and had in fact planned to utilise a large chunk of the allotted land to build shops and flats;

► there were points that proved substantially true even on the cursory inquiry conducted by Jaswant Singh. The chief minister had given many of his private residences on rent to banks, in many cases to banks under the direct control of the state Government. But Jaswant Singh quibbled over the actual rent (that is, rent on paper) charged by Bhajan Lal, as opposed to the rent alleged by the memorialists, and skipped over the inherent impropriety involved in a chief minister using his own government as a virtual trading partner. Said Chandrawati, Lok Dal MLA : "This is as vulgar as for Rajiv Gandhi to offer his private farm at Mehrauli on rent to Government."

However, the Opposition too cannot escape a share of the blame for having committed gaffes in drafting sections of the memorandum which, in its turn, undermined the credibility of the charge-sheet as a whole. The most serious of them related to its assumption that Anoop Bishnoi was a man of no consequence until he was married to Bhajan Lal's daughter. The memorandum also listed as many as 25 companies purported to have sprung up under Bishnoi's direct or indirect

"This (Bhajan Lal's renting out his houses to banks) is as vulgar as for Rajiv Gandhi to offer his private farm at Mehrauli on rent to government"

CHANDRAWATI
MLA, Lok Dal

ANOOP BISHNOI

High Pedigree

HE IS bright. He is young. He is rich. And if all these qualifications are stacked on his side, he cannot be blamed merely for being Bhajan Lal's son-in-law. Yet the media and the Opposition indeed treated Anoop Bishnoi, the 25-year-old go-getter husband of Roshni, the Haryana chief minister's pretty daughter, with unnatural hostility and suspicion for months together. But the inquiry led by Jaswant Singh found him not guilty last fortnight.

"I am not upset because they say I've taken undue favours from my father-in-law. But what hurts me is the propaganda that I've no brains and that my family had no money till I got married to the chief minister's daughter," says the soft-spoken Bishnoi—taciturn, suave, safari-clad, and looking every inch like the fast-climbing entrepreneur that he is. His miniscule industrial empire at Hissar in Haryana, founded only four years ago, already has a turnover of Rs 24 crore to which another Rs 26 crore is expected to be added by next year. But Bishnoi indeed has a lot more to say about himself besides his company's balance-sheets. He passed out from the prestigious Doon School with a first division after which he obtained a first class in economics from Delhi's St Stephen's College; and, even while he was putting his first company on the drawing board, at age 20, he got a first class MBA degree from the Indian Institute of Management in Ahmedabad, the Mecca of professional management.

In addition, he has an impeccable lineage. His family always enjoyed a pater familias status within the farming community of Bishnois whose one million members are spread out all over north India. In the colonial days, the family held 10,000 acres of land in the two highly fertile tehsils of Fazilka and Abohar in Punjab bordering Haryana. Even now the family controls, between its members, a total holding of 900 acres. Anoop's father, Bhupendra Kumar Bishnoi, is a gentleman farmer in the mould of the American mid-west. He did his masters in economics and, besides managing the family's huge tract of land, pioneered aerial spraying in India and founded one of the country's earliest flying training schools, of which Nehru was a patron. In 1981-82, the time of Anoop's wedding, the net wealth of the family was assessed at Rs 31.25 lakh. Said Bhajan Lal: "It was a relationship for which my family could be envied, not Anoop's."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The opposition leaders, whose memorandum to the prime minister in July formed the basis of the inquiry against Bhajan Lal, evidently committed a faux pas in misreading the status, financial as well as social, of the Bishnois over a period of time. The memorandum reads: "At the time of the engagement of Roshni Devi with Anoop Kumar Bishnoi, the financial and monetary position of Anoop Kumar Bishnoi was in doldrums...this family did not have any land or property in Haryana before the engagement." Elsewhere it says: "From an ordinary student without any men-

BHAWAN SINGH

"These memorialists must have...got hold of all my loan applications and thought they'd hit the jackpot."

ANOOP KUMAR BISHNOI
Bhajan Lal's son-in-law

tionable assets Anoop Kumar Bishnoi became a flourishing industrial magnate in a short span..." The Opposition obviously did not do its homework well.

What seemed impressive to others, and suspicious to Bhajan Lal's critics, was Bishnoi's abrupt take-off close on the heels of his marriage. The first to come up was Bhanu Steel Private Limited (see chart), the mini steel plant with a paid-up capital of Rs 75 lakh and a present annual turnover of Rs 12 crore. Next to follow was Bhanu Industries, the cold rolling plant, and Associated Distilleries, which is graduating from making country liquor into manufacturing India-made Foreign Liquor from this year. Bishnoi astutely began adding on to these new units with a view to forward integration of his existing product mix. Thus, the units under implementation now include: Bhanu Foils, a hot strip rolling plant; Haryana Strips, a plant for hot rolling of semis and bars; and Haryana Foils, which is basically an extension of the existing cold rolling mill.

"I did things fast and I did them generally well," says Bishnoi with a trace of justified pride. The setting up of the hot rolling units is about to put him on the threshold of a newer, and a superior, market—particularly the automobile industry—from that of the small-time utensil makers. "I love steel but I'm not hooked on to it," says he, adding that "once my steel set-up gets going I'm going to diversify into totally new areas." Electronics, computers, name it, and Bishnoi has a project stacked in his Samsonite brief case. "Believe me," he says, "I've no hobby other than doing and dreaming business." The inquiry showed that Bishnoi had registered 15 companies with the state industries department, all in a period of less than four years.

The opposition memorialists however alleged that Bishnoi had not 15 but 25 units under his belt, fallaciously counting all the letterhead names that he might have entered in the loan applications that eventually got rejected, with the names finding their way into the waste-bin. Says Bishnoi sarcastically: "These guys (the memorialists) must have wormed their way into some government office, got hold of all my loan applications and thought they'd hit the jackpot."

Bishnoi's explanation of the spectacular strides made by his ventures since 1981 is that it was the result of his personal decision to "branch out into industry". His father, who had a brief affair with industry, went under following a protracted illness and doctors advised him to stay put in farming, avoiding the risk and anxiety of industry. "He was waiting for me to come of age. As soon as I became eligible, the industrial units came into being. My marriage is absolutely irrelevant to it," he says.

His marriage may have no connection with his rising fortunes, but the breathtaking pace at which the scale of his business spiralled over the years is significant. "The Haryana Government treated me as any other entrepreneur: there was nothing out of the ordinary at any stage," he says with disarming smoothness. But it seems that the Haryana State Financial Corporation and the Haryana State Industrial Corporation, under the tutelage of the Bhajan Lal administration, bent over backwards to sanction him loans at lightning speed, disbursing Rs 2.58 crore to his various units with another Rs 3 crore in the pipeline. This alone makes him one of the single largest beneficiaries of the state loan scheme, which launched him into the big league in the shortest possible time. Besides, the expeditious clearance of his loan applications entitled him to other benefits, such as the Central subsidy applicable to backward areas, tax exemption on 20 per cent of profits for 10 years, refund of octroi and low-interest loan for first eight years of operation, duty-free electricity and 5 per cent rebate on excise duty. The state loans are indeed like the master key that have gained him access to room after room in the palace of fortune.

As many as three nationalised banks—New Bank of India, Punjab National Bank and Punjab and Sind Bank—vied with one another to keep his units flush with generous limits of overdraft, with the result that he can now function with an extremely comfortable debt-equity ratio of 0.8:1 against the going level of 2:1 in comparable industries. The facilities enabled him to cut back drastically on the usually high gestation period in the steel industry, allowing him to expand when other entrepreneurs in similar situations would have been struggling just to stay aloft. "It's all good management, you see," Bishnoi smiles persuasively. All this may have nothing to do with his marriage to Roshni, the name that literally means a ray of light.

—PRABHU CHAWLA and SUMIT MITRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LOK DAL

Damp Squib

IT BEGAN with a bang, but ended with a whimper. The Opposition in Haryana may have thought the time was right to whip up popular sentiment against the Centre-Akali Dal accord by alleging that it was a sell-out of Haryana's interests, hoping thereby to recharge its drained batteries. But, far from uniting the people in a common cause, it could not even unite itself. At the end of the day it was Bhajan Lal, the unflappable chief minister of Haryana, who had the last laugh.

Devi Lal, the Haryana Lok Dal chief and Bhajan Lal's arch enemy, had been lashing out at the accord. As a gesture of protest he advocated the resignation en masse of all the 28 opposition MLA's in the 90-member Haryana Assembly. Of the 28 MLA's, the Lok Dal has the lion's share of 21, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) five, and the Congress(J) two. But in typical opposition style, only Devi Lal and Mangal Sein, leader of the BJP in the Assembly, resigned on August 14. It took the intervention of Lok Dal president Charan Singh before the remaining 20 Lok Dal MLA's tendered their resignations on August 30.

The remaining four BJP MLA's as well as the two Congress(J) members of the House stayed put, in effect refusing to go along with Devi Lal in his course of confrontation with the Congress(I). This suited Chief Minister Bhajan Lal just fine. While he defended the Punjab accord in public, Tara Singh Virk, the obliging speaker of the Assembly who had earlier accepted the resignations of Devi Lal and Sein, reserved his decision for the 20 other MLA's on the ground that he needed to satisfy the constitutional obligation that the resignations were voluntary.

Bhajan Lal's motive was transparent. Said S.P.Malviya, general secretary of the Lok Dal: "The chief minister of Haryana will not let there be a referendum on the Punjab accord." The confrontationists therefore had to content themselves with two by-elections on September 25, the day Punjab goes to the polls. Devi Lal seeks re-election from the Mehem assembly constituency, where he had defeated his Congress(I) rival in the 1982 elections by a margin of 17,000 votes. But in the Rohtak assembly constituency Sein is pitted against the Congress(I)'s formidable Siri Kissan Das. Sein won the last election by only 380 votes and has lost once before in 1972 to Dass.

An upset defeat could knock the wind out of the Opposition's sails. The Lok Dal is in fact trying to increase its lead at Mehem. Thundered Malviya: "The people of Mehem will give a fitting reply to the great betrayal of Haryana by the Centre."

Devi Lal (right) with Mangal Sein: anti-climax

But Malviya was merely whistling in the dark. The BJP had realised early on the inherent danger of pressing on with the resignations. It came up instead with the suggestion that only one member each of the three parties should resign. But Devi Lal demanded that the entire opposition should resign. The Congress(J) was opposed to the move and when Devi Lal and Sein finally called on the speaker with their resignation letters, Congress(J) MLA Rao Nihal Singh did not turn up. His absence gave the speaker a convenient excuse to refuse to accept his resignation.

The chaos and confusion in the opposition ranks only highlights the despair that has set in following its rout in the Lok Sabha elections. It also gives the lie to Devi Lal's belief that the popular ferment in the state over the Punjab accord has set the Ravi on fire.

ownership since then, failing to take into account the fact that only six of them were either operational or under implementation, the rest being mere letterhead firms that did not exist. The memorandum also went wrong in assessing the status, financial or otherwise, of the Bishnoi family (see box) and assumed, on insufficient evidence, the folklore about the unseen hand of Bhajan Lal guiding them at every stage. Even the charge that Bishnoi had been favoured by financial institutions was not buttressed with adequate evidence, and thus drew well-deserved flak from Jaswant Singh, and, later on, from Bhajan Lal himself.

However, when the Opposition approached the prime minister with the charges against Bhajan Lal, it was gambling on the odd chance that Rajiv, following his unending protestations of cleanliness in public life, might after all take a moral—and not merely political—view of the conduct of the controversial chief minister. To the Opposition, the time seemed ripe not only because Bhajan Lal could not but be opposed to the Punjab accord but because he had come to acquire an unsavoury political reputation with his penchant for horse-trading and defections. "If the prime minister is serious about his intention to initiate a new political order," said Janata Party leader Madhu Dandavate, "he must prove that he is opposed to the cussedness of a Bhajan Lal here, an Antulay or a Jagannath Mishra there."

Obviously the Opposition went wrong in mistaking the intention for the action. For Rajiv, Bhajan Lal is still a potent force useful to subdue the militant feelings in a state which is closest to Punjab, where all his peace initiatives are geared to show results through the elections. Bhajan Lal is also the lynchpin for him to finalise the Punjab accord because a lot depends on the spirit of accommodation of the people and the Government of Haryana. Bhajan Lal, a past master at sailing with prevailing winds, now says: "Punjab is the bada bhai (elder brother) of Haryana, and we shall honour the accord in the true fraternal spirit." In the bargain, who indeed suffered was the goddess of justice, who can tolerate being blindfolded but not deliberate blinding.

—SUMIT MITRA and PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

• For Information Only.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"My portable."

"When I buy a portable radio cassette recorder or anything electronic, I demand superior performance above all. I get it from National, Japan's largest manufacturer of consumer electronics.

"One of my favourite National portable radio cassette recorders is the 4-band RX-FM30F. It features a 14-watt (PMPO) amplifier plus the dynamic stereo separation and depth of "Ambience" sound. And you can take it along longer; it uses larger UM-1 "D"-size dry cell batteries for longer periods of listening between battery changes. Or listen at home by connecting the RX-FM30F directly to an AC outlet. And a choice of five striking colours—silver, black, red, white and gold—let you suit your own personality and style.

"If you're at all like me, you want performance when you buy electronics. My choice is National. Shouldn't it be yours?"

Mithun Chakraborty

National

National Authorized Service Centres in India

BUSH INDIA LTD.
- Industrial Building, 33 Altamount Road, Bombay 400 026 Tel: 351979/351799
- 38 Community Centre, Basant Lok, Vasant Vihar New Delhi 110 057 Tel: 607815
- 26 Ferran Commercial Complex, J.C. Road, Bangalore 560 002 Tel: 223771/223149

ESQUIRE SERVICE CENTRE
(For video-related products only)
- Unit No. 1A & 1B Ground Floor Rehmat Manzil, 75 Veer Nariman Road Churchgate, Bombay 400 020 Tel: 882 8857

INDUS AIR CONDITIONING PVT. LTD.
(For home appliances only)
- 30, Cable Road, Dombivde G, Bombay 400 026 Tel: 422 37 29/422 37 37

ASSOCIATED ELECTRICAL AGENCIES
- Anugraha 19 Nungambakkam High Road, Madras

BUSH INDIA LTD.
- Cochin (Opening Soon)

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In all the colours of a woman's world...

A dignified new generation of adornment. Sweet Memories. Soft, delicately feminine.
Ushering in state-of-the-art natural fibre textures. That feel silk.
Flow like silk. And, radiate the rich lustre of silk. You don't have to look to the Far East. Any longer.
Sweet Memories. An infinite glory of colours. Shy Pinks. Preening Greens. Passionate Blues. Dusky Browns.
Moody Wines... We leave you the joy of discovering the rest. 250 shades every single month. 3000 shades a year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj

Sweet Memories

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT
Sarees

Dress Material

Zero-defect creations of new Water Jet technology.
Palace. Jet Palace. De Chine. Palace De Chine. Crepe De Chine. Nashiji. Jacquard De Chine. Dobby De Chine. Dobby Palace.
China Silk. China Yoryu. Fuji Silk. Dobby Yoryu. Jacquard Yoryu. Nep Palace. Nep De Chine... A rich variation in textures.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:RTI: 2326 R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From Sita, Mercury and Casino Nepal:

The Soaltee Surprise

Escape to the new world of an ancient kingdom in Kathmandu.

Combine a perfect retreat with the most luxurious holiday at the Soaltee Oberoi: 4 days, 3 nights of unmatched pleasure. Your choice of Continental or Indian breakfast every day. Two deluxe half-day city sight-seeing tours. Free accommodation for 2 children up to 12 years in the same room without extra bed. Free airport- hotel-airport transfers.

Plus Free-play casino-coupons worth Rs. 1,200

All, for Rs. 1,234 per person on a twin-sharing basis (Rs. 1,830 for single-occupancy) — inclusive of all taxes. (Prices indicated in Indian rupees.)

Free!

One night's accommodation after four nights — a bonus from the Hotels' Association of Nepal. For details contact booking offices.

Offer valid up to 30.9.1985.

Hotel Soaltee Oberoi

REACT/0393/85

For bookings and details, contact your nearest Sita, Mercury or Oberoi Instant Reservations Office or a bonafide travel agent.

Phone Numbers : Bombay SITA 240666 MERCURY 273116 OBEROI 2024343 Ahmedabad SITA 409105 OBEROI 26037 Delhi SITA 3311122, 3312764 MERCURY 312008 OBEROI 699571 Srinagar SITA 78891, 77186 MERCURY 78786 OBEROI 71241 Kanpur SITA 68171 Jaipur SITA 68226 Agra SITA 66181 Varanasi SITA 42945, 43121 MERCURY 62021 Calcutta SITA 247224 MERCURY 443555/59 OBEROI 230181 Madras SITA 88861 MERCURY 83521 OBEROI 478156 Bangalore SITA 578091 MERCURY 577681 OBEROI 53444 Hyderabad SITA 223629 MERCURY 34411 Cochin SITA 33012, 31101.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sub-inspector Reddy's funeral (left); and Ramanadham's body being taken for cremation

NAXALITES

The New Offensive

7.10 p.m., September 2: As the Hyderabad-Madras Express arrives at Kazipet, Sub-Inspector, N. Yadagiri Reddy, and his wife move towards the coach Mrs Reddy is to board. Her coach is under an overbridge and as they move towards it, some slogan-shouting Naxalites hurl country bombs on them. As the sound and spray of shrapnel creates panic, three armed men close in on Reddy and pump bullets into him. Reddy drops dead.

1 p.m., September 3: The funeral procession of Reddy, which includes many policemen both in and out of uniform, is passing in front of the clinic of Auduluthla Ramanadham, doctor and vice-president of the Andhra Pradesh Civil Liberties Committee, when some men brandishing arms storm into Dr Ramanadham's clinic. Dr Ramanadham tries to flee through a back alley but they chase him. He runs into an optician's shop where he is cornered and fired upon by one man. The deed done, the assassin steps out of the shop, rejoins the procession and disappears into the crowd.

EIGHTEEN summers after the 1967 "spring thunder" over Naxalbari heralded the bloody advent of left extremism in the country, Naxalite terror and official attempts to counter it are again making news in Andhra Pradesh. Reddy and Ramanadham were not the only ones killed in this ongoing war. Ramaswamy, a Naxalite, was killed in an encounter with the police in Karimnagar district on September 1. On September 4, five Naxalites were shot by the police in the Chintapalli area of Vishakhapatnam. With that, the toll of Naxalites killed by the police this year shot up to 25—six more than the total killed between 1980 to 1984.

But police violence has scarcely been able to curb the spread of Naxalites. Today, some 7,000 hardcore activists backed by over 80,000 sympathisers drawn mainly from among students, farm workers, unemployed youth and workers in the organised sector, are spreading the gospel of a violent revolution. And their influence is growing: already their sway extends to 25 lakh people in over 2,000 villages across eight districts. And they are striking back at the police just as hard: over the last five weeks, they killed four policemen, including Reddy.

The Naxalites are not the most popular of men in these areas: the mindless maiming and murder of fellow villagers, which is the hallmark of the leading Naxalite group, Kondapalli Seetharamiah's People's War Group (PWG), has earned them more revulsion than sympathy. The emergence of the PWG as the leading Naxalite group in the state is largely responsible for the increased violence in a conflict which has now been raging for a decade and a half. The PWG, which believes in enrolling toughs, training them and encouraging individual terrorist acts as the first step towards revolution', has been held responsible for 21 of the 26 murders committed by Naxalites this year.

N.T.Rama Rao's Telugu Desam Government has given the police a free hand in curbing the threat, but traditional methods having met with limited success, the police have had to devise newer and more effective methods to combat the Naxalites. The latest of these is Operation Redstar, a mix of strong-arm policing and counter-propaganda, complete with leaflets and street plays to expose the violent elements in the Naxalite and civil rights movements. But the police's credibility continues to be strained: episodes like the murder of the popular Dr Ramanadham, with which it is difficult to dissociate the police, only serve to blacken its image. According to shopkeepers of the area, Ramanadham was a humane and gentle man, a poor man's physician who couldn't possibly have had any connection with either Naxalite violence or sub-inspector Reddy's murder.

Not surprisingly, the police has been under attack by civil libertarians. Andhra Pradesh Civil Liberties Committee (APCLC) president and well-known criminal lawyer, K. G. Kannabiran, accused the police of resorting to "personal vendetta" instead of bringing to book the sub-inspector's killers. Charged Kannabiran: "The killing of Dr Ramanadham was a calculated attempt on the part of the police to blur the distinction between civil liberties work and extremist political activity." Kannabiran's views were shared

Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MORE MILEAGE. From the COMPUTER created car tyres

Modistone
COMPUMILER RANGE

Modistone Car Tyres — the Modistone Compumiler range — are manufactured on computerised machines. A process that lends the tyres characteristics few tyres have.

Modistone Compumiler range — premium nylon tyres that are just right for this computer age.
With safety, comfort, reliability and long-life engineered into every fibre, every component that goes into making the tyres.

Modistone Compumiler range — few car tyres are quite like them because they are literally built by the computer ! That's why 2,50,000 people chose Modistone for their cars last year. Proof enough that they're the largest selling car tyres in India.

Modistone
When miles matter

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

by many MLA's who raised a hue and cry over the alleged police involvement in the Assembly. Home Minister Vasantha Nageswara Rao was forced to transfer the probe to the state crime branch.

The authorities have also been compelled to adopt a more open policy with regard to Naxalites in other ways too. In order to counter the flak about killing Naxalites in fake encounters, the police have started arranging for an inquest and post-mortem on the spot.

CURRENTLY, police hopes on winning the hearts of people hinge largely on Operation Redstar which is the brain-child of the DIG of Police (Intelligence) H.J.Dora, an Andhra Pradesh cadre officer of the IPS who comes from Srikakulam and saw the Naxalites from close quarters when he was the DIG Range (Warangal). Part of this operation is the staging of two plays, Bharathi and Praja Devatha. Peppered with local idiom and slang, the plays attempt to expose the hollowness of the Naxalite movement in the state.

However, the plays, which the police has been staging for the last few months, have had a limited impact. For one, the substantial overt presence of the police detracts from the intended impartial appeal of the plays. So, the police troupe's depiction of the more theatrical activities of the radicals like holding people's courts draws the loudest cheers from the audience. But the police are not about to give up. Argued one police inspector: "We do not expect any immediate results but these plays will take us closer to the people in the long run."

The police are also being helped in their task by the change, for the worse, in the quality of the ranks of Naxalites. Says Naxalophile Shanta Sinha of the department of political science, University of Hyderabad: "The Naxalites of today are politically disoriented and ideologically stronger as intransigent as they used to be." The educated hardcore activists of the 1960s and early 1970s have been replaced by neo-literate youths from among the Harijans and backward castes whose anger at social inequities dovetails neatly into the militancy of the PWG, which now has many as 50 roving dalams (squads)—each dalam comprises between five to eight people—in operation. Intelligence sources say that the PWG has been able to acquire sophisticated weapons, as evident from the ongoing investigations into the murder of Yadagiri Reddy.

The PWG thrives on terrorism, chopping off limbs of villagers to instil fear and deter people from passing on information to the police. The most recent case of brutality is of Vittal Reddy, a farmer of Bhimadevarapalli, Nizamabad district, whose legs were chopped off by PWG activists because they suspected that he was a police agent. Vittal Reddy bled to death on his way to hospital. Instances also abound of innocent people suffering in the no holds-barred fight between the police and the Naxalites. Gudepu Malliah of Fazilnagar in Karimnagar district is a living example of this. The police first picked him up to elicit information about a PWG dalam which had passed through his village. The police beat him up but when they could not get anything out of him they let him go. When the Naxalites learnt that Malliah had been with the police, they caught him on his return and axed his right arm after accusing him of turning into a police agent informing on their movements and activities.

Kondapalli Seetharamaiah's PWG believes in enrolling toughs, training them and encouraging individual terrorist acts as the first step towards "revolution".

Malliah of Fazilnagar: innocent victim

The PWG's credibility as an activist group has fallen so low that the other Naxalite groups refuse to have anything to do with it. Says Pyla Vasudeva Rao, the ageing leader of the Pyla Vasudeva Group (PVG), the state's second largest Naxalite group (20 dalams) after the PWG: "They are left adventurists. This is one of the reasons for the growing repression of Naxalite groups Their acts have given the Government several examples to rouse the people's wrath against the revolutionaries."

However, the state's 12 other Naxalite groups have more in common with the hardline PWG. Outside the tribal belt in Khammam and the contiguous areas of East Godavari district, they depend almost entirely on terrorism to spread and sustain their influence. The unemployed rural youth of the area and disgruntled farm workers, with their bitterness and dissatisfaction are ready raw material.

Alarmed by this disturbing trend, the Government intends to arm itself with more stringent laws to deal with the Naxalites. This, while increasing the powers of the police, would also clip the wings of civil rights organisations. But the problem, and its solution, is not all that simple. Attempts to crush the Srikakulam-based Naxalite movement in the 1960s and the crack-down on Naxalites during the Emergency have shown that their influence is more widespread than the Government likes to believe. And elimination of Naxalites in police encounters is hardly the answer. If anything, it only serves to fuel the Naxalites' militancy and turns public opinion against the Government. And with the Government proposing to bring in battalions of the Central Reserve Police Force after the Punjab elections to deal with the Naxalite menace, the situation promises to take an uglier turn. Says APCLC Chief Kannibiran: "N.T.Rama Rao is running democracy at gunpoint and the police are borrowing his film stunts to emerge as gun-toting heroes."

For all practical purposes, the Naxalite movement in the state seems to have lost its sense of purpose and has got mired in the maze of mindless violence. In this game of striving and fighting for people's rights, it is ironically the people themselves who have turned out to be the ultimate losers. The police deserve credit for thinking of imaginative ways to tackle their influence but they are, perhaps, the first to admit that left wing extremism of this kind can never be wiped out as long as steps are not taken to ameliorate the economic condition of the people.

—AMARNATH K. MENON in Warangal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

SRI LANKA

Back to the Battlefield

SRI LANKAN President Junius Jayewardene has a yen for historical hyperbole. But even by his standards, his advice during his address to the ruling United National Party's trade union federation, the Jatika Sevaka Sangamaya (JSS), to "forget about Dutugemunu" raised eyebrows all over the island. It was the most unexpected remark in the unlikeliest of places. Dutugemunu is the second century B.C. Sinhala warrior prince who slew the Tamil king Elara in single combat at Anuradhapura to register a decisive Sinhala domination over the island and is the romantic hero of all Sinhala Buddhists. The JSS, whose acronym and reputation invites obvious parallels with the fascist storm-troopers, is the bete noire of the Tamils. In July 1983, led by then cabinet minister Cyril Mathews, the UNP's most virulent champion of Sinhala chauvinism, it was the JSS that brutalised Tamils and devastated their properties in the holocaust that still haunts them.

With anti-Tamil racism forming the core of Sinhala politics, Jayewardene may well have been tempted to become a 20th century Dutugemunu. But the canny Sri Lankan leader is a realist who understands that the Battle of Anuradhapura would possibly have a different outcome today in the context of the current Tamil-Sinhala ethnic divide. King Elara, he cautioned the audience last fortnight, "was an alien aggressor" and the Tamils of Sri Lanka were not aliens but members of a multi-ethnic society in which all communities were equal.

If that was Jayewardene's new avatar—and nobody can say for sure how durable it will be—it did reaffirm opinions in Colombo that he is unlikely to succumb to hawkish postures so easily in the currently charged atmosphere. Much of his new-found confidence emanates from 'Big Brother' in the north. For the last two months, he has been in telephonic contact with Rajiv Gandhi at least once a week and is convinced that his Indian counterpart is bending over backwards in his relentless pursuit to bind the two warring sides to a lasting agreement. He is also equally convinced that it is impractical to conceive of a military solution to the problem any longer and that his best chance of securing peace is through India.

Rajiv Gandhi (left); Tamil guerrillas training in Jaffna jungles; and Jayewardene: changing posture

That realism explains his new moderate posture and his desire to please India which was evidenced in his immediate order to reimpose curfew in violence-hit Trincomalee after Indian Foreign Secretary Romesh Bhandari telephoned him in response to distress calls from Tamil leaders. National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali summed up the new mood saying: "As far as India is concerned, there is a lot of faith and trust now. It is not like the old days when you never knew whether another googly would be bowled. Now the Indo-Sri Lankan problem has been solved."

But on the ground, that awareness only constitutes a small part of the solution the Indian Government is seeking. Last fortnight, as ethnic violence continued in Trincomalee, there was an uneasy feeling among Indian policy-makers that

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

The current apprehensions on the part of all three sides involved, the Sri Lankan Government, the rebels and the Indian Government, is palpable.

their new approach to the Sri Lankan question was becoming a victim of the law of diminishing returns. That, of course, explains the urgency which the Indian Government displayed in its preparation of the new working paper on the Tamil problem and its efforts to persuade the two sides to resume negotiations.

Not that the working paper contains any sensational new proposals. It does talk of provincial councils and regional autonomy and offers fairly strong powers to the regional chief executives, but is rather ambiguous on the two key issues of the control of police forces (the Tamils want their own police force) and land settlement. "On these two questions, there have not been enough assurances from Colombo," admits an Indian Foreign Ministry source. Neither is there any concession on the Tamil demand for a linkage between the Tamil-dominated north and eastern Sri Lanka. "As far as we are concerned, that point is absolutely not negotiable," says Athulathmudali. Tamil leaders, however, say that without a linkage agreement it will be impossible for them to carry the Tamil populace with them on the final accord. As far as the Indian Government is concerned, they support the Sri Lankan view that linkage is something that no government in Colombo can grant and survive for long. "It is a major sticking point," says the source, "and we have to convince the Tamil militants to alter their stance."

But despite Colombo and New Delhi's good intentions, the militants have been stubbornly resisting all efforts to bring them back to the peace path. The renewed outbreak of hostilities between the Sri Lankan security forces and the Tamil militants in the eastern areas has once again resurrected tales of brutal atrocities by the island's rag-tag armed forces and refurbished Tamil fears that the Sri Lankan Government is determined to wipe them off the face of the island. For the second time in the past six months, swarms of Tamil refugees have started fleeing for their lives across the Palk Straits (see box), thereby hardening the resolve of the Tamil militant groups to fight fire with fire.

Through all this, the Indian Government has acted with remarkable—and sometimes hamhanded—restraint. When the second round of negotiations in Thimpu collapsed after the Tamil delegates walked out in protest of atrocities by the Sri Lankan armed forces, Rajiv telephoned Jayewardene and persuaded him to allow Sri Lankan chief negotiator at Thimpu, Hector Jayewardene, the president's brother, to stay back in Delhi to redraft his side's peace proposals in a desperate bid to break the deadlock. Romesh Bhandari even cancelled a scheduled visit to Luanda. But Rajiv's next move—the deportation of three Tamil militant leaders—was clearly a clumsy and ill-advised measure, as even senior officials in South Block now admit. The deportation not only angered the militants and their supporters in Tamil Nadu, but eliminated totally from the scene the only people capable of talking in non-military terms.

In belated realisation of the fact, Rajiv revoked the deportation order served on S.C.Chandrahasan, one of the three, but the damage had been done. "The renewal of violence and the deportation has certainly fouled the whole atmosphere that

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL REFUGEES

New Influx

THE IRONY was inescapable. Even as the Indian Government immersed itself in frenetic diplomatic activity to break the continuing stalemate between the Sri Lankan leadership and Tamil militants, the narrow neck of the Palk Straits was once again alive with swarms of Tamil refugees seeking safer sanctuary on Indian shores. For the second time in six months, the coast of Rameswaram on the south-eastern tip of Tamil Nadu witnessed the tragically familiar sight of hundreds of families abandoning their homes in eastern and north-western Sri Lanka and braving the crossing in an assortment of boats to escape renewed atrocities by Sri Lankan security forces.

Most of the new refugees are from Mannar district on the north-western coast of Sri Lanka, particularly the fishing village of Vangali. Says Rajiv Walia, collector of Ramanathapuram district: "The refugees have been arriving at the rate of nearly 200 on practically every alternate day." This marks the second major influx of Tamil refugees, the first being in February-March this year when tens of thousands of them crossed over. Currently, over 20,000 Sri Lankan refugees are subsisting on the Indian Government's fortnight cash doles, while the rest are managing with the help of their friends.

The Mandappam camp for Sri Lankan Tamils is now a full-fledged refugee camp with the capacity to house 5,500 people and 2,500 more will be accommodated when semi-permanent shelters now under construction are completed. But the spill over is causing major problems for the state Government with many of them being housed in schools and colleges or in cyclone shelters and other public buildings. With the new additions still arriving, the problem is certain to snowball even further. Nor is there any certainty about how long the refugees will stay. Says Justin, a refugee from Mannar who has been at Mandappam for the last six months: "We are not prepared to return to our homes till we are convinced that our lives will be absolutely safe."

That, despite India's best efforts, may be a long time in the making. The latest influx, already threatening to assume massive proportions, is made up of people who saw it as a choice between survival in a refugee camp in an alien country or certain death at the hands of Sri Lankan security forces. Sobbed Gloria, an old widow who crossed over last fortnight in a motorised fishing boat: "My two sons and myself were somehow making ends meet. Then, on August 6, the Sri Lankan army, without any provocation whatsoever, mercilessly shot dead my youngest son. My elder son crossed over to Tamil Nadu earlier because we had both decided to leave in fear of our lives. I don't know where he is now and I also don't know what is in store for all of us now."

Other refugees relate similar tales of Sri Lankan soldiers prowling around their villages and shooting Tamils indiscriminately. "It became impossible to move out of our houses. We were not safe even in our own homes. The Sri Lankan soldiers could come any time, loot our property, rape our women and kill our menfolk. How long could we live in such a situation?", queries Sivamala, 24, the wife of a Vangali fisherman who crossed over last fortnight. Adds L.C.Lambert, an assistant government agent at Chettikulam: "The Sri Lankan Government has hatched a plan to drive all Tamils out of the island. I don't know if we will ever be able to go back."

The exodus was, however, triggered off by a bizarre incident in which a helicopter of the Sri Lankan army suddenly appeared over Vangali and after circling the town, two soldiers leant down and started firing indiscriminately. Though nobody was killed, the resultant panic spread like wildfire. The exodus was also aided by the gruesome horror stories related by detenus in military camps released after the first round of talks in Thimpu. Most of them have also crossed over, shaken and terrified after their ordeals.

The Indian Government, however, is taking no chances of the refugee influx affecting their mediation efforts. The refugees have been quarantined and visitors are restricted to those with special passes. But obviously, the credibility of the Sri Lankan security forces is going to be a crucial element in the negotiations for an acceptable settlement, as those miserably huddled together at Rameswaram will willingly testify.

—S.H.VENKATRAMANI in Rameswaram

Refugees arrive at Mandappam camp: homeless tribe

SHYAM TEKWANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

had been built up," admitted a top-level source in the Indian foreign office. The deportation move also resulted in the top Eelam leaders disappearing underground. In fact, one of the key militant leaders, V.Pirabhakaran, head of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) was reported to have crossed over to Jaffna the day before some prominent members of the moderate Tamil United Liberation Front (TULF) were brutally killed. In Tamil militant circles, the TULF is being indirectly held responsible for the deportation orders and the killings were seen as an act of revenge for the deportation of S.Balasingham, the official spokesman and ideological strategist of the LTTE.

But in Madras at least, the Tamils are in a state of total confusion. The army atrocities in Trincomalee have heightened their deep-rooted mistrust of the Sri Lankan Government's intentions while the deportation issue has made them equally suspicious of New Delhi. Apart from that, the moderate TULF and the People's Liberation Organisation of Tamil Eelam (PLOT), considered less hardline than the LTTE, have been sidelined in the negotiation process, now dominated by the more militant groups like the LTTE. In fact, it is obvious that the killings of TULF leaders in Jaffna could not have taken place unless the orders came from the highest rungs of militant leadership.

On another level, the Eelam National Liberation Front (ENLF) constituting four Tamil groups, seems to have caved in with each of the groups accusing the other of selling out on the proposals, leading to a split in the ENLF's ranks. The Eelam People's Revolutionary Liberation Front (EPRLF) and the Eelam Revolutionary Organisation (EROS), the two ideologically-oriented groups, see the wisdom of backing Rajiv Gandhi in his peace efforts, while the militarily-powerful EPRLF and the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation (TELO) want to henceforth speak only with their guns and strongly mistrust the Indian Government. Former TULF MP and opinion leader in Colombo, Dr Neelam Tiruchelvan sums up the complicated nature of the current impasse: "People often do not realise the extent of militarisation of our society. There is a certain respect among the Tamil people for the rebels because they seem to be the only ones offering resistance to official repression."

SUBHA NEWS

The deportation of three militant leaders, including S. Chandrahasan, not only angered the militants but eliminated from the scene the only people capable of talking in non-military terms

That also puts Jayewardene in an awkward negotiating position. As it is, it has been difficult enough for him to defend the Thimpu negotiations and even his Cabinet members are afraid that any major concessions to the Tamils will give arch-opposition rival Sirimavo Bandaranaike an ideal springboard to launch an attack straight at the UNP's jugular. Says Athulathmudali: "The problem is convincing a Sinhalese population which increasingly believes that the people in Jaffna are able to get too much because of terrorism."

Against that backdrop, India's frenzied effort towards a renewed dialogue is understandable since a major breakdown in negotiations could result in the "Final Assault", a phrase much in use in Colombo these days. But the hurdles that stand in the way of the dialogue will not be easy to cross. Tamil leaders have so far snubbed the Indian Government's invitation to come to Delhi for talks and instead have been making frantic calls to Indian officials and Tamil Nadu Power Minister P. Ramachandran to clarify doubts on the working paper. Jayewardene has not helped by demanding numerous amendments in the working paper. Sources in Colombo say that none of the amendments will alter the essence of the draft, but the distrust among Tamils is inevitable.

Consequently, the apprehensions on the part of all three sides involved, the Sri Lankan Government, the rebels and the Indian Government, are palpable. "If we fail to bring about an understanding, the result will be a bloodbath," grimly predicts a senior official in the Indian foreign office. The Tamils are convinced that the Sri Lankan Government is merely buying time to get new weaponry and to reorganise its bedraggled army before launching a winner-takes-all assault. The Sri Lankans harbour similar suspicions about the rebels. Says a senior army officer in Colombo: "The talks are nothing but a diversionary tactic. I cannot speak for the rest, but I have no doubts about Pirabhakaran's Tigers. They want Eelam and they are aware they will never get it across the table whether in Thimpu or Timbuktu. So they are buying time to consolidate ranks and launch the final offensive within a month.

In reality however, neither side is capable of launching a do-or die offensive. But in the present fast and confusing pace of events, all it will require will be one wrong step or miscalculation by any of the side to trigger off large-scale slaughter in both camps. And that will be too heavy a price to pay for a battle that is avoidable and can bring no permanent solution to the ethnic, political and military dimensions of the problem.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA and MERVYN DE SILVA in Colombo and S.H.VENKATRAMANI in Madras

Hector Jayewardene (left); and Bhandari: walking a razor's edge

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HALLEY'S COMET

In Waiting

KODAIKANAL OBSERVATORY

Comet Halley: nature's spaceship

IT WAS midnight on August 29 and the sky was an inky black. Not a star was visible. A strong wind brought a drizzle knocking gently on the metallic dome. Inside the thimble-shaped Indian Institute of Astrophysics' observatory at Kavalur, Tamil Nadu, a bleary-eyed K.K. Scaria, research fellow, and M.D. Rozario, his assistant, sighed resignedly.

For more than a fortnight the institute's team of astronomers had sat through the night in turns so that their group could be the first in India to spot Halley's comet make its thirtieth appearance. But the thick cloud cover was refusing to lift and their patience had reached its edge. Nearby, the observatory's giant telescope, the shape of a large concrete pipe, pointed impotently at the shuttered dome.

But around 2 a.m., while they were gently nodding off to sleep, the sky cleared dramatically and a near full moon cast a silvery glow over the surrounding sandalwood forests. Scaria frowned at the moon; its brightness would affect viewing. But at least the sky was clear at last.

With dawn hardly three hours away there was need for speed. Scaria, like other professional astronomers, does not trust his eyes while gazing at stars through a telescope. Instead, he relies on the computer that controls the telescope not only to track the comet but also record its image on a photographic plate.

Rozario lightly touched a yellow button on the computer console and the dome shutters slid noisily open, exposing the starry sky. But before commanding the telescope to track the comet, he took several shots of the night sky so that Scaria could decide the best focus for the telescope to photograph the comet. That took almost an hour. Now time was really running out.

But Scaria did not have to waste precious hours searching for the comet. The comet's orbital path had already been computed precisely by observatories elsewhere in the world. All Rozario had to do was to open the handbook and in a minute he knew that the comet should be at six hours nine minutes and 30 seconds (the astronomers' equivalent for latitude and longitude of stellar objects) in the southern hemisphere somewhere west of the Pleiades, a cluster of bright stars. He then fed the coordinates into the computer and within seconds the telescope moved and locked on to the comet's path.

Now came the difficult bit. Despite the precise orbit calculations, Scaria was really "shooting in the dark". He had no way of telling whether he was actually photographing the comet because it was so faint that the plate had to be exposed for an hour before its image could be recorded. So the two waited tensely, scanning the skies to see if clouds were moving in, because any disturbance would affect the picture.

At 5 a.m. they shut the telescope and excitedly took the plate to the dark room for developing. Half an hour later and Scaria could hardly believe his eyes. Among the blur of lines that indicated stars, a tiny black speck was barely visible. Under a microscope it had a fuzzy round shape with a hint of a tail. Scaria knew he had spotted the comet but they had to take another exposure to be sure. After rain spoilt the next two nights Rozario finally got the confirmation they needed on another plate. The Indian team had at last spotted Halley's comet.

"It's like a tiny tadpole in the sky," said an excited K.R. Sivaraman, chairman of the Indian Halley Observation Programme, when they finally announced their achievment a week later. The comet is right now at about two and a half times the distance of the earth from the sun and has crossed Jupiter's orbit. Looking like a "dirty snowball" the comet is moving closer to the sun and as it does so the heat of the sun would melt its icy nucleus, setting free a stream of gas and dust that would form a huge tail. The tail would look like what Sivaraman, with a twinkle in his eye, calls "tresses of a woman's hair."

With the Russians, Japanese and the European Space Agency sending up a total of five spacecraft to rendezvous with Halley's comet, it is probably going to be the most studied stellar object of the century. Halley's comet has generated such a lot of interest mainly because it is believed that like most comets it is formed from the primordial gas and dust which surround the sun, and a study of its constituents could solve some of the mysteries of the origin and formation of the solar system.

In India five groups of astronomers and physicists will be using a battery of 10 telescopes in Kavalur, Nainital and Rangapur to study the comet which would be visible for the better part of the next eight months. The Indian astronomers are trying to find out what kinds of molecules make up comets and would also be doing a detailed study on the composition of the comet's tail. As Sivaraman puts it: "The comet is like a spaceship built by nature and we are likely to collect an enormous amount of data from it."

But if astronomers are rubbing their hands in anticipation the public are in for a disappointment. Only in early January would the comet be visible to the naked eye and then only for a couple of hours. It would go out of sight in the last week of January and will reappear only towards the end of February. It will be seen then only in the early hours of the morning and although it would brighten progressively it is still expected to look like a tiny fuzzy ball with a small tail. Astronomers calculate that the comet has lost 90 per cent of its original luminosity. Says G.S.D. Babu, a research fellow of the institute: "For the public, Halley's comet might be a damp squib."

—RAJ CHENGAPPA in Kavalur

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For homes that stay beautiful.
Nerolac Acrylic Emulsion.
From the people
who know paint technology.

No home escapes the damage caused by weather... and time.

That's why your home needs the protection of a superior paint. Nerolac Acrylic Emulsion with Silicone. Its array of exquisite shades revive the beauty of your walls. Its superior properties lend your walls lasting protection. Nerolac Acrylic Emulsion, Nerolac Synthetic Enamel and Nerolac Oil Bound Distemper are manufactured by the company that knows and understands paint technology. Our collaboration with Kansai Paints Japan, brought to India advanced paint technology for the Maruti.

Goodlass Nerolac Paints—superior technology to give you the best there is in paints.

BEAUTIFUL PROTECTION

NEROLAC PAINTS
Always — a shade better

ULKA-GNP-1-85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You never felt this free before!

OBM 9240

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

rode up, almost to the very top of the cliff (4600 ft)
One look at the sheer drop made my head swim (Vivek's too,
I suspect, though d'you think he'd admit it?!)
But what a view!
'Wish you were here'
Really! Maya

Dt

Explorer by ENFIELD

So safe to ride, so easy to handle

Explorer: 50 cc • 3.3 bhp • 3 gears • die-cast wheels • 65 kms. per litre • Rubin Red or Strato Silver

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Close-up is for close-ups

Those lazy, hazy, crazy summer evenings, of sharing smiles... sharing your favourite sounds. You're in tune and you're confident because you've used Close-up.

Transparent, red Close-up's two super-whiteners leave your teeth their whitest and its special mouthwash keeps your breath its freshest.

So, smile a close-up smile and stay confident, because after all, Close-up is for close-ups.

A quality product by Hindustan Lever

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The Toothpaste and Mouthwash in One

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRIMMING TO SIZE

SOMETHING like three-quarters of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry's (FICCI) members will be asked to resign soon, following an agreement reached by FICCI's leading lights on a way to end the fracas over bogus members. FICCI has over 1,700 members, but a four-man committee headed by Pravinchandra Gandhi has decided that virtually all of the new members who were enrolled after 1980, as well as a few enrolled after 1970, will have to go, making for a total of 1,300 exits. Both the warring factions in FICCI have agreed to this drastic lancing operation, which will leave FICCI with barely 400 members. The leading lights who had walked out of FICCI earlier this year, complaining about the bogus members, will come back into the fold once the resignations are submitted, and accepted by FICCI's committee, and subsequently the federation will also push through new membership rules designed to prevent the problem from cropping up again.

RETAIL OUTLETS

CITIBANK, the world's largest commercial bank, is planning a major push into retail banking in India, apparently as a part of the bank's global strategy for emphasising retail banking. Proposals on the cards for India include the setting up of automatic computer-controlled teller counters, the granting of loans on security provided by company shares, and measures designed to reduce the time taken for servicing savings bank customers. However, one unexpected hitch has come from the Reserve Bank, which has questioned the proposal for introducing automatic tellers on the ground that this might be tantamount to starting a new branch. A final decision is still awaited.

NEW DIRECTION

RELIANCE Industries is branching out into an unexpected direction: electronics. The company is applying for a licence to manufacture 1.5 million colour TV glass shells and half a million of the downstream product—colour TV picture tubes. The total investment proposed is over Rs 200 crore, and the additional turnover is expected to be in the region of Rs 350 crore. The company seems virtually assured of the licence. It is now negotiating with the two companies in the world (Corning of the US and Asahi Glass of Japan) who have the technology for making the glass shells.

LIBERAL DOSE

THE GOVERNMENT is getting ready to announce fresh liberalisations in its industrial policy, and some of the sectors—like power generation and road construction—that are now public sector monopolies will be thrown open to the private sector. The policy of de-licensing industries will also be given a fresh push, and capacity restrictions in some areas are likely to be abolished. Officials are working out the details of the new policy package.

Meanwhile, several private groups have already shown an interest in entering the power sector. The Birlas have proposed a joint sector 500 MW station in Uttar Pradesh, while the Tatas too have shown an interest in setting up a plant in Uttar Pradesh. In Himachal Pradesh, the state Government is keen on getting foreign parties to set up 4,000 MW hydel stations on a turnkey basis. So far, none of these proposals has been cleared.

SHIFTING FOCUS

THE GOVERNMENT'S tax-gatherers seem to be following a strategy of import-led growth: the biggest increase in Central Government tax revenues in the last five years has been from customs levies, which earlier used to yield first place to excise duties. Thus, in the last five Central budgets, customs levies yielded an additional Rs 1,822 crore, while fresh excise duties fetched only Rs 850 crore. In the previous quinquennium, the ranking was quite the reverse, with excise duties fetching an additional Rs 1,247 crore, and customs levies bringing in fresh tax revenue of no more than Rs 256 crore. The lesson is clear: growth will come not from the production of indigenous industry, but from the production of foreign industry imported into India.

Chart by B K. SHARMA

GLAD RAGS

MOHAN Murjani, the Hong Kong-based clothing magnate, has tied up with Coca-Cola for a new line of clothing that will bear the name of the soft drinks giant. Murjani, who first hit the headlines by acquiring the licensing rights for the Gloria Vanderbilt line of clothing, now has a turnover of $ 500 million. But his agreement with Coca-Cola has kicked up a storm in the United States, because the clothes will be made at his factories in Hong Kong and Macao. Consequently, Murjani is now working out a new arrangement with Coca-Cola for getting the clothes manufactured in the United States. The only problem might be that this will cost a lot more. But Murjani will, as usual, continue to make glad money out of glad rags.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDUSTRIAL SAFETY

Under a Cloud

WITH factories relentlessly spewing gas nation-wide, 1985 may well be remembered as the year of continued gas leaks. Last fortnight, as the chlorine gas leak from the Ilac plant at Chembur in Bombay (see box) hit the headlines, it became starkly obvious that the country had a cloud hanging over its head—industry was observing safety regulations more in the breach, the Bhopal plant disaster notwithstanding. As The Times of India reported, the Ilac plant had no business to keep its doors open: the Bombay Municipal Corporation had not renewed its licence since 1979 for failing to comply with fire brigade stipulations.

The leak at the Calico Industries subsidiary is no isolated event. Since last December, when the Bhopal incident rocked the nation, gas has spilled at well over a dozen chemical plants, five of them last month alone:

- two workers died and a chemist fell ill after inhaling poisonous gas at a chemical factory at Rudel village in Gujarat's Kaira district;
- at Thane, on the outskirts of Bombay, over 30 employees of a chemical firm were affected when a drum in the company's store sprang a leak;
- at a cloth mill in Gwalior, 16 people were seriously injured when chlorine gas leaked;
- a sulphuric acid plant in Kanpur discharged sulphur dioxide in the city's congested Panki area, creating panic and inducing nausea in the victims;
- again in Kanpur, another sulphuric acid factory discharged thick gas fumes, suffocating people in the thickly populated area.

Elsewhere in the country, over the past few months, nitrogen oxide gas leaked from a tanker after it collided with a truck, gas leaked from a chemical factory at Navsari in Gujarat, affecting the residents of four nearby villages, and ammonia leaked from the Gwalior Rayon factory in Madhya Pradesh and from a tanker unloading chemicals at the state-owned Rashtriya Chemicals and

ILAC

Chlorine Leak

GIVEN Chembur's history of gas leaks, it probably had to happen. On Friday, August 30, one of the three tanks which store chlorine at Calico's Ilac plant in Chembur began spewing the toxic chemical. It was not, fortunately, a replay of Bhopal but one employee, I.B. Mazumdar died and over a hundred people—including labour leader and MP Datta Samant—had to be hospitalised before the air cleared. And this latest in a long series of mishaps in the area brought sharply home to the people of Bombay the hazards of living and working in the city and the fact that something had to be done.

The negligence that characterises industrial chemical operations was effectively brought out in an environment report covering a score of the most important plants by a committee headed by Dr R.K. Garg of the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (INDIA TODAY, April 30). The report specifically mentioned the Calico plant as hazard-prone and added: "The highly corroded valves, pipelines and storage vessels in caustic soda and the chlorine plant need to be replaced immediately. The plant is not safe to operate in the present condition."

As it happened, the plant wasn't being operated at all because of a dispute over electricity charges which had resulted in the Tatas cutting off power. According to an Ilac executive, the chlorine in the tanks shouldn't have been there in the first place. A by-product of the caustic soda process, it is supposed to be taken away in pressurised vessels called tonners. Company officials claim they had repeatedly written to the authorities that the chlorine was a hazard and should be removed but the workers—about 1,500 had been laid off since May—were refusing to let anything out of the plant, demanding full pay for the lay-off period as technically they weren't on strike. The chlorine had accumulated in the tank under very high pressure and corrosion did the rest.

The chlorine tank that leaked: corroded

JAGANNATH DUBASHI

Officials were quick to issue statements denying charges of gross negligence and pointed out that the firm spent Rs 2 lakh every year on anti-corrosion treatment. The management brandished a letter written in June to Samant seeking his cooperation in detailing 13 workers to help empty the three tanks and load the gas in drums but say they didn't get any response. However, the union has pointed out that the unit has 350 technical officers, 50 of whom work in the chlorine plant. Since none of them had been laid off they could easily have emptied the tanks. Executives complained of obstruction by workers when some vehicles were brought in to remove the gas, forcing the company to obtain an injunction from the industrial court in Bombay. Complaints were also filed with the labour commissioner and the police commissioner. Even after the management had conceded the demands of the union—50 per cent of the wages even to those who were not laid off and had yet absented themselves and who were needed for maintenance and other duties—the union remained uncooperative.

The wrangling only emphasised the enormity of those 30 minutes when the yellow gas swirled all over the plant and its vicinity. Said a shaken company bus-driver who evacuated officers and their families from their bungalows behind the plant to the relative safety of BARC: "I could barely see anything as I drove down." Birds and animals, even fish in the ornamental pond, died in

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fertilisers plant in Bombay. The capital has not been spared either: early this year, a Bharat Petroleum tanker met with an accident, gas escaped from the tanker, and local residents ran away in alarm.

If this unnerving list of disasters is the tipshot of media attention, other unreported safety failures suggest that the problem is not created by the press. A major disaster was barely averted early this year when power failed at a Madras refinery. The unit's Indian-made universal power supply unit switched to the auxiliary power system far too slowly, pressure built up in the fluidised cracker catalyst and a mega-explosion was averted only because night shift operators rushed to close valves manually. Says Petroleum Secretary G.V. Ramakrishna: "We have now advised all refineries to switch to imported universal power supply units."

The horror of Bhopal has not yet resulted in the kind of preventive steps that were talked of then, and the prospect of more deaths in gas chambers remains ever present

Quite obviously, the horror of Bhopal has not yet resulted in the kind of preventive steps that were talked of then, and the prospect of more deaths in gas chambers remains ever present. Environment Secretary J.A. Kalyanakrishnan says: "One of the primary reasons for the gas leaks is that equipment maintenance is low down on the list of priorities in our industrial culture." That is probably true. But government officials fumble to a man when asked why correctives have not yet been taken. One senior functionary in the Industry Ministry argued that the tightening of laws immediately after Bhopal would have been an indirect admission of official negligence, and would therefore have helped Union Carbide fight its legal battle with the Government. Then, the Law Ministry objected to some of the changes proposed in the Factories Act, and in some other cases cost has been a deterrent: one result of additional safety measures adopted at liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) bottling plants is that the Government's subsidy on LPG cylinders will shoot up by 50 per cent, from Rs 107 minutes and trees and shrubs turned a sickly yellow. Plant Director N.N. Chaterjee, who claims he and other officers were present when the accident occurred, hinted darkly at sabotage: "There was some unauthorised manipulation of the chlorine tank," adding, "we allowed the pressure to come down to zero from 1.5 kg. Later we plastered it with cement to prevent further leaks."

The aftermath of the tragedy was predictable. Politicians of varying hues clambered over one another to assure people that everything was being done to ensure that such an incident did not recur. Chief Minister Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar, accompanied by two cabinet colleagues, walked through the plant, prudently wearing gas masks, and said: "A new awareness has grown in Bombay and in the state that polluting factories must be brought to heel."

As a first step in the programme, the Government took upon itself the task of pointing the finger at 13 companies which had failed to comply with the recommendations of the Garg committee report. The list included such corporate good boys as Tata Electric Companies and Hindustan Lever. The latter retorted angrily that they had been complying with all the recommendations made in the report. Finger-pointing apart, the state's chief secretary is planning to meet the chairmen and managing directors of all the 30 plants covered in the report to work out the first steps of a programme which will:

- list the hazardous chemicals being produced by 180 plants—out of Bombay's 19,300 plants—on the priority list of the Government and work out each one's harmful effects and possible antidotes;
- put together the framework for a programme to educate people living near such plants on the kind of hazards they might have to face along with some countermeasures. Alarm systems at the plant itself are necessary—the Ilac management told the chief minister that they had not installed a hooter system since it would spread panic;
- look into the possibilities of a certification system and institute penalties for operative negligence.

C.D. Singh, secretary, Department of Environment, said: "The incident could have a happy ending if we get down to work" and called for a listing of "all the hazardous chemicals produced in Bombay so that we at least know what we might have to deal with." He, however, regretted the fact that the water and air pollution acts do not authorise the Government to close down plants in case of trouble. Singh also complains that there is not enough awareness about toxic chemicals, their location and properties. Ironically, the Government has still not taken the first and most obvious step towards educating people about the potentially poisonous plants—it has yet to release the crucial Garg Committee report for everybody to read.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

Patil-Nilangekar (left) and others at the Ilac plant: constant danger

JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

crore to over Rs 160 crore. Adds Kalyanakrishnan: "We're now becoming aware of risk management in industry, but the capability is not built overnight. A lot of groundwork is necessary, all of which takes time."

Despite the delays, however, action is in the pipeline to prevent fresh Bhopals. Sweeping changes to the Factories Act and the Indian Boilers Act will be legislated in the next session of Parliament. The latter will have more rigid equipment specifications, and the former is to be amended to define the occupier of a factory as the owner instead of a lower level company official, so that lapses will put the owner personally on the mat. The blame for equipment failures will be pinned on its manufacturers, and stiffer prison sentences will replace the six month term or the maximum fine of Rs 2,000 now awarded to those who repeatedly flout the law.

The Union Labour Ministry has also come up with a Safety and Health Accident Reduction Plan (SAHARA) under which state factory inspectorates are to be strengthened, and industrial hygiene laboratories are to be set up. Also, each factory will be required to set up a safety committee on which labour will be represented—and workers will have the legal right to complain to factory inspectors if safety norms are flouted. Says a Labour Ministry official: "Since complaints will be made in writing, the factory inspector risks his job if he ignores them and accidents subsequently occur. So the chances of the inspector being bribed by managements are slim." Companies will be asked to state in their annual reports what they have done on the safety front. Most welcome of all, plants that use dangerous processes will have to present some sort of evacuation plan to residents of the neighbourhood.

Other government bodies too have taken action. The Department of Environment has drawn up a list of 20 hazardous industries and plans to launch a Hazardous Substances Control Board, a watchdog body that will advise other official agencies on dangerous chemicals. It has also circulated among the states fresh guidelines on the location of industrial units. The Petroleum Ministry on its part is busy setting up an in-house safety directorate to tighten safety norms for refineries in the country. And refineries have now been asked to recycle the oil in the sludge at the bottom of crude oil tanks instead of allowing it to flow into lagoons where it can easily catch fire. Finally, the Government set up an inter-ministerial group some six weeks ago to look at the question of launching a national safety committee for transportation. The broad-sweep agency is meant to tighten the rules for transporting men and dangerous substances.

But for all the recent ferment in officialdom, a new law to deal with chemicals is not on the anvil. Referring to the safety laws, an official document notes: "Most of these acts have covered chemical safety only in a very casual way. Some of the rules framed under the acts have tried to cover only (a) few aspects of hazardous chemicals." Worse, the Industrial Toxicology Research Centre in Lucknow, which was handed the job of identifying the gaps in the present laws a year ago, has not yet submitted its report.

JAGANNATH DUBASHI

Wilted plants after the leak: poisoned air

The more serious problem is that revamping the laws alone is far from enough. Both officials and those who run industry agree that the problem lies at the implementing end. Says Manmohan Singh, managing director of Frick India Ltd, which makes pollution control equipment: "You can make any laws, but if you don't have the right people to implement them, they won't work." The point is well taken. The Factories Act is administered by the states. Despite Central Government concern, the state bodies responsible for policing industrial units do not have highly trained staff. Factory inspectors are qualified engineers, but do not have the technical background to police sophisticated chemical processes. Also, there are not enough of them to go around. The Factories Inspectorate in Madhya Pradesh still has only 18 inspectors to monitor some 8,000 factories. And Karnataka has some 21 inspectors to supervise 11,200 factories. M.J. Surendra Kumar, the state's chief inspector of factories and boilers, was told when he asked for more staff that there was no money for this. And the position may only get worse. An official study group on small chemical units has recommended that they be brought under the Factories and Boilers Inspectorate. That means Karnataka's overworked factory inspectors will have another 300 to 400 more units to inspect; at the moment they cannot monitor 57 per cent of the factories in the state, says Kumar.

Even where initiative is in evidence at the grassroots level, it is often short-lived. In the capital, chlorine gas leaked from a small factory, but dismayed Delhi Administration officials discovered that they did not have the power to close it down. Then labour commissioner Nita Bali recommended that the rules be amended for this purpose. But Bali was transferred out, and no action has been taken on the proposal.

Clearly, the mills of government grind too slowly. Sometimes, they don't seem to grind at all (as in the case of Karnataka not increasing the number of its factory inspectors), or grind in the wrong manner (as in the transfer of inconvenient officials). Meanwhile, the frequency of gas mishaps—big and small—suggests that Indian factories remain as leaky as Indian laws.

—PALAKUNNATHU G.MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STATUTORY WARNING : CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAPANESE TECHNOLOGY IS NEWS FOR EVERYONE EXEPT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOR INDIAN BIKES EXPT RAJDOOT

ESCORTS

It was news for us too. But that was eleven years ago when Rajdoot was the first Indian motorbike to 'go' Japanese.

Collaborating with MIKUNI—the world-famous makers of carburettors.

And that signalled a technology avalanche.

FUJI for clutch assemblies. HOSHI for swaged spokes. And KAYABA for front-forks.

Which means that there's a lot of Japanese know-how making the Rajdoot a very efficient machine.

And, when you add the hottest name in motorcycle engineering world-wide—Yamaha of Japan—it makes big news in the form of the Rajdoot-Yamaha breed of 350 cc motorbikes. Soon to be followed by the highly fuel-efficient 100 cc bikes.

Yes, the foresight is paying off. Because today, one of every two bikes on the road is a Rajdoot.

Which, incidentally, is not very surprising news.

RAJDOOT

WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER

ESC-8615

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONFESSIONS

of a Husband

"I came home every evening dog-tired... only to find my biwi busy in that damned kitchen.

UNTIL - I decided to put my foot down and purchased a set of Casseroles - Eagle's Insulated Serving Dishes.

And what a change! Food cooked hours before I'm home, straight in the Casseroles and on the table - and then it was just garam-garam khaana and naram-naram conversation.

And that made me and my biwi maha khush, because once I was home from office we had all the time in the world together.

No interruptions for heating. No deserting me on the dining table to get a garam chappati.

The Eagle Casseroles took care of all that. Not only did they keep food hot until we were ready for it, but they looked great!

And my business instincts tell me, that the amount saved on heating/re-heating fuel costs will make the Casseroles completely cost-FREE in a few months time.

It sure has put the masala back into our marriage!!"

Part of the virtually unbreakable Eagle Thermoware range, Eagle Casseroles come in a variety of shapes, sizes and colours; with sturdy 'kunststoff' bodies and easy-to-clean stainless steel inners. Perfect for keeping anything hot– from chappatis to curries, anything cold– from custard to curds.

CASSEROLES

For best temperature retention fill to capacity.

Note: Only Eagle Thermoware is insulated with patented polyurethane poly-insulux; hence these products may be imitated, but can never be duplicated.

There's a lot you can do with Eagle

EAGLE FLASK
® PRIVATE LIMITED
Talegaon 410 507, Dist. Pune, (Maharashtra)
Grams: 'EAGLEFLASK', Pune 410 507.
Tel: 321-5, Tlx: 0145-296 EGLE-IN Bombay Tel. 322096/97, Tlx. 011-73297EGLE-IN Depots: Delhi 3315066 • Calcutta 267350 • Bangalore 223299 • Madras 24270 • Hyderabad • 65356 • Ahmedabad 399028 • Ranchi 22446

DART/EF/1430

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAMESH SARIN

Few were in doubt that Ramesh Sarin's departure followed mounting differences with A.H. Tobaccowala, his predecessor as president and currently chairman of the Voltas board.

A.H. TOBACCOWALA

VOLTAS

Changes at the Helm

FOUR years ago, Ramesh Sarin was appointed president of Voltas, the giant Tata-controlled trading company, after the biggest and most publicised head-hunt for a corporate chieftain in the history of Indian business. Late last fortnight, climaxing weeks of speculation in the company about tensions at the top, Sarin announced that he was leaving Voltas in December, several months before the expiry of his five-year contract.

Sarin said he was leaving for "personal" reasons, but few were in doubt that his departure followed mounting differences with A.H. Tobaccowala, his predecessor as president and currently chairman of the Voltas board. Speaking some weeks before Sarin's announcement, Tobaccowala had obliquely admitted to these differences when he said that: "There are differences in approach," though he added that "these are not necessarily fundamental." And responding to the charge that he failed to allow Sarin a free hand in bringing about radical changes in the company, Tobaccowala said: "It is always a problem giving up control, but I decided voluntarily to hand over complete charge to my successor."

Sarin himself was less than forthcoming about his reasons for leaving mid-way through the process of transforming the company from a predominantly trading concern to one that had a firm manufacturing base as well, and talked of Tobaccowala without a hint of rancour: "He has been a positive help in making the changes." Sarin also tried to shoot down any suggestion that his crash course in re-orienting and reshaping Voltas amounts to a negation of what Tobaccowala did earlier, arguing that many of the projects that are now flourishing were initially conceived by Chairman Tobaccowala.

But there was no concealing the fact that the two did not share a common vision of the direction in which the company was headed. Sarin repeatedly emphasised the company's manufacturing thrust, while Tobaccowala declared that he would like to see Voltas do more marketing. Nevertheless, Tobaccowala too was generous in Sarin's praise, declaring that under Sarin "the pace of change in Voltas has quickened, decisions are being taken faster, there has been a great deal of internal organisational restructuring, there is better training of younger managers, and greater stress on accountability."

The crucial question now is what will happen to this pace of rapid change that Sarin had initiated. For there is little doubt that soon after he took charge in August 1981, he collared the then sleepy, rule-bound, financially threatened company by the throat and launched one of the more dramatic efforts at getting a large corporate ship to change course. In the four years since then, Sarin sacked, retired or forced the resignation of fully a quarter of Voltas' 800-strong managerial cadre, completely reorganised the company's internal structure, set new goals and made it more responsive to the market-place.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The problems that Sarin saw when he first took charge were many. A company that concentrated on selling goods manufactured by others could be in trouble if large customers took away their business, as Amul has just done—leaving Voltas short of Rs 100 crore in sales and Rs 4 crore in profits, but with a staff strength of 650 for whom new work had to be found.

Voltas also faced a profit squeeze because of inflation on the one hand and increasing competition in the market-place on the other, so that profits amounted to less than 3 per cent of sales, against the respectable 10 per cent that more manufacturing-oriented companies manage to achieve.

Voltas was simply not responsive to the market-place. Senior Vice-president Jagdish Chopra, whom Sarin brought in from Hindustan Lever as one of his key top-level appointments, was shocked to find that Voltas did not care to offer its air-conditioners to the Government on rate contract, even though this accounted for 40 per cent of the market. And only four towns in all of Uttar Pradesh were covered by sales offices.

Market research was simply unknown, so that Voltas was planning to introduce new products like toasters and electric irons without proper market testing of their acceptability. The result: numerous product launches in the past had been failures.

Since manufacturing and marketing were done by separate divisions, mutual bickering over problems led to a lack of internal cohesion, affecting the pushing of products in the market.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

So Sarin got down to business without losing time. Since the turnover lost because of Amul's pulling out had to be made up quickly, the company introduced in short order a new range of food products: Volfarm tomato ketchup, Ju-C soft drink concentrate, Gold Nut refined oil, Sneha dairy products and a few others. And since the manufacturing base had to be expanded, so that it became less vulnerable to product losses like Amul, a new push was given to the plans to start producing a host of new products, including refrigerators, compressors, hydraulic cranes, transformers and circuit breakers. Most of these involved acquiring new technology from abroad, and Sarin claims that all of them mark a step forward from the products already on the market.

THE REFRIGERATOR, developed in-house and introduced so far in the East and South, preparatory to a full-scale launch in the West and North in time for the festival season, marks one of the most ambitious of Sarin's projects. A new plant near Nagpur was built in a record 18 months, and with a capacity of one lakh is set to take on both Kelvinator and Godrej in a battle for leadership in the five lakh market. Somewhat daringly, the new product is priced higher than the established favourites. The manufacturing-marketing divide was ended by completely reorganising the company's internal structure, breaking it up into half a dozen business groups, each of them a profit centre, and each of them responsible for both manufacturing and marketing. The air-conditioners were placed on rate contract with the Government and the company's market reach extended by opening new offices, so that sales shot up by an impressive 40 per cent in three years.

Finally, Chopra took the drastic decision to scrap new products that were about to be launched, including the toaster and a mixer, because he found that they did not offer anything extra to the customer. He came up against flak on this, because designs had been imported from abroad and a manufacturing plant had been set up by a technocrat with whom Voltas had entered into a marketing tie-up. But Chopra would have none of it. "We probably ruined that technocrat, but the fact was that 80 per cent of the toasters failed when I did a trial market test in 200 homes," he explains. Market research is therefore a new discipline that Chopra is pushing on the company.

The results so far are gratifying. The refrigerators are said to be doing well, the new Danfoss compressors that Sarin hopes to introduce are claimed to mark a technological breakthrough, and the new food products show promise. Chopra says that Ju-C has already overtaken the established Rasna in Delhi, that the ketchup is a sell-out, and that Gold Nut has quickly provided turnover (if not profits) to partly neutralise the absence of Amul. But the price for this success has had to be paid: Chopra had to change all but two of his 30 managers by sacking or transferring them so that he got a team that was in tune with his own thinking and approach. Similar shake-ups took place in the other divisions, and when Sarin was asked whether he didn't ruffle feathers in the process, he came up with a spontaneous exclamation: "Oh by God yes!" But he pointed out that some heat was bound to be generated when a company that was rule-bound was being forced to become "more customer-bound."

Senior Vice-president Jagdish Chopra had to change all but two of his 30 managers by sacking or transferring them so that he got a team that was in tune with his new thinking and approach.

The results of the changes don't show in the figures yet. The profits in the year that ended last month will be down to perhaps as low as Rs 6.5 crore, compared to Rs 8.4 crore last year, which in turn was lower than the previous year's Rs 13.2 crore. And the turnover figure hasn't shown very big increases either, inching up somewhat unimpressively from Rs 340.5 crore in 1980-81 (before Sarin joined) to Rs402.5 crore in 1983-84. So two of the three goals implicit in the slogan that Sarin gave the company when he joined—'profits, growth and excellence'—have not been achieved as yet, although the turnover growth would certainly have been more impressive if Amul had stayed with Voltas. Insiders say the company's board of directors has not been very happy with the profit trend, but Sarin professed unconcern: "You can't expect financial results when the transition is under way. I am happy that the company has been set on a new course, now the rest will take care of itself. You mustn't forget that Voltas has undertaken more investment in the last two years than it did in the previous 25."

He has a point, of course, because as Chopra points out, "the post-tax profits haven't suffered because the investments that have been undertaken give us a much bigger depreciation write-off, so we retain more of our profits. Earlier, there were no investments to speak of, so we got no tax breaks." As one result of this, the company has been able to improve on its dividend payments adequately in recent years.

If all goes well, Voltas should pull out of its current profitability dip and head for long-term growth and stability—both assured by the new manufacturing thrust. But many middle-level managers in Voltas are known to have been unhappy with the Sarin regime, pointing out that all the fancy talk is not backed up by performance on the bottom line. Also, as someone sympathetic to Sarin pointed out, "he may have tried to change the Voltas culture, but this is not easy in such a large company."

Now, with Sarin heading for other pastures, the crucial question remains as to whether the changes that he initiated will be given the same support as before, and whether the pace of change will continue or slacken. Tobaccowala could not be reached for comment at the time of writing, but it is understood that all the company's vice-presidents have been asked to report directly to him.

Speaking to INDIA TODAY a few weeks before his decision to quit became known, Sarin had said that "I have made some terrible mistakes, but I now see growth ahead for Voltas; all it needs now for the strategy to work is time." He might have been right if he had stayed on. Now, with his leaving, the future has a question mark hanging over it.

—T.N.NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE AIR FRANCE WELCOME: OUR INDIAN TOUCH MAKES THE DIFFERENCE

Enjoy the French hospitality with an Indian touch when you fly in the company of Air France. Indian meals are available on board our main long-haul flights if requested 24 hours in advance.

On arrival in Paris, our Indian hostesses will welcome you in our CDG2 Express Terminal. They will greet you in your own language and ensure that your stay or transit is as pleasant and trouble-free as possible. Next time you travel to Europe or onwards, fly Air France and enjoy the difference.

AIR FRANCE
WE'RE AIMING EVEN HIGHER

Graphisads/5619

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tools that meet the challenge of productivity

Hi-performance tungsten carbide tools from WIDIA. Tools that cover a wide spectrum of operations—in metal cutting, metal forming and mining applications. Also, tungsten carbide wear parts. In a vast range to suit diverse needs. For improved efficiency and productivity.

Tools that pass through stringent quality assurance tests to meet exacting international standards. Tools that extend the frontiers of hardmetal technology—a result of WIDIA's in-house R&D and a continuous flow of the latest technology from the pioneers, KRUPP WIDIA, West Germany.

Backed by unmatched service. By experts who offer precise solutions to customer problems, and a countrywide sales and service network.

WIDIA—the right tools to meet the challenge of productivity.

WIDIA

Your productivity—our concern

SAA/MIL/1360 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Che

When the miniature is Moghul, the walls are Luxol Silk.

Luxol Silk. It is the only emulsion paint you can tell with your eyes closed. Just run your fingers over the silken, super-smooth finish.

Luxol Silk. Its perfect silk finish makes it so easy to wash, so easy to keep bright and clean looking for years and years.

Luxol Silk. Choose from over forty shades of silk. And from a whole new range of whites that whisper.

Drape your walls with Luxol Silk – the richest emulsion in the world.

Luxol Silk

British Paints
BERGER
WORLDWIDE

SAA/NIL/1360 R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

All you need for a lovely holiday is a lovely place ...

Relaxing in the beautiful valleys and hill resorts of Himachal gives you a wonderful feeling—a feast of fascinating panorama and lingering loveliness. Add to these the excellent facilities offered by HPTDC—and you'll have a memorable time.

Come to Kulu for apple scented orchards and fabulous Dussehra festivities. Manali has many picturesque pleasures, whereas Mandi is a truly temple town. Enrich your excursion by visiting Katrain, Naggar, Keylong and way-up Rohtang.

How to Reach : You can reach Manali by air, or by deluxe coaches/ordinary buses from Delhi and Chandigarh.

HIMACHAL
FOR ALL SEASONS, ALL REASONS

TOURIST BUNGALOW, KULU

HPTDC offers year-round facilities in terms of accomodation (hotels, loghuts, tourist bungalows, guest houses, etc.), catering and transport.

Avail of conducted tours in Himachal Tourism Luxury Coaches/AC cars*

Other worth-visiting places of tourist interest in Himachal Pradesh:

Parwanoo, Kasauli, Barog, Shimla, Chail, Sarahan, Chamba, Khajjiar, Dalhousie, Dharamsala, Palampur, Joginder Nagar etc.

TOURIST BUNGALOW, MANALI

* Air-conditioned & Super Deluxe Coaches Imported & Indian Cars available for various destinations in Himachal from New Delhi Chandigarh, Shimla, Manali & Dalhousie

...WE HAVE MORE

DOONGRI TEMPLE, MANALI

For detailed information and reservations, please contact Himachal Tourism Offices at :

NEW DELHI : Chandralok Bldg. 36 Janpath, Tel.: 345320. 210-211, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19, Ashok Road.
CALCUTTA : 25 Camac Street, Tel : 446847.
BOMBAY : Shop No. 2, Trade Centre, Arcade World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay-400 055. Tel : 219191/284
MADRAS : 28, Commander-in-Chief Road, Tel : 812955.
CHANDIGARH : S.C.O. 1048-49, Sector 22-B, Tel : 26494.
SHIMLA : Tel : 3311, 4589, 4559.

HIMACHAL TOURISM HPTDC

Himachal Pradesh Tourism Development Corporation Limited
Ritz Annexe, Shimla-171001.
Phones : 6037, 3977, 5071

Compacta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MMC

Pruning Plans

WHILE most companies are scrambling to hitch their wagons onto the speeding computer train currently racing across the country's industrial scene, Machinery Manufacturers Corporation (MMC), a Calcutta-based Mahindra concern, is thinking of unhitching. Manufacturing micro-computers and other esoteric paraphernalia for the growing domestic market during the last four years seems to have been anything but an inspiring experience for the company. And today, MMC President P.K. Basu admits ruefully: "Computers are not our priority."

MMC is in deep financial trouble, needs cash badly and seems set on hiving off some of its divisions in the effort to put its house in order. Company insiders disclose that the company has suffered a staggering loss of Rs 15 crore on a turnover of Rs 40 crore in its latest accounting 'year' of 18 months. Institutions like the Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India were being discreetly approached by the company last fortnight for bail-out loans.

Meanwhile, the weight of unremunerative units will in all probability be off-loaded, among them the small factory-cum-office complex tucked away in an industrial side lane in Calcutta, making micro-computers, floppy disc drives and matrix printers. Though Basu dismisses the suggestion that the computer division is being sold off, it is no secret that MMC has negotiated with at least one company — Development Consultant Private Limited (DCPL) — for some kind of tie-up, if not outright sale. Other companies too have cast covetous eyes on this division, among them DCM. But at the moment the question of whether to sell seems to be open.

What is certain, however, is that MMC—which mainly produces textile machinery—has plunged headlong into the red. "During the last financial year we had a fairly large number of orders but the Government's decision not to expand the spindleage of its mills last year hit our despatch plans," says Basu. This together with the general recession in the textile industry and the Government's delay in announcing a textile policy completed the damage.

All of MMC's woes cannot, however, be blamed fully on the textile recession. Accusing fingers within the company point to deficiencies in marketing, which the management is now desperately trying to make up by seeking export markets. Last fortnight, Basu and a team of MMC engineers were hard at work in Bangladesh trying to hawk textile machines. They came away after signing a contract with a local company — Bangladesh Machine Tools Pvt Ltd — for participating jointly on a tender floated by the state-owned Bangladesh Textile Machinery Corporation.

In the circumstances, MMC's decision to concentrate more on its principal product—which admittedly has only a shrinking domestic market — while according second priority to its computer division, seems quixotic. "Computers constitute less than 5 per cent of our turnover," offers Basu in explanation, "and now textile machinery is our priority." In a more candid vein, he adds: "Due to the recession we started looking at restructuring the organisation and our priorities got changed."

The Belwadi Works in Mysore

"Computers are not our priority."

P.K. BASU
president, MMC

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The recent change in the company, however, seems to be more in the nature of pruning rather than "restructuring". The first casualty was the company's office in Bangalore. Started in 1981 to prise open new markets, the Bangalore office with its 140-odd employees was wound up abruptly last month. More than a dozen executives were brought back to Calcutta, some were retained at the MMC regional sales office, and the rest were bidden adieu. The company's factory at Mysore is also reportedly proposed to be taken out of MMC and transferred to Mahindra & Mahindra, a related company.

The MMC management vehemently dismisses this gloomy scenario. "When we decided to have the Mysore factory, we wanted to control it from Bangalore," says Basu, "once this project was over we felt it was no longer required to keep the office , which we brought back to Calcutta." As a matter of fact, the Mysore project was completed in 1981, which is when the office was opened. Besides, why a corporate office should be set up with export and central marketing wings simply in order to "control" a factory is not clear.

While Basu insists that there is no move to close down the Mysore factory, which currently employs about 850 people, he glosses over the fact that the factory is in trouble because of the failure of one of its two major products — the draw frames. "The draw frame was a dud right from the beginning and it was felt our collaborators had duped us," says a company engineer.

Only time will now provide the verdict on the management's decision to give textile machinery activity its fullest attention, while a potential money-spinner, a computer division for which other companies are hungering, seems set to receive the butt end.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WIMPY

Burger Split

Wimpy in Delhi: unpalatable charges

WHEN the first Wimpy fast food outlet opened in New Delhi early this year, it had everything going for it: a prime site in the capital, sales growing at a fast clip, and a prized foreign connection. Infected by the upbeat trend, entrepreneur Avtar Singh Selhi talked of opening 200 parlours country-wide.

Nine months later, the cash registers continue to ring at the ritzy parlour in the capital, but 'Wimpy Fast Foods' (monthly turnover: around Rs 7.5 lakh) horizons are clouded by a legal battle involving sordid charges of cheating and forgery. The battle was scheduled to begin last fortnight at the Delhi High Court, which appointed an observer to keep tabs on cash inflow.

Pushing for winding up the company—though only as a last resort—is Ramesh Hemnani, who along with his non-resident brother Ajit runs a clutch of trading companies in Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong and Africa. In the dock is the UK-based Selhi, one of whose firms has been franchised by British hamburger giant Wimpy International to operate Wimpy parlours in India.

The issues at stake are whether the Hemnanis had bought equity in the company and were its directors. Ramesh Hemnani has claimed in court that he and his brother in effect were eased out of Wimpy Fast Foods although they had invested Rs 9 lakh in the venture, as had Selhi. He also claims in his petition that the duo sounded Wimpy International two years ago in London on launching fast food parlours in India, and that they were steered to Thames Trading Company, the Channel Islands firm of which Selhi is a director. The two sides struck a deal: each would put in half the cost of the New Delhi venture's plant and machinery. Hemnani says that the brothers put up the cash and were allotted shares in the new Indian company.

But, as he says they learnt subsequently, no company existed then. Wimpy Fast Foods was incorporated only in January 1984. So they received shares in a non-existent company. In support of these contentions, Hemnani produces the share certificates, a letter from the British solicitors of Thames Trading Company informing him in September 1983 that according to its clients the company had been incorporated, and documents in which he is listed as a director of the company.

The petition goes on to add that Hemnani set up the outlet. Shortly afterwards, things began to sour. Selhi, the petition suggests, started milking the company by charging exorbitant rates for the food and equipment supplied by some of Selhi's other companies, and by diverting funds from a common bank account to these companies.

Selhi denies all this. His lawyer says the brothers had no stake in the company's equity, were not directors and have tampered with documents to suggest the contrary. Selhi got the parlour going, and the money from the bank account was due to Selhi's companies for goods supplied.

Selhi said that he appointed Hemnani as an additional director of the company in February last year. His one-year term expired at the end of the company's financial year last April but could not be extended at a board meeting for lack of a quorum. But, according to Selhi, Hemnani feared that Selhi had no intention of reappointing him and called a board meeting on June 7, when Selhi and his wife (also a director) were out of the country. Hemnani appointed himself company chairman and his brother and brother-in-law as directors. He then proceeded to oust the Selhis from the board on a legal technicality. Claims Selhi: "Hemnani has filed this case to harass and embarrass the company. He wants to be reinstated as an additional director."

The court will have to decide who is telling the truth. About the only matter the two warring sides agree on is that Hemnani called the June 7 board meeting. What also seems evident is that he was unable to enforce his orders in the parlour after he tried to take over the company. While the case drags on, the Selhi saga has other sidelights. Sidharth Bhandari, who held half the equity in Selhi's Wimpy India, has pulled out of the company in order to look after his own business, though he retains a presence on the board of Wimpy Foods, also owned by Selhi but different from Wimpy Fast Foods. Wimpy Foods itself owes over Rs 1 crore to the banks and financial institutions.

With his sole right to run the money-spinning fast food outlet in question, the high-profile Selhi has much more to chew on than just hamburgers. A question mark also hangs over the parlour itself. As Bhandari puts it: "No one likes to deal with a company where a court case to control it is on." Selhi, apart from proving his case in court, will also have to prove his former business partner is in the wrong.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

Hemnani claimed in effect in court that he and his brother were eased out of Wimpy Fast Foods although they had invested Rs 9 lakh in the venture.

Selhi says the brothers had no stake in the company's equity, were not directors and have tampered with documents to suggest the contrary.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Experience the exclusive attention you get at your club. On Air Canada's Business Class—30,000 feet high.

At Air Canada, we believe that by understanding your needs better, we can fulfil them more effectively. So take a look at what you'll find on Air Canada's Business Class.

More cabin-crew

There are more cabin-crew for every passenger on our route: to give you the exclusive attention you get at your club.

Roomy seats

Air Canada's Business Class seat has the same width, recline and legroom as a First Class seat on most other airlines. Arranged in a 2 + 2 + 2 format to give you the privacy you get at your club.

Non-stop flights

There's more: Air Canada flies non-stop to London and Singapore, direct to Toronto, three times a week. Leaving Bombay at a convenient time and arriving at the other end in daylight.

Come. Experience a flight that's more than just a way of cutting down on travel time.

Fly Air Canada's Business Class. And your club flies with you.

AC/5/28

AIR CANADA

Toronto—London—Bombay—Singapore

For bookings, contact Air Canada, Hotel Oberoi Towers, Tel: 202-7512, 202-7632. Or your travel agent.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AJAX/OCM/85-W

WINTER WEAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Ratan Tata Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OCM

SUITINGS

THE PERFECT FABRIC

CC-0. In Public Domain. CC-BY-NC-SA. Kingston College, London, Hardwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wills Filter set the filter trend in cigarettes long years ago. Today it's still the finest. In taste, in satisfaction. Hand-picked virginia tobaccos married to an efficient filter make it so. Millions of smokers have discovered it, then stayed with it.

WILLS FILTER

Filter and tobacco perfectly matched

STATUTORY WARNING
CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"We must stop thinking in terms of wars and more about quality."

JAL ENGINEER, proprietor, Universal Luggage

"We have established ourselves as the definite leaders of the industry."

DILIP PIRAMAL, chairman, Blow Plast Limited

MOULDED LUGGAGE

Mobile Market

THE BATTLE of the bags has always been a fierce one. Last year witnessed a no-holds-barred contest when Universal Luggage, makers of the Aristocrat range, offered price cuts of up to 35 per cent in a spirited effort to overtake Blow Plast Ltd, makers of the competing VIP range. When the dust settled and both companies totted up their takings, it was clear that Universal's Jal Engineer, the founder of the moulded luggage industry in India, had lost out badly to arch-rival Dilip Piramal. Piramal's Blow Plast came out of 1984-85 with luggage sales totalling a hefty Rs 60 crore, a 50 per cent increase over the previous year. Universal came through rather battered with Rs 33 crore, a meagre 10 per cent increase over 1983-84, and well below the targeted Rs 50 crore. Says Engineer: "It's been a bad year and a bad setback."

The prime reason for the reclusive entrepreneur's company doing so badly is labour trouble. A prolonged strike lasting over nine months had shut down its Bombay plant since September last year. The plant contributes 40 per cent of production. A shorter shutdown crippled the working of its Satara factory for about four months. Universal executives assert they lost Rs 17 crore of production mainly because of the strikes and that Blow Plast and the industry number three—Safari Industries—which has increased its sales from Rs 9 crore to Rs 15 crore this year, carried away the rest of the pie. Indirectly confirming this, Piramal says: "Whatever it is, we have established ourselves as the definite leaders of the industry."

But both Engineer and Piramal could face stiff competition in the coming years because of the proposed entry into the Indian market of the world's second largest manufacturer of luggage, American Tourister. The US giant has tied up with the B.D. Group of Industries—a steel group with a turnover of Rs 100 crore—to promote a company called Gujarat B.D. Luggage. Its plant, with an investment of Rs 20 crore—equal to the investment of all the three Indian manufacturers put together—is to come up near Vadodara. Says Harmeet Singh, project coordinator and former chief executive of Blow Plast: "Superior hand luggage is not available in the country and the status connotation of the product has gone. We aim to produce high-class bags for the upper segment of the market and think they will sell even if they are priced 30 per cent higher."

The entry of American Tourister will almost certainly cause fresh ripples in a market that is expected to grow annually at about 25 per cent. Already moulded luggage accounts for 65 per cent of the market, with rexine/plywood cases a distant second at 25 per cent. In that contest the new contender for the plastic sweepstakes is definitely someone to contend with. Says Engineer: "They are certainly going to take a major share of the market." He mentions that American Tourister had earlier offered him a collaboration—which the proud Engineer countered by making a similar return offer. Piramal—who had tied up with Samsonite briefly before this first Indo-US luggage marriage broke up—feels on the other hand that there is little to worry about in the American Tourister challenge: "We make the same bags they do."

Not quite. The new bags will be vacuum formed out of a new material called ABS, which is used for bags all over the world—except in India. Here HDPP, a much cheaper but also considerably heavier material, has been the staple diet of the injection-moulding machines. "Ours is the new technology," says Singh. "Theirs is the old. We will give India contemporary luggage." And as a part of the war of words that is heating up before the battle begins in the market-place, he scoffs at the fact that most Indian bags have only token locks and token keys. "Not so," retorts Safari Chairman Sumati Mehta. "The newer generations of bags have exclusive safety features like combination locks and vault locks comparable to the best in the world."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The luggage landscape has been energised not just by the arrival of one of the giants, but also by the success of soft luggage–bags and totes–launched by Blow Plast in its Skybag range. Piramal claims that sales last month at some of his larger stores were almost equally divided between hard and soft luggage. Safari is thinking of introducing a similar line, while Engineer says he is looking into it. The new company is also going to produce what Singh calls "soft bags of a superior quality." And says Mehta: "The market for this range of luggage is the upwardly mobile professional who wants to look good when he travels."

Blow Plast now expects sales to shoot up to Rs 90 crore in 1985-86, while a chastened Universal is aiming for about half that. Says Engineer: "When a man is hospitalised you don't think of running, you have to walk first." Universal's new Oscar range is a low-priced 90 per cent plastic suitcase turned out on integrated machines–which produce almost an entire bag in one go–at its new Aurangabad plant. Engineer has reportedly gone in for mass production, targeting a rate of one bag every 50 seconds. However the plant has teething problems and is producing at only half that rate. Safari, on the other hand, plans to nearly double its turnover this year to Rs 30 crore, and is looking for a tie-up with the Bata chain of shoe stores to sell its bags. "We don't want to downrate our product by giving discounts," says Mehta. "We'd rather depend on strong marketing."

Over the next few years, therefore, the bright bags will be pawns in a developing struggle for markets. Says Piramal: "The new ranges now coming out every day—I do not know my own complete range—indicate that the industry has come of age." Engineer is more circumspect: "The next few years will see steady consolidation of markets. We must stop thinking in terms of wars and more about quality." What seems likely is that the American Tourister stress on quality will in fact be one of the many elements in a new battle of the bags.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

ITDC

Akbar's Loss

THE FOREIGN office is getting a foreign office, or offices to be precise. And in keeping with its image, the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) is going five-star. The new offices will have central air-conditioning, wall to wall carpeting, a shopping arcade, attached bathrooms with showers in every office, a swimming pool, cafeteria and ornate dining halls. Sounds familiar? It should, at least for those acquainted with Delhi. The new offices of MEA will be housed in the plush and prestigious Akbar Hotel, built in the distinctive Corbusier style and considered the second-best hostelry after the Ashok in the India Tourism Development Corporation's (ITDC) hotel chain.

As one tourism official snidely commented: "There are going to be an awful lot of bathrooms in the MEA's new offices." The 318-room hotel has as many bathrooms but nobody in the foreign office, now housed in the sandstone confines of South Block, is complaining. Especially considering that one of the few available toilets in South Block was walled in for the private use of former foreign secretary M.K.Rasgotra, and another commandeered by security personnel.

But toilet facilities aside, the new move was somewhat inevitable and arose from the coincidental question of the MEA's desperate hunt for office space and the ITDC's desire to shed some of its extra rooms. The common link which brought the MEA and Akbar together in plush partnership was the Minister of State for External Affairs Khurshed Alam Khan. In his previous job as minister for tourism and civil aviation, Khan was aware of the problem of low occupancy at most ITDC hotels in Delhi. And, at a recent meeting between the MEA and tourism officials, it was decided that there could be no better way to secure much-needed office space for the MEA and at the same time rescue the ITDC from a glut of unoccupied hotel rooms than to transfer one fully equipped five-star hotel from the ITDC to the MEA.

Both the external and defence ministries have been jockeying for more space in stately South Block, which they share with the prime minister's office. Earlier, the ground and second floor of the west wing of South Block were occupied by MEA officials who were gradually elbowed out of the ground floor as the needs of the Prime Minister's Secretariat expanded. The second floor was taken over as a security measure. Now the Defence Ministry wants more room, despite having constructed a large new office complex behind South Block, and so does the MEA. As one senior official pointed out: "If the MEA wants more room it will have to move out." And that is exactly what is planned once the Akbar Hotel is handed over to the foreign office, probably by December.

Nevertheless, the move to convert the Akbar into a ministry-base comes as a boon to the ITDC, which has been faced with a persistent problem of low occupancy in its nine hotels in the capital, especially after the Asiad-inspired hotel construction boom. So the Akbar, earlier a profitable enterprise still popular for its Sheeshmahal restaurant, decked with chains of bangles dangling from the ceiling, slipped into the red, losing Rs 60 lakh last year.

There has been persistent talk of the ITDC hiving off another of its hotels in the capital, the Rs 19 crore Samrat, which lost a staggering Rs 2.27 crore in 1983-84 and Rs 1.25 crore last year, and newspaper reports have spoken of the hotel being offered as office space to Air-India and Indian Airlines. But ITDC Managing Director Rajan Jetley denied this, saying that the Samrat would be developed as a hotel for business travellers and airline crews. Nevertheless, both the Akbar and the Samrat have already been leasing out large numbers of their rooms, if not entire floors, to various companies. DCM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

fence Minispite having ice complex
oes the MEA out: "It's ave to move
t is planned
d over to the ecember.
convert the comes as a been faced f low occu-the capital spired hotel kbar, earlier pular for its ecked with om the ceilg Rs 60 lakh

t talk of the hotels in the t, which lost 1983-84 and newspaper hotel being r-India and aging Direc-
saying this ed as a hotel irline crew ar and the leasing out if not entire
nies. DCM

The Akbar Hotel and (right) its lobby: new occupants

...ga and the Gas Authority of India, for ...ke, maintain offices in the Samrat, ...ohia Machines, the International ...ports Authority of India, as well as the ...re for Development of Telematics, ...e leased out a part of the Akbar.

Tall this cast doubts on the wisdom of ...hotel construction boom in the capital ...st of the new private hotels too have ...n leasing out rooms as office space), ...e is one precedent in the capital for the ...l of shift now planned for the Akbar: ...s of the Jawaharlal Nehru University ...mpus in south Delhi were initially de-...ped as a new centre for the Lal ...adur Shastri National Academy of ...ministration, the currently Mussoorie-...ed training establishment for fresh ...ntrants into the Government's blue-...ed services like the Indian Adminis-...tive Service (IAS). But the move was ...n up, and rooms that were designed to ...se IAS probationers were converted ...o class-rooms, which consequently ...d mirrors in the corners and – like the ...Akbar – adjoining bathrooms. Now, with ...ing learnt from past experience, the ...ri Academy is proposed to be shifted ...a new location in Ghaziabad, just across ...hi's border with Uttar Pradesh.

But it remains far from clear whether a ...el is in fact suitable for ministry use: ...ce most of the rooms are of the same size, will a joint secretary sit in the same kind of room as a section officer? And how much money will have to be spent in ordering suitable office furniture after throwing out the existing beds, mirrors and other fittings? Besides, the car park is almost certainly too small for the ministry's purposes.

For the ITDC, it must be a bit of a wrench losing one of its prized hotels. Jetley said he had decided to give up the Akbar because, apart from losing money, it was competing with the corporation's other hotels. Worse, with tourist traffic still falling, as many as 1,000 hotel rooms are being added this year with the expected commissioning of the Meridien and the Park Hotel. After the changeover, the Akbar's existing clientele is expected to move to ITDC's other hotels, boosting their room occupancy. The corporation will get compensation of about Rs 2 crore immediately (most of it as payment for the 150 rooms that it had added to the hotel a couple of years ago—the property itself belongs to the New Delhi Municipal Committee), and some of the hotel's 500 staff-members will be retained to maintain the infrastructure, at the MEA's expense. The rest will be dispersed to other existing establishments of the corporation and to handle catering at Delhi's new international airport.

In any case, the Tourism Ministry's new policy is to leave the business of five-star hotels to the private sector. The corporation has been asked not to invest its money in five star hotels like it did in 1982-83 when it added the Kanishka and the Samrat to its Delhi chain at a cost of nearly Rs 40 crore. The corporation is reverting back to its basic role — of providing tourism infrastructure in places where it is non-existent, inadequate or where the private sector is hesitant to invest. Infrastructure established, the ITDC will move elsewhere. In keeping with this philosophy the corporation is now building nine three star hotels at places like Ranchi, Bodh Gaya and Agra, some of them in the joint sector. It is also transferring its small travellers' lodges and hotels of less than 20 rooms to state tourism corporations, and its Delhi hotels have been permitted to rent out up to 30 per cent of their space commercially.

With all this, ITDC's hotels division may finally be able to show a profit. At the moment virtually the entire profits of the corporation (Rs 1.25 crore last year) come from the duty-free shops that it runs. But with the latest asset-stripping operation and other juggling, Jetley will be sniggering all the way to the bank with expected profits of over Rs 3 crore in 1985-86. But for others who have tender memories of moments spent in the Akbar's beautiful Sheeshmahal restaurant or the Madhuban coffee shop, the idea of bringing the MEA rushing in where ITDC feared to tread, seems nothing short of sacrilege.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Bulls Retreat

IT WAS a sight that had become unusual on the stock-market for many months: that of bulls turning tail and fleeing down a descending share price index graph, with newly confident bears in hot pursuit. If the decision by the financial institutions to unload shares in July had checked the bulls mid-stride, after they had been on an unchecked rampage for more than six months, last fortnight saw them running scared.

More than 20 leading scrips on the market came down by more than 10 per cent in price during one short fortnight, with engineering, automobile, chemical, pharmaceutical and tyre companies suffering heavily. Such fancied counters as Lohia Machines, Kinetic Engineering, Motor Industries, Bajaj Auto, Brooke Bond, Ceat Tyres and SPIC saw the bulls take a hammering, while even TISCO and TELCO suffered losses. Among the few that managed to seek the high ground while the others fled were Baroda Rayon (cheered perhaps by the lower excise duties announced by the Government), Food Specialities and Indrol.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

This sharp turnabout in fortunes on a battlefield that had earlier been littered with the corpses of luckless bears fighting in a bull-dominated market is difficult to explain, especially since the institutions had stopped selling and showed no immediate inclination to return to the market. Indeed, with the monsoons having delivered their bounty and a record kharif crop expected in a few weeks' time, most companies should be expecting bumper returns during the current financial year. But the market often defies such obvious logic, and it is a brave man who will forecast what the immediate future has in store.

Nevertheless, yet another reversal of fortunes may already have taken place, with share prices picking up again in the closing days of the last fortnight. Also, the authorities on the different stock exchanges have relaxed the heavy margins that they had imposed earlier in an effort to restrict speculative purchases. With room thus having been created for buyers to grab shares without paying margins, the sellers might find the ground tilted against them as the share graph begins climbing once again.

The somewhat chastening experience of the past couple of months should teach new players on the market two lessons. The first is that even the most recklessly booming market can be forced to crash by the financial institutions unloading shares worth no more than Rs 30 crore, which is only a tiny fraction of their total holdings. And the second is that the tide never flows in one direction for too long a time; it is certain to be reversed at some point. The trick for those trying to swim with the tide is, of course, to gauge correctly when the tide is about to turn.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1985 HIGH	1985 LOW	CLOSE 5.9.85	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	59.00	29.00	43.50	2.50 –
Associated Cement	610.00	385.00	512.00	22.00 +
Atlas Copco	70.00	37.50	55.00	6.00 –
Associated Bearings	735.00	425.00	690.00	30.00 –
Bajaj Auto	2000.00	855.00	1665.00	185.00 –
Ballarpur	65.00	45.00	48.50	7.00 –
Baroda Rayon	460.00	281.00	435.00	55.00 +
Bata India	88.10	48.00	63.50	2.50 –
Bayer	480.00	305.00	380.00	70.00 –
Best & Crompton	115.00	61.00	96.00	9.00 –
Bharat Forge	95.00	35.50	72.00	4.00 –
Blow Plast	85.00	36.50	68.00	10.00 –
Blue Star	85.00	33.00	80.00	2.50 +
Bombay Dyeing	156.00	66.00	111.00	4.00 –
Brooke Bond	83.00	47.50	57.00	6.00 –
Ceat Tyres	290.00	180.00	255.00	35.00 –
Century Spinning	1310.00	810.00	1120.00	nil
Chloride India	91.00	56.90	77.00	5.00 –
Citurgia	85.00	32.25	58.00	nil
Colgate	318.00	147.00	171.50	1.50 +
Cyanamid	90.00	33.00	56.00	11.00 –
DCM	74.00	18.00	62.50	9.00 –
Dunlop	48.75	22.30	42.00	1.00 –
Elecon	108.00	54.00	85.00	5.00 –
Escorts	102.00	49.87	75.00	15.00 –
Food Specialities	215.00	86.00	177.50	17.50 +
Garware Nylon	56.00	24.50	48.00	1.00 –
Glaxo	79.00	24.00	66.00	1.00 +
G.E. Shipping	36.50	14.25	27.50	1.50 –
Gujarat St Fertilisers	810.00	537.00	685.00	20.00 –
Gwalior Rayon	87.00	53.75	67.00	7.00 –
Hindustan Lever	125.00	51.25	92.00	nil
Hindustan Motors	86.00	37.50	68.50	5.50 –
Indian Dyestuff	390.00	267.50	317.50	2.50 –
Indian Explosives	73.50	33.00	54.50	2.50 –
Indian Hotels	135.00	76.00	105.00	nil
Indian Organic	124.00	50.50	115.00	5.00 +
Indian Rayon	125.00	66.00	108.00	1.00 –
Indrol	250.00	90.50	195.00	20.00 +
Ingersoll-Rand	365.00	162.00	325.00	15.00 –
ITC	65.50	29.00	51.50	3.40 –
J K Synthetics	118.00	52.75	94.00	6.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	380.00	128.00	260.00	50.00 –
Kirloskar Oil	38.00	23.00	24.00	1.00 –
Lakme	200.00	74.00	137.50	7.50 –
Larsen & Toubro	175.00	72.00	147.00	2.00 –
Lipton	58.50	26.50	46.00	3.00 –
Lohia Machines	85.00	42.00	62.00	8.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	102.00	48.00	73.00	6.00 +
Motor Industries	690.00	321.25	570.00	60.00 –
National Organic	550.00	240.00	437.50	47.50 –
Nirlon	70.00	37.75	50.00	nil
Peico Electronics	99.00	38.40	71.75	4.75 –
Premier Auto	645.00	322.00	535.00	20.00 +
Ranbaxy	127.50	49.00	92.00	5.50 –
Raymond	120.00	59.00	79.00	7.00 –
Reckitt & Colman	95.00	57.00	85.00	nil
Reliance Industries	252.00	120.00	219.00	11.00 –
Sandoz	82.00	31.00	61.00	4.00 –
Shriram Fibres	81.00	34.00	67.00	7.00 –
SPIC	137.00	43.50	102.00	12.00 –
Tata Steel	1195.00	381.00	915.00	70.00 –
Telco	1030.00	409.00	735.00	40.00 –
Vulcan Laval	125.00	64.00	80.00	32.50 –
Zenith Steel	75.00	28.00	60.00	4.00 –
20th Century Leasing	84.00	31.50	51.00	5.00 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.4466	8.3104
Austria	Schilling	100	60.0438	59.7380
Bahrain	Dinar	1	31.8032	31.7603
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.2013	42.1990
Canada	Dollar	1	9.0854	9.0082
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.1589	1.1469
Egypt	Pound	1	14.4347	14.4293
France	Franc	1	1.3956	1.3698
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6041	1.5885
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.0732	1.0690
Iran	Rial	100	13.1773	13.1581
Italy	Lira	100	0.6401	0.6392
Japan	Yen	100	5.1177	5.0777
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7024	0.7021
Kuwait	Dinar	1	39.7028	39.6822
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.0081	4.[illegible]
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.7942	0.78[illegible]
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6439	0.63[illegible]
Netherlands	Guilder	1	3.7766	3.7429
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7631	0.7443
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.4641	5.4248
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0726	0.0721
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4413	0.4409
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.4477	1.4335
Switzerland	Franc	1	5.1452	5.0977
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7039	0.7010
Thailand	Baht	100	44.9531	44.8223
UK	Pound	1	16.2661	16.1472
USA	Dollar	1	12.5475	12.4235
UAE	Dirham	1	3.0972	3.0813
USSR	Rouble	1	14.6078	14.5833
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	4.3122	4.2087

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Ltd. New Delhi, and quoted between the Banks on 10.9.85.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THINGS were a bit rosier last fortnight with wholesale prices having gone back to the long run trend and industrial production rising. Power generation has also increased, as has manufacturing output. Money supply showed a marginal growth, bank credit expanded a bit, and bullion prices continued to fall. ALL DATA are seasonally adjusted. The current trend is computed on the basis of the past six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale prices fell back to the long run trend owing to drops in the prices of manufactured products, food products and non-food articles.

Industrial production rose by 1.8 per cent in June owing to an increase in power generated and, more importantly, in manufacturing output.

Manufactures, which had dropped by 1.8 per cent, rose by 2.3 in June and contributed to the current trend rising from 7.6 to 8 per cent

It showed a fortnightly growth of 0.47 per cent which was largely due to a 0.84 per cent growth in commercial bank credit to business.

Bank credit loosened a bit with an increase of 0.8 per cent, which was above the long term trend.

The share market rose by 2.5 per cent, due to upswings in the scrips of transport equipment, silk, woollen and rayon textile companies.

Power generation rose by 0.5 per cent due to the monsoon and growth in hydel generation; this offset a 0.4 per cent fall in thermal power.

Gold prices fell sharply by 7.2 per cent last fortnight, continuing the reversal of the sharply rising trend in the previous month.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Items with maximum growth in April 1985

	% Growth
Locomotives	89.63
Earth Moving Machinery	86.40
Metallurgical Machinery	67.61
Agricultural Machinery	65.23
Textile Machinery	47.49
Tea	40.70
Industrial Instruments	37.29
Shipbuilding	36.12
Special Steels	34.98
Photographic Instruments	32.66
Dairy Machinery	30.24
Machine Tools	26.49
Vaccum Pumps & Compressors	26.47
Typewriters	25.84
Jute Machinery	23.69
Motor Cars	22.91
Fine Chemicals	18.82
Skip Hoists & Cranes etc.	17.64
Scientific Instruments	17.51
Saw Mills	17.33
Surgical Products	17.22
Hard Board	16.82
Electrical Machinery	16.73
Mathematical Instruments	16.62
Iron & Steel Casting Forging	16.45
Artificial Leather & Oil Cloth	15.40
Generation & Transmission Equipment	13.50
Vegetable & Animal Oils	13.37
Air-conditioners & Refrigerators	12.81
Chemical & Pharmaceutical Machinery	12.25
Transport Equipment	10.93
Matches	10.88
Sewing & Knitting Machines	10.84
Jewellery	10.53
Storage Batteries	10.35
Dairy Products	10.33
Tea Machinery	9.55
Electrical Lamps	9.36
Nuts & Bolts	9.33
Telecommunications	9.17
Motorcycles & Bicycles	8.74
Cotton Fabrics Decentralised Sector	8.36
Insulators	8.00
Inorganic Chemicals	6.98
Grain Mill Products	6.66
Bakery Products	6.23

The growth of 80 series with a total weight of 44.657 has accelerated. The growth of 39 series with a total weight of 49.860 has decelerated 119 series listed.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1985	1984
Petroleum Refinery Products Thousand tonnes, July	3369	2887
Fertiliser Thousand tonnes, July	451	408
Electricity Generated Million Kwh, July	13882	12707
Termal Plant Load Factor Per Cent, July	47.0	41.9
Call Money Rate Per Cent, July	10.0	9.87

—Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRICKET

Taming the Devils

CRICKET in Sri Lanka resembles its rumbustious form in the Caribbeans in more ways than one. The grounds are picturesque and ringed with palm trees, and the beer-guzzling crowds boisterous and forever in a holiday mood, with loud pop music to entertain them during the lunch and tea intervals. More vitally, the cricketers are tall, dark, and ruthless, as the Indian cricket team suddenly discovered last fortnight in the course of what had developed into a disastrous tour.

Landing in Colombo three weeks ago with the tag of world champions, Kapil's Devils seemed to have forgotten that modern cricket is tough and demanding. And faced with the pressures on a losing side, they began blaming bad umpiring and other extraneous reasons for their remarkably poor showing in the first-ever official cricket series in the island. But the tour record permitted few such excuses: a one-day international had been won by the skin of their teeth, and the first Test drawn by the grace of the rain God. But two brief showers on the final day of the second Test failed to prevent defeat, and the humiliated world champions had to admit that the Sri Lankans had been in the driver's seat almost right through the tour. So when they trooped out of the Sarawanamuthu Stadium at the end of the second Test, defeat writ large on their faces, many of the veterans in the team had the grace to admit that the babes of international cricket fully deserved their maiden victory in only their 14th test. They had played the way test cricket should be played—hard and inspired.

Even as shock and disbelief enveloped the Indian camp, many of the veterans admitted that they had failed to do just that. A team which floored just two difficult catches in the entire Benson and Hedges tournament had dropped over 10 in the course of the second Test, captain Kapil Dev claiming the pride of place in the rogues' gallery by dropping as many as three catches. "We fielded badly," he admitted later. "I think our bowlers bowled just as well. But what could they do when the catches were not being taken?" Veteran Sunil Gavaskar said: "It became so bad that we even stopped smiling in embarrassment after dropping a catch, for no one knew whose turn it would be next to drop a catch." The same lack of application and character was evident in the way the batsmen folded up in all four Test innings, barely getting past 250 once and totalling fewer than 1,000 runs for the loss of 40 wickets. Batsmen with substantial reputations to defend found their armour pierced repeatedly by the Sri Lankan attack. Three wickets fell for six runs at the start of one innings, and if these had succumbed to good bowling there was no such excuse for the collapse of four wickets in the space of 49 balls later in the same innings, making a mockery of Kapil's prediction of a 75-run lead for India. The second innings was even more pathetic. Greenhorn opener Lalchand Rajput, rattled by a bouncer-barrage, surrendered tamely; last year's superstar Mohammed Azharuddin committed harakiri by hooking in a fit of rage so apparent it was visible from the press-box, and Shastri, that doughty defender of Lahore and Melbourne, followed a harmless ball outside the off-stump to his doom as if engaged in giving the slips catching practice.

In contrast, Sri Lanka played to a plan within their limitations. Their fast bowlers are pacy, inspired and accurate, not the most hostile in the world. True they made generous use of the bouncer but they never threatened the batsmen in the way a Malcolm Marshall would. "They are good," said Gavaskar. "They bowl a nice line outside the off-stump. And with so much one-day cricket the batsmen have forgotten how to leave the ball outside the off-stump. They all want to nudge it and get a single, and only succeed in getting out." Twenty-seven of the 40 Indian wickets to fall were snapped up behind the batsman — 16 of them by wicket-keeper Silva who was having a marvellous series.

The Sri Lankan batsmen also responded positively to the team's game-plan in crucial stages of the game. Aravinda de Silva almost certainly went into the history books when he hooked a six off the first ball of the innings from Kapil Dev in the first Test, when Sri Lanka were engaged in a run chase. de Silva's exhilarating partnership with Roy Dias

SRENIKSETT

Rival captains Kapil (left) and Mendis: one-sided encounter

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

on the fourth day of the second Test enabled skipper Duleep Mendis to declare with enough time to bowl India out.

Team manager M.L.Jaisimha and Kapil Dev admit that the team has so far been unable to get into top gear. On the fourth day of the second Test, a disgusted Kapil was overheard saying in the dressing-room: "Something is wrong, nothing is jelling on this tour." Jaisimha, his forehead creased with worry, felt similarly helpless. This, for once was a tour not marred by a Kapil-Gavaskar fight or unseemly shenanigans over team selection. And the players could not complain of an excess of cricket.

Yet they found themselves so woefully short of fighting spirit that Kapil had to remind his players at a team meeting on the eve of the final day of the second Test: "This is a Test match and should be taken seriously. This is like our final examination, how can we take it lightly? For nine days out of ten in the Test series so far they have dominated us. Let us change that now." The exhortation was in vain. And though Kapil Dev set an example of sorts by walloping the Sri Lanka attack for 78 runs, this was not Tunbridge Wells. The bowling had more variety than that of the limited Zimbabwean attack and no other batsman barring Sivaramakrishna, to a lesser extent, showed Kirmani-like staying qualities.

But disappointment turned into rage and led to Kapil's angry outburst at the umpires during the post-match press conference. Asked if his team had been outplayed in all departments of the game, batting, bowling and fielding, he angrily added, "... and umpiring." He went on to predict sardonically: "This Sri Lankan team played very well here, but they will not look so good when they go to play outside." The Indian skipper bristled when asked whether the Indian batsmen did not have to blame themselves for their plight. "What can you do when the other man stands in front of you holding a gun? The first hour of the game was crucial today and they got the breakthrough, in the form of the wickets of Srikkanth and Vengsarkar, with the help of the umpires. I was standing there and do not think that Viswanath was out. Just see how many LBW decisions have been given against us and how many against them? If umpiring remains like this we have no hope in the third Test also."

WHILE Kapil could be faulted for his broadside, it must be said in fairness to him and his teammates that they were getting a raw deal from the umpires. Srikkanth's leg-before decision was open to question, and there were many who doubted that Vengsarkar had touched the ball which Silva caught. There was a deviation from the pad and for seconds after the umpire's finger went up Vengsarkar stood his ground, pointing at his right pad. Viswanath could claim the benefit of the doubt in the same manner, as could Gavaskar in the first innings, when he was given out stumped for only the second time in his career. But that hardly explains the collapse.

What made matters worse for the visitors was the leeway the umpires gave the Sri Lankan pacemen in merrily overstepping the crease. "This is much worse than what Sarfaraz used to get away with in Pakistan," said a senior Indian batsman, pointing out that the Sri Lankan pacemen were customarily overstepping by almost a yard — something that was even visible from the press box. Time and again, Gavaskar diplomatically drew the umpires' attention to this by using his bat to draw a new crease far ahead of the bowling crease at the non-striker's end. "Imagine what happens to the morale of the non-striker when he sees the bowler overstep so often and the umpire says nothing," said Kapil. "Look at the scoreboard and it tells the whole story. In over a hundred overs they have been no-balled only twice."

The Indian team at one stage seemed to be battling the umpires instead of Mendis' men. Srikkanth, usually a happy-go-lucky slogger, was having a particularly miserable time, perhaps because of his ethnicity. He had an angry exchange with umpire Vidanagama who, angered by his appeal against the light failing on the fourth day, told him to "bloody well get on with the game". This followed a similar exchange with Maninder Singh, who as an extra picked up the ball innocently during a drinks break. The same umpire told him to "bloody well" leave the ball there. Jaisimha promptly lodged a written protest against the use of "unparliamentary language" by the umpire.

With so much bitterness it is unlikely that the last word on umpiring has been said. On tours where things are not going right, it is easy for teams to develop a persecution complex about umpiring. But that only makes life more difficult for them in the field. The Indians can only salvage their reputation by going out and winning the third Test the only way Test matches can be won—by giving no quarter and expecting none.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Colombo

SRENIKSETT

Gavaskar (left) and Roy Dias: hard lessons

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Certain Smile winning from Gorerdhan disputed race

BTC

Reining in

SINCE August 16, the Bangalore Turf Club (BTC), the country's biggest racing circuit, has been enveloped in a shroud of silence that is infinitely more deafening than the raucous reverberations heard on popular race days. What's more, the shutdown has come right in the middle of the BTC's bustling racing season, causing panic in the ranks of those responsible for the running of the races.

The panic is, however, somewhat self-imposed. In what is easily the most traumatic—and dramatic—setback in the club's 23-year-old history, the state Government on August 16 suspended horse-racing at the BTC following investigations by the police into the alleged rigging of two races by none other than the club's powerful stewards. The investigation report indicated clearly that there was definite evidence of "rigging" by some of the stewards but a lack of enough facts prevented the police from officially charging them.

The suspension order led almost inevitably, to a fierce fracas between BTC officials and the state Government, the outcome of which is likely to change character and face of horse-racing in the city. The two government orders passed are controversial enough to ensure that eventuality. The first stipulates that "no race-horse owner should be a steward in the managing committee of the club" and the second holds that stewards will not be allowed to bet on the races either directly or indirectly.

Though largely welcomed by the club's 344 members and the swelling number of punters, the orders, specially the one barring race-horse owners from becoming stewards, predictably kicked up clouds of dust in racing circles. In the BTC context, the immediate implication was that four of the nine racing stewards, who happened to be horse-owners as well, would have to resign from the club's managing committee. Conversely, it also meant that horse owners, the most powerful lobby in Indian racing circles, would no longer be eligible for the pivotal posts of club stewards. The stewards not only control racing in the clubs but are also responsible for enforcing the rules and are the final arbiters of disputed races.

The loudest neighs of protest, therefore, emanated from the Karnataka Race Horse Owners Association whose President Hajee Abdul Sattar Sait charged that "not allowing us to be stewards would mean eliminating the people who have the biggest stake in the game". Sait went a length further by filing a writ petition in the high court questioning the powers of the Government to impose such rules on an autonomous club. But the Government promptly cracked the whip again by withdrawing the licence of the club to conduct off-course betting till its orders were carried out. That was a pill too bitter to swallow. Off-course betting is the most profitable aspect of racing and BTC rakes in an average of Rs 1.25 lakh a day in earnings from the 217 off-course betting days in the season.

The crack-down appeared to be having the desired effect. Last fortnight, all four stewards-cum-race-horse owners resigned from the managing committee. Said Kumar Siddanna, ex-chairman of the club and one of the four: "We are quitting not because we think the Government is in the right but in the larger interests of the club. We don't want it to lose any more revenue."

However, the Government was still not through. Its next move was to announce that off-course betting would remain suspended till the club incorporated the new rules as articles of its constitution, a measure, it claimed, to ensure non-violation of its orders in the future. It then hammered the point home by announcing that the proposed racing commission would not be set up till the club held an extraordinary general body meeting and ratified the new rules. Pushed to the rails, the club had little choice but to comply.

While the club officials continued to chaff at the bit, a majority of the punters have been backing the government horse. As P.G.Halarnkar, city police commissioner and himself a member of the club managing committee, said: "I have received numerous complaints from the public about how stewards were interfering with the results of races and contrary to the code of conduct expected, were even placing heavy bets on some races."

Two races in particular sent punters galloping to the objection box. In the first, held in November last, the stewards revised the final placings despite the fact that neither the jockey nor the trainer of the losing horse had complained. In February, Certain Smile ridden by jockey Warren Singh, romped home by two lengths in the Linganmakki Plate. But the jockey riding the second-placed horse, Goverdhan, raised an objection claiming that Singh had cut into his path, forcing him to check his horse. The objection was upheld and Goverdhan placed first. What queered the pitch was the fact that Goverdhan is jointly owned by two of the turf club's stewards.

For the BTC, it has proved a costly lesson. Already, the club has lost around Rs 20 lakh in revenue from off-course earnings and, strapped for cash, it now faces the haunting prospect of cancellation of its winter races. Club officials are making frenzied efforts to get the Government to soften its stand, but with the odds stacked against them, only the very foolhardy will place bets on who will canter home the winner.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Looks good- performs better-

BASF
EXPANDED Styropor® PACKS

Yes, BASF Expanded Styropor is an excellent performer. It protects and at the same time pleases the eye because it is aesthetic, sturdy, light yet strong, keeps out dirt and moisture, absorbs shocks, insulates against heat, is neat and easy to handle, moulds to embrace the product snugly be it big or small.

Any product that needs total protection, needs BASF Expanded Styropor, ask our valued customers such as Crompton, Godrej and host of other leading users. Hence, why not you too join the band of satisfied BASF Expanded Styropor users and banish your packaging problems forever.

Styropor® is the registered trade mark of BASF Aktiengesellschaft.
Registerd users—BASF India Limited.
Both Thermocole and Styropor are made in India by:

BASF India Limited
Maybaker House, Sudam Kalu Ahire Marg,
Bombay 400 025. Tel: 4930703.
Branches at:—
Ahmedabad • Calcutta • New Delhi • Madras

BASF

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Varsity Row

IT IS not without reason that Bihar is called the graveyard of education. If anything, it has more than earned the sobriquet with its regular and unfailing monopoly of education scandals and controversies. To the state's dismal academic record was added yet another black mark last fortnight when Bihar University Vice-Chancellor Dr L. K. Mishra was unceremoniously sacked on charges of corruption, misuse of official machinery and funds, irregular appointments and mismanagement.

Even as his dismissal sent shock waves through academic circles, Mishra entered into an unseemly row with Governor P. Venkatsubbiah, who had taken the decision in his capacity as chancellor of the university. Asserting that the chancellor's action was "illegal and whimsical", Mishra said: "I offer myself for an open enquiry by a high court judge and am prepared to face the consequences. In the circumstances, the chancellor also must be prepared to resign the high office that he holds if the charges levelled by him are not proved."

Though Venkatsubbiah was well within his rights in acting as he did, Mishra alleged that the action was arbitrary and aimed at "creating a smokescreen to cover up his (Venkatsubbiah's) prejudices and vindictiveness." Mishra went on to allege that the chancellor was settling scores with him. He claimed that the chancellor was cut up with him because he could not have honorary doctorates conferred on Telugu poet Seshendra Sharma and his wife.

But whatever Mishra may be saying now, the allegations against him had not piled up overnight. He had been under severe criticism for quite some time from the Bihar University Teachers' Association, the University Departments Teachers' Association and the Nagrik Parishad of Muzaffarpur. Among other things, he was accused of ordering Rs 3 lakh worth of paper from an Allahabad firm without inviting tenders. It was also said that he had sanctioned unauthorised construction works costing nearly Rs 72 lakh, besides irregular transfers and appointments for a "consideration".

According to the Raj Bhawan communique: "Oral complaints had also been received by the chancellor. Enquiries by the former chancellor, Dr A. R. Kidwai, had indicated that there was a prima facie case against Dr Mishra." It added that the summary of charges against Mishra had been prepared under the instructions of the ex-chancellor. It also pointed out that a show-cause notice had been given to Mishra in April to which he had replied only in May, followed by further clarifications later. These were considered by the chancellor in detail after taking into consideration all the legal implications of the case. "The majority of the charges against Dr Mishra stand proved," the communique concluded.

Venkatsubbiah

Mishra

Even as his dismissal sent shock waves through academic circles, Mishra entered into an unseemly row with Governor P. Venkatsubbiah, who had taken the decision in his capacity as chancellor of the university.

But there were quite a few people besides Mishra himself, who questioned the chancellor's action. One former vice-chancellor said that allegations alone could not become the basis of summary dismissal of a vice-chancellor. If allegations carried such a lot of weight, then no vice-chancellor could hope to survive for a day, however clean or upright he may be, he said.

However, Education Department sources contended that the chancellor had violated the Bihar State Universities Act by not holding an enquiry before dismissing Mishra. Moreover, they pointed out that merely consulting the chief minister did not mean that the chancellor had consulted the Government as the Act required. He ought to have taken the education minister into confidence, they argued. They went on to point out that Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey had given only his verbal consent, which too could be ascribed to his own personal and political reasons, since Mishra is known to belong to former chief minister Jagannath Mishra's camp.

Rebutting the various charges against him, the ousted vice-chancellor said: "The charges of misappropriation of funds are baseless and mischievous. Not a paisa has been spent without the sanction of the (university) syndicate and the finance adviser and without the prescribed financial procedures."

However, teachers' association sources said even if Mishra had obtained official sanction, it did not take away from the gravity of the charges as all the university bodies were full of Mishra's yes-men and all those who opposed him were weeded out. Mishra lent this allegation some credence when he said that some of his rivals in league with local politicians had engineered his ouster. Among the names he mentioned was that of Professor Raghunath Jha, who was the university's registrar until not long ago.

Jha, on his part, dismissed Mishra's claim as "rubbish". "Everything was regularised on paper," he said, referring to Mishra's alleged malpractices. Mishra, who was principal of a college for 18 years, has faced enquiries twice during his six-year tenure as chief of the Bihar School Examination Board. The first enquiry had fallen through as the commission headed by the then Patna high court judge Nand Lal Untwalia failed to complete its work. In March 1972, a second enquiry was entrusted to a commission headed by Justice Sarwar Ali. The commission submitted its report in August 1975, finding Mishra guilty on a number of counts. The report was submitted when Jagannath Mishra was in power and was shelved.

Mishra then went on to hold various important posts and his progress was ascribed to his mentor, Jagannath Mishra. But in Bihar's politics-ridden educational scene, it seems fair to assume that Mishra picked the wrong godfather for himself.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Lufthansa.
The European Express.

Lufthansa has daily non-stop flights to Frankfurt. From Frankfurt there are swift and convenient connections to 58 European destinations. And, as with any good express service, Lufthansa's return flights will bring you home just as conveniently, just as swiftly.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

LH 9055-1 DEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Only when you break the mould...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

can you discover the vibrance of colour

In the challenging field of electronics where today's innovations become tomorrow's relics, to keep pace is simply not enough. The need of every demanding hour is to set the pace, and win the race. And to win the race against a competitor as tenacious as time, requires a little more than genius; it demands a spirit of unrelenting creativity and a search for excellence beyond the ultimate.

If electronics demands a preparedness to break every mould of convention, to shatter every record, it's ECIL, with its high precision electronics culture, and uncompromising Quality Control history, that delivers. And in doing so, creates sophisticated electronic wonders as popular as the ECTV. The ECTV. In unmatchable colour. And in legendary Black & White too. Bringing to thousands of discerning homes a heritage of superiority. A legacy of satisfaction. Very definitely a Colour Television worth waiting for...

ECtv SPECTRA

इकाइ EC

Electronics Corporation of India Limited
Hyderabad-500762

ECIL's Colour TV - truly SPECTRAcular !

A & M 85 ECIL 19

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Who say don't mi
How oft together business dinner t fun party
Of cours setting.
And crea

Who car
Novopan

It's the c particle h Perfectly surfaces.
And just
life style.
It is quic doesn't n
and pasti

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Novopan creates the perfect setting for your life style

Who says work and pleasure don't mix?
How often has a casual get together resulted in a lucrative business deal. Or a formal dinner turned out to be a real fun party...
Of course you need the right setting.
And create the right mood!

Who can do this better than Novopan?

It's the only prelaminated particle board in the country. Perfectly laminated on both the surfaces.
And just right for your kind of life style.
It is quick to install because it doesn't need planing, cutting and pasting like the old plywood/laminate combinations.
And once its up, it stays on for a long long time.
Without warping, delaminating or getting 'wavy'.
So you don't have to bother about maintenance at all!

Novopan can be used just about everywhere. Panelling, partitions, cabinets, furniture, doors... and anywhere else you fancy!
And should that be outdoors, there's phenol bonded Novopan Exterior specially designed for outdoor applications.

Novopan comes in such attractive colours and a range of wood finishes —
teak, rosewood, oak...
It is made in convenient sizes and thicknesses to minimise wastage. And best of all it doesn't send your budget sky rocketing.

In fact, Novopan works out far more economical than those one sided plywood/laminate combinations.

Novopan —
Sets off your life style in the best possible way!

Novopan India Limited
"Suryodaya", 2nd Floor
1-10-60/3, Begumpet
Hyderabad 500 016
Phone: 70128/70129

Now when you do up your home, insist that your furniture maker uses only Novopan Prelaminated Particle Boards.

NOVOPAN®

Swiss style... and good sense!

REGIONAL OFFICES
AHMEDABAD — C/3, Hari Krishna Estate, Narol, Ahmedabad. BANGALORE — Subharama Building, 2nd Floor, 23 Shopsite, Serpentine Road, Kumara Park West, Bangalore 560 021, Phone: 363801. BOMBAY — 317 Tulsiani Chambers, 212 Backbay Reclamation, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Phone: 222380/ 232845/ 232169. CALCUTTA — 10 Dr Lal Mohan Bhattacharjee Road (Near Moula Ali), Calcutta 700 014. Phone: 213354. COCHIN — 30/566-A, Krishnaswamy Cross Road, Cochin 682 018, Phone: 31679. MADRAS — 'Anuraag', 7A Murray's Gate Road, Alwarpet, Madras 600 018. Phone: 453783/454116. NEW DELHI — 901, Hemkunt Chambers, 6 Rajendra Place, New Delhi 110 008. Phone: 571610/571589

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Sista s/Novopan/61/85a

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MYSORE PALACE

A Right Royal Battle

IT'S TURNING out to be a riches to rags story. But for a man who owes the Central Government Rs 30 crore by way of unpaid taxes, Srikanta Datta Narsimharaja Wadiyar, the chubby scion of the late Mysore maharajah, is surprisingly unruffled. On the contrary he seemed delighted when last fortnight the Income Tax Department announced that it was provisionally taking control of two of his palaces including the Mysore Palace and would dispose of these if Wadiyar did not cough up his dues.

The drastic move could reduce Wadiyar, who only this year was elected to the Lok Sabha, to a pauper. But he seemed most unconcerned. Instead he was more worried about reducing his sizeable bulk of 121 kg to what he thinks is a trim 90 kg. In a bid to slim down the dhoti-clad Wadiyar, wearing a printed cotton shirt with two buttons open exposing his voluminous chest, now takes long morning walks alongwith his wife, Pramoda Devi, in the Mysore Palace gardens that soon may not be his.

Earlier he had dispatched a letter, bearing the former maharajah's insignia of two lions, to the Income Tax Department asking it to collect his dues from the state Archaeology Department which is looking after a major portion of the Mysore Palace. Nine years ago it was Wadiyar who had requested the state Government to manage the massive three-storeyed palace till he could afford to maintain it. The Archaeology Department had since then opened a section of the palace for visitors and charged an entrance fee of two rupees each.

Wadiyar, who lives in another wing of the palace, now contends that the Department had so far collected Rs 5 crore as gate fee without giving him a share of it. He wanted this amount to be remitted to the Income Tax department towards payment of his dues. Denying any impending financial crisis the 32-year-old former prince said confidently: "I will repay all my dues. The Income Tax department order saves me the bother of collecting the money from the Archaeology Department. Otherwise I would have had to file a suit against it and that would mean spending Rs 45 lakh on stamp paper itself."

The sheer audacity of Wadiyar's claim caught the Archaeology Department officials by surprise. The department, housed in what was formerly the maharajah's soda factory, is located a stone's throw away from where Wadiyar takes his morning walk. Seated inside, Dr A. Sundara, director of archaeology, said indignantly: "What people don't know is that we are spending more money on maintenance of the palace than what we get from gate collections. We have never made any profit so far." He points out that

The Mysore Palace (right) and Wadiyar: unruffled

Photographs by RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

le last year the department spent Rs 45 to maintain the palace, it had re- ed only Rs 35 lakh from gate ections.

In fact maintaining the palace is a ly and painstaking business as the rtment has realised to its dismay. ently when 44 pillars of the Durbar in the palace had to be recoated with gold foil, the estimate worked out to 3.5 lakh. It is spending a whopping Rs akh to rewire the whole palace. The rtment has 24 sweepers to keep the e clean, 34 gardeners to maintain gardens and 30 electricians for the ting arrangements. Another 65 po- men patrol the palace, which among er valuables has the famous gold Pea- throne weighing 240 kg.

The Archaeology department has asked the law secretary to examine egality of Wadiyar's claims. But what made many government officials sus- ous is the alacrity with which Wadiyar, after he was elected an MP, has ed to settle his long pending debts. n his father died in 1974 Wadiyar, the only son, not only inherited four palaces including the ones at Mysore and Bangalore now taken over by the Income Tax Department, but also had to pay up Rs 20 crore by way of estate duty and unpaid income tax and wealth tax. Since then his personal dues have mounted too and now in all he has to pay Rs 35 crore to Rs 40 crore in taxes. State officials view Wadiyar's latest tactic as a bid to not only regain control of the palaces at Mysore and Bangalore but also to settle his debts—all in one shot.

> "I will repay all my dues. The Income Tax Department order saves me the bother of collecting the money from the Archaeology Department."
>
> NARSIMHARAJA WADIYAR

Both the palaces have never ceased to be subjects of controversy. After his father's death Wadiyar wanted to form a public charitable trust to run the Mysore Palace but the move fell through when his stepmother Satyapremkumari, the maharajah's first wife, refused to sign the trust deed. When the maharajah, Jayaramchandra Wadiyar was alive, he wanted to convert the Bangalore Palace, which is modelled after the famous Windsor Castle in England, into a hotel. He entered into a partnership with Chama Raju, a civil works contractor, but the deal fell through when the state Government refused permission. Since then it has been hired for film shootings and even David Lean shot a few scenes in it for A Passage To India. Right now Wadiyar is locked in a battle for control of the palace with Chama Raju's family who claim a share of the grounds.

But with the state Government keen on converting both the palaces into public monuments Wadiyar is going to find it difficult to regain control of them. The Government is unlikely to entrust Wadiyar with the management of the Mysore Palace. Sundara says: "Because of the huge costs of maintenance only the Government can look after it properly. Also it needs expertise to preserve the palace in its original character and the Archaeology Department is best equipped to do so." The Government fears that Wadiyar would only use the palaces to earn enough money to clear up his tax debts.

Wadiyar is upset that the Government thinks he would not be able to look after his palace. These days he makes it a point to show his visitors how he has been maintaining his wing of the palace and claims that the department is slowly destroying the original character of the palace. As an example he points to the fresh paint used by the department to coat the Durbar Hall walls which he says is nowhere near the original shade. Wadiyar asserts: "My intentions are certainly not commercial in nature. We are conscious of the need to preserve the palace and we would be able to maintain it better than the Government does.

But the Government is unwilling to take his word for it and a right royal battle for control of the palaces seem to be on the cards. For Wadiyar the stakes are even higher. The outcome would determine whether he could live as a prince or as a pauper.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If the cost of pul
has risen so se
how come th
the newspar

ACIL-BC-66/85 D

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ulishing seply, t cost of ar hasn't?

Maintaining a free press is fast becoming an exorbitantly expensive proposition: Count the cost of salaries, machinery and equipment, servicing and repair, travel, maintenance of bureaux the world over, and the rising cost of newsprint, and you'll understand why each copy of your favourite daily costs a lot more to produce than the price you pay for it. In fact, correctly priced, it would be beyond the reach of most of the literate population of the country.

Advertising has a role to play in ensuring a free press, which means more than just the freedom to report the news and air views. True freedom of the press requires, these to be made available to the largest number of people at an affordable price. Does that mean that the advertiser pays for another man's reading? No. Rather, the advertiser pays for a wider, more dispersed readership... because he wants to reach a wider, growing market. And that's the kind of readership he gets when he advertises in The Times Group.

This wider readership is one of the factors that make The Times Group the backbone of any media plan.

More for your money.

The Times of India Group of Publications

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOOTBALL

The New Mercenaries

CALCUTTA is a city of strange paradoxes, football being the foremost. The city started competition football in 1893, only 30 years after the Football Association (FA) was founded in Britain and 21 years after championship matches were first held in the country where the game originated. As early as 1911, India created history when a home team of "natives", Mohun Bagan, defeated the true blue East York Club.

The city's obsessive involvement with football has, however, transformed the character of the game into a gladiatorial contest. Earlier this year, 150 spectators were knifed or stoned in group clashes after an exhibition match of the Calcutta Football League between East Bengal and Mohammedan Sporting—the two clubs that, with Mohun Bagan, form the ruling trinity of football in the city. Soccer violence is not the only change: the name of the new game is money and vast sums now change hands under the negotiating table as transfer fees. Not surprisingly, the top stars on Calcutta's soccer maidans are foreigners, ostensibly students, playing full-time professional football for the big clubs. From a maximum seasonal earning of Rs 20,000 a decade ago, players are now netting upwards of Rs 1.5 lakh for a season's contract, plus expenses. Curiously, despite the incursion of television and the deterioration in the quality of football on display, more and more spectators are turning up at the grounds. Principal Correspondent SUMIT MITRA reports from Calcutta on the game's new priorities in the acknowledged soccer capital of the country.

MAROON and green. Red and yellow. Black and white. Even a schoolboy in Calcutta knows what these combinations stand for. Maroon and green are the colours of Mohun Bagan club, established in 1889; red-and-yellow is East Bengal of course, this year's reigning monarch of the maidans, and the most enduring institution of the men from the "other Bengal", founded in 1920; black and white are the colours of the 94-year-old Mohammedan Sporting Club, which gets its frenzied support from the Muslims who form one-seventh of Calcutta's population.

Right up to February, these titans will battle each other at the new, imposing Salt Lake Stadium to the roar of a 100,000-strong audience—yelling, cheering, swearing, lighting fire-crackers, storming through the fencing, and occasionally indulging in bloody clashes on the long trek back to the city through the marshy wastes of the urban fringe now being reclaimed, where the stadium is situated. One such soccer "classic", between Mohun Bagan and East Bengal, was aborted last month when the former, unable to cope with large casualties among its players, gave East Bengal a walkover. And even the ritualistic victory was witnessed by the club's 20,000 fans. In July, when East Bengal beat Mohammedan 2-1 after a cliff-hanger of a match, knife-wielding supporters of the losing side invited East Bengal supporters, armed with brickbats and iron rods, to a grisly duel that went on for four hours and left 150 injured. Last fortnight, when Mohun Bagan and Mohammedan met again for the return match of the Calcutta Football League, the Calcutta Police had to deploy a special commando unit of 200 men, besides 1,500 cops on regular "football duty" to keep order on and off the field.

Calcutta has always been drunk on football. But this year it seems determined to outdo all previous records. Despite the rise in ticket prices—the maximum costing Rs 10 instead of Rs 5 for an exhibition match—and doubling of seating capacity, the city's hunger for watching football seems to be hardly assuaged. With only four exhibition matches held so far this season, Rs 19 lakh have already been grossed from ticket sales whereas last year's earning from 20 exhibition matches was only Rs 12 lakh.

And there is more, much more money for the players in the soccer sweepstake even though the gate collection goes not to the clubs but to the state Government's coffers and to the All-India Football Federation (AIFF), the national governing body for the game. Two years ago, Prasanta Bannerjee, the Mohun Bagan linkman, made waves when he was reportedly offered one lakh rupees to switch loyalty from East Bengal. This year, as many as 11 players are known to have earned between Rs 1 lakh and Rs 1.7 lakh each (see box) and at least 15 more are tantalisingly close to the six-digit borderline. Only a part of the money comes from

Rowdy fans at Salt Lake during a classic encounter between Mohun Bagan and East Bengal: heavy price

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by JAYANTA SETT

the clubs' subscription revenue, the rest coming from donors who off-load their surplus wealth, often without keeping any record. Says Aslam Khan, Mohammedan Sporting's spirited striker: "So long only cricket had money. But things are changing fast. There is already a lot of money for those who deserve it."

It is in fact the burgeoning fan-strength of the clubs, particularly that of East Bengal, the most broad-based among all three, that has caused this surge in interest. The club got over its nine-year-long hibernation this year when it hired the best line-up of players and went on a winning spree, clinching at first the Federation Cup, the national best-club honour, and then the championship, decided in Colombo last month, in the central Asian zone for the Asian Club trophy. It is now poised to make a clean sweep of the Calcutta Football League. The fact of East Bengal, the favourite of the teeming millions, being through a run of luck, coupled with the Salt Lake Stadium, the largest in the country, expanding its capacity, resulted in the spurt in soccer-watching in a city that had always been hooked on club soccer anyway. "The people in Calcutta," says football commentator Arijit Sen, "go crazy over football; but they get crazier over their favourite clubs."

The club fanaticism, and the will to win at all costs, have gone to such extremes this year that soccer officials—unlike in the past—are no longer interested in catching football talents young, grooming them up to grow and join the big league. The accent now is on buying players, as Sen says, "off the shelf". The inevitable spin-offs from this policy are:

► the three big clubs are now only looking for proven talents, either in Calcutta or outside, and have no room for youngsters who can form the second or the third line-up;

► this season's two topmost goal-scorers so far are both foreigners, Jamshid Nasiri—the Iranian striker playing for East Bengal, and Chima Okerie, Mohammedan's Nigerian-born shock striker. East Bengal's officials are scouring the football markets of Iran, Iraq, Qatar, Pakistan and Bangladesh now in search of players instead of relying on Indian citizens who, from playing club football, can graduate into the national team;

► the scramble for players who, according to a club official, "can deliver the goods", has unleashed the spending race on such a scale that money-power has become the only determining factor for supremacy in club soccer.

All this madness and money, however, have not been able to shore up the quality of the game in Calcutta, which is indeed the Mecca of football in the country. Federation Internationale de Football Association (FIFA), the international controlling body of the game which publishes a computerised list every year showing the hierarchy of football-playing countries on the basis of game quality on home-and-away basis, ranked India 95th this year among 153 member countries. The Asian Football Confederation (AFCON), a subsidiary of FIFA, accorded 17th position to India among 35 countries affiliated to it. After finishing at the top in the 1951 Asian Games, and fourth in the 1956 Melbourne Olympics, India slid so far down to the bottom that most nations forgot it played football. When Chile was invited by the AIFF to play for the Nehru Cup in India in 1981, the Chilean Football Federation telexed back: "Do you play football ?"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Says Ashok Ghose, AIFF secretary and president of its West Bengal unit, which proudly calls itself the Indian Football Association (IFA): "Whether we play world-class football is indeed questionable. But we are undoubtedly among the most ardent football-lovers in the world. And I mean Calcutta in particular." In 1981, when the first Nehru Gold Cup tournament was held in Calcutta, all seats at the Eden Gardens (capacity: 60,000) were sold out for 16 days at a stretch. In 1983, the Nehru Cup matches again drew full-capacity crowds, this time at the Salt Lake Stadium where only 80,000 out of its 120,000 seats were ready by then. All seats were sold for the 13 days of the tournament. This year, 100,000 seats are ready at the stadium, yet no seat is seen empty during an exhibition match. The Iraq-Qatar match for pre-qualifying round of the World Cup was held in Calcutta this year at the instance of the AIFF. Despite wide television coverage, the demand for tickets was so high that five-rupee tickets were selling in the black for a mind-bogging Rs 150.

THE RECORD books testify to Calcutta's, and Bengal's, absolute domination of the game over a long time. West Bengal wrested the Santosh Trophy, the inter-state championship, 21 out of the 41 times it was held, having been the runners-up for nine times. "The city breathes football," says its newly-elected Mayor, Kamal Bose, himself a soccer-enthusiast. Gostho Paul, architect of the 1911 victory of Mohun Bagan, is a household name whose birthday is commemorated by the state Government. There is a Mohun Bagan Row in the city as well as a Mohun Bagan Lane. Feature films in Bengali made on football invariably create box-office records regardless of their quality. Stars of the maidans in Calcutta are a tribe apart: they avoid

EARNINGS

The Top Ten

Prasanta Bannerjee: (Mohun Bagan linkman; reported contract price this year—Rs 25,000) Regarded as the coolest linkman in India, Bannerjee is Mohun Bagan's most reliable schemer. Tall and wiry, he is credited with an uncanny sense of distribution, though, at 29, he is certainly past his prime and age shows in his dwindling capacity to sweep and cover a wide ground. He is regarded as the first player on the Calcutta grounds to command a seasonal fee in six digits. That was when he left East Bengal in 1983 to join Mohun Bagan. A former captain of the East Bengal team, Bannerjee dons the Indian colours in all international matches.

Krishanu Dey: (East Bengal striker; Rs 120,000) A master of gentle chipping and delicate touches, 24-year-old Dey made splashes early this year when he and Bikash Panji left Mohun Bagan dramatically to join the side that offered more money. A master of dodging, and dribbling past the defence lines of the opponents, the little lad of East Bengal has helped others score more frequently than scoring himself. According to coach P.K.Bannerjee, Dey's strongest points are his perfect ball control and an ability to angle his shots precisely. However, Dey is shy of direct contacts and would either dribble or resort to a short pass when the need of the hour is to blitz one's way through.

Bikash Panji: (East Bengal linkman: Rs 120,000) By far the hardest tackler in Calcutta football. Can use both his feet with equal ease and power and therefore often interchanges position from left to right. Plays the most outstanding mobile football, moving up and down in lightning bursts of speed. At 23, he is regarded as East Bengal's, and India's, toughest combatant around the midfield. Says AIFF coach and former national player Aroon Ghosh about Panji: "He is a world class player who would have gone to much greater heights if we could have let him have more international experience".

Manoranjan Bhattacharjee: (East Bengal right stopper; Rs 170,000) Stockily built and a keen header, Bhattacharjee, 28, moved to East Bengal from obscure George Telegraph Club as early as 1976 where he has been since. The club was so grateful to him for his loyalty that it reportedly agreed not to hire anyone with a higher contract price than him as long as he stayed in the team. Captain of the team in 1981, Bhattacharjee is nick-named the "Chinese wall" for his bulldog-like tenacity. Age has somewhat slowed him down, but has not undermined his spirit of aggression and his readiness to pay the rough tactics of enemy strikers in their own coin.

Atanu Bhattacharya: (Mohammedan Sporting goalkeeper; Rs 110,000) The 23-year-old former Railways player, is now the No.2 goalkeeper in the country, next only to East Bengal's experienced Bhaskar Ganguly, and is also the vice-captain of the Mohammedan team. Not particularly good at saving frontal shots at close range, Atanu's strong points are his accurate gripping and his perfect sense of timing. Soccer specialists in fact rate him higher than Ganguly for his better reflexes and superior power of anticipation. Says Balaram, the legendary former East Bengal forward: "Atanu's outstanding quality is his fine sense of trajectory of a ball which is swerving in the air".

Bhaskar Ganguly: (East Bengal goalkeeper; Rs 125,000) Strong, courageous and enterprising, Ganguly's reliability is evident from the fact that his club be

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ublic appearances for fear of being bbed by fans.

But the popularity of the game is riably linked with the "club system". d, unlike in the Latin American capi- the three big clubs of Calcutta repre- distinct social groups: East Bengal mbership:7,000), the institution of easterners — or bangals — who infil- ed into the city even since the pre- ition days; Mohun Bagan (member- r 7,200), the club whose history is ed with nationalist fervour and which n institution of the traditional Calcut- (even Chief Minister Jyoti Basu, who s from East Bengal, is a Bagan sup- er); and Mohammedan Sporting mbership: 4,100), the pride of the im traders, labourers and artisans entrenched in the city.

The players and the coaches are of re like mercenaries and can change at will, depending on who bids the highest for the particular season. But the club managements represent continuity to a high degree. Only East Bengal elects its office-bearers through regular elections. Mohun Bagan chooses its office-bearers through a process of selection as does Mohammedan which is controlled by a trust.

However, Mohun Bagan has for two decades had as its Secretary Dhiren Dey, a director of Dey's Medical Stores, one of the state's pioneer pharmaceutical companies. Similarly, the controlling levers of Mohammedan are held by Irfan Taher Randerian, a front-ranking exporter of tea, Ibrahim Ali Molla, a wealthy trader, and Mohammed Omar, a Youth Congress(I) activist.

The supremacy of the big three over the small fry — the 169 also-ran clubs affiliated to the IFA — is unquestionable and is ensured, year after year, by the efforts and the resources of the organisers. The newly-elected East Bengal Secretary, Bhabaranjan Sengupta, and its football Secretary, R.P.Bhowmick, say they owe their success entirely to the dedication and enterprise of two club members, Dipak Das and Jiban Chakravarty. Das, known in football circles as Paltu, and Chakravarty, an ordinary employee of Calcutta Corporation, are both in their early forties. The Paltu-Jiban duo made its mark as player-snatchers as early as 1970 when they cajoled, threatened and bribed the best players of the country to play for their club. That instantly ushered in the club's "golden era". It won both the League championship and the IFA Shield for all the years between 1970 and 1975 except for 1971 when the shield was wrested by Mohammedan. In 1976, the patrons of the two-man hit-team, however, were routed at the club elections, the big players left, and East Bengal's performance went downhill.

ceded the least number of goals so far the League this year. Possessing a ng, athletic body, Ganguly,30, dis- s indomitable courage and can ch the ball without flinching from foot of the marauding striker. An nt admirer of Gordon Banks, the rated goalkeeper of the England Ganguly, even at this late stage in career, has been switching styles, ing all a long the top box instead of ng close to the goal line. "A modern taller cannot be bound to a tion," he says.

Jamshid Nasiri: (East Bengal striker; Rs 170,000 plus the highest perks ever enjoyed by any footballer in India) Towering above the short Indian players his 6 ft 2 inches height, the Iranian er is an enigma to his opponents. ering almost from nowhere, he is in grab at the ball at a moment he is the least expected and score deadly, pinpoint accuracy. A battering ram for his team, Jam- was with Mohammedan in 1983 1984 when he, with Majid, the -Iranian who is still with mmedan, scored all the goals at the ation Cup finals. Mohammedan on both occasions. This time round, g for East Bengal, he scored the y winning goal. Ironically, only two Iranians have scored all the in the past three years at the Federation Cup finals, the highest inter-club tournament of the country. Now a student of Aligarh Muslim University, Nasiri, 29, has not gone back home reportedly for political reasons. This year, he shares the honour of scoring the largest number of goals at the league with Chima Okerie, the Nigeria-born Mohammedan striker.

Tarun Dey: (East Bengal left stopper; Rs 110,000) A scheming defender, 25-year-old Dey plays in brilliant combination with Manoranjan Bhattacharjee, playing a strikingly mobile game and generating attacks with well-distributed shots. The general impression is: Bhattacharjee is a superior header, but Dey has a superior head. Actually, they play a complementary role to each other, Bhattacharjee blocking attacks and Dey continually pushing the battle into his opponents' side.

Biswajit Bhattacharjee: (East Bengal striker; Rs 125,000) The lanky 25-year-old striker is the league's second highest scorer so far with a margin of only two goals between him and the Jamshid-Chima duo. A talented all-rounder who can go down to play as a linkman with ease, Bhattacharjee made waves a few years ago when, playing for a weak Aryan Club, he became the season's top-scorer. He is a fine header as well as an acknowledged master of short passes.

With Sudip Chatterjee: (Rs 110,000), the East Bengal linkman who also occasionally plays in the stopper position, Bhattacharjee forms a formidable attack-defence team.

Chima Okerie: (Mohammedan Sporting's star striker; low price this year, his first season in Calcutta, but likely to be fixed at upward of Rs 175,000 and high perks next year) The 23-year-old Nigerian tornado is the most sensational discovery this year in the Calcutta soccer scene. He was studying for a degree in commerce at Waltair, and "playing occasionally", when Mohammedan organisers spotted him and brought him over to Calcutta. "I don't want to be a football player. I want to be a chartered accountant," Chima says with a boyish smile on his face. On the field, however, Chima is like an unstoppable battletank, usually taking charge of the ball from a few yards below the top box and then storming his way through to take a low but sizzling shot that is designed to beat the goalkeeper in its punch if it cannot beat him in angle. The force and grace of Chima moving up with the ball is aesthetically one of the best spectacles in Calcutta football. —SUMIT MITRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

With the return of the twosome into active management of the club's affairs this year, the old magic was back again. Jamshid Nassiri, the Iranian player and prize catch of the year who, as Mohammedan's ace striker, had enabled it to clinch the Federation Cup twice, was literally whisked away from Calcutta airport and persuaded to sign for East Bengal. Also to be roped in were Krishanu Dey, Mohun Bagan striker, and Bikash Panji, Bagan linkman. The operation was straight out of a thriller with negotiators discreetly changing cars at the dead of night to "make contact" with the two players in distant Cochin, where they were playing, and money being sent to their parents in West Bengal by secret emissaries. Says Chakravarty with unconcealed glee: "The idea was to break the back of Mohun Bagan."

That is indeed regarded as a most laudable motive in the soccer ethics of a city inebriated by club fanaticism. As P.K.Bannerjee, or PK, who has been selected the national coach this year and who coached the East Bengal team to victory, says: "It is the emotion for the clubs that has kept the game alive."

THAT and, of course, political patronage seem to have achieved new highs. The Big Three often use their growing political clout to get away with virtual murder; offences and infringement of rules that would earn the smaller clubs the axe or heavy penalties. The fact that the top three clubs also earn big money for the state's coffers gives them an added lever to neutralise the IFA. This year, Mohammedan Sporting's demand that they be exempted from playing their third exhibition tie till after the Id festival created a major controversy till Chief Minister Jyoti Basu personally intervened and got the IFA to agree.

More recently, Mohun Bagan participated in the Kohinoor Shield tournament with a line-up that included several unregistered players, a clear violation of the state association rules, but not a murmur was raised. That is hardly surprising considering the growing political patronage they enjoy. Jatin Chakravarty, West Bengal minister and a die-hard Mohun Bagan supporter, takes time off from the secretariat each day his club has a match. And Subhash Chakravarty, the sports minister, is present on the ground every day East Bengal has to play.

The joy and gloom of victory and defeat permeates the city. Mohun Bagan supporters feasting on lobsters, the gastronomic insignia of the authentic West Bengali, on their victory day, and avoiding the fish market on the days of their defeat, leaving it to East Bengal men to order hilsa, their marine mascot. For a supporter, a lean season means one of foul tempers when talk of football is better avoided. Dhiren Dey, for instance, is so crestfallen this year that he avoids the media like some of his firm's bitter pills. "Go to them," says he with his patrician drawl, taking care not to mention by name his adversaries.

It is the quality of the game that ultimately has suffered from over-competitiveness. Says Shabbir Ali: "The emphasis today is on quickly scoring a goal and then to shrink into defence." When football was less defensive, Calcutta produced its quota of big scorers like Chuni Goswami, Balaram and PK himself. But it has to rely now on more athletic foreigners, like Jamshid and Chima, to dribble, volley and finally muscle their way across the defence lines and score the goals. The number of goals scored per League match has been steadily declining from well over four in the mid '70s to less than three now.

Top soccer players signing transfer contracts: money madness

But the show must go on regardless, and the clubs must play to win. Picking up the best line-up of players means arranging for money. East Bengal's football budget this year is a mind-boggling Rs 23 lakh, and it does not include spot-incentives paid to successful players—often running into Rs 5,000 for a good match. The money comes mostly from yearly renewal of membership—varying from Rs 160 to Rs 220 per member. But private lenders and nationalised banks often come into the picture. East Bengal was granted a loan of Rs 10 lakh this year by the United Bank of India.

The excitement of club soccer is like a lodestone that has attracted to Calcutta the best football talent from the country. "To hear the roar of the surging crowds on all your sides is an unforgettable experience. It goads you on to give your best," says Shabbir Ali, the Hyderabad-born veteran Mohammedan striker. Venkatesh, Sale, Mewa Lal, Vardaraj, Balaram, Habib, Akbar, Shabbir and today's Jamshid and Chima—the list of outstation performers on the football grounds of Calcutta keeps getting longer.

The crowd often does much more than roaring though. During an exhibition match between Mohun Bagan and East Bengal at the Eden Garden on August 16, 1980, 16 people were stampeded as brickbats flew in all directions. The day is still grimly commemorated, but its lessons obviously haven't been fully learnt, as evident from the fiasco at the East Bengal-Mohammedan match this year. Says B.K.Saha, the affable joint commissioner of Calcutta Police who is himself a keen soccer enthusiast: "Referees and linesmen on the Calcutta grounds are an endangered species. After a match, police guards are often posted at their houses lest supporters of the defeated team assault them. And if a small team ever records an unexpected win over a big one, its players cannot hope to leave the ground without police escort."

In no soccer-playing country of the world, however, has club-fanaticism constituted a bane by itself. The FA clubs have sustained British football, and so have the clubs in Italy which were once so much taken in by the spirit to win somehow that they raided the football talents in Argentina on a large-scale and then paraded the Argentinian players on Italy's national team, falsely claiming common Latin lineage for them. But the questions that are uppermost are: will Indian football survive in the frenetic atmosphere of Calcutta? Will competition breed talent? PK perhaps had the last word when he said: "We Calcuttans want the club colours to flutter atop the buildings. Let football go to hell. Long live the clubs."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Ever thought of consulting a doctor about hair loss?

I did!"

It is reassuring to know that the scientific formula of Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer has been tested and approved by a panel of doctors.

It was found that Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer provides all the proteins, vitamins and coenzymes essential for a healthy scalp condition.

Read this research report:

"66.66% of the cases gave excellent and 33.33% gave good result with complete disappearance of dandruff and nearly cent per cent stoppage of hair loss... So, success rate with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer may be stated to be cent per cent."

(Indian Medical Gazette 118 223, 1984)

KEO-KARPIN

HAIR VITALIZER

The proven scientific way to prevent hair loss.

This is not a toilet preparation

Dey's Care you can trust

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gillette

What you've heard

Yes, we manufacture blades and razors. It is true that we are world leaders in this category. In fact, Gillette blades are used by more shavers around the world than all other brands combined.

It's not surprising, considering that it was King C. Gillette who invented replaceable razor blades in 1895 and completely revolutionised shaving habits.

Many may even recall the famous Gillette Blue Blade launched in the thirties that carried the picture and signature of the inventor.

In the sixties, three Gillette inventions were launched. The Super Blue Blade, Gillette Super Stainless and Gillette Platinum Plus.

Each in turn was a significant advance in blade edge technology, resulting in blades which were increasingly sharp and stayed sharp longer.

Gillette shaves were getting closer, more comfortable and safer. How much better could it get?

Leading again in innovation, Gillette took the world by surprise in 1971 with the first twin blade shaving cartridge under the brand name G II.

There were more surprises for those who thought that this was the perfect shave. The pivoting head twin cartridge was launched in the late 70's.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bout us is 100% fact.

Known as the ATRA and in some markets as the CONTOUR, its pivoting head following the contours of the face offered the best shave yet.

most recent invention is the ATRA S which incredibly, has a strip on razor which lubricates your face e you shave!

ther major element in Gillette cess is quality control. In all Gillette ories, built-in quality systems ensure t product is made to the same high dard standards. These controls are in monitored by three corporate ity assurance bodies.

research and development nues. In addition to 300 employees illette Headquarters in Boston, some persons carefully record the results of daily shave tests on data processing cards. These are tabulated and analysed. The results help Gillette management to make decisions on new and existing products.

To complement blades and razors and to make the daily shave a comfortable and pleasant experience, we introduced FOAMY, the instant shaving foam. And more recently FOAMY gel shave cream.

Though it is 100% fact that we lead in blades and razors there is really a lot more to the Gillette Company story.

Today, we actually market more than 850 products in over 200 countries and territories. These include blades and razors, toiletries, grooming aids, writing instruments, Braun electric shavers and small appliances, Oral B toothbrushes and health and beauty aids.

Gillette and its subsidiaries and associates today operate over 50 manufacturing plants around the world.

In the last fifteen years we have successfully set up 10 blade manufacturing plants in developing countries, including China and Egypt.

Now, in partnership with the House of Poddar, we are set to manufacture and market blades in India.

And, we look forward to meeting you, face to face, one of these mornings.

TSA/17A/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ Adultery is in, at least in Bombay's swinging film circles, and baby, is it growing. Actually, the one growing the fastest is the beautiful, green-eyed and obviously pregnant starlet Sarika who announced last fortnight that she would be joining the growing gaggle of single parents. Adding mirch to the masala was Kamal Hasan, the superstar from the south, who confirmed speculation that he was the cause of Sarika's effect. Obviously, the new trend of relationships involving married men and single women has caught on fast in tinsel town. "I've thought things over calmly. I do sincerely believe this is the right time for me to have a child," said the 25-year-old actress while literally making the issue public.

HARI OM GULATI

Sarika: public issue

Phoolan* poster: no foolin'

◆ Fresh from her triumph in Peter Brook's Mahabharata in France, Mallika Sarabhai sped through a lightning dance tour at home last fortnight with a dazzling display of footwork. Standing on two cloth screens, the second superimposed with wet paint, she went through steps that a New Delhi audience found mystifying. But the mystery was soon cleared. The screen was lifted to reveal a perfectly-etched image of Ganesh.

Sarabhai learnt the technique, once performed in Andhra Pradesh temples, from a reluctant guru who thought audiences may misinterpret it as defiling a deity. Instead she received a thundering ovation. Quipped an exuberant Mallika before returning to Athens for the European tour of the Mahabharata: "It's just a small footnote in my career."

NAMAS BHOJANI

Sarabhai: career footnotes

◆ No foolin'. Bandit queen Phoolan Devi is on the warpath again. This time, however, her target is the Bombay film industry which has produced the celluloid version of her life story. But the queen was obviously not amused and from the confines of Gwalior Jail, she slapped a defamation suit against 13 people, and demanded a king's ransom of Rs 50 lakh in damages. Phoolan was no devi in real life but her main objection to the film Kahani Phoolwati ki, amongst others, is that Chambal valley viragos don't dance around trees when they're in love. However, the film's producer Geeta Roy was not caving in. "I haven't heard anything about such a suit, till I do, I'm not going to say anything either," she sniffed.

NAMAS BHOJANI

Salim Ali: fresh fields

◆ The Birdman of India, Dr Salim Ali, the internationally celebrated ornithologist, will be watching a new species of his two-footed friends—his loguacious colleagues in the Rajya Sabha. The ageing birdwatcher, now a sprightly 89, was last fortnight nominated to the Upper House of Parliament, though the news itself was greeted rather owlishly by him. "Well, I'm gratified though I don't quite know what it implies. I just hope it will enable me to promote the cause of conservation of nature and the environment," he says. Ali's reputation will ensure that he doesn't ruffle any feathers in the Rajya Sabha. After all, he is known as a dove.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ersion of ne queen amused
s of Gwadefama-3 people,
ng's ran-
damages,
in real life
on to the lwati ki,
at Cham-
n't dance they're in ilm's pros not caveard any-suit, till I say any-niffed.

NAMAS BHOJAN

fields

f India, Dr nationally ogist, will species of ends—his nes in the geing bird-ightly 89, nominated of Parlianews itself owlishly
n gratified uite know
ust hope it romote the ion of nanment," he on will en-ruffle any ya Sabha, own as a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13080 13079 13078 13077

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE LAST 10 years have been a roller-coaster ride for the country, fast-moving, exhilarating, scary, always gripping, with barely a moment's pause. Editing a magazine in this period has been as exciting and as demanding as the decade itself: to stay level-headed through the slow climb to news peaks, as in the case of build-up of the Assam agitation and Operation Bluestar, and not allow blood to rush to the head through the fast downhill stretches, like the disintegration of the Janata government or the assassination of Mrs Gandhi. It has been a period of unprecedented action: an internal emergency, four prime ministers, three general elections, sharp swings in the popular mood, the myriad tensions of nation-building.

People tend to react with surprise when told that INDIA TODAY is 10 years old. For all the action that has been packed into the last decade, it seems a short time since the magazine made its modest foray into journalism in December 1975. Since then, we have been dubbed anti-national (by Mrs Indira Gandhi), pro-establishment (vis-a-vis Rajiv Gandhi), practitioners of hovercraft journalism (skimming along the surface of issues), much too serious, and overly political. There have been the bouquets too, for INDIA TODAY has won increasing reader acceptance and the circulation graph has climbed from 5,000 in December 1975 to 370,000 this issue, with another 23,000 on the international edition that was launched in 1982.

Fortunately for the country, and INDIA TODAY, the last decade has been a period of enormous innovation and advancement, once the Emergency was ended. There has been a new freshness, a new breed of journalists breaking new ground, new technologies such as the word processor and the computer terminal, a broad-basing of mass media ownership following from a new entrepreneurship in journalism, increased advertising support, and much more. If journalists and publishers have benefited from all these, the readers have benefited even more. For as Harold Laski once said: "A people without reliable news is sooner or later a people without a basis for freedom."

It has been a period of enormous rewards for everyone in INDIA TODAY: to watch a fledgling publication grow to a size that few have managed. Along the way to achieving this, the magazine has expanded its staff, invested in a national teleprinter network, and recently acquired the most advanced computer system that any publication has in the country, so that all staff in New Delhi now write, re-write and make-up pages on computer terminals, all of which makes for shorter lead-times and more up-to-date coverage.

THIS special anniversary issue commemorates this decade of the rebirth not merely of the media, but of the democratic spirit of India, of its transformation from the archetypal country immersed in poverty into a nation that is still poor but confidently looking ahead. It presents the high points of the last 10 years in a tapestry of the best available photographs of the highs and lows of the years, reflecting both the hope and despair this country has felt and experienced.

Since the decade has been, above everything else, a period of rapid change, this issue focusses on the change since 1975. It looks at the thoroughgoing change in political culture this past decade, and the indelible stamp left on it by Mrs Gandhi. In the economic sphere, it looks at the rise of the middle class as a political and economic force, at the emergence of a new breed of small businessmen who have stolen the thunder from the larger business houses, at the birth of the agricultural entrepreneur who has built on the successes of the green revolution. It has been the decade when the small screen—television—came into its own and the big screen was battered by the winds of failures. The magazine also looks at the triumphs and tears of Indian sportsmen and women in a period when Indian sport has come into its own, at the media revolution and some of the movers and shakers of the decade, the people who made it all happen or who have been tossed aside by the tide of events.

It is an issue that commemorates the roller-coaster ride of the last 10 years no less than INDIA TODAY*'s decade-long presentation of it. And as we look forward to our second decade we hope that, like the poet, we can say that our glory is our friends.*

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LIVE LIFE KINGSIZE

The taste that really satisfies

Four Square Kings is specially blended with rich, fine grades of Virginia tobacco, matured under special curing techniques to give you the real taste of kingsize living. And you deserve it. Because anything else would be less.

FSK-302

STATUTORY WARNING : CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME X NUMBER 24
FOR THE FORTNIGHT DECEMBER 16–31, 1985

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA
AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI SUMIT MITRA
SHEKHAR GUPTA
PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE RAJ CHENGAPPA
BOMBAY JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
WASHINGTON INDERJIT BADHWAR
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

DESIGN CONSULTANT AUROBIND PATEL

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK ANUPAMA GOPAL
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA
ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE ANITA BAVEJA

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE, NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A & B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER NO. 1, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029341, TELEX 11-5373 THOM IN, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY ● 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841, 312070, 312174, TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI ● MADON CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188 47 77 70 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS ● 74/1ST, MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001, PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46 C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA ● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS (INDIA) LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

1975-1985 THE DECISIVE DECADE

CONTENTS

THE INSIDE STORY
The magazine looks back at its origins and evolution over the last decade and the people behind its success.
6

IMAGES 1975-1985
A visual recapitulation of the events and personalities that dominated the most eventful decade since Independence.
12

CHANGING POLITICAL CULTURE
In a decade of confrontation and violence, politics has gone through its most telling changes from the Emergency to the birth of a new consensus.
61

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?
INDIA TODAY tracks down the people who made the headlines and have now faded out from the public eye.
77

RISE OF THE MIDDLE CLASS
The growing middle class represents the emergence of a new and major political and economic force.
109

DAY OF THE FARMER
An aggressive and alert new breed of farmers is revolutionising foodgrain production and infusing the economy with the prospects of self-reliance.
123

SMALL IS BOUNTIFUL
New entrepreneurs were at the forefront providing the platform on which broad-based industrial growth can take place in the decade ahead.
132

'AWARDS'
A satirical tribute to the people who didn't make it elsewhere but still deserved mention.
140

OFF WITH THE COBWEBS
The Indian media shook off its shackles during the decade and emerged in an exciting new avatar.
146

'MY DECADE'
First person accounts by prominent people who experienced an eventful decade in their respective professions.
154

THE FADING GLITTER
The Indian film industry faces its biggest ever crisis with the advent of video and television and changing audience tastes.
165

ON THE RIGHT TRACK
Indian sports received a major boost with the Asian Games and the new confidence is encouraging.
173

THE SPREADING SCREEN
Indian television has come a long way since its hesitant and humble beginnings.
185

NEWSMAKERS
Individuals who made waves during the decade with their outstanding contributions in their respective fields.
198

Cover design by LOKESH BHARGAVA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The new passion...

Product of the Vareli Group of Industries in association with Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd. Surat.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Garden®
VARELI
FABRICS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY

THE INSIDE STORY

IT WAS the worst of times, it was the best of times. The flickering flashbacks that summon up the scenes of INDIA TODAY's early evolution are almost surrealistic. The dog days of the Emergency, when the entire staff of half-a-dozen spent long and langurous afternoons at the packed Press Club over cold beers and hot gossip—censorship having cremated initiative and investigative ability. Then the sudden surge as the floodgates crashed open and it all came spilling out, all the words and the knowledge that had been bottled up for those claustrophobic months, and suddenly INDIA TODAY came into its own.

That was 1977, 15 months after the magazine made its initially modest appearance on the news-stands. Looking back at those formative years, and the pre-eminent position the magazine enjoys today, it's hard to believe that it could have happened at all, that a magazine born during the Emergency should have gone on to become the country's leading newsmagazine. In actuality, the idea wasn't as ludicrous as it appeared. Its promoters, the Purie family of New Delhi, had among its various business interests a sophisticated printing plant on the outskirts of the city. A move into the publishing business was therefore, a natural diversification, and the idea of a news oriented magazine for Indians living abroad had been tossed around for quite a while.

Planned as a small venture, the magazine had the humblest of beginnings. The first office was a cramped corridor-like space in a Connaught Place office barely enough for four desks. In fact, the five original members of the staff usually preferred to operate from the restaurant next door (the coffee was better). The original INDIA TODAY gang of five was a mixed bag. There was Madhu Trehan, an expatriate from New York and the oldest Purie daughter who had a journalism degree from Columbia University and some working experience with local publications in the US. Aggressive and savvy, Trehan was the office hen, shepherding and guiding the young brood that trooped in one by one. Shirley Joshua arrived

Looking back at those formative years, it's hard to believe that it could have happened at all—that a magazine born during the Emergency should have become the country's leading newsmagazine.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Make room for Special Effects.

Special Effects. The Premium Acrylic Emulsion Paint. Transforms the walls of your home dramatically. Making them stand out. So you discover an extra dimension to your room.

You'll just love coming home to the excitement of Special Effects, day after day. Its soft splendour will touch your eyes. And you'll see the glimmer of its rich sheen in someone's eyes.

Your walls never had luxury in such a range of new shades. Shades that will make even the rainbow blush. And the magic of Special Effects is so easy to keep.

Special Effects
The ultimate luxury for your walls.

Jenson & Nicholson

Rediffusion/JN/4308

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There was an undiluted sense of fun and adventure in those early years, even though the initial requirements and challenges of putting together a magazine for Indians abroad were limited.

fresh from university, and displayed an instant knack of convincing others to do what she wanted without them realising it. Then there was Mandira Purie, Trehan's equally aggressive younger sister who discovered she had a hidden talent for photography and eventually did double duty as staff photographer. Being rather short and the only woman photographer on the scene then, Mandira often managed to persuade her fiercely competitive counterparts from other publications to lift her up for a better shot over the heads of the crowd. And there was Dilip Bobb, a disillusioned tea planter-turned-freelance-journalist, who was to become a human word-processor, stamping the magazine's distinctive style on every page. Orchestrating the operations from above was Aroon Purie, a chartered accountant by training but with an uncanny instinct for journalism's jugular. Shortly after, in breezed Sunil Sethi from the now defunct Junior Statesman, seeming to know everybody worth knowing in Delhi. His flying fingers and turn of phrase added a new quality to the magazine's prose. The average age of the office that first year was 25.5, at which age most journalists in other offices haven't got beyond the local crime beat.

There was an undiluted sense of fun and adventure in those early years, even though the initial requirements and challenges were limited: Putting together a magazine for Indians abroad was more of a cut and paste job with only special stories deserving special attention. But then a funny thing happened on the way to the circulation department. Though planned as a magazine for Indians abroad, part of the 5,000 copy print run was let loose on the domestic market as an experiment, to be immediately devoured. Overnight, INDIA TODAY experienced a total turnaround in its target market which was now larger, better informed and far more demanding.

It seemed a daunting challenge. The INDIA TODAY team was relatively lacking in terms of professional experience. But what it had was compensation enough—an abundance of enthusiasm, initiative, ambition, and the collective will to make the magazine a success. It was a combination that proved contagious. Within weeks of the magazine's debut on the domestic market, the INDIA TODAY office had become a hyper-active den with senior journalists dropping in constantly throughout the day to offer advice, expertise and even articles. There was the portly, paternal figure of Jay Dubashi of The Economic Times whose quotations from T.S.Eliot or Auden made the intricacies of the economy more understandable to the housewife. There was the ever-jovial Satindra Singh, who brought with him reams of inside information and won all bets in the office on the results of the 1977 elections. And, of course, there was the irrepressible Chand Joshi, of The Hindustan Times whose political jokes and gossip helped keep spirits high, including his own.

This trial and error period was mercifully brief. By the time Mrs Gandhi aborted the Emergency and called for elections, INDIA TODAY was ready and capable of meeting the sudden, unexpected upsurge in demand and challenges. In retrospect, those post-Emergency days seem one constant blur of movement and motivation with hardly a pause between one damning expose' and another. Nobody minded the endless travel and travails, and everybody did multiple-duty from writing to subbing, proof-reading and production, even driving off to Faridabad, where the press was located, in the middle of the night wearing pullovers and pyjamas! There was history and destiny in the atmosphere and INDIA TODAY breathed it in great and generous gulps.

IF 1977 marked a major turning point for the country, it was equally so for INDIA TODAY. The Emergency had left in its wake a vast treasure store of scandals that were ideal grist to its mill. The sordid history of the Maruti project. The antics of accused and witness alike in the Shah Commission hearings. An expose' on torture. All this in a new, aggressive, independent, chatty and informative way of looking at the world around. Issue after issue, the stories kept imploding in sensational bursts with an equally sensational burst in circulation figures. The result was that almost overnight, the magazine found itself catapulted into the big league. The period of experimentation and change was over.

Having, in no small measure, pioneered the country's magazine boom, INDIA TODAY's staff shifted gratefully to a more expansive office eventually acquired a sophisticated computerised text editing system. The magazine began to attract writers and staffers from among the best talent available. Arun Shourie first gave notice of his limitless crusading zeal as a regular contributor to the magazine. When two young men—Prannoy Roy and Ashok Lahiri—proclaiming themselves to be psephologists, a word virtually unheard of in India at the time, walked into the office and offered to run a forecast of the 1980 election, the idea was lapped up as an innovation worth trying. Not only did their Lok Sabha forecasts work, they started a whole new trend in journalism.

Raghu Rai, India's best known photographer, joined the staff as picture editor and has ever since been embroiled in a running battle with the writers over visual space ("windows versus the brickwork of text"), which in his case invariably meant five columns for pictures and the remaining one column for text. The talented Bhawan Singh followed suit to join him and the durable Pramod Pushkarna to make a potent team of lensmen. The magazine did its bit to reverse the brain drain: Inderjit Badhwar, part of the crack Jack Anderson investigative team, signed on as Washington correspondent and has been recently lured into making his passage back to India. So was Design Consultant Aurobind Patel, who was weaned away from his work for Esquire magazine to design a new Issue after issue the stories kept imploding in sensational bursts—all this in a new, aggressive, independent, chatty and informative way of looking at the world around.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The magazine's main strength lies in giving its staff a free hand with no expenses spared in pursuit of exclusive and important stories.

magazine format and introduce new type faces. And after Chotu Karadia's three year stint, the experienced and personable Suman Dubey left The Asian Wall Street Journal and Reuters to occupy the vacant managing editor's chair, popularly known as the 'Hot Seat', and used his mature judgement to improve the quality of its stories.

At the the same time, INDIA TODAY found itself becoming something of a journalistic hothouse where latent talent flowered and flourished. Chander Uday Singh took on Bombay's business titans for his three year tenure; while Chaitanya Kalbagh won an award for his sensitive writings on civil liberties issues. Cartoonist Ajit Ninan, cartographer B.K.Sharma and sub-editors-turned correspondents Jagannath Dubashi and Sreekant Khandekar (who won an award for his rural reporting) were other prime examples as was Prabhu Chawla, a former economics lecturer at Delhi University whose network of contacts is a source of constant amazement to his colleagues and an unending flow of stories. Raj Chengappa, Farzand Ahmed and Ramesh Menon have specialised in INDIA TODAY's pioneering social trend and human condition stories.

The masthead grew longer with the addition of the goateed T.N. Ninan from the Business Standard as business editor. After getting over his initial shock at the informal, argumentative atmosphere at the magazine, Ninan turned INDIA TODAY's business section into one of the most informative and readable on the market and won the first Sachin Chaudhuri award for his reports before moving on to higher things as senior editor. In the last three years the staff has grown and correspondents now staff most of the larger state capitals, coordinated by Radhika Roy.

All along, the magazine's main strength lay in giving its staff a free hand, in its cooperative approach with numerous stories being written not so much by individual writers as teams of writers and editors. If story writing in the early days resembled a production line, this changed in time to making team work very much part of its basic approach. If egos clashed, well there was always the editor's indelible blue pencil. An openness to ideas, an encouragement to initiative, to innovation and to go for the exclusive stories—these quickly introduced an element of creative tension which prompted journalists to go out and put in their best fitted. Nothing symbolised the magazine's collective style of operation as its fortnightly newsmeetings where story ideas were chewed over, tossed about and finally accepted or rejected usually after heated debate.

But no expense was spared in the pursuit of news. Thus, Suman Dubey caught the first plane to London when ethnic riots erupted there involving the expatriate Indian community. Dilip Bobb was one of the first journalists to enter Afghanistan and contact the rebels in the wake of the Soviet troops, and over a score of staffers spanned out into the remotest parts of the country for election coverage of the sort that newspapers would not attempt.

There were risks, too: S. Venkat Narayan and Shekhar Gupta were both arrested by the Sri Lankan authorities for nosing around for news of Tamil Tigers in Sri Lanka. There were other kinds of risks: To Sumit Mitra fell the unenviable lot of bearing the brunt of Mrs Gandhi's ire when, after identifying himself at a crowded press conference, he asked her for an assessment of son Rajiv, only to be angrily told "Why should I reply. You work for an anti-national magazine."

The real test of the magazine, of course, has been to present readers with its fortnightly fare of news swiftly, accurately, attractively. And there have been moments when it succeeded with considerable effort. When Sanjay Gandhi crashed his Pitts stunt plane on the morning of June 23, 1980, not only did that have to be covered in just three days, some 60 per cent of the issue under preparation had to be spiked because it was suddenly dated. His widow Menaka's sudden departure from 1 Safdarjang Road on the night of March 29-30, 1982, meant reprinting a part of the cover story, yet the magazine that hit the newsstands a day later turned out to be up to date with the newspapers.

The real test of the magazine has been to present readers with its fortnightly fare of news swiftly, accurately, attractively. And there have been moments when it succeeded with considerable effort.

AT TIMES, coincidence has played a part in helping the magazine get the news. Sumit Mitra was in Bangladesh investigating its territorial differences with India when President Zia-ur-Rehman was assassinated. INDIA TODAY had the first on-the-spot report. Perseverance too has paid off. Shekhar Gupta decided to hole up in Amritsar on June 3, 1984, when foreign correspondents and Indians working for foreign agencies were shunted out by the authorities. He was one of two journalists who managed to get a first-hand account of Operation Bluestar. But at other times, the flow of news defeated the magazine's fortnightly cycle. As when Mrs Gandhi was assassinated. The magazine was to hit the stands on November 1, and the latest issue had already been despatched when the teleprinters in the office clattered out their tragic news. "Couldn't you have held it back, or put in the news?" we were asked. That wasn't, of course, possible but the magazine was able to then devote its entire next issue to Mrs Gandhi which became, at 4,00,000 copies, its biggest ever and a complete sell-out.

As the circulation curve has climbed continuously over the last decade, abuse, praise, criticism, and bouquets have all come INDIA TODAY's way. Now, on its tenth birthday, the magazine can look back with pride and satisfaction at its myriad achievements and the long road it has travelled from that cramped corridor in Connaught Circus. And yet, in some strange way, there still exists the collective feeling—and eager anticipation—that the INDIA TODAY story is just starting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

everest/85/ST/365

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IMAGES

"I, Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, President of India, do by this proclamation declare that a grave emergency exists, whereby the security of India is threatened by internal disturbance."
The President of India on June 26, 1975

It was a decade of continuous contrasts. A period of portent and promise, triumph and tragedy, darkness and light. The grim ghosts of the Emergency giving way to the brilliant burst of freedom and the victory of democracy. The bitter betrayal of a people's trust restoring a once discredited leader to the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

1975-1985

pedestal. New uncertainties in a plane crash, in the finality of an assassin's bullet. Then finally the birth of a new hope. But above all, the timeless images that spell out India. Divided and yet one. Powerful and yet weak. Follower and yet leader. Ten years that shook India and left it stronger.

"We have watched these developments with utmost patience for long. How can any government worth the name stand by and allow the country's stability to be imperilled."

INDIRA GANDHI
on June 26, 1975

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The Youth Congress has stolen our thunder."
INDIRA GANDHI
at the December 1976 AICC session in Guwahati

"They demanded a lakh of rupees or 25 cases for sterilisation and when I was unable to give them either, our house was pulled down."
RUKAYA BEGUM
a widow with eight children
India Today, May 1977

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The chains we bear before you today, are symbols of the entire nation which has been chained and fettered by a dictatorship which has established itself in our country."
GEORGE FERNANDES
in a statement during the Baroda Dynamite case trial in September 1976

"D'Ocracy-
D.E.M. Beloved husband of T. Ruth, loving father of L.I. Bertie, brother of Faith, Hope, Justicia, expired on 26th June."
Deaths column of Times of India on June 28, 1975

THE STATESMAN
SPECIAL EDITION
Emergency Due To Intern
CONSPIRACY TO END DEMOCRACY
Special Powers For Preventive Steps
CENSORSHIP OF NEWS
Steps To Help The Poor Soon, Says Mrs. Gandhi
India-China

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"We Indians can hold our heads a little higher today because after 20 months of an authoritarian rule, the electorate, largely unlettered but by no means ill-informed, has said that once aroused it is no respector of persons as shown, by Mrs Gandhi's shock defeat, as also her son's."

THE STATESMAN in its editorial on the general elections in March 1977

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"I should like to make it clear that as one who led the Government, I unreservedly own full responsibility for this defeat. I am not interested in finding alibis or excuses for myself, nor am I interested in shielding anyone."

INDIRA GANDHI
in a letter to Congress Party President Dev Kant Barooah in April 1977

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Sarayu Foundation Trust and eGangotri

Finishing Touches

When you have time to yourself in a Parryware bathroom, you can celebrate personal victories.

Wasn't it just yesterday that the zillionth person told your husband he had a charming wife?

Remember how you proved to the world that you would build that beautiful house of your dreams.

Why, you're probably the only person who can get back into the cholis you wore at 18, in spite of 2 children.

Parryware bathrooms let you relive moments of pride.

They have a modernity to make you feel young.

A heritage to be proud of.

A finish that says you've got style.

Colours to complement your sophistication.

And a beauty that inspires you to get the very best out of your life.

Parryware VITREOUS

Manufactured and marketed by EID Parry (India) Limited Ceramics Division, Dare House, P B No 12, N.S.C. Bose Road, Madras 600 001

BD-1797

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"My world lies in shambles all around me. I am afraid I shall not see it put together again in my lifetime. Maybe my nephews and nieces will see that. Maybe."
JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN
in his Prison Diary,
on July 21, 1975

"Every time the prime minister opens his mouth, the Janata Party loses half a million votes."
RAM JETHMALANI
on Morarji Desai
in India Today, June 1978

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"The only truthful action of the Janata Government so far has been to prematurely announce his (Jayaprakash Narayan's) death. They killed his promises and now they are bent on killing him."
ARUN SHOURIE
Indian Express,
March 1979

"Charan Singh literally licked the boots of Congress(I) chief Indira Gandhi to become prime minister."
JAGJIVAN RAM
India Today,
August 1979

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Where are the handcuffs? I am not going without handcuffs."
INDIRA GANDHI
when police came to arrest her, October 1977

"If this country is to be rendered safe for future generations, the people owe it to themselves to ensure that an irresponsible and unconstitutional centre of power like the one which revolved around Shri Sanjay Gandhi during the emergency is not allowed to come up ever again in any form or shape or under any guise."
Extract from Shah Commission Report, August 1978

"This is your political rebirth. Do not worry and be brave."
INDIRA GANDHI
to Sanjay after his conviction in the Kissa Kursi Ka case in 1978

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"There was an inevitability about the Congress split. A mixed bag of Congressmen threw in their lot with Mrs Gandhi who herself projected a new mood of defiance and open revolt."
INDIA TODAY
on the convention which led to the Congress split in January 1978

"We've done our best to hold the party together. But it was her and her caucus that smashed it."
K. B. REDDI,
Congress President,
on the party split in January, 1978

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I grew up with Gopi."

"Four years ago my mother tempted me to enter the kitchen, with a Gopi.

Yet today, I'm an expert cook... thanks to the super helpmate I have in Gopi."

"Gopi is all the help I need in my kitchen.

And do you know why?

Gopi offers me the latest technology and three jars with the basic machine — not just one. All at no extra cost.

So only Gopi lets me switch from blending... to dry grinding... to wet grinding to whatever... in seconds. With no hassles, such as fiddling with sharp blades.

Gopi also gives me the widest choice of optional attachments for special jobs. Each self-enclosed.

Come to think of it, Gopi does the work of a food processor, blender, juicer and grinder. Imagine the money I save by not having to buy them individually!

What's more, Gopi's heavy duty motor makes it the best machine for Indian conditions. In fact, I run it as long as I want. And the operating instructions are so easy to follow.

The Gopi machine is so good, you get lifetime free service.

What more could any woman want?

No wonder, with Gopi around I almost feel like a superwoman in the kitchen!"

GOPI

Kitchen Machine

The better looking, better designed kitchen machine with a lifetime free service.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Insist on Gopi by name — buy from authorised dealers only.

Optional attachments

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HIMACHAL

Where hospitality is a way of life...

Of Sporty Times And Snowy Charms

Experience the sheer spectacle of snow in Shimla, skii in Manali, Narkanda or Kufri. Partake of the fun and frolic of the winter carnivals. Revel in each moment of winters in Himachal.

Skiing courses (elementary, basic and advance) commence from January '86 upto May '86. Choose between Manali (organised by the Mountaineering Institute Manali) and Narkanda (organised by the H.P.T.D.C.) For those who want to watch there is an off season discount in most hotels. Ofcourse participating is equally economical with the rates being merely Rs. 300/- and upwards.

And now to the fun times and bonfire nights of winter carnivals at Manali between 10th - 13th February ... with cultural activities, Ski competitions and folk songs. Also H.P.T.D.C. will be organising a winter festival at Narkanda.

So come now. Come to Himachal... where sporty times await you and snowy charms beckon you...

For more information Contact Director Mountaineering Institute. or the Commissioner Tourism, Himachal Pradesh, Daizy Bank Estate, Shimla-171001 Tel: 2028, 3136 or H.P. Tourist offices at: Delhi: Chanderok building, Janpath, New Delhi-110001. Tel: 345320 Bombay: 36, World Trade Centre, Cuffee Parade, Bombay-400005. Tel: 219191/284. Calcutta: 25, Camac Street, Calcutta. Tel: 446847. Madras: 28 C-in-C, Madras-600015. Tel: 472966. Chandigarh: S.C.O. 1048-49, Sector 22B. Tel: 26494.

HIMACHAL TOURISM

ASTIKA H.T. 150

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Beyond colour . . .

The artist paints a world, on canvas.

While the viewer looks at colour, the artist looks beyond colour.

He peeps into an expanse, an entire new universe, and brings you glimpses of that magnificent beyond on canvas.

The artist's vision is the supreme vision in the world of colour.

Here, Rajdoot Paints brings you one such vision from your world of colour – a world that Rajdoot, now one of India's finest paint companies, is helping shape in its own different way.

World of colour – 2

The second in a series of originals by Satish Gujral.
Created exclusively for Rajdoot Paints.

The world of colour,
the world of Rajdoot.

Rajdoot® PAINTS

Rajdoot Paints Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"Deaths: 20,000 to 30,000. Estimated loss: Between Rs 2,000 and 3,000 crores."

INDIA TODAY
on the Andhra cyclone in December 1977

"The Morvi disaster was as much the result of freak rainfall as of total administrative failure to either predict or cope with the catastrophe when it occurred."

INDIA TODAY
on the Morvi dam burst which claimed an estimated 4000 lives in August 1979.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The Janata Party betrayed the trust reposed in it. Morarji Desai was a relic from a bygone age. In his lust for the office of Prime Minister, Charan Singh exposed it to ridicule. India is back to one-party dominance with a vengeance."

GIRILAL JAIN
in The Times of India
January 9, 1980, on Mrs Gandhi's election victory.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"If my leader had said I should pick up a broom and be a sweeper, I would have done that. She chose me to be President."
ZAIL SINGH
on becoming President of India on July 25, 1982

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Good Evening,

beautiful world!

From Sweet Memories.
The Designer Dress Material Series by Vimal.

Sweet Memories
The Designer
Dress Material
Series

VIMAL

Your beautiful evenings have just begun.

Zero-defect creations of new Water Jet technology. Palace. Jet Palace. De Chine. Palace De Chine. Crepe De Chine. Nashiji. Jacquard De Chine. Dobby De Chine. Dobby Palace. China Silk. China Yoryu. Fuji Silk. Dobby Yoryu. Jacquard Yoryu. Nep Palace. Nep De Chine... A rich variation in textures. And 250 shades every month.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MUDRA B. RTI 2426

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"He was a phenomenon, a one-man political industry bent on transforming the entire perspective of the country. His untimely death has not only left his young herd bewildered but has knocked the needle out of India's political compass. New bearings have to be sought and old perceptions discarded."

INDIA TODAY
on Sanjay's death
in June 1980

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"A mother's sorrow grows every year. It is a deep and private thing. I brought up Sanjay as a symbol of daring, dynamism and endurance."
INDIRA GANDHI
one year after
Sanjay Gandhi's death

"She had a lot of support from Sanjay.... I can't really give her the sort of support he was giving her."
RAJIV GANDHI
to India Today August, 1980

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"Will the cap fit?"

Headline INDIA TODAY
May 1981

"The entire style of functioning within the Congress(I) has generated not an awareness of the need for urgency on the question of succession but an avalanche of sycophancy."

Editorial in Mainstream,
April 1982

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

"The marriage of Sanjay with Maneka was the result of a conspiracy of certain forces who wanted to infiltrate into my home."
MRS GANDHI
June 1983

BHAWAN SINGH

"The entire affair is still a family drama: last year Maneka was the beleaguered widow booted out by an impervious mother-in-law. This year, she's playing the spirited daughter-in-law fighting back. Only the setting has changed from the domestic disharmony of 1 Safdarjung Road to the ground-level dust of national politics"
INDIA TODAY
on RSM launching
April 1983

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"I began shivering with fear because I knew I was next. Acid was forced into my eyes. Now I am completely blind."
RAMAN BIND
a victim of Bhagalpur blindings in December 1980

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"She was neither nebulous nor nubile, as countless reporters had portrayed her to be. Instead, the "black beauty of the bandit world" turned out to be a drab, petulant, neurotic, foul mouthed victim of life."

INDIA TODAY on Phoolan Devi's surrender February 1983

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"It is our fault that we allowed the regional parties to come up by giving up the Governments."
RAJIV GANDHI
INDIA TODAY
December 1983

"The Telugu Messiah, who presented himself as a genuine, home-grown, Telugu-spirited alternative, decisively turned Mrs Gandhi's dwindling popularity into a rich electoral harvest."
INDIA TODAY
on N.T. Rama Rao's victory in the Andhra Pradesh elections in December 1982

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

"Why should not the Congress(I) high command tolerate a few non-Congress(I) governments? Is it a Mughal empire in which nobody should have a small kingdom?"
R.K. HEGDE
INDIA TODAY
December 1983

BHAWAN SINGH

"The day certainly belonged to Farooq who convincingly proved the strength of continuity in the politics of the Kashmir Valley."
INDIA TODAY
on Farooq Abdullah's victory in the Assembly elections, June 1983

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"It was a champagne summer for Indian cricket."

A report in India Today on the World Cup victory in Australia in March 1985

"China's medal-hungry athletes created history by toppling Japan while the Indian contingent wound up with the largest number of medals ever won by the country in the Asian Games."

INDIA TODAY on Asiad, November 1982

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Right from the lowest sweeper to the highest official, there was a total commitment to ensure that the games were a success."
BUTA SINGH
chairman AGSOC in December 1982

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"It looks as if the attackers wanted to make sure of getting rid of the entire new generation and also to ensure that no new births took place."
TAHERMUDDIN THAKUR
a survivor of the Nellie massacre, February 1983

"If you have selected me as the locomotive to pull the non-aligned train along, I will ensure that it does not go off the rails."
INDIRA GANDHI
March 1983

"India has a genius for arranging monster tamashas overnight. When Iraq became unsuitable as a summit venue India rose to the challenge. God took six days to create the world. India would have done it in five."
TREVOR FISHLOCK
in the London Times, March 1983

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"We Sikhs know how to sacrifice our lives. At the same time, we know how to cut others into pieces."
J.S. BHINDRANWALE
August 1983

"As long as Bhindranwale continues to have his way, Punjab will continue to burn."
VIRENDRA
editor, Pratap of Jalandhar
April 1983

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"We went inside with humility in our hearts and prayers on our lips."

Lt-Gen. K. SUNDARJI
GOC Western Command in June 1984

"It is entirely their business. If the SGPC want to build 24 storeys they are welcome to do it, provided the municipal laws permit it."

RAJIV GANDHI
on the proposal to reconstruct the Akal Takht in March 1985

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Every drop of my blood, I'm sure will contribute to the growth of the nation."
INDIRA GANDHI
October 30, 1984
the day before she was assassinated

"The India that Mrs Gandhi left behind is at the moment in a critical condition: fragmented by fratricidal conflict, governed by a fractured party. She had a hard enough time governing it but Rajiv is faced with a Herculean task."
INDIA TODAY
on Mrs Gandhi's death, November 1984

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"Most poignant of all, a grim-visaged son, wreathed in smoke from the funeral pyre, like some ghostly benediction from the grave."
INDIA TODAY
November 1984

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"Three days of violence and loot and murder left the national capital dazed, reeling from an unprecedented holocaust. The pattern was nauseatingly repeated everywhere: spontaneous arson and destruction at first taken over by criminally led hoodlums who killed Sikhs, looted or burnt their homes and properties while the police twiddled their thumbs."

INDIA TODAY
November 1984

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"A Monday of macabre death, a killer cloud of gas that silently settled on an unsuspecting city and converted a mild winter's night into a nightmare of misery, panic, sickness and for at least 2,500 people, babies and children, fathers and mothers, a slow, painful, unneccessary snuffing out of life.

INDIA TODAY
on the Bhopal gas tragedy
December 1984

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New Dimensions at BST...

We've acquired new dimensions.
In Pipes and Tubes, Energy,
Environmental Engineering,
Electronics,
Construction and Engineering.
And we now look forward to even greater achievements in the future.
Because at BST
we've made a commitment to serving industry through continued innovation and new directions in industrial technology.

A growth-oriented, diversified enterprise...

BST LIMITED

The thrust of technology into tomorrow...

17, Sansad marg, New Delhi-110001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Forget everything you know about mattresses

NEW

Kurl-on®

SUPER DELUXE QUILTED MATTRESS

outclasses all others.

In comfort. Support. Elegance.

Kurl-on®

India's No. 1 Mattress

Karnataka Consumer Products Ltd.,
Industry House, 45 Fair Field Road,
Bangalore 560 001. Phone: 76746

MASS/KURL-ON/85

Company Showrooms and Offices:

Phones: • Bangalore 220314/224676 • Cochin 36744 • Madras 810710 • Hyderabad 84560 • Bombay 354385 • New Delhi 772019 • Calcutta 545488.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"It was Rajiv's election. Rajiv was the campaigner, Rajiv the candidate and Rajiv was elected."
V.P. SINGH
January 1985

"People's expectations are scary."
RAJIV GANDHI
India Today
February 1985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"It wasn't such a difficult decision after all. I just followed the order of my guru."
SANT LONGOWAL
on the Punjab accord
India Today
August 1985

"We have had to make compromises but we have won a victory."
PRAFULLA MAHANTA
on the Assam accord
India Today
September 1985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The sorrow and despair were soon replaced by outrage at the depraved choice of the target—a Jumbo airliner with 329 innocent men, women and children on board."

India Today on the Air India explosion in June 1985

"Once the symbol of protest was a flag and its voice was a hoarse slogan. Today, the symbol is a bullet, spinning out blindly, and its voice is the impersonal staccato rataratarataratat of a beserk Sten gun."

M.J. AKBAR in The Telegraph on the killing of Lalit Maken, August 1985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"No one can browbeat me nor bullets deter me. My death will be a small price to pay for bringing amity to my brothers and sisters in Punjab."

SANT LONGOWAL
in India Today,
September 1985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"It was a decisive vote against extremism, a vote for peace in a troubled state."
INDIA TODAY
on the Punjab Assembly elections, September 1985

"For us he is now Sardar Arjun Singh."
SANT LONGOWAL
after the signing of the Punjab accord, July 1985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

"For the first time we are facing the West in complete equality. Our generation, the older generation, is passing away. This festival is about how the young eyes of India see tradition."

PUPUL JAYAKAR
chairperson
Advisory Committee
for Festival of India
June 1985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"We must all look ahead and prepare India for the 21st century into which we will soon be stepping."
RAJIV GANDHI
in The Times of India, January 1985

"What the country needs is not computers, television sets or electronics but jobs for the unemployed, drinking water for the villages and bread for the hungry."
Janata Party President Chandra Shekhar, in The Times of India, May 1985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BODY LANGUAGE BY NEWMAN

Give your body a language of its own. With Newman shirts and trousers. An exquisite array of designs ranging from the very formal to the easy casual. Each one tailored to perfection.

Let your body speak for itself. Be a Newman.

INTRODUCING
NEWMAN
Shirts, Trousers & Sweaters

everest/d85/NS/187

Available only in New Delhi at Newman's exclusive showrooms :

278, Palika Bazar, Connaught Place • Mahajan House, South Extension Part II • 2404, Hardhyan Singh Road, Karolbagh.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHANGING POLITICAL CULTURE

It was a decade that revolved around the personality of one person, Indira Gandhi whether she was in power or out of it. She shaped the darkness of the Emergency at its start, moulded her party, cast a long shadow over the Janata regime, chose her sons as political heirs and, in the cataclysm of her assassination, enabled power to pass to a younger generation.

AJIT NINAN

At the start of the decade India was caught in the biggest political cleavage in its modern political history. Today it stands on the threshold of a new political consensus.

EVERY generation believes it lives through momentous times. And at the pace at which India has changed these past 40 years, who is to dispute that? Each decade has had its own distinctive political temper. The back-breaking struggle and cathartic exhilaration of the decade of independence. The surge of self confidence and the challenge of nation-making in the 1950s. The wars, famines and rising uncertainties of the 1960s followed by a flash of brilliance in the early 1970s to yield only too quickly to turmoil and confusion. Yet, in spite of it all, there hasn't been anything quite like the last decade.

Hold an imaginary kaleidoscope to the eye and the slightest flick of the hand produces political patterns never before beheld in India:

A prime minister held guilty of corrupt electoral practices. Mrs Indira Gandhi's unique and arrogant answer to that: the suspension of democracy, and the jailing of political opponents. The enactment of vicious laws, of self-serving legislation retroactively implemented to protect the prime minister. The build-up of a personality cult. Harsh measures to curb population growth and clean up cities. Swift retribution as a sitting prime minister and her government are defeated for the first time. The first non-Congress government in power and the first premature collapse of a government in office.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There was Nellie, arguably the result of political malfunction, the worst large-scale killing since Independence. There's Khalistan, after Nagaland the most serious secessionist threat to be encountered. There have been many army actions but none quite like Operation Bluestar. The assassination of Mrs Gandhi, more portentous than the killing of Mahatma Gandhi, whose work was by and large done, 37 years earlier.

The most remarkable thing is that it happened at all, that events without precedent and forces without parallel could have been unleashed and contained, that the political system not only survived these last 10 years, it came out triumphant.

Trial by fire. No other expression can better sum up the decade that has just passed into history. And, between the two cataclysmic events that encompass it, the declaration of the Emergency and the assassination of a prime minister, it is the lone, embattled, lofty person of Mrs Gandhi that determined how the years would shape. Politics revolved around this one central figure, revered by millions yet disliked by other millions, providing the thread that stitched together the seemingly disparate weaves that made up this fascinating tapestry. Ten years ago, if someone had made a soap opera anticipating all that was about to happen, no one would have believed such events could transpire; that a leader of so many hundred millions would become the raison d'etre for the existence of her own party and most of the Opposition, caught in a love-hate relationship not just with politicians but with India's multitudes; that filial fidelities would matter so much to the future of the world's largest democracy.

Politics revolved around Mrs Gandhi, revered by millions yet disliked by others, providing the thread that stitched together the seemingly disparate weaves that made up a fascinating tapestry.

RAGU RAI

INDIRA GANDHI: PREMIUM ON LOYALTY

Incredibly, matter they did, and what occurred as a result reoriented the history of India. Ten years ago, when INDIA TODAY was born, India was caught in the biggest political cleavage in its brief modern political history, torn by the Emergency, eminent politicians in jail, a censored press, usurped political power. Today, it stands on the threshold of a new political consensus. In 1975, the Congress Party—still without the suffix 'I'—was a conglomeration of middle-of-the-road politicians held together by the lure of power or their loyalty to Mrs Gandhi. Today, it is making its first serious attempt to acquire a modern organisation and to function in a modern idiom, rather than remain like the sloughed-off skin of some 100-year-old organism.

A decade ago, the political threat to the ruling party came from within itself, and from opposition parties who reached across state borders and regarded themselves as national. Today, the internal threat is contained at least for the time being, and the main threat is from parties that proclaim themselves to be regional or 'national' parties reduced to regional bases. Ten years ago, there was talk of a national alternative; today politicians are relieved that the Opposition even survives.

If today's buzzword is 'change', it is only a natural corollary to what's been happening to the country's political culture these past years. At one level it remains combative, with political parties and politicians giving as good as they get, yielding no quarter in forums where public stance is important, in Parliament and on election platforms, for instance. If elections were marked by acrimony in 1977 and 1980, Rajiv Gandhi's rhetoric in December 1984 was no psalm to moderation. He went hammer and tongs at the opposition parties, particularly the Akalis with whom he was to negotiate a settlement only seven months later, accusing them of being all but anti-national.

But at a deeper level, politics has turned away from its daggers-drawn attitude of the past. True, one of Mrs Gandhi's first utterances on resuming office in January 1980 was conciliatory. "Come, let us work together," she told the nation. But hers was a heads-I-win-tails-you-lose attitude. There was no togetherness, mainly a contemptuous dismissal of her opponents. Today as the Bharatiya Janata Party's L.K. Advani says: "When you speak to him (the prime minister) privately, he comes out as a sincere and interested person who is keen to shed the confrontationist attitude of his mother."

That attitude infected son Sanjay who in turn let loose a virtual epidemic. Smarting at the drubbing he received over his Maruti project at the hands of the opposition parties in Parliament in the early 1970s, Sanjay's whole attitude was combative. When his new phalanx of MP's rose noisily to drown the much-diminished Opposition in Parliament, shouting and heckling day in and day out, he told an interviewer: "The younger members of Parliament are giving them a taste of their medicine. The younger group is more vocal and won't be bullied." Anger and fear were in the air.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today's images are different. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi presiding over a meeting with opposition leaders, denuded of power in the last Lok Sabha poll but still given their head by a young man who feels he can cope with their political challenge. The meeting is not a symbolic one-time affair, as was usual in earlier times. It takes place twice, three times, oftener, and an opposition politician recalls that the dialogue led to an amendment in the anti-defection bill. "He's pulled the rug from under our feet," confesses a Telugu Desam functionary.

The images of conciliation juxtapose swiftly: Awan Longowal sitting self-consciously in the prime minister's parliament office to sign the Punjab accord. Another signing, this one only a few hours before dawn on Independence Day, to settle the Assam agitation. And an uncompromising figure of the prime minister, rising in the Lok Sabha to declare unequivocally that as far as he is concerned with the Sri Lankan Tamil problem, the ball is now in the Tamil court.

With consensus has came credibility. When Mrs Gandhi declared in Parliament that she had no idea of what governor Ram Lal had been up to when he gave the chief ministership to the defecting N. Bhaskara Rao, it wasn't only the opposition parties that railed against her; she simply wasn't believed. There had been too much skulduggery before, whether it was Haryana Chief Minister Bhajan Lal walking his entire cabinet—the 'Bhajan mandali' as Arun Shourie christened it—into Mrs Gandhi's waiting arms in 1980, or governor Ganpatrao Devji Tapase refusing to accept Lok Dal leader Devi Lal's claim to form the Haryana government in 1982, or the toppling of Farooq Abdullah in J&K and Nar Bahadur Bhandari in Sikkim. The assault on Karnataka's Janata Government in 1983 backfired with the messy Moily tapes episode, leading an irate Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde to declare: "Why should not the Congress(I) tolerate a few non-Congress(I) governments? Is it a Mughal empire in which nobody (else) should have a small kingdom?" And the dictum of power by any means would have continued to reign had Andhra Pradesh and N.T.Rama Rao not proved a jaw-cracking mouthful even for the ravenous Congress(I).

It was a chicken and egg conundrum: which came first, the drift or the loss of credibility. Three years ago, the answer to Assam was a disastrous, violence-ridden and farcical election. Next fortnight, a new election should wipe out at least the political damage of the last, coming as it does on the shoulders of an accord. For two years and more, Punjab burned, hundreds died in the army action, a prime minister was assassinated and countless others perished in the violent aftermath of that bit of insane violence; today there are terrorist killings, but there's a legitimate Akali government, and for the first time in four years Punjab has a chance of peace. For long months, Tamil extremists from Sri Lanka found a rich haven in Tamil Nadu, easy access and sanctuary from attack; they're still in Tamil Nadu, but the heat's been turned on them and they aren't as free to come and go.

More long-overdue decisions have helped cement a new credibility into place. A bill to permit political donations. Another banning defections. An enhancement in permitted election expenses. Moves that came as belated recognition of the facts of political life, and made for a sea-change in the popular mood, that here at last was a government that may not have had all the answers but did seem to mean what it said.

If the political stage belonged to Mrs Gandhi, she won it by her unmatched political skills and in her unique contributions of holding the country together through crisis after crisis and giving it a voice in the world. Through all the years of turmoil she gave the country the one thing it badly needed to emerge from economic backwardness to some sort of forward momentum: time. Towards the end, she may have lost her touch but she saw India through some of the worst tensions that ever wracked a modern nation. And when things began to go wrong, her instinctive reaction was to turn for help to the only people she felt she could trust: her Long-overdue decisions have helped cement a new credibility and a sea-change in the popular mood, that here at last is a government that may not have all the answers but does seem to mean what it says.

BHAWAN SINGH

RAJIV GANDHI: A NEW CONCILIATION

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sons. Where the first failure would have drained the vitality of any other leader, she presided over two attempts at nurturing a political heir. Somehow she found the strength to cope with Sanjay's death; and in her death she made it possible for Rajiv to succeed her.

Mrs Gandhi's Congress Party was shaped, indeed made by her personality; if it was sustained by her strength as a vote-catcher, it was debilitated by her suspicions of her fellow politicians. Both were understandable: she is first seen under the spotlight in 1966 as a creature of the Old Guard, put on stage merely to utter the lines these aging leaders of the Syndicate prompt her to say from behind the curtains. But the lines catch in her throat, and she rewrites the script. She snaps their bonds by speaking over their heads directly to her audience, the electorate. The lesson she learnt stood her in good stead all but once: that as long as she could capture the popular imagination, she didn't need to rely on anybody else. The other side of the coin was that those who didn't stand by her in her adversity were dispensable.

The result: her party hinged on loyalty and in split after split was denuded of competence. The quintessential Congressman of this troubled period is Giani Zail Singh, captured for posterity by a camera lens at precisely the right moment, preening before a life-size portrait of his leader. What can better express the Congressman's obsequience than the Giani's remark when he was nominated to be President. Said he: "If my leader had said I should pick up a broom and be a sweeper, I would have done that. She chose me to be President."

Sanjay and his men received their political baptism under prosecution during the Janata phase and soon began to rely on political muscle. They were more comfortable raising cain than performance.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

SANJAY GANDHI: COMBATIVE STANCE

It was not an auspicious forum in which to launch a brash young man with little respect for a system he believed had merely nurtured ideologues and bumbling amateurs. Yet, to Sanjay belongs the credit for the first attempt at rejuvenating the party, crystallised by Mrs Gandhi's widely broadcast view at Guwahati in 1976 that: "The Youth Congress has stolen our thunder." That was no unrehearsed one-liner, but as it turned out the operative word was 'thunder'. Sanjay and his men received their political baptism under prosecution during the Janata phase and soon began to rely on political muscle. They were more comfortable raising cain than performance, and the enduring image is a photograph of Sanjay confronting police lathis on Janpath, one of the capital's busiest streets. Sanjay's young guard was, like in his mother's time, a reflection of his personality: impatient, impetuous, given to cutting corners.

After their triumphant resurrection in January 1980, mother and son made a neat division of responsibility. Mrs Gandhi pursued her loftier interests: policy-making and running the Government. Sanjay had a free hand in the party. He inducted some 50 greenhorns into Parliament and brought down the average age of the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party to just about 45, the lowest ever. As H. N. Bahuguna said shortly afterwards: "When I was invited by Mrs Gandhi to rejoin her in 1979, it took me just a couple of days to realise that the Congress as we knew it had been metamorphosed into something different. It was 'Indira Congress' in name but Sanjay Congress in reality."

Perhaps the change would have come about, had Sanjay not tried that June morning in 1980 to put his stunt plane through its paces. But with his death the whole superstructure came crumbling down. With rare exceptions, such as V.P. Singh and Arjun Singh, Jagdish Tytler and Madhavrao Scindia, Sanjay's nominees fell by the wayside, their fate exemplified by his widow, Menaka. Without the man responsible for its latest incarnation, the Congress(I) began to go to pieces, more or less out of control, battered by the alleged corruption of an Antulay, the electoral defeat of a Gundu Rao, the inept handling of an Anjaiah or the factional politics of literally every state of the Union. Even a sympathetic commentator like Girilal Jain was obliged to write: "In plain terms, if either Mrs Gandhi does not try and reshape the Congress(I) to give it coherent organisational structure or she fails in her effort, the country will face chaos."

Living through all this was Rajiv's political inheritance. With such a heritage, it isn't surprising that change should come slowly, or that it

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You are looking at
our new International selection of suitings.

POLYESTER WOOL, WORSTED AND POLYESTER BLENDED SUITINGS

SUITINGS FROM THE Cezari COLLECTION

BOMBAY DYEING

angri Collection, Haridwar

Without a shade of doubt we could get your bathroom to reveal its true colours

Vibrant Cera sanitaryware in 30 fascinating colours to give you endless combinations for your bathroom

Cera... sanitaryware to colour your fancies

CERA
VITREOUS

Madhusudan Ceramics
'Ankur Building', Near Dinbai Tower, Mirzapur Road, Ahmedabad 380 001.

Shilpi-2 MC 1/84

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The yawning gap between our Maharajah Class and an ordinary First Class

Our way of making you feel like a Maharajah, of course. Or rather, our many ways:

- Every seat a luxurious Slumberette on all our 747s.
- A choice of continental and delicately spiced Indian cuisine served in style, on elegant china and silverware.
- A selection of the finest wines and liquor.
- Gracious service by traditionally dressed hostesses. In the spirit of Indian hospitality.
- Decor reminiscent of a Maharajah's palace.
- Maharajah lounges at most airports.
- Separate and exclusive check-in facilities.

So, rather than yawning of boredom anywhere else, step aboard our Maharajah Class, put your feet up, recline on a Slumberette and feel like a Maharajah.

AIR-INDIA

The airline that treats you like a Maharajah

Shilpi-2 MC 1/84

AIR-1584R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRESENTING
NEW COMPOSITIONS IN SONATA
DESIGNS INSPIRED BY NATURE

CASCADES OF CHIFFON.
GLEAMING SYMPHONIES DES SATINS, BREATHTAKING CREPETTES, SUBTLE CHINONS,
SHEER SPRAY-SPANGLED FABRIQUE DE CHIFFON...

CARESSING TEXTURES—CLINGING, WHISPER-SOFT.

ALSO FOR TRADITIONAL ENSEMBLES EXQUISITE, DRESS FABRICS & HANDBAGS.

L'affaire

M-59 GREATER KAILASH MARKET-I
NEW DELHI 110 048
PHONE 641 9977

Sarah Sud Graphics/Vishakha

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

After Sanjay's death the Congress(I) began to go to pieces, more or less out of control, battered by the alleged corruption of an Antulay, the electoral defeat of a Gundu Rao, the inept handling of an Anjaiah or the factional politics of literally every state of the Union.

should be of the two-steps-forward-one-step-back variety. Or even that there should be undisguised sniggers at the advent of the 'manager politician' and 'computerji'. But there's a lot more. Fewer political fixers, for instance. There are politicians in power who have a questionable reputation, but the Congress Party is being buffeted by an unfamiliar wind. Training camps and training sessions are usually identified with the corporate culture; the Congress (I) is holding them. In politics, information came from the trusted few, up the grapevine by word of mouth, whispered confidentially. Now there seems to be a new breed of coordinators and investigators. It is no coincidence that at the last assembly elections, as former general secretary Srikant Verma writes, "Of 2,500 sitting Congress MLA's, he dropped 1,000, either on charges of corruption or because they had become dead wood. Some 70 state government ministers were denied tickets." A full one-third of the Congress(I)'s 1984 MP's were new faces, and as many as 88 of them first-time legislators who, in the words of one, had "never even seen the inside of a panchayat".

It is still early days, and there is plenty of cynicism within the party, that these changes may turn out to be cosmetic. For the first time, the Congress(I) is trying to bring people from diverse fields into politics, sportsmen, so-called intellectuals, entertainers, professionals, others who are a far cry from the agriculturists, lawyers and professional politicians who dominated politics for so long. Their character has begun to rub off on their political organisation. Party members aren't as obtrusive as before, they're more work-oriented, goal and performance targeted. As the country's youngest MP, Mukul Wasnik told INDIA TODAY recently: "We are not here to represent any lobby, we are here to solve problems."

To that task, the new vanguard brings a new ideology. Fifteen years ago, Mrs Gandhi triumphed promising to eradicate poverty. She caught the popular imagination by nationalising key industries, winning a war with Pakistan and in the process dividing it into two, and moving decisively on a populist tack. It is no coincidence that her decline started when she failed to produce rabbits out of her hat. Banishing poverty proved to be more than a matter of passing an edict. Indeed, out of the wreck of foodgrain nationalisation and the inflation that followed in 1972-73 came the slow pull-back, legitimised in later years by Sanjay who was impatient with 'isms', refused to accept the traditional labels of 'left' and 'right', and reversed the direction of the previous 10 years. Even the Janata Party, which thanks to George Fernandes banished IBM and Coca Cola, found itself a laughing stock when it seriously discussed nationalising TISCO.

Since then the political rhetoric has changed. Garibi Hatao gave way long ago to a more practical slogan: 'Elect a government that works'. Today, the slogan has marched on, to 'Elect a government that works faster', and it is the 21st century that has caught the imagination of the burgeoning middle class of some 100 million which has in the last 10 years evolved into the dominant political force. Populism is on the wane, yielding to pragmatism. Tax rates are down, big is no longer bad, strikes are out, investment is encouraged, multinationals aren't discredited by Bhopal, and both the stock-market and entrepreneurship are blossoming. The new buzzwords are solution-oriented: productivity, production, progress. The socialist lexicon has been put back on its shelf.

If Mrs Gandhi bequeathed Rajiv a party which bore the stamp of her personality, she bequeathed the nation an opposition paralysed by its obsession of her. For the middle-of-road opposition, politics was opposing Mrs Gandhi. The bullets of Beant Singh and Satwant Singh not only snatched away her life, they destroyed the Opposition's one-point campaign.

The so-called National alternative had only itself to blame for its inability to impress. No party could have asked for a better start than the Janata in 1977, a head start not just in its sweeping victory but in the near total collapse of the Congress morale. The dream of that old crusader, Jayaprakash Narayan, come true. But the sense of hope was shortlived. If the astrologers peered slightly further into the future and saw what was to be, they kept their counsel. Soon, it was no longer a party of seasoned politicians, it had become a chorus of snarling alley cats.

Remember the lines? They had usually to do with Mrs Gandhi. Charan Singh: "Perhaps those who differ with me do not realise sufficiently the intensity of the feelings among the people of our country on the Government's failure to put the former prime minister behind bars....They think that we in government are a pack of impotent people who cannot govern the country." Recall

Times of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

10 DECISIVE YEARS
Dec. 1975—Dec. 1985

Style

For a decade now, India Today has presented its comprehensive coverage of developments in the country—in its own inimitable style. Vivid, dramatic, and precise, like Zubin Mehta with his baton. Issue after issue, India Today gives you a clear insight into your key areas of interest—from politics to personalities, sports to science, environment to the economy.

With a distinctive approach, India Today looks beyond the headlines to bring you information that is balanced, analytical and detailed. It tells you what is really happening in the country and its significance.

India Today gives you more than news.
India Today gives you understanding.

INDIA
TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

THE BEST WAY TO KEEP IN TOUCH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the farce: Mrs Gandhi under arrest, squatting on a culvert late at night on Delhi's border, refusing to be taken to Surajkund because it was in Haryana, a night of drama that robbed the Shah Commission of its relevance. Think of the absurdities: Health Minister Raj Narain, lying in a state of near-complete undress getting his morning massage while a group of women tried to interest him in their voluntary health programmes. And the ignominy: Speaker K.S. Hegde rising in the Lok Sabha one March afternoon in 1979 to break the premature news of the 'death' of JP. Even the quips had become personal: "Every time the PM opens his mouth, the Janata Party loses half a million votes," said Ram Jethmalani.

Then the denouement. Charan Singh, prime minister at last—but only because Mrs Gandhi supported him—standing somewhat awkwardly with his wife, posing for pictures in one corner of his ample Tughlak Road lawn. "Chowdhury sahib, have you achieved your life's ambition," he's asked. "It wasn't my ambition," he replies coyly, recolouring in one sentence the confused and cantankerous story of the previous 30 months. With Mrs Gandhi pulling the rug from under his feet, Charan Singh becomes the shortest-lived prime minister ever. And, so, as one commentator said: "The Janata Party is dead. It was not killed, it committed suicide." When President Sanjiva Reddy dissolved the house, it wasn't just the Janata Party that died; it took the National alternative with it.

Yet the lessons weren't learnt, and in spite of the efforts of several midwives since then, the idea hasn't been reborn. The closest it came to being conceived again was at Vijayawada two years ago, but there were too many would-be fathers: 24 leaders turned up representing 14 opposition groups. The obsession with Mrs Gandhi out of power became even stronger with her in power. The intervening months are peppered with views that reflect this neurosis. Sharad Pawar: "We have realised that if we don't come together, Mrs Gandhi will continue to hit us individually." Charan Singh: "We must unite to form a common front against this lady." Chandra Shekhar: "Our object is to replace her. If I don't try to unite the Opposition, it will amount to helping Mrs Gandhi directly." There were few takers for Advani's view: "We must forge issues and programmes based on unity."

No surprise, then, that the voter should have given most of these parties the go-by and joined hands, wherever possible, with regional groupings. As Shyam Nandan Mishra once conceded: "People are looking for an alternative. If they cannot find one at the national level, they choose the regional ones."

Ten years ago, only the two Kazhagams in Tamil Nadu and the National Conference in Jammu & Kashmir—the latter by arrangement and not electoral victory to begin with—and the Akali Dal in coalition had tasted political power. Today, regional parties seem to have become a fixture, and they have more political clout than the national opposition parties combined.

RAGHAVENDRA RAO

N.T. RAMA RAO: RISE OF REGIONALISM

Indeed, in terms of state governments, the Congress(I) has become a party of the Hindi heartland. It's ill-advised jousting in J&K has given that state a truncated National Conference Government while the Akalis convincingly trounced it in Punjab three months ago. It is years away from being able to dislodge either of the two Kazhagams in Tamil Nadu from their present pre-eminence, and has to be content with hanging to the coat-tails of one or other. The Telugu Desam shows only limited signs of flagging after NTR's second lease of life in 1984. The Asom Gana Parishad may well win the coming Assam election. Kerala is ruled by a Congress(I) chief minister only because he is able to hold a coalition together, and the party has just 34 MLA's of 141 assembly seats.

Is it a coincidence that those national parties who have formed state governments now tend to behave like regional parties? Probably not. Apart from the Janata's complete lack of electoral success anywhere except in Karnataka, Hegde is widely perceived as a Karnataka leader, and his state unit doesn't pretend to have national compulsions. The CPI(M) in West Bengal and Tripura thrives on regional, not national issues, and if anything the party has been stagnant in most states except its strongholds and, oddly enough, Himachal Pra-

"People are looking for an alternative. If they cannot find one at the national level, they choose the regional ones."
SHYAM NANDAN MISHRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

desh. Elsewhere in the Hindi-speaking states, its presence is minimal, and it isn't threatening to change very swiftly either.

As Farooq Abdullah said at the time of the southern conclave: "The harsh fact is that the Centre does not appreciate or even understand the hopes and aspirations of the states. This is the basic cause of difficulties between the Centre and the states."

The most durable change is probably the one that takes place imperceptibly, and there is a long way to go. Money power, corruption, the personality cult, legislation that isn't effective, inertia and cynicism—to a greater or lesser degree they continue. Institutions remain unreformed, and if the courts are clogged up, Parliament could give a better account of itself sometimes (in one foreign affairs debate last fortnight, the minister addressed a House of 29 members).

But there's one change that now stares unblinkingly in the face: that no politician can any longer take for granted the main agent of change, the voter. All the trends of the past are far from reversed, but each passing day makes it clearer that somehow, uncannily, it is the ubiquitous voter whose silent, wordless command issued once every now and then is directing politics, making it cleaner, less acrimonious, more positive. And, ultimately, serve the interest not of the man in power but the one who put him there.

Karnataka voted the Congress(I) strongly to the Lok Sabha in December last year; in March it gave extraordinary strength to Hegde's Janata regime, and there was no way the voter would have put up with any crude attempt to dislodge the administration in between. The Punjab electorate couldn't have returned a result better suited to the interests of the state than giving the Akali Dal a solid chunk of the Assembly. It's now beginning to happen almost each time. Millions of random minds at work, somehow over the years evolving an instinctive consensus that directs them unfailingly each time to the right decision.

Why? Because each vote is a vote for change and nobody knows better than the average voter what is good for him. In 1971, Mrs Gandhi's garibi hatao caught the imagination of the voter. Offering the prospect of a new beginning, she trooped 352 members into the Lok Sabha. If the Janata's victory in 1977 was an unmistakable rejection of the Emergency, the Congress(I)'s rebirth in 1980 was an equally unmistakable thumbs down to the crude power games and sheer ineptitude of the Janata. And 1984 was no less of a vote for change, only this time ironically enough the agent for change happened to be a new face within the Congress(I).

Politicians who misread this message are destined for failure. As Mrs Gandhi did in the early 1970s, as did the Janata Party in 1979 to provide democracy and self-respect, as Mrs Gandhi did, once again, to provide a government that worked. Today's political culture is changing because it is being impelled by precisely this momentum, when the gut instincts of a leader coincide with the aspirations of the electorate that put him there. It's when the two diverge or the leader can't deliver the goods that there's trouble. Today, the Congress(I) has a solid majority in the Lok Sabha and a leader who radiates confidence. What if things change, if policies don't work well enough, if the party is pushed to the wall as it has been so often in the past? Will the new political culture remain? Or will there be unbearable pressure to once again take short cuts?

If the elected and electorate diverge again, it isn't hard to see what will happen. A toothless woman long past 50, working a field not far from Lalgunj in northern Bihar, saw it in December last year as the election campaign was heating up. Looking up from a furrow she had just ploughed, she smiled: "Yes, I know all about these badmash log who come and take our votes," she said in a loud, assertive and confident voice that caused everyone else to gather around. "Yes, I will vote for Indira's son and if he isn't good for us, we'll shoo him away like we shooed away all the others before." The others didn't just nod, they cracked up laughing. Better than anyone else, they know the score.

—SUMAN DUBEY

POLLING BOOTH: MANDATES FOR CHANGE

It is the ubiquitous voter whose silent, wordless command issued once every now and then directing politics, making it cleaner, less acrimonious, more positive.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There's no stopping us.

The best way to travel to London is with British Airways. Because we operate a total of fourteen flights a week to London, eight of these being non-stop. Which is more than any other airline.

Add to this our matchless international network from Heathrow, and our Indian stewardesses and vegetarian meals.

For our business passengers connecting from other airports, the new Transfercare meet and greet service at Bombay and Delhi, plus our Indian Visitors Service at London and you'll find an airline that's renowned for its care and professionalism worldwide. You could say that there's no stopping us.

BRITISH AIRWAYS

The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ultimately, when a system like this comes along, there's magic in the air.

And for the first time, sound seems to have a presence. Full-bodied. Compelling.

The music wells up like wine and fills your room. And before you know, it's filled your life...

So, we are not talking of ordinary sound. No.

We are talking of the AKAI BUSH Hi-Fi system. PRO-A1 to be specific. Quite simply, you've never heard anything like this before!

Designed to kill...

Hold your breath and take a look! A silent symphony in silver. A majestic column of superb components engineered around the most recent advances in audio technology. Just one glance will tell it all!

Turn it on... and face the impact! Take in the magic of a series of AKAI BUSH marvels one by one...

The Turntable. Let the heads turn...

Belt driven and exquisite, the turntable has an ultra-sensitive cartridge and an automatic tonearm return. Specific cuts can be manually selected with a cueing lever.

The Graphic Equalizer. Make your own music...

Since your room has its own specific acoustics, the graphic equalizer lets you achieve music response that sounds best to you! Nine slider switches play with each channel at the command of your fingertips!

Raise a voice... or mute a beat... you almost have a music conductor's control over output!

Sheer sound. It could sweep you off your feet!

PRC. Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Amplifier.
Get into big time sound...

224 Watts of crystal clear peak music power! Yours to tame it all with easy controls and meters.

The brightly lit LED function indicators display the existing mode of operation. Even a whisper holds you spell-bound!

The Cassette Deck.
All music, no noise...

Good-bye tape hiss! The Dolby B Noise Reduction makes sure there's no more interference with your listening pleasure!

While the High Density Head provides greater saturation and ensures perfect metal tape compatibility. The latest in the world.

The Speakers.
Speaks volumes on quality sound...

A three-way bass-reflex design for rich, full bass and thrilling highs.

The final window to great sound output!

So that's the AKAI BUSH Hi-Fi Audio Equipment. If you already know music like music, you owe it to yourself to visit the nearest BUSH dealer for a glimpse of the real thing!

After all, will you go through life without experiencing the ultimate in sound?

AKAI BUSH

Hi-Fi Systems

Sound from another world.

Price Rs. 11,400/-
(including excise duty, sales tax and local taxes extra)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And in case
you don't have the space
but still want
the power:

AKAI BUSH

System M 10

* Price Rs. 8,625/-
Optional equalizer Rs. 1,925/- extra
* (including excise duty, sales tax and local taxes extra)

Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

In the Indian context, ten years is but the blink of an eyelid, so slow has been the pace—and faces—of change. But the decade still had its fair share of yesterday's people, men and women who dominated centre-stage at some point or the other in their respective fields before fading out. India Today tracked down some of the most prominent to discover where they are now.

R.K. DHAWAN

◆ No one brings R.K. Dhawan Dunhill cigarettes anymore. December 31,1984, Rajender Kumar Dhawan, 47, stood by the new prime minister for the announcement of his secretariat. Dhawan's name did not appear. For the last time that evening he drove back with Rajiv Gandhi and then left 1, Safdarjang Road forever.

It has not been a happy new year for R.K. Dhawan, Mrs Gandhi's special assistant who trailed her like a shadow—from 7 a.m. till midnight—for 22 long years. Picked up as a stenographer when he was only 25 years old, Dhawan was trusted with the late prime minister's deepest confidences and he in turn fiercely guarded access to her, becoming in the process one of the most powerful men in the country. No rise could have been as spectacular, no fall as dramatic. With madam gone, the shadow leads an especially empty life. "I believe in God, not human beings. What has to happen will happen, why worry?"

And there are no worry lines on the face that had become almost as familiar as the famous employer's. As he sits in his neat little Golf Links house in New Delhi, Dhawan confesses that for the first time he has time—to devote to his pooja, to read the biographies that he is so fond of and to meet his five sisters and two brothers. "And I'm also pasting my old photos into an album," he says showing memories of his 22 years with Mrs Gandhi. Beneath the last picture of her dead body, he has written, in an uneven hand: "The saddest day of my life."

"I believe in God, not human beings. What has to happen will happen, why worry?"
R.K. DHAWAN

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

DHAWAN WITH MRS GANDHI: IN THE SHADOWS

A.R. ANTULAY

◆ The only ones who bother about him anymore are the stewardesses aboard the Bombay-Delhi airbus as Abdul Rehman Antulay, 57, shuttles between the two cities trying to get his notorious cases settled for once and for all. Interest in the mega-scandal of the '80s—that had kept the one-time Sultan of Bombay and his dubious Indira Gandhi Pratibha Pratisthan pasted firmly on the front page of national dailies—has dwindled to mere academic curiosity. "By God's grace I shall

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Antulay—who could conjure money at the wave of his hand—has been let halfway off the hook, he is happy, relaxed and all but forgotten.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

ANTULAY: CONTENTED ANONYMITY

win the case and prove that I am the cleanest politician to take on Mr Clean," the former chief minister of Maharashtra had blustered last year even as he lay propped up against hospital pillows recovering from a cardiac arrest, a lonely political outcast with the country's ace criminal lawyer Ram Jethmalani hot on his heels.

Now as the case has moved into the Supreme Court and Antulay pasha—who could conjure money at the wave of his hand—has been let halfway off the hook, he is happy, relaxed—and all but forgotten. "I scrupulously avoid meeting people, I'm kept busy making notes about the case," he admits flashing that old toothy grin after a three-and-a-half year period that had almost short-circuited his electric personality. "My mind and heart are trained to be neither happy nor unhappy but to do one's duty and leave the results to God." It was the scandal of the century and it may be the anticlimax of the century as well.

HAJI MASTAN

◆ If the mighty have fallen, the fallen have become mighty as well: Haji Mastan, the country's best-known ex-smuggler spends Sunday mornings in his Peddar Road bungalow in Bombay reclining on a four-poster with silver legs. Outside is a queue of people waiting to meet their demi-God. "They come everyday to seek advice," says Mastanbhai, 64, smiling beatifically. "They want to know how they can settle their rents, their land disputes. I am here to listen to them."

But every day is not a Sunday. Monday mornings Haji Mastan is back on the track, doing good deeds for the world through his political party, the Dalit Muslim Suraksha Sangh (DMSS) set up last year. "But that the press prefers to ignore," he snaps good-naturedly. Currently the DMSS is carrying out a vast anti-drug campaign with over 500 people visiting its de-addiction cell at J.J. Hospital every Monday. That apart Mastan, plans to do something even more constructive, in fact get into the construction business itself and hopefully stop the demolitions proposed by the Bombay Municipal Corporation. "The Government must first give alternative accommodation to these people," says their messiah. "Let them give me the money. Mastan Construction is prepared to do it without any profit."

Ever since Haji Mastan publicly renounced smuggling before Jayaprakash Narayan, he has made it a point to stubbornly remain in the limelight even though he does get a little sentimental when he talks about the future. "How much of the future is there?" he says wistfully, "Life is a matter of two breaths and most of it is over." Till then, however, he can always lie back in his easy chair, click on the imported VCR in his room and watch the string of superhit Hindi films based on his life—and savour the sweet flavour of immortality.

S. AURANGABADKAR

MASTAN: RELAXED REFORMATION

The fairy tale of Rukhsana Sultana, the femme fatale of the Emergency, has come to an end and she has now moved into the wings to watch the fairy-tale of her daughter begin.

RUKHSANA: MOTHER IN WAITING

RUKHSANA SULTANA

◆ Those outsize dark glasses are still perched upon the aquiline nose but the small lines have begun to creep on to the glamorous face that terrorised the inhabitants of Turkman Gate a certain summer many years ago. Rukhsana Sultana, the femme fatale of the Emergency doused herself in perfume, nimbly raised her French chiffon sari and trudged her way through the mire of Jama Masjid—old Delhi's Muslim quarter—

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAKE COUNT

Consider the many features of the value-packed Ind-Suzuki AX-100

It's got everything you want.

A throbbing 8.25 bhp engine. An electrifying pick-up that puts you ahead and keeps you ahead. Combined with excellent fuel economy. And looks that are excitingly different.

To top it all, it's got comfort. It's light and easy to handle. And needs very little looking after.

Thousands of proud owners all over India say there's nothing better.

Ind-Suzuki AX-100. Light but tough. Powerful yet sleek. Every way you look at it - a sensation. Experience it!

The Ind-Suzuki advantage

- Power-packed 8.25 bhp engine
- Sleek and lightweight 88 kilos
- Smooth 4-speed gears
- Independent lubrication system

IND-SUZUKI AX 100

The sure winner

IND-SUZUKI

IND-SUZUKI MOTORCYCLES LIMITED
22/1 M G Road
Bangalore 560 001

ISML/1710

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED INDIA IN

One thousand metres below the ocean, one man blazes new trails in the water.

Combing the bottomless depths for the fabulous treasures it holds. For oil. For minerals. For food. For new sources of energy.

In a deep-sea vehicle fitted with sensing gear. A battery of cameras. Four-foot long robot arms and giant hands that can actually feel. . .

One thousand metres below the sea, a high-tech bubble called Deep Rover prises open the secrets of the ocean. . .

The hunt is on.

As deep-sea technology races ahead, United India keeps pace.

With trail-blazing policies like our cover for ONGC's high-risk, high-gain venture at Bombay High.

For India's exciting Antarctic adventure.

For the mammoth fleet run by the Shipping Corporation of India.

And for solitary fishermen in their battle for survival.

Adapting to needs as they evolve. Stepping out beyond the beaten track with the assurance of security. Fostering the spirit of adventure.

So that you can dream of conquering new worlds. Of pushing back frontiers further and further.

So that you can work on making your dreams come alive. Keeping your feet on the ground while you reach for the stars. . .

United India will be there tomorrow.

Watching, guarding, anticipating.

Whatever. Wherever.

UNITED INDIA INSURANCE CO. LTD.

We'll be there.

CC-0. In

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Foundation, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

ow who'd want to hurl a stone at ch a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, any might.

me of your neighbours for instance. ho may have seen your new ONIDA. d envied its classy, futuristic looks, the ost astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote.

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I am hardly flooded with movie offers, far from it."
HEMA MALINI

The past lingers in Gayatri Devi's home—all reminiscent of a time when maharajas had not dwindled into ordinary citizens. Obviously the princess still remembers.

teaching the illiterate that too many children were the curse of God, a woman who in less than a year drove 13,000 men to sterility.

Then the Janata struck back and Rukhsana faded away with a wave of her jewelled hand and a "sweetie, I have no life-style left" to reappear some two years ago as Amrita Singh's mother, beloved Dingababa, around whom she has woven all her dreams. All along, the press has not been too kind to Rukhsana, the glamorous 39-year-old divorcee who emerged from air-conditioned comfort and quickly moved into Sanjay Gandhi's charmed circle. Her looks sealed her fate and understandably she recoils from the media even today. "What is there to talk about? I am doing nothing grand, nothing great," she said when cornered at the premiere of Mard, Amrita's latest film.

Wrong. Rukhsana has still not returned to her air-conditioned, carpeted splendour. She spends most of her time in Delhi working with the healthy children of lepers. "You never cease to be a somebody as long as you have a concern for people," she said quietly. Nevertheless the fairy-tale—and horror story—of Rukhsana Sultana has come to an end and gracefully she has moved into the wings to watch the fairy-tale of her daughter begin.

GAYATRI DEVI

◆ Summer of '85: the champagne flowed, the chandeliers sparkled and some of America's best-known couples waltzed past Jaipur's Hawa Mahal, a backdrop specially created in New Orleans as part of the Festival of India celebrations in the US. But the one person not drunk with happiness that day was Maharani Gayatri Devi of Jaipur herself. If there's anything the former MP feels most keenly, it is the urban decay of her beloved city. "I used to tie a patti around my eyes so that I couldn't see what was happening," the maharani once said and it is on the subject of her city that she gets really excited and her voice rises: "It is disgusting. The growth is totally haphazard and there are encroachments everywhere. I hate what they've done to Jaipur."

Gayatri Devi, carelessly beautiful still, has quit politics—where she had fixed herself firmly for 17 years—for good and she has no regrets that the Janata Party did not offer her a ticket. "Who would I have looked up to in that party?" she says disparagingly. "There has been only one statesman in India since Independence: Rajaji."

But ex-politician though she maybe, she has still to call it a day. When she is not summering abroad, Gayatri Devi is the active chairwoman of two schools, heads the board of trustees of Jaipur's City Palace Museum and runs a stud farm. Last year she started a 20th century gurukul where children are taught ancient Indian culture sitting under trees. The past lingers in her modest—by royalty standards—home as well. The drawing-room is dotted with carefully preserved old photographs, tiger skins from the royal hunt and outside her window peacocks strut in the lush gardens—all reminiscent of a time when maharajas had not dwindled into ordinary citizens. Obviously the princess still remembers.

MANDIRA PURIE

GAYATRI DEVI AT HOME: A PRINCESS REMEMBERS

HEMA MALINI

◆ Motherhood sits well on Hema Malini, even if it does sit around her middle. Ever since she delivered her second daughter in July this year, Hema Malini, 37, has moved out of the gossip columns and into her home wearing a 'Do not Disturb' sign on her face. Inside she is busy playing the greatest role of her life—mother to her's and Dharmendra's two daughters Esha and Ahana. "I had become public property, I wanted to slow down," said the actress who has had the longest run at the top, the dream girl who never vanished with the morning.

HEMA, DHARMENDRA WITH OFFSPRING

For the first time now producers are not knocking relentlessly at her door as they have been doing for the last 18 years offering films, fortune and fame. "I am hardly flooded with movie offers, far from it," Hema Malini confessed in an interview recently. Not that it bothers her. She is acting in two unusual films—Zaamin and Ek Chader Maili Si, an entry into the art world that critics feel will peak at a second career high. And there's her challenging TV serial 13 Panne where she will metamorphose into thirteen fascinating women from history. "But really dance is my first love," she said recently after a Bharatnatyam performance in Bombay after nearly a year's

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"One thing nobody can ever take away from me is the title of ex-chief minister."
GUNDU RAO

maternity leave from the stage. "I am planning to dances of India." Meanwhile she has already gained an immortality of sorts. They still call her Basanti—the rumbustious, fun-loving tangewali from Sholay—in the villages.

RAJ NARAIN

◆ Name: Raj Narain
Age: Refuses to disclose.
Occupation: Party-hopping, now with the Socialist Party of India
Dress: Topless, usually. Headgear varies with the fashion, presently red bandana in vogue.
Born and brought up in: Benaras wrestling pits.
Greatest achievement in life: Toppling Mrs Gandhi much to his own wide-mouthed amazement.
Strongest belief: "I am a freedom fighter."
Family life: Married, had four children and renounced marital relations in 1958.
Rises: Before dawn, prays for an hour and rushes under cover again.
Lives: In a flat in Laxmibai Nagar, Delhi, surrounded by pictures of gods and goddesses.
Preserving deity: Hanuman.
Routine: Gives audience to party members, leaning on gao-takiya like Cleopatra while masseurs grapple with his pounds of flesh.
Special qualifications: Professional agitator. Jailed over a 100 times.
Special service to nation: Providing comic relief.
Present status: Out of sight, out of mind.

S. PREMI

RAJ NARAIN: WAY OF THE FLESH

"I am a freedom fighter."
RAJ NARAIN

GUNDU RAO

◆ Ramarao Gundu Rao, 48, is still the most talked about politician in Karnataka—even if it's not always in the politest of tones. Ever since the humble bank manager from hilly Kodagu made good in politics, Gundu Rao has steadfastly refused to shift his 98 kg out of the limelight. So the former chief minister of Karnataka moans and groans in print about the low prices that he gets for the tomatoes that he grows on his 20-acre farm near Bangalore, announces a fast to protest against the state Government's decision to hike bus fares and keeps on about how the Congress(I) has fallen in the state and how he is the only leader of any stature in the party. As he says: "One thing nobody can ever take away from me is the title of ex-chief minister."

RAJ CHENGAPPA

GUNDU: ON THE TROT

Like an upward shooting star, Gundu Rao rose—like no other politician in the state before or after him. He remembers his days as a young man when his only ambition was to "get a job, any job". A decade-and-a-half later he got a job he liked: as chief minister. His three years there kept the state rocking with controversies. MLA's were treated like dirt, several ministers found themselves embroiled in scandals. And when rudely bumped out in 1983, Rao blamed everyone but himself. "It is destiny that brought me the chair in 1980," he says philosophically, "and it is destiny that took it away. Destiny may bring it back again."

While he waits for destiny to oblige, Gundu Rao keeps himself busy—with early morning jogs to get those 98 kg bouncing with health, by looking after his tomatoes and onions and by holding durbar for a never-ending stream of visitors. He has lost none of his arrogance as he says: "It's the chief minister or nothing for me." Right now it is nothing.

ARUN SHOURIE

◆ As the sun dips in the evening and the birds chirp their way back to their nests, Arun Shourie gets up from his desk at home. He has been bent over his papers since 9 a.m. and to look at, nothing has changed for the ex-executive editor of the Indian Express, who in two short years managed one journalistic coup after another to become the country's most famous newspaperman—a racehorse, who Indian Express baron R.N. Goenka feared "would wreck my tonga someday".

But since he came home to stay, things have changed for Shourie. No newsmagazines or popular journals litter his house. "I am staying away from current affairs," he says, looking like the kid who's given away his most precious toy. Instead he sits alone in his study that is lined with heavy books relieved only by his son Aditya's photographs. He is working on two books that he hopes to publish early next year—"I want my work to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DUNLOP INTRODUCES THE NEW PROFESSIONAL

Tough. Uncompromising. On the fast track. A new breed that's going places. A new generation with professional drive.

For this new professional, Dunlop has a new car tyre. The Dunlop Olympus Nylon.

It's got resilience. A strong nylon casing to take the roughest going.

It's got staying power. With a premium depth tread that goes a long way.

It's got style. A tread pattern designed for better grip.

Olympus. It's the new professional. Made by Dunlop for people with standards like yours.

New

DUNLOP

OLYMPUS

Nylon Car Tyre

Because professional standards demand the best

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. Prof. Satya Vrat Shastri Collection, Noida.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bullet.
Tough. Rugged. Uncompromising.
Like you.
The bike you could depend on
if your life depended on it.
The bike that's used
over the roughest country.
On the toughest assignments.
Sure, it costs more than ordinary bikes.
But then, you certainly aren't the kind of man who'll settle for something just because it came cheap!

Bullet.
From Enfield.

Sista's-EIL-520/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

E·L·E·G·A·N·C·E

HERE & NOW

CASUAL & RITUAL SAREES.
INFORMAL & FORMAL SUIT LENGHTS, DRESSES, SHIRTINGS & DRESS MATERIALS, HOME FURNISHINGS FROM PALE TO DEEP COLOURS, GIFTABLES & TRAVEL GOODS.
ALL HERE & NOW AT OUR STORE.

handloom® emporium

handloom® emporium
South Extension
New Delhi

G 12 SOUTH EXTENSION PART 1
NEW DELHI 110 049
PHONE 623208 624848 617050

you'll be proud of our label!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Syd Graphics / Vishakha

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"You know what I miss, I miss the teleprinter network, that's what I miss most."
ARUN SHOURIE

HARI OM GULATI

SHOURIE: BETWEEN THE LINES

have long-term value and be as relevant 10 years later"—as well as the pieces he writes for the Illustrated Weekly. "I am extremely fortunate that I have at least one editor who will publish me," says Shourie, the same man who in his peak crusading days had inspired opposition MP Piloo Mody to comment: "Imagine the improved state of the nation if we had 10 Arun Shouries working instead of one."

The racehorse might have dropped out of the sound and fury of politics but he still gallops extensively over the country, as general secretary of the People's Union for Civil Liberties and as a human rights activist. But his eyes sparkle as he remembers his days at the Express and suddenly he smiles boyishly. "You know what I miss, I miss the teleprinter network," he says, "that's what I miss most."

PROTIMA BEDI

◆ Protima Bedi started doing her thing under the Marine Drive flyover in Bombay way back in 1967. That is where she set up Hide-Out, India's first discotheque. What she did between then and now would probably make a book that the censors would never allow to get to the newsstands. So, recently when she appeared wearing a sari with a coy smile, it had to mean something special. It did. Protima Bedi, mistress of the unpredictable, who streaked her way to semi-stardom, the woman who has given scandal sheets much of their fodder, is married again—to a Swiss gentleman, but she is going to keep him firmly under the eiderdown. "I am not going to say a word about him," she says firmly. "He is not meant for general consumption, he is mine, only mine."

But herself she will talk about. She returned last month from an Odissi performance for the UN in Norway. "Protima and the UN, could you ever imagine that the two would have something to do with each other?" she asks. She spends six months in a year training European students to swing eastern style. "It's almost like combat training," she says now preparing to carry on similar battles with Indian students at a school for Odissi that she is setting up in Bangalore. But it's going to be no ordinary school, this one. "At about Rs 2,000 a month, this is not going to be a place for those who want to lose weight," smirks the unorthodox classical dancer.

While she wants to make money, she wants to have fun too. Protima claims she was mobbed for autographs in remote Assam after her bit role in Khandaan, and she loved it. Now she wants more of a good thing—a role in B.R. Chopra's under-production TV serial on the Mahabharata, no less. "I feel acutely what India is today," says Protima, "it has a soul that is 5,000 years old and a head that is in the 20th century. I am the same." Then she goes overboard. "I tell all my friends that India may live up in the trees but we have Otis elevators to carry us there." Well, there always were two big things about Protima Bedi: her bindi and her mouth.

PROTIMA BEDI: COMBAT TRAINING

NAMAS BHOJANI

"I feel acutely what India is today. It has a soul that is 5,000 years old and a head that is in the 20th century. I am the same."
PROTIMA BEDI

KISHORE KUMAR

◆ "Enter at your own risk," warns the board outside Gaurikunj, Kishore Kumar's residence in Bombay. Inside, another board in the drawing room says flatly: "I want money." Soon, however, those boards, the broken-down old jalopy from Chalti Ka Naam Gaadi, the horrendous skull in the bedroom will all be taken down and packed off to Khandwa, Kishore Kumar's ancestral home that has been beckoning him back with overpowering nostalgia and where he wants to return to "spend all afternoon just swinging in a hammock under a mango tree".

Filmdom is going to miss its most outrageous inhabitant. Since he announced his decision—typically out of the blue—to quit films, Kishore has been singing his last few dozen swan songs, completing only old contracts and signing no new ones. The decision is hardly out of character. He wandered into Bombay 37 years ago, a starry-eyed lad wanting to meet his idol K.L. Saigal and stayed on to hate films and "this stupid friendless

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

10 DECISIVE YEARS
Dec. 1975—Dec. 1985

Ahead

For a decade now, India Today has kept ahead of major developments taking place in the country. Emerging trends, likely consequences. Like its extensive coverage of the Asian Games, from India's medal hopes to the extent of the infrastructure and the pictorial panorama that brought the event to life. Issue after issue, India Today gives you a clear insight into your key areas of interest—from politics to personalities, sports to science, environment to the economy.

With a distinctive approach, India Today looks beyond the headlines to bring you information that is balanced, analytical and detailed. It tells you what is really happening in the country and its significance.

India Today gives you more than news.
India Today gives you understanding.

INDIA
TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

THE BEST WAY TO KEEP IN TOUCH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Now I want to rest in my ancestral home. I want peace of mind."
KISHORE KUMAR

BHAWAN SINGH

KISHORE AS FAMILY MAN: ONE TOO MANY

city." His closest friends now are Frankenstein, Dracula, E.T. For a good time he'd rather go to Motel Hell than hop across to a neighbour's. A recluse, he has withdrawn more and more into his video parlour, where he sits in the dark surrounded by some 6,000 horror tapes and his beloved spooks.

At 56, he has behind him two heart attacks and four stormy marriages with stunningly beautiful women—though not at the same time, although with Kishore even that would have been possible. "Now I want to rest in my ancestral home," says the unfriendly neighbourhood singer, "I want peace of mind." One day he will probably disappear, just like that, in typical Kishore Kumar fashion.

MENAKA GANDHI

◆ Ever since she first hit the public eye draped in a DCM towel till the time she left Amethi with tear stains on her face, the unflinching—often unsympathetic—public gaze has never lifted from Menaka Gandhi's freckled face. All through the decade, she has provided the drama people thirsted for, pitted as she was against the most powerful woman in the country, Mrs Gandhi. Now that the curtain seems to have come down on her personal political saga, Menaka, 29, has been left with precious few lines to deliver.

For the country's most famous daughter-in-law, it's back to work—in a ramshackle little office in Connaught Place from where she runs a trucking business. From there she zips, with an armload of wounded, squealing animals to her pet hospital—the largest of its kind in the country—which she has started in the name of her late husband. "It had always been a pet project and now I have the time to do it," she says. More interesting though, is that Menaka has picked up her pen again, not to shoot off the poisonous barbs that she triggered from her editor's desk at Surya but to write, surprise—a book on nature for children called Legends on the Flora of India. Co-author is her five-year-old son Varun Pheroze Gandhi. "If the book is for children why not get the children to contribute?" she asks.

She travels every now and then for the Rashtriya Sanjay Manch which she insists "is doing quite well in some of the states" and to Amethi where she says "my contact is a different sort of contact now". The rest of the time Menaka is at home in her red brick house in New Delhi—just plain old mama, growing flowers, singing to the birds and playing snakes and ladders with her little son rather than with her former political opponents.

MANEKA WITH SON VARUN: DOMESTICITY

HARI OM GULATI

Menaka has picked her pen again, not to shoot off the poisonous barbs that she triggered from her editor's desk at Surya but to write, surprise-a book for children.

DHIRENDRA WITH MRS GANDHI: NO MORE MAGIC

DHIRENDRA BRAHMCHARI

◆ He came to Mrs Gandhi on a pony in Pahalgam. He left her house in Delhi, some 30 years later, in a spanking white Mercedes. With Swami Dhirendra Brahmchari, alas, much of the magic has also gone out of contemporary political life.

No longer is the country hypnotised by the tall, lean, hypnotic sadhu striding easily up the pathways of the prime minister's house swinging a white ladies' handbag. No cabinet ministers linger around his Vishwayatan Yoga Ashram. Nor does

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"In politics one has to learn to be patient and I ought to win by all accounts."
D.K. BAROOAH

he appear on television wearing power like a perfume and dispatching yoga students into nirvana. The country's prime-time swami who remote-controlled much political activity during Mrs Gandhi's time, is now simply a yoga master, left with nothing but his three airplanes, two private airstrips, three air-conditioned yoga ashrams, two bungalows, one Mercedes...

Brahmachari says he is fed up with all his wealth. He has resigned from the board of trustees of the posh Aparna Studios in Gurgaon which let Hum Log have it for Rs 20,000 a day. He also faces a criminal case for alleged illegal activity in his Shiva Gun Factory in Jammu which he now admits, "was a mistake. I want to close it down". Out of grace he maybe, but Brahmachari has no intentions of joining politics—"that will be the worst day of my life," he once said—nor probably is there any place for his mumbo-jumbo among Rajiv's computer men. He will however continue with his yoga, both teaching it in his posh ashrams as well as making films on the science of yoga starring, naturally, himself. As he said sadly: "Whatever I am doing, it is for the country. I have no personal interest. People will realise the importance of my work and contribution after my death." His main aim in life, always, has been to be loyal to the Gandhis. "How I love that family," he said.

R.B. BEDI

AMBIKA WITH SANJAY: HOOKED ON POLITICS

AMBIKA SONI

◆ November 14, 1975, and Ambika Soni glides on to the dais as the first woman president of the Youth Congress. It was the year that youth came of age. Now age has caught up with youth and exactly ten years later, Ambika Soni, a wiser 43, has come a long way—to a little MP's guest accommodation in Delhi. Why then does she stay on as general secretary of the Congress (S) and not simply fly off to Prague where she could play glamorous wife to her ambassador-husband? "Because," she says simply, "I can't give up politics while I'm at the zero-end of the yardstick."

So she will continue to fight in her own way through dharnas, satyagrahas—"And jail," she laughs, "I make it every other month." Defeat doesn't bother her at all. "If it did I wouldn't be in politics." Defeat has certainly given her time though—to spend with her 17-year-old son, to listen to the classical music she loves and to read, "oh, the few thousand books I have lying around". But as she leans back in her chair, the resilient Ambika Soni also knows that free time is not what she really wants. "When I think back to the life I used to lead," she says nostalgically, recalling her action-packed days with Sanjay Gandhi, "I seem idle now. I used to speak to thousands then, now I address 50-odd people." And what about the new youthful thrust in the old Congress (I)? "Rajiv," she says suddenly dropping her opposition defences, "I would certainly give him a chance. He is like a whiff of fresh air."

"When I think back to the life I used to lead, I seem idle now. I used to speak to thousands then, now I address 50-odd people."
AMBIKA SONI

D.K. BAROOAH: LESSONS OF HISTORY

DEV KANT BAROOAH

◆ The bald pate and pipe revive memories of a bygone era. Dev Kant Barooah, 72, former Congress Party president during the Emergency and coiner of the famous slogan "Indira is India and India is Indira" may be out of the public eye but is certainly not down and out of politics as far as he is concerned. As he put it: "At my age I don't think I want to do anything new" and the septuagenarian Assamese politician is going to do exactly what he feels he is good at—politics. Just back from an extensive tour of Assam ("the Congress Government stinks of corruption") and his constituency of Nowgong ("everybody there knows me"), Barooah shows all the signs of making a political comeback. "In politics one has to learn to be patient and I ought to win by all accounts," he says confidently.

"If elected I will try and bring out the dichotomy between the 'expensive' orientation of our economy and the extreme poverty that characterises our people," he intoned and in the same breath blandly praised Rajiv Gandhi's Government: "Modern government has to be run on modern lines." The apparent contradiction didn't faze him in the least.

The writer in the scholar impelled him to start working on a history of India—through his eyes—but later stopped. And why? "Because I realised that writing about history in this sudden manner is not scientific but journalistic."

—SIMRAN BHARGAVA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Presenting
THE FLORINO COLLECTION
A touch of Italian romance in your bathroom
HINDUSTAN SANITARYWARE
The name that adorns the country's finest bathrooms
VITREOUS HINDUSTAN SANITARYWARE
2 Red Cross Place, Calcutta 700 001 India

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Grace... Pace... Space"
The famous slogan that summed up the qualities that made the Jaguar marque a legend.

Great Classics of Motoring presented by Engine Valves Ltd.

The Jaguar XK 120. When unveiled in 1948, it was the fastest series production car in the world. The numbers '120' indicated its top speed of 120 mph. The car was powered by a 3.4 litre, twin overhead camshaft, 6 cylinder engine that developed a massive 160 horsepower.

Ian Appleyard stormed to four gruelling Alpine Rally wins in his XK 120. Stirling Moss and 3 others drove the car at an average of 100 mph for a week! They covered 16851 miles in 168 hours. Four world records were shattered. The age of the Jaguar had begun.

OBM 9350

CC-0: In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Le Mans 1951. The 24 hour Grand Prix d' Endurance is nearing its climax. The tense crowd waits in hushed anticipation... and a tumultuous roar goes up as a Jaguar vrooms into sight and flashes to victory. Jaguar repeated this feat at Le Mans in 1953, '55, '56 and '57. In the race of '57, all 5 Jaguar entries finished, ranking 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 6th!

The Jaguar MK II Unbeatable in saloon car racing, it even put sports cars to shame.

Now, would you believe that these full-blooded racing machines had a motorcycle sidecar for an ancestor? !

Jaguar cars grew from a vigorous and often stormy relationship between two men : William Walmsley and William Lyons. They started the Swallow Sidecar Company in 1921, making wood and aluminium sidecars for motorcycles. Five years later the Company also moved into the 4 wheeler business by making attractive bodies for cars like Austin 7. The Williams parted company in 1934 and William Lyons registered SS Cars Ltd. The 3½ litre SS Jaguar 100 became the Company's first 100 mph car.

In 1945, the Company's name was changed to Jaguar Cars Ltd. And then came that famed twin OHC 6-cylinder XK engine that ushered in a new breed of car. This powerhouse was enveloped in a streamlined body and named the XK 120. The car's sensational debut founded the Jaguar charisma.

Stirling Moss with the epoch-making 'D' type Jaguar. The redoubtable Moss drove many a Jaguar to victory.

The fearsome leaping Jaguar mascot as on earlier cars. Current models feature the Jaguar head in a medallion.

Jaguar jottings

- Earlier Jaguars were known as 'Jaguar-SS'. But when 'SS' began to be identified with the Nazi 'Schutz Staffel', the initials were dropped.

The sensational 'E'-type descended from the Le Mans winning 'D' type Jaguar. Intended to be a road car and not a racing car. 150 mph and 0-60 in 6.8 secs.

- The origins of the 'SS' initials were something of a mystery. Official translation was left to the individual and suggestions like "Standard Swallow", "Swallow Special", "Swallow Standard" and many more might apply equally.
- For all its legendary reputation, Jaguars have always been value-for-money cars. In 1931, when the imposing new SS Jaguar Saloon was first displayed, guests were invited to guess its price. The concensus was around £ 600. The car was in fact priced at £ 385!
- Chief Engineer William Heynes and his men planned many a Jaguar advancement sitting on the factory roof at night – keeping a lookout for Luftwaffe bombers.
- At the Le Mans race of 1963, an E-type Jaguar involved in an accident gallantly reached the finish – after its battered radiator was filled with raw eggs and sealer!

The XJ-12 Arguably quieter than even a Rolls-Royce! Its 12 cylinder engine is so powerful and flexible that you could accelerate the car from zero in top gear!

- The XK 120's speedometer didn't face the driver... instead, it faced the passenger!

Lyons' philosophy lives on

From the XK 120 to the new XJ series, Jaguars have competed in looks with the most elegant; in speed with the fastest; and in comfort with the most luxurious And yet, unlike other super cars, these big cats remain a realistic ambition for many. William Lyons could have wished for nothing more.

The XJS. This devastating performer can only be compared with cars costing £ 20,000 more!

World-famous cars use EVL valves

Did you know that EVL valves are used on cars like BMW, Jaguar, Mercedes-Benz, Peugeot and Volvo? EVL, a member of the Rane Group, began operations in 1959, collaborating with Farnborough Engg of UK, makers of the famous Tranco valves. EVL exports mainly to UK, USA, Australia, Singapore, Malaysia. In India, EVL products are OE on every vehicle ... more recently on the Maruti-Suzuki.

Engine Valves Limited
32, Cathedral Road, Madras 600 086

EVL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why does DLF so much more sense to so

To many, a proven track record is decisively important.

Most property-buyers put their entire life – savings into property investment. So, they'd rather put their money on DLF. Because DLF is the only property developer with a proven track record of integrated colony planning. As many as 21 colonies in Delhi are standing testimony to DLF's expertise in the field. Colonies like Greater Kailash, South Extension, Hauz Khas, Model Town & Rajouri Garden. Colonies that DLF developed and sold at prices less than Rs. 30/– per sq.yd. and are today prime properties where land prices are over Rs. 3000/– per sq.yd.

To some, the quality of life that they'd always yearned for suddenly seems attainable.

Club membership is out of reach of almost everybody today. School admissions have become more difficult than getting jobs. And so when people see the plans for the DLF Gymkhana Club in DLF Qutab Enclave actually taking concrete shape on a 5 acre plot and the first school already under construction, they realise that DLF means business when they say there'll be no place quite like DLF Qutab Enclave in the years to come. Which is evident in a host of other ways too – like the provision for large green belts, landscaped parks and playgrounds, sites for shopping centres, hospitals, and public services like police stations, fire stations and post offices. And so much more. All pointing to a quality of life that people in Delhi have yearned for but have had to forgo and forget. And suddenly they all find it in DLF Qutab Enclave.

Registration for plots is open again

DLF UNIVERSAL LIMITED

21-22, Narindra Place, Parliament Street,
New Delhi – 110001. Phone-322583.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Qutab Enclave make many more people every day?

To others, the pace of development of the Complex and the fact that DLF is sticking to its promises, helps them make up their minds.

Over 90% of Phase I & II of the Complex has been completely developed. In fact, DLF Qutab Enclave is the only property where development is visible in so many forms – over a thousand houses nearing completion, 100 kms of connecting roads already laid, 60 kms of sewerage systems and pipelines completed, over 25,000 trees already planted, construction of the first club and shopping-cum-commercial complex well under way. Yes, people realise that it's better to invest & secure themselves with property in a Complex that is taking shape in front of their own eyes, rather than just live on promises that could remain promises. DLF Qutab Enclave would probably be the only township in the country where the infrastructure of facilities would be ready before even the first residents move in.

And to all without exception, it brings clean, open, independent living within reach again.

What clinches the issue when it comes to DLF Qutab Enclave are the prices and the easy payment plans. While prices may appear higher than other options around, people soon realise that it's worth paying every paisa extra for a township that's going to be exclusive. And with payment plans spread over 4 years for plots & 7 years for houses, the instalments are easy on the pocket. With financial assistance available from premier institutions like HDFC. Yes, at DLF Qutab Enclave, everything seems to come together. Perfectly. Conveniently. Economically. No wonder the response exceeds expectations. Every day.

DLF Qutab Enclave

There will be no place quite like it

maadhyam

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You've never seen tiles like these before.

They'll make the bathroom your favourite room in the home.

And they'll certainly make it a lot different from the hundreds of bathrooms in your neighbourhood.

Textured tiles instead of smooth. Matt-finish instead of glossy.

A range of screen-printed patterns and designs.

Horizontal tiles instead of traditional square ones; you can now create attractive, original patterns even with simple self-colours.

And the best part is, these special tiles won't make a hole in your pocket. In fact, they cost hardly anything more than regular tiles.

Johnson's designer tiles. Another first from the leaders in bathroom decor.

For further information write to:
H & R Johnson (India) Ltd.
Kakad Chambers, Dr. Annie Besant Road,
Worli, Bombay-400 018.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Ever since the new designer tiles came in, Mrs. Rao's been wondering where on earth Mr. Rao keeps disappearing.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JOHNSON DESIGNER TILES

What the well-dressed bathroom is wearing.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tata Bearings... built to take the load—and the lead. With fourth generation crowning for increased load carrying capacity.

Tata Bearings... built tough, by marquenching in a salt bath.

Tata Bearings... built to last, with the latest international technology, adapted to Indian conditions.

Tata Bearings... born with the strength of Tata Steel, the name that's known for its spirit of innovation—the driving force behind many a success story.

TOMORROW'S LEADER. BORN TO WEAR A FOURTH G

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And, now,
Tata Steel takes another step forward—from rings to precision bearings—surely, the beginning of a new movement that will go on...and on...

Tata Bearings... born to set the pace.

TATA
BEARINGS
Born of steel... born to lead.

R.
URTH GENERATION CROWN.

A Division of
TATA STEEL

0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

New Liril
It's a fresh new feeling!

Liril goes new!
Now with an exciting
new fragrance... in a smart new pack!

NEW Liril
THE FRESHNESS SOAP

It makes a fresh new woman of you.

A quality product by Hindustan Lever.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How to go to Switzerland by train.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Imagine fir-trimmed mountains capped with snow. Imagine a lake with miles of clear water. Imagine yourself racing down the Alps on skis. Imagine Switzerland and you have Kashmir.

Srinagar could well be the Venice of the east. But what you can see in Srinagar, you can't in Venice. For a few short weeks, just before the sun burns them up, every roof-top is covered with flowers. Because the roofs of most Kashmiri houses are made of earth. The bazaar life is like a picture from the Arabian Nights. Men sitting idly smoking hookahs, tongas dashing by with jangling bells and women in flowing 'tent robes' hurrying down the lanes or bargaining loudly with the shopkeepers.

Even though the Dal and Nagin lakes are the most photographed, written and talked about, there are a number of Alpine lakes around Srinagar, that are equally, if not more, beautiful.

Gulmarg is another exhilarating experience. The seven-mile road which gives you a view of the entire Kashmir Valley is what will take your breath away.

Nature is most certainly the main attraction in Kashmir. But there are other attractions too, like temples and man-made monuments. Kashmir during a festival is a splash of colours that will make you wonder whether a rainbow had fallen from the sky.

Kashmir is accessible by air, road and rail. However, the road between Srinagar and Ladakh is closed in winter. In Kashmir you can experience the novelty of staying in a houseboat or enjoy the hospitality of the conventional hotels which range from five-star splendour to picturesque wooden cottages. Once you get to Kashmir, you just want to sit down and digest all that beauty. And once you've got your breath back, you can sight-see, visit museums, play golf, fish, trek or just browse the shops for the most wonderful bargains. When you're in Kashmir, you feel like you're on top of the world.

Department of Tourism
Government of India

For more information about travelling in India, write to any one of our Regional Offices at:

BOMBAY
123-M.K. Road, Churchgate,
Bombay-400 020.

CALCUTTA
'Embassy', 4-Shakespeare Sara
Calcutta-700 071.

DELHI
88-Janpath, New Delhi-110 001.

MADRAS
154-Anna Salai, Madras-600 00

In India you'll see the world.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/DT/43

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ve've implanted
a little bit of Japan
n India.

Orson.
Where hi-tech
has taken root.

In the field
f entertainment electronics, he world bows
o Japanese technology.

Orson bring it all to you.

Our TV plant is run
ntirely on Japanese lines.
's set up with Japanese echnology. With experts rained in Japan. With the atest Japanese quality control
nethods and machines.

All this shows
n the quality of the TV set ve bring you.
n reliable performance.
n superior quality.
n perfect clarity.

Everything has a Japanese accent.
Even the after-sales service.

Orson. It's the kind of TV set you'd buy in India.
Or in Tokyo.

Even a Japanese
vouldn't know the difference.

ORSON SHOW HOW TO MAKE THE BEST OF JAPANESE KNOW HOW!

ORSON
COLOUR TELEVISION

Orson Electronics Limited
ombay, Calcutta, Madras, New Delhi.

ssai's-OEL-480/85 A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Soft and warm, Vardhman knitting yarn is available in a wide range of colours and varieties... Brilon, Apco, Duke, Empress, Angel, Gypsy, Teddy, Lotus, Viena, Sapna, Cable Sport—all in acrylic—and Solar Pure Merino wool.

Vardhman Spinning & General Mills Ltd.,
Chandigarh Road, Ludhiana-141 011

Vardhmān

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Vardhman. Your symbol of confidence

JAISONS VS 385

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RISE OF THE MIDDLE CLASS

India's new middle class of around 100 million people have suddenly taken centrestage, made their demands felt, forced the Government to shift its economic priorities and change its tax policy, and become the most visible sign of a progressing economy. In the process, India has ceased to be the world's byword for poverty and come to be seen as the land of opportunity.

NINAN

Prosperous farmers, the labour elite, the exploding number of small-scale entrepreneurs, the thriving professionals, and salaried employees of every hue: these now constitute India's new middle class.

"One tends to forget that India today has a very substantial middle class which didn't exist 30 years ago." —Rajiv Gandhi in an interview

TIGRI: One of the resettlement colonies on Delhi's outskirts that Sanjay Gandhi set up in record time exactly 10 years ago, so that the poor in a show-piece capital could be got out of sight.

A wedding reception: Receiving the guests was the bridegroom's father, Narain Singh, who retired as a general's orderly back in 1972, and who educated his sons with financial help from the general. Moving past him, the guests saw the sons all wearing woollen suits; one of them strummed a guitar, a second crooned the latest western songs in accented English and Hindustani disco hits into a microphone. And all the orderly's grandchildren—in jeans and matching jackets—gyrated on a stage done in pinks and pale yellows, shaking and twisting and bobbing with the music. The groom himself, it turned out, works in the Gulf in a catering establishment.

The meal was as at any other reception: soft drinks, a four-course meal and halwa and coffee at the end. And the whole function was being recorded on video.

A decade ago, shortly after Narain Singh retired, he might barely have escaped being classified in the Government's statistics as someone below the poverty line. Today, it is unlikely that he is the sort of person Rajiv Gandhi has in

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If it seems like stretching a point to argue that industrial labour constitutes a part of the middle class, the fact is that many workers earn as much as senior government officials.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CROWDS AT A FAST FOOD RESTAURANT IN NEW DELHI

mind when he talks of India having "a very substantial middle class". Nevertheless, if Roti, Kapda aur Makaan is what it's all about, Narain Singh's family has all this and more: education, remittances from the Gulf, the luxury of a video-recorded wedding. If he himself has neither the address nor the aspirations nor the other characteristics that would entitle him to be called a member of the middle class, his children and grandchildren almost certainly will.

So will a lot of dehaat gentry in the countryside of backward eastern Uttar Pradesh, where the wheat yields are now as high as in Haryana a little over a decade ago, with as much money being pumped into the farmers' hands. And those who qualify more easily as the middle class are growing rapidly in number. To take just one example, there are twice as many doctors today as a decade ago, even though the population of the country has grown by only 25 per cent.

Perhaps the single most important emerging group in the new middle class is that of the entrepreneur. The number of people running their own industrial establishments has more than trebled to 12 lakh in the last decade. And even that may be a hopeless underestimation because of the inadequacy of government statistics. After all, there are no fewer than eight lakh powerlooms authorised by the Government, and another two lakh unauthorised powerlooms, all owned by people who have hit on undreamt of riches in the last decade.

Factory employment has shot up 40 per cent in the same period. And if it seems like stretching a point to try and argue that industrial labour constitutes a part of the new and rising middle class, the fact remains that an assistant with only a school-leaving certificate, working in Peico Electronics and Electricals Ltd, gets almost Rs 6,000 a month, and a technician who got no further than standard IV in school gets more than Rs 4,000. The annual reports of the large companies are full of such examples of workers with little education and training getting anything from Rs 3,000 to Rs 6,000 and more every month, putting them in the same income bracket as a joint secretary in the Central Government.

Prosperous farmers, the growing labour elite, the unprecedented explosion in the number of small-scale entrepreneurs, the increasing number of professionals, the hundreds of thousands who now work in the Gulf, and salaried employees of every hue: these now constitute India's new middle class, a broadening band of something like 10 to 15 per cent of the country's population that, at around 100 million, is more than the total population of most developed countries. In no more than a decade, they have shed the earlier image of being a financially squeezed section of the population and suddenly taken centrestage, made their demands felt, forced the Government to shift its economic priorities and change its tax policy, and become the most visible sign of a rapidly progressing economy.

In a word, they are Rajiv Gandhi's people, at home in a new political climate, happy with the new political jargon, relieved that the Government no

BUSY TRADING IN STOCKS AND SHARES ON DALAL STREET, BOMBAY

For the first time in India, a prime minister now feels that the middle class is a political force, and that it makes political sense to satisfy its aspirations even at the risk of being called anti-poor.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

longer tries to tax everyone to distraction in the name of the poor, enamoured of a prime minister who understands the importance of colour TV. For the first time in India, a prime minister now feels that the middle class is a political force in even arithmetical terms because it has grown so rapidly in numbers, and that it makes political sense to satisfy its aspirations even at the risk of being portrayed as anti-poor.

Ten years ago, the political rhetoric centred on abolishing poverty; today it looks forward to the 21st century. Then, it was a question of reining in monopoly capital; now the Government talks of industrial modernisation and opening up the economy. Then, the goals were more food, water, steel, aluminium, hospitals. Now, it is all that plus telephones, TV sets, scooters, cars, refrigerators. Then, it was a question of taxing 'luxury' goods to find money for the basics; now the Government has reduced the taxes on these so that more people can buy the things that make for a better life.

But perhaps most important of all is another change in the political culture. Ten years ago, the middle class dismissed politicians as money-grubbing ne'er-do-wells who took to the streets because they couldn't do well anywhere else. But today's new image of the vote-seeker is that of the manager-politician, personified by Arun Nehru and Arun Singh, and also by such others as former IAS officer Krishna Kumar of Kerala. Many members of Parliament have also switched from khadi to safari suits, making them physically indistinguishable from the business executive who otherwise monopolises the Bombay-Delhi Airbus. The middle class, it suddenly seems, has taken charge of the country's politics.

Ten years ago, India was still the first country that came to anyone's lips when he or she talked of extreme poverty. That poverty is still there, but in substantially reduced measure. The Government's statistics say that only 37 per cent of the population is now below the poverty line, against 50 per cent not so long ago. And in another five years it will be no more than 26 per cent. Even if some allowance is made for exaggerated claims, there can be little doubt that poverty is in fact on the decline in most pockets. So the standard reference point for poverty is no longer India, but Bangladesh or sub-Saharan Africa. Instead, India's increasingly visible middle class now travels abroad often and in growing numbers, signs up lucrative business deals, and pays good money for all manner of goods on more attractive shop counters. So India now is talked of as the land of economic and business opportunity, with a growing market and a consistent record of steady growth.

That seminal change is reflected in the scenes of everyday life, in shopping centres, in roads crowded with personal vehicles, and increasingly in basic perception. As an economist in the prime minister's office says, "For a long time the concept of development in India had nothing to do with goods for the consumer...But as income levels rise, you have to provide for more consumer goods, and this change has begun to take place."

And so indeed, the Government has introduced a host of policy measures aimed at boosting the stock-market, and private holdings of company stocks today are 10 times the sum a decade ago, while the number of investors has shot up from 1.5 million to seven million. The Government has also eased the restrictions on foreign travel, and made the foreign travel scheme increasingly more liberal. It has allowed the construction of new five-star hotels which—though built in the name of foreign tourists—are mostly frequented by local gentry. Even government officials, who in an earlier age would only have been familiar with dak bungalows and government guest-houses, now feel at home at five-star lunches, hosted invariably by public sector companies under their control. The new hotels have also made India a new haven for those on the conference circuit, while the country's opening up to the outside world has meant that Indians, especially middle class Indians, are now more plugged in to global trends in everything from business trends to clothing styles.

NEW EDUCATIONAL AMBITIONS FOR MIDDLE CLASS CHILDREN

Sometimes, even the Government has been unable to cope. In the capital, the Delhi Development Authority has tens of thousands of people queuing up with hard cash to acquire flats that are in short supply, while 2,000 cooperative societies wait to be given land on which they can build. Private developers have now colonised vast tracts of land across the Delhi border with Haryana, and

Ten years ago, it was a question of taxing 'luxury goods' to find money for the basis; now the Government has reduced the taxes on these so that more people can buy the things that make for a better life.

The image of the politician as a ne'er-do-well has given way to the era of the manager-politician. The middle class has taken charge of the country's politics.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Feeding on burgeoning demand, Indian companies are poised to do in scooter manufacturing what Japan did for the world in cars and motorcycles.

THE INDUSTRIAL ELITE

NAME	AGE	COMPANY	QUALIFICATION	JOB FUNCTION	SALARY (Rs)
R. Baptiste	37	ITC	Not stated	Sr Secretary	55,232
K. Gokul	49	GTC	Not stated	Driver	38,632
B. Singh	39	Modi Rubber	Matric	Supervisor	64,572
M. Arumugam	58	Peico	Std I	Mazdoor	40,026
K.B. Moosa	51	HMM	Not stated	Worker	48,583
S.N. Thandge	42	Premier Auto	Std III	M/c Operator	47,325
A.D. Thakur	35	Union Carbide	School level	Mechanic	38,913
D.G. Amberkar	44	Glaxo	Up to Matric	Gen. Operator	36,003

once again demand quickly overshoots supply. Similar housing booms in other cities, like Bangalore and Madras, have changed the character of these once quiet southern towns, with Madras stretching way beyond Adyar, and Bangalore finding some of the biggest builders from Bombay descending on it in hordes. In Calcutta, Salt Lake City has come up as a whole new entity, personifying the survival of the middle class in a new enclave that has been carved out of what otherwise gives every appearance of being a dying city. As a spokesman of the Calcutta Metropolitan Development Authority says with a laugh, "Salt Lake is Calcutta's version of New Delhi."

Urbanisation itself gives birth to the middle class, and the last decade has seen an unprecedented explosion of the country's urban population. The total population in towns with more than one lakh inhabitants increased in slow paces by 12 million and 18 million in the 1950s and 1960s. But in the last decade this has gone up by an astonishing 45 million, and every fourth Indian now lives in a city or town. In some states like Gujarat and Maharashtra, the next decade will see more urban gentry than rural. And in Kerala, the Gulf boom has resulted in the urbanisation of virtually the entire countryside, with the demand for homestead plots outstripping that for agricultural land, and the prices of vegetables in places being higher than in Bombay or Delhi.

When villages become cities, paathshalas become 'public schools'. In Meerut district's sugarcane-rich Daurala, in western Uttar Pradesh, the unsuspecting early morning traveller will be surprised to pass hordes of schoolgirls in neat school uniforms. And establishments like Greenfields Nursery School flourish in the industrial colony of Rajajipuram on the outskirts of Lucknow, testifying to the exploding demand for that one prized commodity of any middle class: a good education.

The last decade has also seen an unprecedented doubling of engineering colleges, while the more general colleges and universities have started evening classes, correspondence courses and a host of other innovations to try and cope with the demand for education. A member of the faculty in even a well-established institution like Indraprastha College in Delhi says that the majority of its students are first-generation entrants to college. In the smaller towns, that figure could be anywhere between 80 and 100 per cent.

Education, housing, new government policies,

On offer now are whole new ranges of domestic appliances, including 75 brands of mixer-grinders and that ultimate sign of nouveau riche decadence, the 24-chime doorbell.

THE MAKING OF A CONSUMER SOCIETY

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the first time in India, an exciting new investment plan that lets you own your own holiday home for as little as Rs. 13,500 onwards...

DALMIA RESORTS
International

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

35 solid reasons why people have snapped worth of Property Shares in Dalmia Resorts

1. What are Property Shares?
Property Shares is an exciting new concept proven successfully in 45 countries worldwide. In 1982 alone, its turnover was U.S.$ 1.6 billion. And it is expected to become a 100 billion dollar industry within the next decade.

2. Can you define Property Shares?
Property Shares is a whole concept that enables you to own a share in property related to the time you are actually likely to use it, each year.
It is particularly attractive when applied to holiday resorts. You need not now invest in a holiday home which would otherwise be idle when you are not there.
It is yours for the period you plan to stay there. You need not worry about making advance reservation for your holiday accommodation.
Because the time share once purchased by you is yours to occupy, live in, enjoy, loan to friends, sell, let or bequeath, each year.

3. What are Property Shares in Dalmia Resorts?
For the first time ever, this exciting new concept now comes to India. Dalmia Resorts International will construct as many as 32 holiday resorts in the next 4 years. Encompassing some of the most exotic locations in the country. From Goa to Delhi, Kodaikanal to Shimla, Srinagar to Darjeeling to wherever you've always dreamt of vacationing.

4. When will the resorts be ready?
Construction has already started in Delhi; a club house and over 6 acres are already in existence in Kodaikanal; 15 acres of land has already been acquired in Goa. These resorts should be completed in the next 18 months. Several other sites are in various stages of negotiation.

5. How do I purchase a Property Share?
You can own a share in property in any of these upcoming resorts with a nominal once-only investment of Rs. 13,500 onwards. This once-and-for-all payment entitles you to one week's stay in the resort every year...forever!

6. How many weeks can I buy?
You can buy as many weeks as you wish. But the minimum number of units is one week. There are 50 weekly periods for sale each year; the balance 2 being kept aside for maintenance. You can take you pick from any of them.

7. Will I get the week of my choice?
Yes, on a first-come, first-served basis.

8. Does the price vary for peak seasons and low seasons?
Naturally the price of each period varies with the seasons of the year and the type of holiday resort. There is a range of cottages to choose from; a studio-type efficiency unit, a one-bedroom cottage and a two-bedroom chalet.

9. Are the resorts furnished?
Of course! Each cottage is fully furnished and superbly appointed with elegant furniture, TV, intercom, cutlery, crockery, luxury linen, etc.

10. Is there an attached kitchen?
Yes! A full-fledged kitchenette is yours with every holiday home. Fully equipped with refrigerator, cooking range, grill and toaster.

11. What amenities do the resorts offer?
Every resort will offer you a host of amenities. Ranging from a health club, sauna bath, video parlour and library to tennis courts, children's parks and baby sitting facilities...even a swimming pool in most resorts.

12. What about restaurants?
A speciality restaurant serving excellent cuisine is also on hand should you decide not to avail of your attached kitchenette.

13. Are groceries and provisions available?
Yes! A well-stocked super market is planned within the complex. Even an efficient in-house laundry service.

14. What is the size of each cottage?
Even our smallest unit will be much larger than a 5-star hotel room.

15. Is my money safe?
Your share purchase cheque will be deposited with the American Express Bank Ltd. in an Escrow Account with moneys to be released according to the terms of the Escrow Agreement. The bank will also hold the Title Deeds in trust on behalf of the owners. A copy of the Escrow Agreement will be made available with the application form.

16. Is the project professionally managed?
Of course! The project is managed by a team of highly qualified experts spearheaded by Mr. Prem Kapur, FHCIMA, Founder President of the Welcomgroup of Hotels, Chief Executive of the Hyatt Regency, New Delhi, and presently Member, Hotels Advisory Committee of the Industrial Finance Corporation of India.

17. Any tie-ups with international organisations?
An association with Resort Condominiums International (RCI) the world's largest Time Share Exchange company, lets you exchange you holiday home in India with any of 1000 RCI resorts in 45 countries worldwide—free. All you have to pay is a nominal exchange fee of U.S.$ 13. This can easily be taken out of your FTS quota (subject to RBI rules and regulations).

18. Do I get stuck with the same cottage year after year?
No! You can exchange your resort with other Dalmia Resort owners anywhere in India by just paying a fee of Rs. 99/-. Thus vacationing in a different resort every year, if you wish.

19. How does the exchange scheme work?
You deposit your 'week' into the computerised Space Bank and state your preferred exchanges. You are then allotted a week of

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

up over Rs. 2 crores your choice on a pre-stipulated fair exchange basis and your week is allotted to someone who wants it. Materialization in the past 5 years has exceeded 90%. You do not lose your week in the remote event of the exchange not materializing.

20. Can I gift my Property Share?
Of course! You can sell it, rent it, bequeath it to your heirs, or gift it to anybody you wish. And what a gift! You will be remembered year after year...forever!

21. Can I rent out my resort if want to?
Yes! You can rent out your holiday home to your friends or ask us to do it on your behalf. This will earn you a handsome income every year.

22. How do I go about selling my Property Share?
You can sell your share of the resort personally or appoint the Club Management Committee to do so on your behalf.

23. Who will manage the resorts?
The property will be managed by a Club Managing Committee with the assistance of experts provided by the Promoters at cost.

24. Who will maintain the resorts?
They will be maintained by a professional resort group with several years of experience in maintaining 5-star hotels. This group will be accountable to the Managing Committee in which you will have a say.

25. How much will it cost to maintain the resorts?
Annual maintenance charges will be divided amongst the owners of weeks. A security deposit of Rs. 3,000/- will be given by you to the American Express Bank to form a Fund. The Bank will manage this Fund and the return thereon will be used by the Club to renew and replace furniture and fittings and keep the property and resort in tip top condition.

26. Will I have say in the management of the resort?
Naturally, you will have a say in the Management. Just as in the case of a club, you will have your rights and obligations.

27. How will my voice be heard by the Management Committee?
You will be formed into a club with its main offices at convenient places like Bombay and Delhi to elicit views from the owners.

28. How do I pay for electricity?
Each holiday home is separately metered. You will pay only for the electricity you consume; similarly for telephones and gas, if applicable.

29. When does the weekly period start?
The weekly period commences on Saturday at 6 p.m. and finishes at 10 a.m. the following Saturday. This allows for enough time at changeover period for a thorough cleaning. Should you purchase consecutive weeks, the Management will ensure that cleaning and changing linen is arranged at a time suitable to you.

30. Are Property Shares really inflation-proof?
Property Shares are the first inflation-proof investment in the country. Because property always appreciates at a rate faster than the rate of inflation, you will stand to make a tidy profit any time you wish to sell your Property Share.

31. Are they better than Fixed Deposits?
In fact, Property Shares are better than Fixed Deposits by way of capital appreciation. Because the value of your Fixed Deposit steadily goes down as it gets eroded into every year by the rising rate of inflation and a fall in the value of money.

32. Will I get interest on my investment?
No. Which builder gives you interest on property? But then you stand to gain so much more when the property appreciates!

33. Can Companies buy Property Shares?
Property Shares can be of immense benefit to companies. They can now buy Property Shares to remunerate and reward their staff with free holidays. Or they can award a week's Property Share to their Executives as a gift or bonus in recognition of good work and thus earn their life-long loyalty.

34. How do I purchase Property Shares in Dalmia Resorts?
When you buy a Property Share in Dalmia Resorts, you sign an agreement to purchase and pay the amount which will be deposited in an Escrow Account with the American Express Bank Ltd. who will release the moneys according to the terms of the Escrow Agreement, a copy of which is available with application forms.

35. Is this the first time any builder is offering an Escrow Arrangement?
Yes! For the very first time of India, an international bank has agreed to open an Escrow Account. The Bank will also hold all titles to the property in trust and manage the maintenance fund.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Professionally managed by highly qualified experts.
- Capital appreciating asset.
- Association with Resort Condominiums International, the world's largest Time Share Exchange company.
- Concept proven in 45 countries around the world for many years.
- Exchange facilities in India and abroad.
- 32 resorts in the next 4 years.
- First 3 resorts will be ready in 18 months.
- Even the smallest cottage is much larger than a 5-star hotel room and fully equipped with a kitchenette.

For bookings, site plans, architectural designs and a free audio-visual presentation, please call on:

Principal Consultants
Prem N Kapur Associates Pvt. Ltd.
N-258A, Greater Kailash Part, I
NEW DELHI 110 048
Phone: 6415855, 6416506

Delhi Sales Office:
Room No. 20, Hotel Janpath,
NEW DELHI 110 001.
Tel: 350 070

Bombay Office:
65 Mittal Chambers,
Nariman Point,
BOMBAY 400 021.
Tel: 2021922, 2028843

Ahmedabad Office:
Room No. 2 Hotel Capital
Khanpur,
AHMEDABAD 380 001.
Tel: 24633-38

Madras Office:
F-3, Ramana Apartments,
Rathna Nagar,
MADRAS 600 018 Tel: 71251

RCI

American Land Development Association

IPTA

THIS COUPON IS WORTH Rs. 1,350 to Rs. 2,950

This coupon is precious. It entitles you to a Special Discount of 10% ie. Rs. 1,350/- to Rs. 2,950/- on a first-come, first-served basis. Cut it out and reach it to us.

Name .....

Address .....

Phone: (Off.)..... (Res.).....

COUPON VALID TILL DEC 31, 1985. ONLY A FEW DAYS LEFT. HURRY!

DALMIA RESORTS International

Govan Advt & Mktg/DRI/16/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ed by Arya Samaj Foundation Chenn

When the carpet is Persian, the walls are Luxol Silk.

Luxol Silk. It is the only emulsion paint you can tell with your eyes closed. Just run your fingers over the silken, super-smooth finish.

Luxol Silk. Its perfect silk finish makes it so easy to wash, so easy to keep bright and clean looking for years and years.

Luxol Silk. Choose from over forty shades of silk. And from a whole new range of whites that whisper.

Drape your walls with Luxol Silk — the richest emulsion in the world.

Luxol Silk

British Paints
BERGER
WORLDWIDE

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Private holdings of company stocks today are 10 times the sum a decade ago, while the number of investors has shot up from 1.5 million to seven million.

a new breed of politicians, urbanisation, foreign travel, luxury spending: all these are only some of the facets of the growth of India's middle class. Far more important than all these is the revolution that has taken place in the market-place as the middle class crowds into shops with newfound money.

It is an old traveller's dictum that a quick look at a country's shopwindows quickly reveals the nature of its society. And the rise of the middle class in India is amply reflected in the country's shopping centres and malls. On offer today are whole new ranges of processed foods, and a previously undreamt of choice in domestic appliances, including washing machines, vacuum cleaners, slow and fast electric cookers, mixer-grinders that come in 75 brands, room coolers, hot water geysers, and that ultimate sign of middle class decadence, the 24-chime doorbell.

Fashion garments have come into their own with the entry of names like Ravissant, carpet and dhurry-manufacturing firms have been born (Transasia, Modifloor, Shyam Ahuja), and individual department stores like Benzer in Bombay and Snowhite in New Delhi, or specialist establishments like shirt makers Charagh Din, now have the money and the expertise to launch brand names and expensive advertising campaigns in glossy magazines. The magazines themselves are yet another mirror to the emergence of a relatively wealthy middle class because a growing advertising business can sustain far more publications than before.

The beauty business has kept pace with disposable incomes, as cleansers and kaajals, conditioners and cleaners, glossers and blushers and liners and lotions are all applied with increasing intensity: 50 kinds of shampoos, 500 shades of lipsticks, dozens of new moisturisers and deodorants, and at the end of it all a Rs 150-crore business.

As in the case of cosmetics, new or growing businesses have started supplying the shops with the goods in demand, and suddenly hit on good times. The production and sales of refrigerators has jumped fourfold in the last decade to six lakh annually, that of cars has more than doubled in the last five years to around 90,000, and in the case of synthetic clothing the per capita consumption has gone up 150 per cent in the last decade. Indeed, today's smart businessman senses more opportunity in such areas than anywhere else.

Sometimes, the business opportunity presented by middle class demand has placed India on the world manufacturing stage. G.Brazzelli, managing director of the Italian scooter-giant, Piaggio & C.S.P.A., said on a visit to New Delhi last fortnight that "India is now the world's largest market for two-wheelers." A million motorcycles, scooters and mopeds have been sold in the country this year, five times the number a decade ago, and the figure five years from now will be close to two million. By then, with a little luck, India may also have the world's two biggest scooter manufacturers: Bajaj Auto, and Lohia Machines along with its sister company Vespa Car, which between them expect to turn out over one million vehicles. Brazzelli himself admitted as much when he said that Piaggio (currently the world's leading scooter manufacturer) produced no more than three lakh scooters last year. And others say that Bajaj and his like are doing to the world in scooters what Japan did earlier in cars and motorcycles.

The burgeoning middle class has also made India among the largest markets in the world for TV sets (there are 5.5 million now in the country), and even the expensive video sets. India now has a million of these, while all of the United States had only five million two years ago. Even unpretentious neighbourhoods seem to be upwardly mobile as never before. On the streets around Bombay's Bhendi Bazar, the skyline is an uninterrupted maze of TV antennae.

MARUTI CARS WAIT TO BE DRIVEN AWAY FROM A SHOWROOM

The fact that TV has moved downmarket reflects the trickle-down of aspirations and to some extent spending power. Nirma has broadened the base of the population using synthetic detergents, watches are no longer a status symbol, milkmen cart their cans around on motorcycles instead of bicycles, which meanwhile have become more ubiquitous than the transistor, and cheaper synthetic clothes have converted yet another status symbol into an article of common consumption. To at least a limited extent, the rising expectations down the income ladder are being met with cheaper goods.

Even in the case of a relatively expensive product like cars, a decade ago the number of manufacturers was down from three to two because of a shrinking market. Today, there are four Educational entrepreneurship at the level of new nurseries for pre-school children, or in the form of a host of 'public schools' or 'convents'—is one of the more remarkable offshoots of the birth of the middle class.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Government policy has, inevitably, fallen in line. Taxes provide the best example. Over the last decade, the Government has actually slashed personal income tax rates from 97 per cent to 50 per cent.

car manufacturing companies, with one of the new ones producing the current middle class status symbol, the Maruti. Standard Motors will re-enter the car market soon, and another three companies are eagerly waiting for the Government's green signal to introduce their own models. If all of them get the go-ahead, India will have a record eight car manufacturing companies, and the total market could expand from 35,000 a decade ago to anything up to 1.5 lakh or two lakh annually: a rise of at least 750 per cent.

Government policy has, inevitably, fallen in line. Taxes provide the best example. Over the last decade, a money-hungry government has actually slashed personal income tax rates from a maximum of 97 per cent to no more than 50 per cent, and sharply reduced the excise and customs duties on the kind of goods especially dear to the middle class: two-wheelers, cars, refrigerators (which today cost only marginally more than what they did a decade ago, despite over 100 per cent inflation), TV sets, and all manner of consumer electronics goods. At one extreme, the customs duty on even Scotch whisky was slashed last fortnight.

The one finance minister who tried to move in the opposite direction was Charan Singh, who in 1979 announced that the consumers of such items as cosmetics, toiletries and other everyday middle class household goods should pay more tax in order to provide revenue for spending on the rural poor. What resulted for the hapless politician was instant ignominy in a press that reflects the aspirations of the middle class.

But the change in the Government's stance has gone far beyond just lower taxes, unprecedented though this is. Dozens of entrepreneurs have been allowed to make video recorders, and scarce foreign exchange has been given to companies so that they can import the components for everything from TV sets to washing machines, while new foreign collaborations have been permitted for the manufacture of such products as quality luggage. The leftists have mildly cried foul, but a middle class that is on a consumption spree is, unlike in the past, a whole-hearted supporter of the Government's economic policies. And the voices of dissent have been silenced, or been lost in the din of TV commercials.

The results of all this are now there for everyone to read in the newly-released Seventh Five-Year Plan document, for among the only sectors where production targets were handsomely overshot during the last five years were in consumer goods. Thus, refrigerator production last year was supposed to reach 3.9 lakh, but went up to 5.72 lakh. Two-wheelers were meant to reach five lakh, but achieved 9.2 lakh. And TV production, targeted at Rs 180 crore, in fact managed Rs 436 crore.

The next five years will see even more explosive growth, for the plan now talks of taking the production of VCR's from Rs 2 crore last year to an astronomical Rs 425 crore in 1989-90, of tape recorders from Rs 38 crore to Rs 300 crore, and TV's themselves from Rs 436 crore to Rs 850 crore. And the market for polyster staple fibre is expected to grow from 55,000 tonnes in 1985 to over one lakh tonnes in 1986 and close to 1.9 lakh tonnes in 1987. Says Anil Ambani of Reliance Industries: "There will be a market for all this and more."

If all this is the hardware side of the rise of the middle class, there is a software side too: in the form of women who have got an education now going out to work, in the progressive spread of the small family norm, perhaps in greater sexual freedom, and also in a change of attitudes on a host of fronts, not all of them positive or desirable. The increasing acquisitiveness in society has led to the spate of bride burnings, a grab-what-you-can attitude is increasingly prevalent, and as TELCO Chairman S.Moolgaokar said some time ago, business is pervaded by the "quick-buck" culture. In their turn, social scientists will talk of the possible harm to a society when its upper crust goes on a spending boom and shapes government policies to its tastes.

CUSTOMERS AT AN ELECTRONICS SHOP STACKED WITH GOODS

Even if the poor will always be with us, from now on so will the middle class, dominating the scene with increasing legitimacy and self-assurance, even as the former shrinks in numbers and importance.

For all that, however, there is no getting away from the fact that even if the poor will always be with us, so will the middle class from now on. And as the former shrinks in number and importance (however slowly or fast), the latter will hog the arc lamps with increasing legitimacy and self-assurance. If the last decade has seen the middle class emerge as the tip of the iceberg in an ocean of poverty, the next should almost certainly see more Narain Singhs and their children emerging into the sun.

—T.N.NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

White as new!

Wash after wash ... every wash!
Power Packed Surf washes white as new!

Every shirt, every sheet stays fresh, crisp, white. Stays just as new as the day you brought it home and unwrapped it.

Because Power Packed Surf is better than ever before ... More powerful, more protecting. It has a power that washes deep down clean, it has a lather that's richer than before.

Surf lifts out stubborn dirt for lasting whiteness, Surf protects the fabric to prolong its newness.

Whites, coloureds, special or everyday, Surf washes them all whitest, brightest, keeps them all good as new.

There may be hundreds of washing powders, but there's only one you can trust for all your family's wash.

Only Surf.

Surf washes whitest... keeps clothes like new!

A quality product by Hindustan Lever

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LINTAS SU 323 2721

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bush Baron Auto Colour TV Take-home price: Rs. 7500 in Delhi, Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

For some people, choosing the best is a way of life.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and Rajasthan; Rs. 7750 in Gujarat, Maharashtra, Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cotton or silk
Co-optex is the best

Add the finishing touch to your beauty – Co-optex. Fantastic designs in cotton and silk.

Fabulous Choice

Co-optex
Handlooms

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DAY OF THE FARMER

The decade has thrown up a new breed of farmers—aware, educated and aggressively productive—who pamper the soil into yielding the bounty of food on which the other millions depend. Their achievement in helping the country cross the hump in the search for self sufficiency, is as remarkable as the task of feeding one billion people by 2000, will be daunting.

AJIT NINAN

Punjab remains the brightest lighthouse on the agricultural landscape. The number (of lighthouses) will have to increase if the country is to produce 235 million tonnes of foodgrains by the year 2000.

HE IS already a celebrity, a Midas among farmers, with an uncanny ability to coax enormous amounts of golden grain from the soil of his 80-acre farm on the outskirts of Ludhiana. He is a show-piece introduced to dignitaries and ambassadors when they visit Punjab. His district, Ludhiana, leads the world in wheat and rice yields but gentleman farmer Jagjit Singh Hara, 49, beats Ludhiana's best by a wide margin. He extracts a bounty of 4.4 tonnes of grain from every acre of his land every year, half of it wheat and half rice. A city slicker who became a legend in a state which has many, Hara has now won widespread acclaim—from the Philippines-based International Rice Research Institute which recently adjudged him one of the 14 outstanding farmers from 10 countries, from the Agriculture Ministry which anointed him a Dhan Pandit and from the nearby Punjab Agricultural University, which has made him a visiting professor. The centre-piece in a display of trophies, plaques and citations that crowd the walls of his drawing-room is Hara's picture with Norman Borlaug, the Nobel laureate who helped India's green revolution.

Further north, on a picturesque 25-acre plot near Pathankot, overlooked by the snow-clad Dhauladhar range, lives Kuldip Singh Gill, who has made a fortune out of Hi-Sex. No, he is not in the pornography business. Hi-Sex is his favourite breed of hen and Kuldip Singh Gill is to eggs what Hara is to grain. One day last fortnight, Gill contemplated the day's production of 1,05,000 eggs, which raised the fragile hoard in his store-room to an impressive 3.5 lakh. The size of his poultry farm—with its 2.10 lakh hens—is no cackling matter; even the description sounds odd

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The size of Gills's poultry farm—with its 2.10 lakh hens is no cackling matter. It has made him perhaps the largest commercial poultry farmer in the country—the King of Cluck.

He has no formal training in poultry. He learned by keeping his eyes and ears open and his mind receptive to new techniques of bird management.

considering that it is registered with the Director-General of Technical Development as a medium scale industry. In fact, egg manufacturer would be a more appropriate description for Gill, 40, and a pioneer who introduced modern mass production techniques to the industry in Punjab where a unit was considered big if it had 40,000 to 50,000 birds. He had no formal training in poultry. He says he learned by keeping his eyes and ears open and his mind receptive to new techniques of bird management. He was the first person in north India to introduce the practice of keeping the birds in wire cages—three to a cage. The birds stay clean and so do the eggs. And their reduced mobility saves a considerable amount of feed. Hard work has made him perhaps the largest commercial poultry farmer in the country—the King of Cluck.

They are both ordinary looking, the kind you would not notice on the street. Hara, tall and jovial unlocks his heart and his bar to visitors. Gill, short and dapper, is more reserved. Both started out in somewhat identical fashion: Hara as a refugee from Pakistan and Gill as a farmer's son at a loose end. And both have achieved remarkable success in their respective fields.

Like them, there are others elsewhere in the country—the potato growers of Farrukhabad and Meerut in Uttar Pradesh and Biharsharif in Bihar, the cotton planters of Surat and Maharashtra, the dairymen of Gujarat and the paddy growers of Andhra Pradesh's West Godavari district and Tamil Nadu's Thanjavur—who symbolise equally well the growing community of farmers whose easy receptivity to modern and mechanised techniques has helped the country cross the hump in the quest for self- sufficiency in food and other commodities. In this quest, the crucial ten-year period from 1975 to 1985 has been a turning point. In a microcosm, their story is also the story of Indian agriculture for this period. In 1974-75 India produced 99.83 million tonnes of foodgrains and 6.23 million tonnes of potatoes, around 65 lakh bales of cotton. Catalysed by the efforts of innovators like Hara, foodgrains production increased to 151.54 million tonnes in 1983-84, a not unimpressive increase of 51.82 per cent. Few other countries have achieved similar breakthroughs. In other areas too, the achievement was equally impressive: potato production more than doubled from 6.23 million tonnes in 1975 to 13 million tonnes. "Potato has produced as big a revolution as wheat," says Deputy Director-General M.V. Rao of the Indian Council of Agricultural Research (ICAR). "Previously potatoes were a luxury. Now a glut has caused prices to crash". Cotton output too swelled from about 65 lakh bales in 1975 to 93 lakh bales in 1985. Ten years ago long staple cotton worth Rs 70 crore was being imported, now it's surplus. Thanks to the Gills of the business , egg production jumped from 8,204 million to 13,500 million and broilers literally took wing, from 10 million to 50 million.

Success stories all, spurred mainly by the availability of improved seeds from agricultural universities and seeds corporations (70,000 tonnes were distributed in 1984-85 compared to only 25,000 tonnes five years ago), progressive mechanisation (annual production of tractors has gone up from 33,146 in 1976-77 to around 90,000 this year), easier bank credit (Rs 5,810 crore

GILL'S FARM, WITH 210,000 HENS, IS A MEDIUM SCALE INDUSTRY: (INSET) WITH FAMILY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The difference in laminates
now comes to surface

Only Sungloss has the unique SuperShield against stains, heat, abrasion

The SuperShield on the Sungloss surface gives the laminate super protection, greater resistance. No worrying about everyday wear and tear, no fretting over little incidents and accidents. The extra-protective SuperShield surface keeps the laminate looking beautifully new, almost forever.

Discover new meaning in the colours and designs of the Sungloss SuperShield range. Enhance any decor with the exquisite finishes in brilliant Gloss, muted Matt or natural Woodtex. Or with any of the several attractive textures.

When you get laminated furniture, make sure you get the Sungloss SuperShield on it. You'll be glad you insisted.

SunGLOSS Decorative Laminate | SuperShield

Make sure you get it. Then you can forget it.

caprihan

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

These big names trust one name

COPWUD®

Small wonder, then, that gift item manufacturers select COPWUD® quartz movements for clocks and alarms.

Quartz clocks and quartz alarm time-pieces! They make excellent give-aways, be it for sales promotion, gifts for dealers or corporate give-aways.

A quartz clock or alarm time-piece that carries a prestigious name on its face has a promise to keep— split second accuracy. With a COPWUD quartz movement, it can!

No wonder leading organisations and manufacturers of gift items alike trust COPWUD to provide the quartz clock movements and quartz alarm movements for their gift items. They are dependable and accurate.

Manufactured under licence from Henhart GmbH, West Germany, every quartz movement manufactured by COPWUD bears a mark of international quality. Strict quality control and testing of every movement on the most advanced electronic equipments ensure that only the best movements are marketed.

Next time you think of a useful give-away, think of clocks and alarms with COPWUD quartz movements and COPWUD quartz alarm movements. They are accurate, reliable and make a great giveaway.

Write today for further details.

COPWUD®

118-120 Sat Guru Nanik Industrial Estate, Western Express Highway, Goregaon (East), Bombay 400 063
Tel: 697479, 699697 • Telex: 74499 COPD IN Cable: PRITICHETU, Bombay 400 063.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If Paharpur can't meet your cooling tower needs.... your needs probably can't be met.

Over the years we've built cooling towers for steel mills and food manufacturers, process chemical plants and textile mills, petroleum refineries and automative assembly plants, electric generating stations and institutional air conditioning systems.

In fact, we make cooling towers for just about every category and size of industry or business — more than 400 models. Why so many? Because your needs are many; and Paharpur has the capability to build to and for your needs.

Such as data gleaned from 50 years of Marley research. More than 60 years of engineering. And from thousands of installations throughout the world. All essential to a thorough understanding of your specific cooling tower need — which is our prime concern.

That concern is reflected in the scope and quality of our operations. No matter how demanding or unusual the requirements of your next tower, Paharpur has probably faced a similar situation before. And built a tower to tackle it.

And as the years take their toll, you'll discover the value of our single-source responsibility. One call to us, and only us, will be all it takes — for repair, replacement parts, even reconstruction, if necessary. That's why we're known as.....

The Full Service Cooling Tower Company

PAHARPUR MARLEY ©

PAHARPUR COOLING TOWERS PVT. LTD.

8/1/B, Diamond Harbour Road, Calcutta- 700 027, India
Phone: 45-8956 (3 lines) Telex: 21-3293 PCTC IN, 21-3367 PCTS IN

JETSETTERS/PCT/33/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Zodiac confidence

Because fashions come and go but classics go on forever.

Shirts Rs.69 upwards.
Ties Rs.35 upwards.
Belts Rs.53 upwards.
Wallets Rs.30 upwards.
Handkerchieves Rs.32 upwards for a box of 3.
Socks Rs.15 upwards.
(L.T. extra)

ZODIAC

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The strength of our agriculture lies in its improved ability to withstand droughts."
N.S. RANDHAWA
Director General, Indian Council of Agricultural Research

disbursed in 1984-85 as against Rs 3,387 crore in 1980-81), increased fertiliser usage (84 lakh tonnes in 1984-85 compared to 55.16 lakh tonnes in 1980-81) and increase in irrigated area and grassroots application of research breakthroughs in university laboratories. These achievements often get lost in the welter of publicity about droughts,shortages and price rises, but they have infused the farming community and the nation with a new confidence. This is echoed in the words of ICAR Director-General Dr N.S. Randhawa: "The strength of our agriculture lies in its improved ability to withstand droughts." In the 1970s a drought spelled disaster; the one in 1979-80 caused a shortfall of 22 million tonnes and wiped out a buffer stock accumulated over ten years. But some success in drought-proofing made a foodgrains production of 151 million tonnes possible in 1983-84, a drought year. Two areas of worry remain—oilseeds, whose shortage forces the country to import edible oil worth more than Rs 1,000 crore every year, and pulses whose per capita availability over the years has fallen from 72 grams to only 34 grams.

That apart, Punjab remains the brightest lighthouse on the agricultural landscape, says Randhawa. There are others too, but their number will have to increase if the country is to produce the 235 million tonnes of foodgrains required by the year 2000 to feed an estimated population of one billion people. Expectations of an increase of that order are based on the hope that the coming decade and a half will multiply the tribe of agricultural entrepreneurs like Hara and Gill and transform the operations of others like Karnataka coffee planter Ajjicutira Ponnappa who rejoices in his new-found prosperity after years of marginal earnings. Ponnappa's lean face lit up in anticipation as he admired the coffee berries ripening in the winter sun on his 20-acre estate near Mercara. It promised to be a good crop and Ponnappa was satisfied: "God has set me free from worries."

Life was not always a bed of berries for the aging Ponnappa, 60. With insignificant yields from five acres of paddy fields left him by his father, his youth was one of despair as he slogged it out as a clerk in the state Industries Department. With a wife and three children to support, he was terribly insecure. "I spent sleepless nights worrying about our future," he remembers now. In 1972, with the coffee boom under way, Ponnappa decided to invest his life's savings of Rs 35,000 to convert ten acres of jungle land into a coffee estate. Taking all the help he could get—high yielding seeds from the coffee board and development loans from a bank—he tided over the five years it takes for the plants to bear fruit. "Growing a coffee plant is like taking care of a baby," he says. "In the first five years we spent money with no returns." When the returns came, they gladdened his heart. Because of steadily rising coffee prices he started grossing over Rs 1 lakh a year. He bought another 10 acres near his estate and applied for more loans. Last year he spent Rs 1 lakh on a sprinkler system. The fact that he owes banks about Rs 2.5 lakh does not faze him. "No city job can give me the security that my estate does," he says. Security also means having the money to send his son to engineering college and the daughter to a college in Manga-

"No city job can give me the kind of security my estate does. It's a paradise."
AJJICUTIRA PONNAPPA
Karnataka coffee planter

PLANTER PONNAPPA ON HIS 20-ACRE COFFEE ESTATE NEAR MERCARA: (INSET) NEW HOUSE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

10 DECISIVE YEARS
Dec. 1975—Dec. 1985

Concern

For a decade now, India Today's coverage of major developments in the country has reflected concern. Concern for the human condition. For the downtrodden. Like the poignant, heart-wrenching relationship between an aged and blind beggar and his mentally retarded companion in their private corner of the country and their fight for survival. Issue after issue, India Today gives you a clear insight into a wide area of interest—from politics to personalities, sports to science, environment to the economy.

With a distinctive approach, India Today looks beyond the headlines to bring you information that is balanced, analytical and detailed. It tells you what is really happening in the country and its significance.

India Today gives you more than news.
India Today gives you understanding.

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

THE BEST WAY TO KEEP IN TOUCH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Haras of this country produce 60 per cent of its food and the ripples of their achievements reach even those on the boundaries of the sphere. That is their importance.

lore, and a Rs 5 lakh concrete house with attached bathrooms which is nearing completion on the estate. "It's a paradise," he gloats.

Others have traversed different paths to the paradise of prosperity. Gill was doing pre-engineering when his father died leaving him, the only son, with 40 acres of land. "I used to ask people what's a good industry to start," he says. And a relative sold him the idea of starting a poultry farm. So he started out with 1,500 birds in the early 1970s. It soon became clear that he had a way with chicks. By 1975 he had grown to 10,000 birds and to 50,000 three years ago. Then he really expanded with the help of a bank loan of Rs 30 lakhs and now has 210,000 hens. The farm even has its own feed mill to process the 20 tonnes of feed needed every day. Yet another expansion is under way. Gill attributes his success to the farm's location, with the huge market of Jammu and Kashmir, Himachal Pradesh and the army at his very doorstep, and availability of cheaper feed ingredients. With characteristic modesty he plays down his own role in husbanding his massive brood into a medium scale industry. Gill too has only one son who he hopes will join him in the business. Understandably, Gill is not overly fond of eggs; he eats only about two a week and chicken meat graces his table only once a fortnight.

Hara came to Kanganwal village adjoining Ludhiana's industrial estate in 1951 from Multan. His father was allotted 20 acres in exchange for the land they had left behind in Pakistan. Says Hara: "For three years we lived in a tin shed under the banyan tree. Little by little we saved and built a house." And bought more land. "Agriculture has to be run like a business," he says, "it's no use saying it's in the blood". Hara confesses that his business boomed 10 years ago when he adopted high-yield paddy as a summer crop. "Paddy has brought prosperity to Punjab as a summer crop" but the wheat-paddy rotation is taking a heavy toll of soil fertility. Hara displays a passionate concern for the health of the soil on his farm and is worried at the way farmers around him are neglecting their basic resource. He has prepared a soil fertility map of his entire farm and gets soil samples tested every two years at the Punjab Agricultural University which provides this service free to neighbouring farmers. Any deficiency of nutrients is quickly remedied. He plants an intermediate crop of green manure (jantar) which is mashed and buried in the soil to replenish depleted nutrients. Not afraid of dirtying his hands, Hara still works on the farm. The care he lavishes on his land has paid dividends. He now lives in a bigger house surrounded by exotic trees and plants with a small swimming pool he likes to plunge into after he has finished entertaining his frequent guests. Such is his reputation that every grain he produces is purchased by the National Seeds Corporation to be sold as seed to other farmers.

Entrepreneurs like Hara who have assured means of irrigation represent a minority of 30 per cent of the farming community. The remaining 70 per cent of the cultivators still depend largely on nature since they cultivate the rain-fed areas. But however small their number, the Haras of this country produce 60 per cent of its food and the ripples of their achievements reach even those on the boundaries of the sphere. That is their importance.

—RAMINDAR SINGH with RAJ CHENGAPPA in Bangalore

"Agriculture has to be run like a business. It's no use saying it's in the blood.... Paddy has brought prosperity to Punjab as a summer crop."
JAGJIT SINGH HARA

FARMER HARA EXTRACTS A BOUNTY OF 4.4 TONNES OF GRAIN PER ACRE; (INSET) WITH AWARD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BUSINESS

SMALL IS BOUNTIFUL

One of the most remarkable developments of the decade has been the unprecedented flowering of small enterprises. Small companies and new entrepreneurs were at the forefront of practically every business boom of the last decade and have provided the platform on which broad-based industrial growth can take place in the decade ahead.

Small companies and new entrepreneurs were at the forefront of practically every business boom of the last decade with their ability to seize business opportunities and their aggressive feeding of burgeoning markets.

AT FIFTEEN he quit home and lived by his wits to support his passion for painting. The lad assembled and hawked radios door to door to keep the wolf at bay. At 17, he launched his first venture on a 60-sq ft plot across the Jamuna in Delhi, manufacturing small indicator lights for geysers and other electrical appliances. Three years later, after an art gallery sold a painting of his for Rs 2,300, he took on partners and floated a small electrical components company.

Vaishno Electricals still flourishes, but Mukesh Aggarwal has chucked up his artistic ambitions. Now 31, Aggarwal presides over a clutch of firms that last year sold television sets and home appliances (under the Hotline label) and switch gears worth Rs 15 crore. Says Aggarwal: "My aim was never just to make money. I wanted to set up a company and take it to the top." He recalls his rough years when he bought fans from the market on credit and sold them to raise cash for raw materials so that he could meet an order he had bagged, and concludes: "If you have determination, never postpone a problem and solve it, you can do anything."

Clearly, that upbeat message has swept the country over the last decade. Fervently believing that they could do better, six executives quit DCM Data Products 10 years ago and set up shop in a two-room barsati in the capital. Using Rs 1.75 lakh of provident fund money, they hired furniture, a typewriter and a typist whose first task was to type out his own appointment letter. Today, they steer the Delhi-based Hindustan Computers Ltd (HCL) group, which turns out computers and computer-related equipment, electronic typewriters, copiers and test and measuring equipment. Their eight

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

HOTLINE 2001 DIGITAL
YOUR LIGHTNING LEAP INTO THE FUTURE

THE ULTIMATE DIGITAL TELEVISION

A stunning marvel of futuristic West German Digital technology, that has rocketed present-day entertainment electronics to the computer age! With a microprocessor at its heart, Hotline 2001 generates digital or 'number' signals. Only 'number' signals are incorruptible to static disturbances, heat and aging. Therefore, only Hotline 2001 achieves computer standards of perfection and reliability.

COMMAND PERFORMANCE AT YOUR FINGERTIP

Infra-red remote gives you complete control. 99 TV channels can be selected with 100% accuracy. 39 TV station programmes can be stored and instantly recalled. More, a 'muter' switches off sound when you please; a 'sleeping' device automatically shuts off the TV 5 minutes after transmission is over and an electronic lock makes it tamper-proof.

PRECISION-VIEWING UP TO THE 99TH VALUE!

A touch of the button enables you to set, memorize and recall volume, brightness, colour and contrast on a scale of 1 to 99. Precisely. Reproduction is matchless!

CRISP COLOURS–AGELESS!

Superb colour resolution. Any colour loss caused by the natural aging process of the picture tube is automatically compensated for. Colours retain their first-day brightness for years!

PURE, HI-FI SOUND

Advanced acoustics system reproduces sound faithful to the original. Two 5 watt speakers add depth and transparency. Listening becomes such a pleasure.

TUNED TO THE FUTURE

Easy-to-fit modules can upgrade the Hotline 2001 to all the exciting innovations of the future: Cable TV, Satellite TV, Disc-Video, Stereo Music, View-data, Bilingual Broadcasts and Teletext/Videotext. Plus, a unique Euro-Socket enables easy connection to VCR's, Stereo Systems, Home Computers, etc.

Add to all this, Hotline 2001's avant-garde design and beautiful styling — and you have a television of the future, here and now!

HOTLINE 2001

THE ULTIMATE DIGITAL TELEVISION

For more about Hotline 2001 write to: Fusebase Eltoro Pvt. Ltd. Community Centre, New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110 065.

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Combine brains, experience, ambition and you get a success story like few others in the construction business

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The story of a company called Unitech

In 1970, five engineers met in Delhi. They had studied in the best engineering schools abroad. They had worked in giant international outfits. They commanded enormous professional respect. Between them, they probably knew everything there was to know about the construction business. Above all, they were fiercely ambitious.

That day, the five decided to set up shop. The Unitech group was born.

What followed was an unparalleled success story.

The group of five grew within 15 years to a conglomerate employing 300 technical and highly skilled personnel. All over India, Libya, Saudi Arabia, and Africa, Unitech put up radio and power stations, transmission lines, sports stadia, hospitals, hotels, housing complexes...

In the 80s alone, Unitech's turnover has grown almost 450% to Rs. 35 crores. Its net worth, which was a meagre Rs. 50,000 in 1970, today stands at an astonishing Rs. 12 crores. It has projects in hand worth Rs. 180 crores. And among construction companies, it is one of the leading foreign exchange earners in the country.

The Unitech group's activity areas include construction engineering and real estate, manufacture of cold formed sections, installation and erection of transmission towers all over the world, and the manufacture of metal bodies for light commercial vehicles like Swaraj-Mazda and DCM-Toyota.

Unitech. It's the story of a great company. Unlike most stories, it doesn't have an ending. The best is yet to come.

UNITECH
LIMITED

Unitech House, 6 Community Centre
Saket, New Delhi-110 017

The state-of-the-art in construction engineering

ULKA-D-947(A)-UTC

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We are in a constant, worldwide race against time...

...but we'd love to pause a while and tell you how Skypak could change your world!

Imagine you're sitting in your office. You have a document in front of you. And you want it delivered to some other part of the world.

Pick up your telephone and dial the local Skypak number.

The moment you hear a friendly "nello' a chain is set in motion. A race begins. A race against time. You have the entire worldwide family of TNT SKYPAK at your service instantly! With 200 offices around the globe and 23 of them in India. And the services of 26,000 people in 48 countries.

But that's statistics. All you're concerned with is your parcel, your destination and your deadline. Well, that's what we are concerned with as well.

Our reputation for speed and efficiency on every job is internationally trusted for 2 decades! And every time you have a package to send, we have that reputation to keep. With pleasure.

SKYPAK

when it's wanted yesterday!

203 Jolly Bhavan No 2, 7 New Marine Lines, Bombay 400 020 Phone: 253703, 294454
Telex: 011 3339 SAI IN

• Ahmedabad: 443053 • Bangalore: 568862 • Baroda: 552285 • Bhubaneshwar 53456/55164 • Bombay: 294454/6320881 • Calcutta: 433298 • Cochin: 69012 • Delhi: 6414830 • Gandhidham: 3414 • Hosur 2373 • Hyderabad: 38237 • Kandla: 7437 • Madras: 474569/ 475091 • Mangalore: 24444 • Mapusa: 2440 • Margao: 2447 • Mysore 2444 • Pune: 54595 • Panjim: 5763 • Ranchi: 20055 • Trivandrum: 65261 • Vasco: 2403 • Visakhapatnam: 62223.

TNT SKYPAK
THE WORLD WIDE COURIERS

Please note: We don't carry non-commercial and personal material.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Avenues: SC: 160/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

At 17, he launched his first venture on a 60-sq ft plot across the Jamuna in Delhi. Now 31, Aggarwal presides over a clutch of firms that last year sold items worth Rs 15 crore.

companies, including the Singapore-based Far East Computers Pvt Ltd, should gross an estimated Rs 60 crore in sales by the year-end.

Around the same time a decade ago, Satish Kaura launched Teletube Electronics and later Samtel (India) Ltd to become the country's largest manufacturer of black and white television picture tubes (group turnover this year: Rs 50 crore); advertising guru R.K. Swamy quit Hindustan Thompson Associates to set up R.K. Swamy Advertising Associates Ltd in Madras (billings: Rs 12.5 crore this year); and moulded luggage baron Sumatichandra Mehta founded Safari Industries Ltd (estimated sales this year: over Rs 22 crore) in a room in a small industrial estate in Bombay.

These and other examples like them testify to one of the more remarkable developments of the last decade: an unprecedented flowering of enterprise. The statistics give some indication of how sweeping a trend it has been. Small units have more than quadrupled in number over the last 10 years, going up from 2.68 lakh in 1975 to 12.75 lakh this year (see chart). Over 90 per cent of them have investments in plant and machinery of less than Rs 2 lakh each, suggesting a record broadening of the entrepreneurial base. The small sector's output has soared by almost five times from the level a decade ago, it now accounts for one-fourth of total production in the organised sector, and employs nine million people, almost twice the number 10 years ago. And in the biggest achievement of them all, small businesses last year accounted for a staggering 26 per cent of the country's exports.

R.K. Swamy quit Hindustan Thompson Associates to set up R.K. Swamy Advertising Associates Ltd in Madras, with current billings of Rs 12.5 crore

In a fact that is rarely realised, small companies and new entrepreneurs were at the forefront of practically every business boom of the last decade, whether it was computers, television sets, consumer electronics, garments, diamond exports or advertising. And they frequently put the established large industrial houses in the shade with the quality of their performance, their ability to seize business opportunities and their aggressive feeding of burgeoning markets.

Remarkably enough, the giants of the corporate sector fell flat on their faces in precisely these areas. With losses piling up, the JK group had to pull out of manufacturing television sets, while the Sarabhais' Telerad limped along. In garments, virtually all the big boys, including cigarette behemoth ITC tested the waters, only to call it quits or retain a small presence in the field.

The two biggest export success stories of the last decade have been diamonds and garments. Both would have been impossible without the drive and zeal of new entrepreneurs pushing for the success of their new-born ventures. Garment exports this year will be around Rs 1,000 crore, compared to virtually nothing a decade ago, and diamond exports too will be over Rs 1,000 crore whereas a decade ago these hardly existed.

The small sector has plainly come of age, and tens of thousands of entrepreneurs have seized the opportunities of the decade. Some hitched their wagons on to larger units and became ancillaries, others used cheap bank credit (which occasionally went up to as high as 90 per cent of the cost of a project), special government facilities and exploited low overheads to outsell bigger competitors. Yet others seized the opportunity presented by preferential tax policy, as in the case of small manufacturers of air-conditioners who virtually took control of this rapidly growing market, reducing market leader Voltas to minority status. And in a number of cases, the Government reserved production for the small-sector.

There is little doubt that the entrepreneurial flowering in small industry would have been impossible without careful government nurturing. As D.H. Pai Panandikar, secretary-general of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) points out, there have been excise exemptions, price preferences in tendering for contracts, and subsidised power tariffs in some states. But most important of all, small units by and large have not required any licences from the Government, unlike many large units that have not been able to venture into numerous areas or expand because of licensing restrictions. But

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Moulded luggage baron Sumatichandra Mehta founded Safari Industries Ltd in a room in a small industrial estate in Bombay. Estimated sales this year: over Rs 22 crore.

incentives alone are not the prime mover. A survey of small units in Bombay, Bangalore, Hyderabad and Jaipur, commissioned by the Industrial Development Bank of India some time ago, on the effect of incentives found that they did not seem to have much to do with the success or failure of small business. In short, a genuine growth impulse has been at work.

At the ground level, successful firms attribute their scorching pace of growth to a host of other factors: marketing skills, being first in the market, a basic knowledge of the area of operation before entering it, product innovation, and an ability to take risks and brave new markets. What is equally clear is that a canny eye for protecting raw material sources, an emphasis on paring costs and overheads, operating in sheltered or sellers' markets, changing tack speedily whenever necessary, and personal attention to detail have paid off in more than one case. At another level, rising middle class affluence could have created a ready market for consumer goods, a market which the new entrepreneurs stepped in to feed.

Certainly, all these are important to success. Knowing the basics of the business is obviously essential, and many of the new businessmen seem to have qualified on this count before taking the plunge. K.Anji Reddy, who along with textile technologist C. Chandrasekhar Reddy floated Standard Organics Ltd (turnover in 1984: over Rs 14 crore) in Hyderabad five years ago, worked at the state-owned Indian Drugs and Pharmaceuticals Ltd. N.L.Thadani of Wings Wear Pvt Ltd (turnover: Rs 7.5 crore), the shirts and jeans company, worked for a fabrics company in west Africa before making a foray into garments at home. And Yash Verma, managing director of Beltek Electronics Pvt Ltd (turnover: Rs 30 crore), the television and audio equipment firm, roped in a brother from the US who was an engineer to provide the technical backup.

A.K. Puri, whose Mohan Exports, with a turnover this year of Rs 16 crore, ranks among the country's top garment exporters.

In consumer products, the importance of marketing skills and advertising are only too apparent. Predictably, the winners tend to have strengths in these areas. Mukesh Aggarwal, for example, is known for his marketing savvy and appreciation of consumer needs. The Fusebase boss didn't have the money to splurge on advertising when he decided to make a debut on the Delhi gas stove market four years ago. So he carefully cultivated dealers.

If marketing is one ingredient in success, spotting market opportunities, getting in on the ground floor, and the right timing are clearly others. A.K. Puri, whose Mohan Exports (turnover this year: Rs 16 crore) ranks among the country's top garment exporters, grants the point when he says: "I got in at the beginning and that helped." Ad man Swamy went early for public sector accounts, then almost virgin territory for new ad agencies. The Reddys floated Standard Organics to manufacture sulphamethoxazole, a basic drug, at a time when it was imported. In a sense, this is also true of computer companies like HCL. In October 1977, International Business Machines pulled out of the country, throwing the market wide open to the country's fledgling computer firms. Says an HCL spokesman: "That was a stroke of luck. We had announced the launching of a business machine; we were right there. We started demonstrating it in December." A.K. Aikat and A.K. Mukherjee launched Sonodyne (turnover last year: Rs 12.5 crore), the Calcutta-based audio equipment and television company, at a time when West Bengal was in the grip of an industrial crisis. Recalls Aikat: "Anyone who wanted to set up an industrial unit was treated like a VIP. We never had to wait in a queue for anything—land, loans or permission."

There is more to successful entrepreneurship than this of course. If HCL officials are to be believed, a combination of technical innovations and the development of know-how in-house put the group on the fast track. The R.K. Swamy agency came up with what may then have been a novel idea shortly after going into business. It pushed clients into selling products and conveying messages through letterheads and writing pads, a common enough practice now.

That apart, developing raw material options, cutting costs and sometimes plain chance have helped many to prosper. Kaura protected his raw material flanks by acquiring the know-how to make glass bulbs (which is at times scarce on world markets) out of glass components (which are more easily available abroad). Safari set up a plant in Gujarat because production and labour costs in Bombay were vastly higher. As for chance, Arun Kumar Mehta, the country's second largest diamond exporter (sales last year: over Rs 47 crore), reckons that his turning point came when the London-based Diamond Trading Corporation expanded its list of Indian "sightholders" (dealers invited to its auctions). "We were among the lucky few. That year, we did Rs 5-crore worth of business." His second break came when his brother married a girl in Belgium and set up shop there, thus providing business outlets in Antwerp.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GROWTH PROFILE OF SMALL SCALE INDUSTRY

But these elements are common to most corporate winners, big or small. What seems to have also pitchforked several small companies into the big time is that they operate in partially sheltered markets (the moulded luggage industry) and sellers' markets (jeans, where manufacturers cannot produce enough to meet the demand though this is also due to a shortage of denim). Bhaskar Sen, who set up Qualcrete last year in West Bengal to manufacture chemical additives, admits that he expects fat profits because only one other firm in south India makes his product.

Small firms also seem to have an edge in industries that call for personalised service, attention to detail and the flexibility to adapt quickly to changes in the business or technological environment. For instance, in the garments and electronics fields the small have ruled the roost. A chorus of garment and TV industry voices says that big companies delegate responsibility down the line and cannot swiftly change tack when necessary. Says garment exporter Puri: "The garments business is personalised, oriented to changing fashions and has to be tightly controlled. Professional managers do not have the motivation for all this." And most in the electronics business agree that big firms have so far had limited success in their field because of their lack of flexibility. That may not be the whole story of course. JK Cotton Director Govind Hari Singhania says that the Government did not sanction higher production capacities for his group, and so the group's electronics division was awash in red ink.

Finally, several small businessmen point out that it was far easier to obtain bank credit after 14 leading banks were nationalised in 1969. Aikat of Sonodyne lists this as having been of fundamental help. But there is a dark side to the small sector story. Some believe that the blandishments held out by the Government have lured big industry into floating small concerns. Also, not all small companies function very well (6.1 per cent of them are in sick bay), and the quality of goods manufactured by these firms is often questioned. There is some truth to the first point, as economist S.K. Goyal of the Indian Institute of Public Administration has shown in a study. Goyal also argues that "distortions have taken place in the policy on small units because they are defined in terms of the investment in plant and machinery (the qualifying limit is now Rs 35 lakh), instead of criteria like the technology involved, ownership or labour intensity." Thus many of the small sector's pacesetters qualify for the term small, though their turnovers would put them in the big league.

But government officials do not buy many of these arguments. Snaps P.P. Khanna, development commissioner, small-scale industries: "How many cases has Goyal cited? You can draw your own conclusions." And on the quality question, Khanna adds: "The undercurrent seems to be that the small sector is worse than the large. That's nonsense. Cars are made in the large sector, but how many of them are of international quality?"

But the real point about the entrepreneurial flowering of small business in the last decade is that it has buoyed the economy and provided the platform on which broad-based industrial growth can take place in the decade ahead.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI with N. RADHAKRISHNAN and bureau reports

Small units have more than quadrupled in numbers over the last ten years, suggesting a record broadening of the entrepreneurial base. Small business last year accounted for a staggering 26 per cent of the country's exports.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SATIRE

'AWARDS'

Mother Teresa's was well deserved as was Baba Amte's and Arun Shourie's. Shabana has been earning her's with monotonous regularity, so it was only fair that India Today should decide to present, in lighter vein, its own Awards of the Decade to those unsung Indians who worked unrecognised in their own fields. The award carries a certificate in triplicate and a bill for services rendered.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

SOLE OF THE DECADE AWARD

◆ To Chandra Shekhar, the bearded Old Turk, for his soleful efforts to give his Janata Party a leg up by embarking on the most protracted padyatra since Hannibal's Alpine endeavour. He set a blistering pace but unfortunately, his walkathon took so long that, by the time he limped home, he found his support base missing. He started off so sure, and by the end he was just sore.

THE MOST BORING NEGOTIATOR

◆ To Mizo rebel Laldenga who spent almost the entire decade trying to decide whether to surface or stay underground. Initially, revelling in rebelling, he decided to return to the comforts of home in a opulent RAW safe house in Delhi. When negotiations dried up, he departed in a huff for London and a semi-detached life, only to return before he was left without a cause. He was.

THE VANISHING CREAM AWARD

◆ To Subramaniam Swamy, the cream of the Emergency opposition, who went so far underground, he surfaced in the wrong states. Hurriedly metamorphised in his favourite environment, the Lok Sabha, and then did his vanishing trick again much to the embarrassment of Mrs Gandhi. Having nothing to hide during the Janata rule, spent much of the decade donning a professorial hat at Harvard. But harvar hard he tried, he still succeeded in vanishing from the public platform—travelling ticketless no doubt.

THE TEETOTALLER AWARD

◆ To Maharasthra's Ram Rao Adik, whose liquid assets proved more potent than his political ones. Rocked the boat when he got higher than he already was on an Air India flight and then tried to scotch charges that he had some embarrassing brushes with the air hostesses on board. Went on the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"A winner all the way via Amsterdam?"

"Yes! KLM has just announced their 'Win-on-the-Way' Bonanza!"

Bonanza is right!
Because a KLM flight to Amsterdam could easily mean a flight to the end of the rainbow. A treasure trove awaits you there. Come! Be a raider of the lost ark!

A Contest that could be a walkover for you! Try us.

If you're over 18 and flying KLM Royal or Business Class on an Intercontinental flight with a same day transfer at Amsterdam, you will be eligible for this fabulous offer upto 20 March 1986. From Holland Promotion Foundation.

Look what you Win-on-the-Way. It's simply, WOW!

5 Volvo 740 Turbo Estate Cars
The luxury car with more room, motoring comfort, quality and safety! What's more, it will be delivered in the country of the winner.

10 "Luxury Holland Holidays" for two Including: Royal/Business Class flight, 4 nights in Amsterdam and 3 nights in a castle!

150 sparkling diamonds
From the world-famous Amsterdam Diamond House of "Samuel Gassan"!

100 Tax-free shopping vouchers
To spend in the Amsterdam Airport Centre.

100 Avis car rental vouchers
Free car-hire from Avis.

A surprise awaits those who do not win the above prizes.

It's so simple, you just can't miss!

At the airport, along with the boarding pass, collect your Exchange Coupon and the Winner Brochure.
So, when booking, schedule your itinerary so as to avail of this tempting offer!
Come! Win-on-the-Way (WOW).
Over and over again.

Contact your travel agent, or call us at:

Ahmedabad 77677, Bangalore 28703, Bombay 221013, Calcutta 441221, Cochin 39165, Delhi 343998, Goa 2298, Hyderabad 36042, Jalandhar 76088, Madras 86356, Patna 25437, Pune 61358, Kathmandu 214895 and Dhaka 250357.

The Reliable Airline KLM
Royal Dutch Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MILEAGE PLUS!

Quite immodestly it's a breakthrough!

An Investment of Research

Crores of rupees of Modi Continental research has created R 80 – the state-of-the-art nylon car tyre.

To give you more

The R 80 premium is extra wide, giving you a surer grip.

The scientifically designed tread surface with 15% more non-skid depth, the seven zig zag shaped ribs and the width give you a road grip you've never known.

Beyond Expectation

Yes! It's a breakthrough beyond expectations. With better mileage than you ever thought was possible. Don't let technology pass you by. Change to R 80 — a footprint ahead of the rest.

Modi Continental

Tyre that never tires

Some complexions just never grow up!

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A peach of a look for Pears
—the original glycerine soap.

Pears keeps your skin young, innocent.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

A quality product by Hindustan Lever

NTAS PS 65 2821

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

wagon instead and swore never to touch another drop. Was himself dropped.

THE ECONOMIST AWARD

◆ To chieftian of the Jats Charan Singh who promised to turn the economy on its head if he was in charge. He was and he did. The country is still to recover from the hangover of his budgetary bash.

THE PHILANTHROPIST AWARD

◆ To Abdul Rehman Antulay, whose trust in Mrs Gandhi inspired him to make charitable deeds his chief priority as chief minister of Maharashtra. His powers of persuasion led to a flood of donations till he was stopped in his tracks by economist-turned-journalist Arun Shourie in the Indian Express and the courts which ruled to let him halfway off the hook.

THE DO GOODER AWARD

◆ To Menaka Gandhi, who left the First Family to do good in various fields. Tried politics but fielded the wrong team, took on brother-in-law Rajiv but discovered it was a different ball game, switched her ministrations to attempting a Mother Teresa with the animal kingdom, where she seems to have had better luck.

THE ROLLING STONE AWARD

◆ To George Fernandes, the eternal gladiator, who spent the decade rolling along in battle with Mrs Gandhi, Coca Cola and other assorted Goliaths but gathered very little moss. Now fighting from a new bunker for the Lok Sabha elections in Banka, Bihar.

THE ADVERTISING AWARD

◆ To Priya Tendulkar, whose rise from Rajani to riches brought in a flood of advertising coffers. Unfortunately, she forgot her lines in the contracts and wound up plugging competing detergents leading to a lot of dirty linen being washed in public.

THE CAPITALIST ROADER AWARD

◆ To Jyoti Basu who managed to successfully produce his own version of the Gospel according to Marx by laying out the red carpet for industrialists and entrepreneurs while consistently blaming the Centre for diluting his dogma.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MEDIA

OFF WITH THE COBWEBS

Among the most noteworthy and remarkable developments of the decade was the coming of age of the Indian press. During the Emergency it seemed beyond repair, ready for a final epitaph. But a strange thing happened on the way to its funeral, it rose, suddenly, with Phoenix-like alacrity to heights of maturity and adventure.

AJIT NINAN

"The Emergency affected the politicisation of the Indian middle class with the result that they wanted to know more and more about the people ruling them."
ARUN SHOURIE
freelance journalist

IT WAS almost as if a Jack Anderson or a Seymour Hersh, having donned the garb of a media Johnny Appleseed had criss-crossed the Fleet Streets of India's cities and muffasil towns. Overnight, it seemed, there germinated—miraculously—a new strain of journalist charging and tilting at the windmills of hidebound government handoutery.

Former World Bank economist Arun Shourie in his new avatar as executive editor of the Indian Express took on Congress(I) Party boss A.N. Antulay in a series of muckraking stories, in one of which he called the Cabinet minister a liar—and got away with it. Shourie's crusading shovel work—trail-blazing effort though it was—was hardly unique to the frenetic pace of investigative reporting that appeared with rapid-fire regularity during the past, fateful decade. Ashwini Sahn, another gutsy reporter for the Express deliberately got himself arrested on charges of drunkenness so he could do time in the clink in Delhi's notorious Tihar jail in order to be able to report first-hand on conditions inside as well as on the jail mafia.

Also fighting free of the dreary desert sands of the dead ink that had characterised so much of Indian journalism of the past was Bombay freelance journalist Sheela Barse who followed up a poignant series of articles on child prostitution with direct action by moving the courts to release children languishing in a remand home. Arun

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sinha of the Express dug into the reports that police had deliberately blinded under-trial prisoners in Bhagalpur, Bihar. The Times of India's Praful Bidwai broke through barriers of secrecy erected by India's powerful nuclear establishment and laid bare the inefficiencies plaguing the system. And long before the Bhopal cataclysm established methyl isocynate as a household name, Raajkumar Keswani, editor of Saaptahik Report, an obscure weekly, had sounded several reportorial alarms warning of the impending tragedy.

The last decade, undoubtedly, had cut a swath of excitement and vitality through the quagmire of staid punditry in which Indian journalism had bogged down. So far as the media was concerned 1975 had rolled in as the worst of times. The declaration of the Emergency and the ubiquitous censor's scissors had snipped away at whatever dreams the Indian public had dreamed about of a free and unfettered press. Journalists and editors, when asked to bend by the Emergency's autocrats, chose instead to crawl.

But with the Emergency's end—and the rededication of the Janata government to the ideal of a free press—India's Fourth Estate came back on a rebound perhaps unmatched anywhere else in the world. It was as if Prometheus had been unchained. A revolution was underway not only of style and substance but also in variety, management, circulation, technology, professionalism, marketing and design.

The boom in circulation is a dramatic illustration of this phenomenon. In 1975 there were about 225 publications—newspapers and magazines—with a combined circulation of just over 14 million. In 1985 there are over 300 publications with a combined circulation of more than 26 million. Put another way this means that one significant periodical (circulation:12,000) has appeared on the news-stands every month-a-half during the last 10 years. By any standard this is a phenomenal rate of growth considering that the price of newsprint rose to a staggering threefold.

And consumer demand for the media product remained elastic as witness the cost of the daily edition of The Times of India which has risen to 90 paise without affecting the sales or circulation. Only part of this seemingly unquenchable newsthirst can be attributed to the rise of India's nearly 70-million strong middle class and the purchasing power it commands. Arun Shourie offers an additional explanation.

"The Emergency," he notes, "affected the politicisation of the Indian middle class with the result that they wanted to know more and more about the people ruling them." And the job that these readers and consumers wanted the new breed of eagerly responding reporters and editors to do for them was, as Mobashar Jawed Akbar, editor of the The Telegraph of Calcutta, put it, "to take the cobwebs out of reporting."

And they went about their work with a happy vengeance — responding to demand where they sensed it or, in keeping with Say's law, first furnishing a supply that would create its own demand. The most striking and attractive debutants on the media stage now swirling with the winds of change were the news-and-views magazines like India Today and Sunday—attractively packaged, carefully written, and combining vision and seriousness of purpose with entertainment.

And the spirit was infectious. Vinod Mehta, an advertising executive in London returned to India to start Debonair, the Indian playboy. Mehta now edits the sophisticated Sunday Observer whose circulation has topped 60,000. Poet and PR-man Pritish Nandy has been engineering the long overdue face-lift for the Times stable of magazines. Dilip Thakore, a lawyer by training teamed up with a colleague to bring out Business India, the largest selling business periodical. Says Thakore: "I realised when I was working with a company that there was very little for a manager to read, and Business India was born out of that need."

These developments also bought to shore in their wake a cavalcade of trendily written bitchsheets, "people" magazines, and film mags. Their leader, Stardust, began to set the pace and pitch. The woman behind Stardust, who later started two other successful magazines. Society and Celebrity boasts: "We made a religion out of irreverence."

"I realised when I was working with a company that there was very little for a manager to read, and Business India was born out of the need."
DILIP THAKORE
editor, Business World

SYMBOLS OF THE MAGAZINE BOOM

The almost instantaneous success of the "personality" ethos wafted into the newsrooms of the business magazines as well. Even Thakore reluctantly admits: "There is greater emphasis on the human resource in the industry."

The human resources who ushered into journalism's new decade the investigative scoop, the personality profiles, the gripping photofeature, the startling interview benefited dramatically from their entrepreneurship. They had become part of the growing world of big business journalism.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The revolution in the language press will continue for some time."
GOVIND TAWALKAR
editor, Maharashtra Times

Banished were the days when the journalist was part of the underpaid underclass, wearing the bottoms of his trousers rolled and measuring his impoverished life in cupfuls of cheap rum at the local press club. The mandarins have now risen and senior members of the caste now revel in hefty four-figure salaries. Editors in the newer magazines can get away with five-figure incomes. Even the sub-editors of yesteryear — the Harijans of the fraternity — now begin jobs in progressive organisations with four-figure packets. With so much money beckoning several senior journalists have quit cradle-to-grave secure positions to strike out on their own as syndicated columnists. And they are getting rich quick.

The revolution affected not only the message but the medium carrying the message. Several of the country's leading publications are as attractively, imaginatively produced and laid out as their counterparts in the West. The glue-besotten designer of yore who died of old age and rum on his cut-and-paste cardboard frame is today an important man of technology and sophistication. Offset printing today is the rule rather than the exception as are the photocomposing and colour. Types are chosen with conscientious care. The Times group, slowly shaking off its dinosaur syndrome is joining the fray. Its flagship The Illustrated Weekly of India is bolder in language, catchier in headline, more striking in photography, resplendant in good colour, and thoughtful in lay-out. Nandy calls this "The transformation of the visual grammar of a magazine. Design is just as much a journalist's tool as the pen he uses: it can get your point across well, if not better. And now the Express group (combined net circulation: 2 million) is engaged in a Rs 4 crore revamping and expansion programme.

THE PATH-BREAKING EXPOSÉS

"Design is just as much a journalist's tool as the pen he uses: it can get your point across well, if not better."
PRITISH NANDY
editor, Illustrated Weekly of India

But the action is just not confined to the English press. The language press is also zipping along at breakneck speed. In Andhra Pradesh, unabashed N.T. Rama Rao supporter Ramoji Rao's Telugu Eenadu is pushing 400,000. The Express' Hindi daily Jansatta, started in Delhi two years ago, sells more than 110,000 copies. Says Govind Talwalkar, editor of the Bombay-based Maharashtra Times: "The revolution in the language press will continue for some time."

This is also the decade of the specialised magazines and a glut of new periodicals now feed the information needs of purchase managers, computer programmers, health care professionals, share brokers, investors, real estate brokers, and fashion designers. Many of them have begun to show modest returns on investment within months after hitting the news-stands. Industrial Products Finder—a glossy showpiece for products—is so successful that a sister publication, Imprint, can piggyback on its profits. Sterling Newspapers Pvt Ltd, run by former newshound Minhaz Merchant, publishes a series of magazines on television, the corporate world, and technology.

True, the decade justifies the euphoria over the media business. But now the bad news. It's largely the magazines which have caught the aggressive spirit of the decade. And notwithstanding the Express group's expansion plans and the Times' move to Lucknow and Bangalore, the newspapers have by and large disdainfully side-stepped it. The capital's main daily continues to be the Hindustan Times, badly written, badly produced, and confused in planning and vision. And even the Express has lost some of the punch it packed during the Shourie years. And signs are that magazine market may be tapering off. Sunday's circulation has reportedly dropped below a lakh. The Hindu group's Frontline, a glossy newsmagazine with splendidly reproduced colour pictures has slowed after an initial spurt. The Bangalore-based Deccan Herald's attempt to bring out another Economist called the Herald Review was a disastrous flop. The Express group has shelved plans for a newsmagazine because, as General Manager J.C. Jain puts it: "We can't find a suitable editor."

There is also a growing disenchantment among readers about the contents in the publications born of the journalism boom of the decade. Complains Shourie: "How many journalists, writing about the Anandpur Sahib resolution, the Gujarat reservation issue, or Shah Bano, bothered to give their readers anything other than human interest stories and pictures? If the print media is to compete with TV, it must go beyond the mere reporting of events and concentrate more on analysis and forecasting."

The last 10 years have undoubtedly been ones for print and its people. They have survived prolonged spells of darkness like the Emergency, have resisted attacks on their freedom like Jagannath Mishra's press bill.

But TV is still an untried commodity and few projections for the print media can be made for the next 10, or even the next five years: all dressed up it certainly is but where it will go, in another desperate sub-editor's words, remain to be seen. Only time will tell. —JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

What the well-dressed bathroom is wearing...

NEYCER

Neycer

In 23 jewel colours

Neiveli Ceramics and Refractories Limited
VADALUR P.O. 607 303 Tamil Nadu

Beauty in your bathroom, beauty that lasts

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'MY DECADE'

For some individuals, the decade was far more eventful than for the rest, whether in their personal or professional capacity. In a sense, their memories of the decade also reflect the changes that took place in their respective areas of operation over the last ten years. INDIA TODAY picked the most representative and asked them to document in their own words, their decade and its vicissitudes.

RAMAKRISHNA HEGDE

For Ramakrishna Hegde, Karnataka chief minister, the last ten years have been the most momentous of his 48 years. As Congress(O) leader of the Opposition in the Legislative Council during the Emergency, he was jailed. In 1977, when the Janata Party was formed, Hegde became its general secretary, a post he held right through the disastrous years of the Janata government till 1983 when he was asked by the party to head the Karnataka Government with a slender majority. Warding off repeated onslaughts by the Congress (I) to topple his government, Hegde proved himself a brilliant strategist and when assembly elections were held last March the Janata Party came home with a solid majority in the state Assembly, establishing him as a regional force. Here, in his own words, are his reminiscences of those eventful years.

"I was very happy when we lost the elections in 1980. I felt the Opposition got the treatment that they deserved. Our real worth had been exposed and we showed ourselves to be narrow-minded and self-centred."

IN 1975, I thought I was going to die in detention. I had been arrested after Emergency was clamped and was put into a single room cell in Belgaum jail. I was very sad and depressed and felt I should have perhaps gone underground and done something. It was the blackest period in our history and all democratic institutions were defiled, devalued and demoralised.

I was terribly lonely in jail but it was a great education too. It gave me time to reflect and come face to face with myself. It made me come to terms with my weaknesses. I was a bit proud. Maybe my pride bordered on arrogance. But being in jail mellowed me. Since Madhu Dandavate, then a socialist, and L.K.Advani of the Jan Sangh were also in the same jail, we were able to wipe out the prejudices that we had against each other.

We welcomed the news of the elections in 1977 and knew we could win if we had a united opposition. I knew that dictatorship cannot continue because it breeds its own enemies.

When we won, I thought it was a great moment for Indian democracy and the biggest ever event after Independence. I thought it would be the beginning of the two party system in the country. But that was not to be. It didn't take much time for our leaders to become arrogant and complacent.

By early 1978, it had become obvious that we could not stay together for long. Our leaders had become criminally indifferent to the mandate the people had given them. They did not recognise the danger of having an adversary like Mrs Gandhi who had always been a great fighter. At every level, we functioned as several parties with a very thin veneer of the Janata label holding us together.

I was extremely disgusted and you know, I was very happy when we lost the elections in 1980. I felt the Opposition got the treatment that they deserved. Our real worth had been exposed and we showed ourselves to be narrow-minded and self-centred.

For almost two years after that, there was no motivating force or physical strength to push us along. We continued to lose the elections everywhere and it increased my dejection. I felt the efforts being made to bring the Opposition together was a futile exercise. There was no point in taking people back who practically murdered the party. It was a period of deep introspection for me too. But in 1983 something happened that never in my wildest dream I thought would have occurred. I was made chief minister of Karnataka. I had left state politics 10 years ago and had never thought that I would return.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

I took up the assignment with mixed feelings. I had not been in touch with the local administration for a long time. But I had plenty of ideas for Karnataka and it was a challenge and an opportunity to implement them. But there was an element of uncertainty because of our slender majority and this created a feeling of nervousness for me. It was the first time I was number one. Now, I had complete freedom to do what I wanted.

My first term as chief minister was the most challenging period in my political career but I thoroughly enjoyed every moment of it. It was a terrible strain on my health and I must have aged more than 10 years. I took a political decision to resign after we lost the Lok Sabha elections last year so that I could come back stronger as I was being stifled by the lack of a proper majority. In the event, it turned out to be a right decision and we won in the assembly elections. But I am not very happy with my second term. We had a severe drought, we are facing a financial crisis and many of our MLA's have become complacent.

Other things worry me too. There seem to be two Indias emerging now. The fruits of development have not been shared equally and I find a large part of the people left far behind. But if in 1975, the sun was eclipsed, now at least it is shining again in India."

"

SUNIL MANOHAR GAVASKAR

Sunil Manohar Gavaskar and Indian sport have been two sides of the same coin for over a decade. Now, in the twilight of a magnificent cricketing career, he can afford to look back at the last ten years with particular personal satisfaction. It was during the decade that he established himself as one of cricket's all-time greats, apart from the number of world records that he created along the way and the new element of professionalism he injected into Indian sport. He had his disappointments as well, including losing the captaincy and even facing the mortification of being dropped from the team. But for all that, it was, as he says, his most satisfying decade as a sportsman. Here, in his own words, are his recollections of the decade, as a cricketer, as a member of the Indian sporting fraternity, and as the new spokesman for professional sport.

FOR ME, the last decade started on a sad note. I had an injury and could not play in the majority of matches against the West Indies in 1974-75. Then came that very forgettable—but unfortunately not for me and a lot of people—World Cup innings of 36 not out. There have been ups and downs since then, but thankfully it has been more of ups for me than downs. Anyway I would rather remember the ups than the downs.

There were the wins against Pakistan, against Australia, that fabulous run chase where we got 400 against the West Indies in 1976 to win the Test, the World Cup win in 1983, the world championship win this year, these have been the high points of the decade. It has been a very pleasant 10 years. I really cannot think of many incidents that would be regrettable as far as Indian cricket is concerned.

Yes. I was removed from captaincy, but that was a selectors' decision. I suppose if people can appoint me they can also remove me. So you take it just the way you do when you are selected for one Test and dropped for another Test. The selectors are appointed to do a job and they do it. You have to go on and try to do your best.

Cricket has given me so much in the last decade that whatever odd disappointments I might have had in life do not compare anywhere near the pleasures that I have got out of playing for India. I have toured so many countries, made so many friends and met so many important people all over the world. How else would I have had the opportunity to sit at the same table with prime ministers?

Some of these meetings are etched in memory, like the ones with Mrs Indira Gandhi for instance. She has been a source of inspiration to all of us. Every time we won or did well; every time I did well individually there was a message or a telegram waiting when I got home. There were the meetings with the former Australian prime minister Malcolm Fraser in Delhi, with his successor Bob Hawke and Forbes Burnham of Guyana.

For me cricket has been a way of life. You have a team, you play. You can't do anything on your own. But I think I have managed to keep a fair line of demarcation between the game and my personal life. When I am through with all this maybe I will go back to a 9-5 job or perhaps some business. But I want to continue to make some contribution to the

"I just like to assume that people think I have done my job as best as I can. I might have failed. But by and large when I finish my circketing days I would like people to think of me as a person who tried his best."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized By Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

game more in the form of helping younger people.

The last decade has been one of spectacular changes in cricket with the Packer influence which has changed not just Indian cricket, but cricket all over the world. Then there was the fading away of spinners and the emergence of Kapil Dev. We have had some good wins but fairly bad losses as well. We lost to teams we should not have lost to.

The emergence of one-day cricket is a phenomenon which has occurred in the last 10 years. When you look it one way, one-day cricket is what everybody starts off with. But until 1974 there were no one-day internationals. In 10 years the one-day game has gained a lot of followers and has become an integral part of the international cricket calendar. I think one of its positive aspects is the attention paid to physical fitness. The fielding has also improved beyond recognition.

I see every possibility of Indian cricket going from strength to strength, but it is all up to the players. There is a lot of batting talent in the country, but I do not see any bowlers around of whom I can say 'This guy is going to be match winner.' I have always believed that with the kind of cricket fanaticism that exists in our country, all the records, or what the statisticians make of records, should belong to Indians.

My own record over Bradman, that was a nice thing to achieve. About my other achievements, I would rather not speak about that. It is for others to judge. I just like to assume that people think I have done my job as best as I can. I might have failed. But by and large when I finish my cricketing days I would like people to think of me as a person who tried his best.

We talk of professionalism in Indian cricket in a fairly loose way. I think it is a question of attitude. You are out there knowing that your livelihood depends on the game you play. That is what I guess professional attitude is. I suppose most players would like to think that they have the professional attitude. But it is for different people to judge in different ways.

The Players Management Group is a very recent thing. It is a new development in India. It has not been just my wife's idea. It has been an idea with a couple of other people who are with me. But it will take some time to get off. We want to do something so that sportsmen can play their game and leave financial worries to others."

"

SHASHI KAPOOR

Shashi Kapoor is a distinguished 47 now, his hair streaked with generous strands of white with patches of red. He put on weight for his Utsav role and though currently on a regimented diet, now bears a startling resemblance to his famous father and film pioneer, Prithviraj Kapoor. For him, it has been a decade of major career upheavals and personal tragedies with the death of his wife, Jennifer, and his attempts to straddle the two swiftly moving worlds of art and commercial cinema. It was a decade which started with him finally making it into the top bracket after many years in the wilderness and then producing his own films. But a combination of bad luck and celluloid mishaps countered whatever financial remuneration his new-found status guaranteed. Looking back, Kapoor reminiscences on what has been his most eventful decade.

"If anyone had told me in 1975 that I would in 1985 have built Prithvi Theatre and made serious films of my own, I would have laughed at them."

IT'S BEEN a very dramatic decade for me, with enormous changes in my personal and professional life as well as in the Indian cinema scene. In 1975, I had suddenly become a very big star—Deewar, Kabhie Kabhie, Roti Kapda aur Makaan. I was acting in maybe four or five films a day and to top it all, I had just been signed by my brother for Satyam Shivam Sunderam. After 15 years of knocking around in films, I was finally tasting big success.

It was then, in 1977, that Jennifer and I sat down and talked things over. It would, we realised, be a futile exercise to continue like this and we decided to do two things that were to change our lives completely. We would build Prithvi Theatre and form our own company, Filmvalas. Well, we got started on both. Work on Junoon began that same year and the theatre was finally completed in November 1978. It was actually Jennifer's effort; we raised money for it through cricket matches and such like and Amit (Amitabh Bachchan) and Sanjeev (Kumar) helped out. That was a very fulfilling period for me. After that we were set. Kalyug followed, then 36, Chowringhee Lane which I consider to be the best-acted film made in India, then Vijeta and finally Utsav which got to the screen 18 months after it was completed. By then, I just didn't care about it or my career—Jennifer was ill and despite a number of operations, we knew the end was inevitable. She died on September 7, 1984 at her favourite hour; breakfast time.

The decade can't be said to have been a financial success. Junoon barely recovered its cost

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and Kalyug lost money. By that time, the market, specially the overseas market, was dropping very rapidly because of video. 36, Chowringhee Lane bombed and we got peanuts for it. Utsav found no buyers partly because of the state of the market and partly because of false rumours that its video tapes were out and we had to really struggle to sell the film, but it's doing well enough now.

Personally, it's been an enormously eventful decade. I have just done a role in New Delhi Times which is said to be good—it's the first time I have acted in the 'good' cinema in films other than my own. I'm also working in about 15 films in the Hindi film industry which over the years has deteriorated considerably in taste and content. It's just one big masala factory now.

But I plan to continue working the mainline circuit. Of course, I have shifted to character roles but it's a bit odd to be Ashok Kumar's contemporary in one film and address him as 'tu'. I am 47 and he's 75, almost a generation older. I am also playing a villain in Bhowani Junction which is a new mask for me to wear. So you can see that there have been constant and unpredictable changes throughout the decade. But if anyone had told me in 1975 that I would in 1985 have built Prithvi Theatre and made serious films of my own, I would have laughed at them."

"

KHUSHWANT SINGH

He has always walked arm in arm with controversy. As a writer and historian who jumped headlong into journalism and pepped up the staid Illustrated Weekly with some salacious sex and later unabashedly championed Sanjay Gandhi even to the extent of praising the tin cans then being produced in the Gurgaon shed which later took the name of Maruti. His support for the mercurial Sanjay and his wispy wife Menaka and the alternating love-hate relationship with Indira Gandhi has caused him to be "tossed about by political changes in the country". One thing journalism's Blackbeard Khushwant Singh, 70, has never lacked is courage to say what he thinks and feels strongly about. He called Bhindranwale "demented" and "madman". He talks about things that happened to him and around him during this tumultuous decade.

THE LAST decade has been disturbing as well as rewarding. In 1979 I was fired from the Weekly which I had edited for 9 years. I have little doubt I was put out of the Illustrated Weekly because of my support for Mrs Gandhi when she was in the Opposition and that later I got the Hindustan Times editorship and the Rajya Sabha nomination because she came back to power. The Weekly is an old story. I had criticised Morarji's government and he was very upset. He spoke to the proprietor about me. Morarji rang me up personally to say he had not done it but Ashok Jain said he had. Now I don't know which one is telling the truth. I have reason to believe it was either Morarji or his son Kanti. It was shabby, the manner in which I was told one morning to hand over. I just walked out.

But Mrs Gandhi was worried about my constant criticism. I have reason to believe my leaving the Hindustan Times and Menon's appointment was largely the doing of P.C. Alexander, her main advisor and the man who misled her about Punjab. I did not meet Mrs Gandhi after Sanjay's death except when she asked me to intercede with Menaka. I did not succeed and Mrs Gandhi—she could be very petty—thought I was Menaka's main supporter. She looked for an opportunity to snub me but I did not give her the chance.

The political developments have been more dramatic. I had a fairly active time in the Rajya Sabha where I think Mrs Gandhi deserved more criticism for mishandling Punjab. The Akali members had resigned and being the only non-Congress Sikh I voiced the Sikh point of view. I was one of the few who warned Mrs Gandhi that touching the Golden Temple would spell disaster. I was correct and a bloodbath of terrible dimensions resulted. I returned my Padma Bhushan in protest and brought the wrath of the Hindu community on my head. But this gave me a kind of rapprochement with my own community which I never enjoyed in the past.

I was one of the few Rajiv Gandhi consulted during negotiations with Akali leaders. In our initial meetings, I unburdened my mind in no uncertain terms. He said "I don't agree with what you say but now tell us what we should do". Whatever I spelled out has come to pass, and this has changed my mind about Rajiv. I earlier had doubts about his succession but he has bettered expectations. I have become an ardent admirer; he has done some things which compel admiration.

"I was one of the few who warned Mrs Gandhi that touching the Golden Temple would spell disaster. I was correct and a bloodbath of terrible dimensions resulted."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"MRF TYRES? What have they to do with the Space Shuttle?"

MRF TYRES are made in technical collaboration with the sole supplier of tyres to the NASA Space Shuttle programme.

And there's no question about it.
MRF TYRES with a turnover of 200 crores, is a major force in the Indian tyre industry.

- The first Indian tyres chosen for the Maruti, the Gypsy and the Maruti Van.
- The first Indian tyres chosen for the Contessa. Currently largest suppliers and first with Radials.
- The largest tyre suppliers to Defence.
- The first Indian tyres to be exported to the USA – the very birth-place of tyre making.
- The first multi-plant Indian tyre company.
- The first company in India to introduce Nylon Car Tyres.
- The only Indian tyre company to win quality improvement awards in competition with international tyre plants.

Now you know why MRF TYRES are tyres with muscle.

Now you know

MRF TYRES

The Company with Muscle

MRF TYRES are made in technical collaboration with the BF Goodrich Company of the USA – sole supplier of tyres to the NASA Space Shuttle

LINTAS M MRF COR 19 2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

even undoing things in which his mother was a collaborator. Apart from letting violence against Sikhs go on and later exploiting anti-Sikh feelings to win the election, he has shown the courage to take decisions. He is willing to gamble on political issues and he can trust people, something his mother never did. But I always warn him of the sycophants that surround anyone who has so much power. The ones around him are subtle. Mrs Gandhi had come to a stage when she couldn't tell subtle flattery from blatant and even preferred the blatant. This, Rajiv Gandhi has to be warned against. There are symptoms that he is falling victim to this by ignoring democratic institutions. He does not take parliament and the President as seriously as his mother and grandfather did.

"

SWRAJ PAUL

Whether as a corporate-raider with an unquenchable appetite or an industrialist launching multi-million pound ventures or his friendships with powerful political figures, bald-pated and portly Swraj Paul retains a knack of remaining in the news. His second glossy book on Indira Gandhi has a foreword by both Rajiv Gandhi and Margaret Thatcher. His battles with Escorts and DCM have now become part of Indian corporate legend. At his gleaming new headquarters "Caparo House" on London's Baker Street, Paul sits surrounded by cartoons and photographs with the Gandhis. Appearing remarkably unscathed after his bloody boardroom battles in India, Paul is now planning big new ventures—a steel plant in Goa, a fertiliser plant in Rajasthan. Paul's reminiscences centre round his unquestioning admiration for the late Indira Gandhi.

THE MOST significant development in India in the last decade, in my view, is the firm establishment of democracy in the country. In 1975 some people thought all of a sudden democracy was coming to an end. But the elections—in '77 and '80—ended these speculations.

To me, the most dominant figure in Indian politics was Mrs Gandhi. My association with her goes before the decade to 1967. I saw her during the critical days in 1975 just after the Allahabad judgement. I felt I must go to India and say my bit. I found her so composed and she couldn't have cared less about the prime minister's job and she was all ready to resign until all the fellows in the Congress Party who later walked out on her in 1977 were insisting she shouldn't resign.

For me those were critical days since I faced intense criticism here in the UK. I was a lone voice who argued that Mrs Gandhi is very democratic and not many people were ready to believe it.

Was the Emergency defensible at all? Well, firstly nobody can justify an abuse taking place irrespective of whether it is during the Emergency, pre-Emergency or post-Emergency or under any rule. The problem in India at that period was some of our people got so carried away by the word "emergency" that they forgot that excesses can be done with or without the Emergency. The other problem was that too many little fellows were settling their personal scores when it was difficult to know the truth what with the censorship.

Being involved in controversial news stories is never good. But as far as the recent battles are concerned, I have certainly enjoyed what has gone on because the biggest contribution I think I have made to Indian corporate life is that I have brought into focus the abuses which are taking place. I have broken some myths—such as people who call themselves the owners are not really the owners at all—a lot of abuse of public funds is taking place right before the very eyes of the shareholders. And I have proved that a few families are really monopolising government funds and unless that is broken all these ideas of socialism will remain on paper.

"The biggest contribution I think I have made to Indian corporate life is that I have brought into focus the abuses which are taking place."

Is the Government giving a better deal for the private sector? What exactly do you mean by the private sector? I don't consider Messrs Escorts as private sector what with 54 per cent public holdings. This is a misnomer. These are government companies and they ought to be treated as such. I am not pro- or-anti family-run concerns. What I am simply saying is that you should not treat a public limited company as a private one.

NRI's indeed face obstacles in India. Firstly I do not think the Indian environment really does not want NRI investment. It is all very well for the Government wishing to encourage it but then they have a system which sets up obstacles. Because the private sector fellows feel they have the monopoly on the control of the industry, they have not allowed any Indian to come up. Never mind non-resident Indians but even resident Indians. They fear competition. There are 11

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

• For Information Only.

"My Video."

FULL SERVICE National NETWORK

NV-780EM VHS

- 7-system (PAL, PALI, NTSC 4.43, NTSC 3.58, MESECAM, SECAM, LONG PLAY) video cassette recorder
- 8-hour recording and playback • AC Auto (110-240 volt)

TC-AL2600 WORLD 14 SYSTEM

Alpha α Series 66 cm (26") colour TV
- World 14-system
- New vertical design
- Twin built-in woofers with sound reflectors
- 26-key infra-red remote control
- Built-in stereo amplifier

"When it comes to video cassette recorders, I know performance and features are critical. That's why I go with Japan's largest-selling brand of consumer electronics, National.

"One of National's most popular video cassette recorders . . . and one of my personal favourites . . . is the 7-system NV-780EM. It records and plays back the two most important systems, PAL and MESECAM. And even if you can't be home, you won't miss a single program; simply set the 14-day program timer to record it. The wireless remote control is convenient too, with fingertip command over all major VTR functions.

"Add a National TC-AL2600 'Alpha Series' colour TV and you've got the perfect TV/video combination; TC-AL2600 14-system viewing and an extra-large 26-inch picture tube provide a whole new world of video entertainment.

"If you're like me, you want superior performance when you buy anything electronic.
I go out of my way to buy National. Shouldn't you?"

Mithun Chakraborty

National

National Authorized Service Centres in India

BUSH INDIA LTD.
- Rajmahal Building, 33 Altamount Road, Bombay 400 026 Tel: 351979/351799
- 36 Community Centre, Basant Lok, Vasant Vihar New Delhi 110 057 Tel: 607815
- 26 Farrah Commercial Complex, J.C. Road, Bangalore 560 002 Tel: 223771/223149

ESQUIRE SERVICE CENTRE
(For video-related products only)
- Unit No. 1A & 1B Ground Floor Rehmat Manzil, 75 Veer Nariman Road Churchgate, Bombay 400 020 Tel: 882 8857

INDUS AIR CONDITIONING PVT. LTD.
(For home appliances only)
- 371, Cadell Road, Prabhadevi, Bombay 400 028 Tel: 422 37 29/422 37 37

ASSOCIATED ELECTRICAL AGENCIES
- Anugraha 19 Nungambakkam High Road, Madras

BUSH INDIA LTD.
- Cochin (Opening Soon)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

families controlling 80 per cent of government funds. These people are a 'special class' who function themselves as a 'super-government'. Fortunately the present Government has put the handle on them and there is less talk of buying up ministers or bureaucrats than before.

I am very pleased by the performance of the new Government and the initiatives of the prime minister. I think Rajiv Gandhi is very determined to shake up the bureaucracy. He has also got around him a very good team. Unlike some of the members of Mrs Gandhi's government who pledged their loyalty to her but were working at cross-purposes. That sort of thing does not exist any more. The liberalisation programme started by Mrs Gandhi and continued by Rajiv Gandhi has already produced fine results. Our debt management has been good. And India's credit rating is high. I think we are on the right track and the future looks promising."

"

SALMA SULTAN

People have been watching Salma Sultan for almost as long as they have been watching television in India. But Salma is more than just a pretty face who comes home most evenings, softly informing us about people, politics and the weather. Reading the news has been an emotional odyssey for her and the last decade more so than ever. She was there during the Emergency, the Janata rule, the return of the Congress(I) to the Centre, the assassination of Mrs Gandhi and the arrival of Rajiv. And she was there when television switched to colour shortly before the Asiad. Now with television making its way into the remotest corners of the country, Salma's audience has multiplied. She has grown with the medium, gaining self-confidence, insight and awareness just the way television has. It has been a decade, she says, when both came of age.

I JOINED Doordarshan in 1967 as an announcer. Newsreading was not in my cards, although I was fascinated by it and wanted to do it someday. I was rather young so they wanted to wait till I matured as a woman. Then one day, a TV newsreader did not turn up and I was informed that I had to read the news. I was very nervous, I kept waiting to say samachar samapt hue.

I believe in destiny. I would never have enjoyed any other job as much. Here you cannot hide your personality, you are able to utilise your full capabilities. Even today, after so many years reading the news gives me the same enjoyment. That thrill hasn't gone, it can never go since you're always accountable to people. The only difference is that now I can hide my nervousness.

I saw TV during its teething problems. Now it has come of age. I can say the same of myself. This job has given me objectivity, tremendous self-confidence, an insight into myself. At every stage I've had to evaluate myself since the demands of the medium have kept changing. Technically it has changed enormously although I think the news content has not changed that much. It's still not as professional as it should be.

Fame has been coming slowly but suddenly a year ago it increased tremendously. With the onset of the national network, suddenly everyone knows you, so many more people appreciate you, so many more people criticise you. Everything happened so suddenly. I thought colour would come when my hair turned grey. I never thought I would see myself in colour, but there it is. I am more particular now about the way I dress than I was a decade ago.

My fan mail has also increased greatly. Earlier I used to get very sedate letters, now there are a few weird ones, including some from very persistent writers who insist I like them and even dress for them. It amazes me how close they can feel to a person in a box. After the national hook-up, I was very scared that I might be bothered like film stars, but although people approach me on the roads, it is always with respect. I guess television is that kind of a medium.

So much has changed during the last decade. I was there during the Emergency, during the Janata phase and I'm there now. Although I have tried to retain my objectivity always, a human being cannot but be affected by the news he or she is reading. Some things have affected me more than others. Like the Bhopal tragedy last year. I come from Bhopal, I know every corner of it. When I was reading out the gas deaths, I almost broke down. It was my training before the cameras that prevented me. Tragedies affect me but I always try to be objective. Politically, I think our new prime minister is doing a tremendous job. Within such a short time so many things have been done. It gives one hope.

"Even today reading the news gives me the same enjoyment. That thrill hasn't gone, it can never go since you are always accountable to people. The only difference is that now I can hide my nervousness."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tim

FOR THE NEW E

Allwyn Watches.
Creations of the latest
Japanese technology.
Dynamic styling,
precision timekeeping.
Yours in a wide wide ran

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEW GENERATION

ALLWYN
WATCHES
Handwound • Automatic • Quartz
Manufactured under licence from SEIKO

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pan Am. The Easiest Way To The USA.

One Ticket, One Check-In, One Airline All The Way To Over 45 US Cities.

Pan Am has got the USA well covered.

So instead of crossing the Atlantic with one airline, then changing to another to fly inside the States, Pan Am gives you one airline service all the way. And you only need to check-in once.

Only Pan Am Has India And America Under One Roof.

Catching a connection at JFK, New York? Arrive on another carrier and if you haven't got to switch airlines, you'll certainly have to switch buildings.

Not so with Pan Am. For Pan Am has the only terminal, Worldport,® with all international and internal US flights under one roof.

So instead of struggling with your bags halfway round the airport, your connection is just a few steps away.

Only Pan Am Has Its Own Free Helicopter Service.

Also at the Pan Am Worldport is another bonus for First and Clipper® Class travellers. A free helicopter service that takes about 8 minutes to Manhattan, 15 to Newark.

Pan Am Has All 747 Service To The USA.

International travel on Pan Am doesn't just mean you avoid a lot of hassle, you get a lot more comfort too.

For every flight from Delhi and Bombay is a luxurious 747 with three classes to choose from.

So fly the easy way to the States, fly Pan Am. From Delhi each Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday, and from Bombay on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday.

For information and reservations see your Travel Agent or call Pan Am: New Delhi 345222/345244 or Bombay 2029048.

Pan Am. You Can't Beat The Experience.®

Helicopter service is operated for Pan Am by Omniflight Helicopter Services Inc.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CINEMA

THE FADING GLITTER

The Indian film industry faced its biggest crisis in its long and distinguished history during the last decade. Television, the video boom, changing audience tastes and budgetary factors have all contributed to the fading glitter of Bombay's dream factories. The number of flops now far outnumber the hits and Indian commercial filmmakers found themselves groping in the dark.

SHOLAY'S UNPRECEDENTED POPULARITY SIGNALLED THE ARRIVAL OF MASS CINEMA

"The industry has suddenly aged. Its problem is the geriatric problem of not being able to throw up new dreams."
AMIT KHANNA
film maker

WHEN Amitabh Bachchan flew into Bombay last fortnight for the mahurat of Manmohan Desai's newest fantasia Ganga Jumna Saraswati where he leads the star cast, it was history coming full circle. At a slightly jowly 43, Amitabh looked decidedly less angry and less young than 11 years ago. At that time in Deewar, a character had prophesied about him: "Yeh lambi race ka ghoda hai." That prophecy came true as the tall and lanky actor galloped his way into the Lok Sabha. However, unlike the superstar, the mass cinema industry after a few years of fast canter has now virtually collapsed on the track.

And it all happened as rapidly as if somebody had flicked the fast forward switch on a video player. Ten years ago, Hindi cinema was travelling into its high noon, riding on the electric wave of Sholay and Amitabh Bachchan. But 10 years later, in the flicker of a film frame, the high pulse momentum is gone with the wind.

The old patriarchs of Bandra and Juhu still clutch at straws in the wind, pinning their hopes in

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

a handful of freak successes—a Ram Teri Ganga Maili here and a Mard there—but deep down in their hearts the 3.3 lakh people involved in the country's dream factory are so filled with a sense of futility that they are ready to pack and leave.

It is not only the profitability of the film industry where the rot has set in. The decay is all-pervasive, afflicting economy, aesthetics and the pure fun value of the 850-odd films that the country's 70 studios churn out every year. The show still goes on, but what has indeed ebbed away—besides profits—is the capacity of the silver screen to keep its audience spellbound in the darkened theatre. "Ten years ago," says an aging doyen of the film industry, "people were identifying with Amitabh Bachchan. Now they just watch him."

SILSILA: BOX OFFICE DISASTER

Even now successes alternate with failures and mega-hits still occur. In just four weeks, Desai's latest film Mard has drawn from the market nearly Rs 3.5 crore—its cost price after paying half the collections to the Government in entertainment tax. Raj Kapoor's Ram Teri Ganga Maili, a corny poem of overflowing rivers and overfilled breasts, has pulled more crowds to the theatres than any two of his earlier films in the last 10 years put together.

But for every film that just covered its cost in 1985, eight films have lost the race and in many cases the men involved have gone bankrupt, pawned the last piece of their wives' jewellery, attempted suicide, gone insane or found refuge in the bottle. Says top-flight distributor Gulshan Rai, who used to distribute 15 films every year but has of late shrunk away from business: "There are many more casualties today than 10 years ago. I'd imagine that buying lottery tickets today is a safer investment than making films."

Of the 132 films made in 1983, only 17 managed to recover their cost. In 1975, about half of the Hindi films made money. In 1983, the industry as a whole suffered a net loss of Rs 92.7 crore. This is expected to go up to Rs 120 crore by the time the accounts close this year. But in 1975 the film industry, always a loser on the aggregate, could nevertheless keep down the losses to just Rs 12 crore. Ten years ago, the stars were grooming their children to either face or move the camera. Now septuagenarian movie moghul G.P. Sippy, who produced Sholay, says: "I came to Bombay as a property agent and builder. With me, my sons also joined films. But I'm sure my grandchildren will never be in show business. Never."

"It is not only cash that has dwindled," says film-maker Amit Khanna, "the industry has suddenly aged. Its problem is the geriatric problem of not being able to throw up new dreams." In 1975, besides Amitabh there was a glittering battery of charismatic actors and actresses—Rajesh Khanna, Dharmendra, Manoj Kumar, Dev Anand, and Dilip Kumar who had not yet gone grey, Sharmila Tagore, Hema Malini and Mumtaz. Today, Amitabh alone stands like the lone tree of the Tao legend. In fact, the "heroine" has made an unsung exit from the scene meanwhile, giving way to a galaxy of teeny-weenies who are employed purely as cheesecake.

But there are exceptions to every rule. Shabana Azmi, for one, has been rated by no less than film maker Mrinal Sen as one of the "10-best actresses in the world. And Smita Patil is another who had the rare distinction of a retrospective of her films in Paris. Other than such exceptions, the young bunch of today's top performers is working overtime to slog it to the top and attain that elusive charisma which makes all the difference between an actor and a star. Jackie Shroff never drinks and takes his script to bed. Anil Kapoor works out at the squash courts of Sea Rock Hotel one hour every day, jogs two miles, practises gestures before the mirror whenever alone and tries to study his roles as intently as Shakespeare plotted his plays. Sunny Deol wonders if father Dharmendra had paid as much attention to his job as the youngsters of today do. They all hate what they privately call the "Rajesh Khanna syndrome" of excessive drinking, skylarking and five-star bohemianism. But ironically, despite so much of "It is not enough to cast me. Because once you have put me there, you've raised the expectations of the audience. You must know how to handle me, how to give me a lot of things to do."

AMITABH BACHCHAN
film actor

TOP 10 GROSSERS OF THE DECADE

Sholay
Jai Santoshi Ma
Muqaddar Ka Sikander
Amar Akbar Anthony
Naseeb
Ek Duje Ke Liye
Nikaah
Namak Halal
Mard*
Ram Teri Ganga Maili*

(*based on current earnings)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

effort, nobody in the present generation has achieved that charisma.

It is the charisma of Amitabh, the willowy Allahabad lad who could fight the world single-handed, that had put the mass cinema on a tornado-like growth path in the mid-'70s. It rose to new heights, powered by two failed actors—Salim Khan and Javed Akhtar—who took to writing film scripts and painted the tinsel town literally red with gore and raw violence, interspersed with dialogue straight from the 'chawls'. Enter directors like Prakash Mehra, Ramesh Sippy, Manmohan Desai and Yash Chopra—men of a more go-getting generation, swashbucklers of celluloid who could go to any length to make a scene grab the audiences. Cinema soon became an addiction. Against 5.5 million people watching cinema daily, 10 million people flocked to the theatre in 1976. "It was a miracle, it was like a big bang, the beginning of the universe," says Salim Khan who lives mostly with his memories.

The frenetic years produced some vibrant cinema. When a child-actor in Deewar playing Amitabh as a boy, polished Iftekhar's shoes but refused a coin thrown at him, saying: "Mein joote saaf karta hoon, bheekh nahin mangta hoon, paise utha lo do", it became the talk of every little street urchin in the country. Gabbar Singh's famous line in Sholay—"Arre o Samba"—turned into a folk legend, the sound track of the film alone having sold more than 600,000 copies in discs and cassettes. And in Prakash Mehra's Muqaddar ka Sikander, when Rekha serenaded Amitabh with "Salaam-i-ishq meri jaan zara kabool kar lo", the message wafted across to millions of homes, blown by the new hi-fi revolution gathering momentum in the country.

And while the cash registers were jingling, a bonanza of new technology arrived. Film speed became faster, making shooting easier in insufficient light. The advent of portable halogen lights allowed for more of location shooting, slowly changing the texture of films. Dozens of new dubbing theatres came up in the late '70s, changing the quality of the sound track by making it crisper and noise-free. There was a spurt in the number of colour laboratories. The biggest mandarin of the technology change was L.V.Prasad, the octogenarian movie moghul from Madras who had begun his career as an usher at the old Krishna cinema in Bombay. Prasad set up his 70mm stereophonic sound processing facilities in Madras, the only one in Asia outside Japan and the spectrum of sound changed.

"But," says G.P. Sippy, "the real quantum jump was in budget. We realised the limits to which the market could be flexed." Till the mid-'70s, no distributor would buy the rights of a star-loaded film for a major territory at anything above Rs 10 lakh. Eyebrows were raised when Sippy demanded and got Rs 22 lakh for Sholay but thereafter, the sky became the limit. Desai's latest film Mard, which is in the theatres now, has reportedly sold for Rs 66 lakh per territory.

But the heady wine of success was blended with the slow poison of decay. "We created a Taj Mahal on bamboo stilts" Mehra now cynically admits.

EK DUJE KE LIYE: TREND SETTING SUCCESS

FILM MAKING COSTS

	1975 (in Rs)	1985 (in Rs)
Raw film negatives 1000 feet	2,000	4,000
Superstar cost	15,00,000	60,00,000*
Top director	10,00,000	30,00,000
Top music director	4,00,000	8,00,000
Extra (per day)	22	37
Fight composer	15,000	1,00,000
Dance composer (per song)	3,000	10,000
Cost of one print for a 3-hour movie	25,000	40,000
All-India publicity for an A-class film	12,00,000	30,00,000

*plus share of profits in some cases

"The masses are no idiots sitting in the dark hall, or by staying away they are constantly in communication with men like us. They are telling us all the time their current likes and dislikes."

RAJ KAPOOR
film maker and actor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Many were actually sleepwalking down the sunset boulevard, without thinking the market can be stretched only up to a point and not beyond. And as inflation eroded the profits, the film fraternity realised that they had driven the bandwagon to the edge of the precipice. "It is no longer an industry," remarks Gulshan Rai. "It has become the collective deathwish of a handful of people like us who are intoxicated with the neon lights."

The debacle began in the early '80s when Shaan, an over-budgeted film by Ramesh Sippy—the maker of Sholay—badly bombed at the box-office. It was followed by a series of costly flops: Yash Chopra's Silsila, Kamal Amrohi's Razia Sultan, Mahaan, Inquilab, Mashaal, Pukar—the most disconcerting thing for the industry was that they bombed despite Amitabh being associated with most of them. It was the first sign of an archetype getting subjected to the law of diminishing returns. "It is not enough to cast me," Amitabh confesses now, "because once you have put me there, you've raised the expectations of the audience. You must know how to handle me, how to give me a lot of things to do."

PAAR: NEW LOW-COST CINEMA

That meant money, and with inflation and entertainment tax taking their toll the industry wasn't exactly flush with it. In 1983, out of a total collection of Rs 984 crore from ticket sales the state governments claimed Rs 497 crore in taxes and not content with it, the Centre claimed another Rs 8.5 crore as excise and other duties on prints. Then theatre owners took away 65 per cent of the rest, leaving just about Rs 170 crore for the entire show business. "It is like hundreds of hungry vultures scrambling for one piece of dry bone," says Prakash Mehra who, sometime back thought of making a film to be called Sarkari Dakoo.

The small screen revolution too has also taken its toll. Of the estimated half a million VCR and VCP sets in the country, claims Amit Khanna, at least one lakh are in commercial use, spewing out mostly pirated prints of the popular films in hotel rooms, illegal parlours and video coaches. The video boom has already killed the overseas territory which in 1975 accounted for 20 per cent of a successful film's total business. The Producers' Guild assesses loss because of video and television boom at 30 per cent. Rising cost calls for rising revenue but that has not happened with films. After paying the entertainment tax and an inexplicable one per cent levy of gross takings for showing the obligatory films division news round-up, the revenue from the same seat has risen by 10 to 15 per cent only.

And, rupee to rupee, both filmmaking and exhibition have lost viability. Sholay cost over Rs 3 crore in 1975. A film with the same production values now will cost no less than Rs 10 crore. In the first 18 months of its run, Sholay netted around Rs 12 crore. Today the extent of business of a Sholay alone can be no more than the same amount, because the video invasion has chipped away a film's repeat value. "The cinema of great scale does not make sense any more," says Ramesh Sippy.

There have still been low-cost wonders. Like Govind Nihalani's Ardh Satya, Mahesh Bhatt's Saraansh, and Goutam Ghose's Paar—targeted narrowly to the art-conscious upper middleclass urban audiences who constitute the thin icing on India's social cake. But unfortunately their appeal has never gone beyond the narrow segment to which they are addressed. Satyajit Ray's Shatranj Ke Khilari ran for months together in London and New York but in Aligarh, not very far from the film's milieu, the audiences were so enraged by the seemingly endless maneouvres with the chess pieces that they smashed up theatre furniture.

"The masses are no idiots" says Raj Kapoor, flushed with his latest success, "sitting in the dark hall, or by staying away they are constantly in communication with men like us. They are telling us all the time their current likes and dislikes." It is true that for many years they had lapped up the fantasy of protest, exemplified by Amitabh. But also liked in between a film like Ek Duje Ke Liye, a tale of passion and sensuality in which Kamalahasan gave a resounding performance. Now they are flocking to Ram Teri (expected business in 18 months Rs 7.5 crore) and Mard (Rs 10 crore) neither of which uses the protest format strongly.

Raj Kapoor says that "brutalising" cinema is born in a society "that is gripped by a fear of impotence" but he forcefully argues that "Ramboism" creates its own backlash too, forcing men into looking for objects that they can love. He mentions Spielberg's E.T. and his latest Back to the Future. Like Raj Kapoor, there are many in the show business keeping their antennae alert, trying to capture the fleeting obsessions of the faceless masses. In 1975 they found the answer. Today they are groping in the dark.

—SUMIT MITRA

"There are many more casualties today than 10 years ago. I'd imagine that buying lottery tickets today is a safer investment than making films."
GULSHAN RAI film distributer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HI-TECH

WORKS FOR YOU

YOU GET a range of special papers: cigarette tissue, carbonising tissue, filter paper, laminating paper, Light Weight Printing paper, and the celebrated Gateway Repro Bond, among others. All of them of import-saving international quality.

AND FOR US

And, because we deliver full value satisfaction, WE GET to maintain leadership in speciality papers.

LEADERS IN SPECIALITY PAPERS

TRIBENI TISSUES LIMITED

Tribeni House
2 Lee Road, Calcutta 700 020

A member of the Wiggins Teape Group, UK

C85.87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE
A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India

New India Assurance in cooperation with the Indian Cancer Society offer you a Cancer Insurance Policy to fight the crippling cost of cancer.

How? By becoming a member of the Indian Cancer Society you can apply for this innovative new coverage from New India Assurance.

Cancer is curable if detected early enough. There are hundreds of people now leading normal lives because their cancers were detected and cured in the early stages.

Most people tend to panic if they contract this dreaded disease. And this fear is enhanced also by the high cost of their treatment.

New India Assurance covers you for upto Rs.40,000/-, an amount that is normally needed towards the cost of medical care.

Offering you a whole host of other benefits as well.

Save yourself from financial strain by becoming a member of the Indian Cancer Society.

To be eligible for this policy, you should be free from cancer at the time of applying for membership.

This policy is presently available at Bombay, Madras, Calcutta and Delhi.

Write or call your nearest New India Assurance or Indian Cancer Society office for more details.

When cancer strikes, you need help not consolation.

Indian Cancer Society

Contour Ads-NIA-384A/85R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Yours for years

Apcolite Super Acrylic Emulsion is more than just another premium wall finish. Its 100% acrylic base also ensures those beautiful looks stay beautiful for years. In any weather, on interiors & exteriors.

Choose from a wide range of colourfast, washable shades. Muted pastels, deep directs and the whitest white. Computer matched to perfection.

Give your walls the rich treatment they deserve. With Apcolite Super Acrylic Emulsion.

Apcolite

The luxurious look that lasts. For years.

Leadership through excellence asian paints

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MORE MILEAGE. From the COMPUTER created car tyres

Modistone
COMPUMILER RANGE

Modistone Car Tyres — the Modistone Compumiler range — are manufactured on computerised machines. A process that lends the tyres characteristics few tyres have.

Modistone Compumiler range— premium nylon tyres that are just right for this computer age. With safety, comfort, reliability and longlife engineered into every fibre, every component that goes into making the tyres.

Modistone Compumiler range— few car tyres are quite like them because they are literally built by the computer! That's why 2,50,000 people chose Modistone for their cars last year. Proof enough that they're the largest selling car tyres in India.

Modistone
When miles matter

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SPORTS

ON THE RIGHT TRACK

It proved to be a decisive decade for Indian sport, largely thanks to the 1982 Asian Games in New Delhi and the infusion of new stadia, training methods and technology. Since then, Indian sport, with very few exceptions, has been on a gradual upswing and there is now a new confidence and vitality that offers considerable hope for the future.

RAGHU RAI

Not only did the Asiad give India the confidence to stake its claim for the 1992 Olympics, but it also provided Indian sport with the thrust it so desperately required.

A PRANCING elephant called Appu and the geometric shapes of the Jantar Mantar were perhaps the most dominant symbols of Indian sport in the last decade. Appu was the mascot and the Jantar Mantar the logo of the 1982 Asian Games in New Delhi that eventually came to symbolise the dawn of a new era in Indian sport. It was an organisational triumph that overshadowed all else. The Asian Games put India firmly on the international sporting map, with even Juan Antonio Samaranch, president of the International Olympic Committee, hailing it as "a fantastic effort". The building of new state-of-the-art stadia in record time, the installation of high-tech equipment and facilities, the systematic training given to Indian athletes before the Asiad proved decisively that Indian sports administration and management had arrived.

Not only did the Asiad give India the confidence to stake its claim for the 1992 Olympics, but it also provided Indian sportsmen with the thrust they so desperately required. Since the Asiad, Indian sportsmen and particularly sportswomen have shown a spectacular improvement in track and field, even though per capita expenditure on sports remains a dismal 10 paise. Finally, athletics surfaced alongside cricket and tennis as a glamour sport. Sriram Singh, Geeta Zutshi, Suresh Babu, Charles Borromeo, P.T.Usha, M.D.Valsamma, Chand Ram and Shiny Abraham became names as familiar as Kapil Dev, Ravi Shastri, Sunil Gavaskar and Vijay Amritraj. Admits India's aquatic star Anita Sood: "Athletics has only recently become as glamorous as cricket."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But none of them epitomised the changing scene more forcibly than P.T.Usha. Her narrow miss of the Olympic bronze in Los Angeles and her stunning five-golds performance at the Asian meet in Jakarta represented the high point of eight years of determination, dedication and single-mindedness. The decade also saw the birth of a new confidence among Indian athletes. A month before the Asiad, Valsamma had coolly predicted: "All that stands between me and the Gold are ten hurdles," and went on to win the event with effortless ease in a new Asian record. Borromeo also lived up to his pledge of finishing the 800m in less than 1m 47 secs.

The Asiad also ushered in a sea change in the attitude towards training and targets. Shiny Abraham now talks of "workouts" instead of "coaching" and is currently in single-minded pursuit of her avowed goal of becoming "the first Indian woman to run the 800m in under two minutes." With that kind of new attitude, it is hardly surprising that the most significant development in Indian athletics during the last decade has been the overshadowing of male track stars by their female counterparts. In Jakarta, they won seven of the 10 gold medals bagged by India and recent track record analysis has proved conclusively that Indian women athletes have been performing consistently better than the men and are rapidly narrowing the gender gap.

The new emphasis on mental preparation, training and diet, was felt equally keenly in the weightlifting arena with national records being broken no less than 79 times in 1982. Indian weightlifters showed their vast improvement in the Commonwealth Games in May 1985, where they won the team title for the first time.

But despite the new awareness and recognition for athletics and athletes, cricket remained the biggest draw in terms of crowd support and financial reward. One-day cricket, like elsewhere, arrived during the decade and is here to stay along with private sponsorship pioneered by the Wills Limited Overs Championship introduced in 1977. India's supremacy in the one-day game was firmly established during the World Series in England in 1983 and Australia last year with Ravi Shastri earning the biggest bounty in Indian Test history—an Audi car.

The decade, however, belonged to Sunil Gavaskar and Mohammed Azharuddin. Gavaskar surpassed Bradman's record of 29 Test centuries while the young Azharuddin became the first batsman in history to score three consecutive centuries in each of his first three tests. It was also a decade that saw the subtle—and often subversive—introduction of professionalism into the game on the level it has existed in Calcutta

The Asiad ushered in a sea change in attitudes towards training and targets. Shiny Abraham now talks of 'workouts' instead of 'coaching' and pledges to become the first Indian woman to run the 800m in under two minutes.

CHARLES BORROMEO

P.T. USHA

SHINY ABRAHAM

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXIT

All other ways of cleaning your toilet bowl.

ENTER

Harpic in India! "The cleanest way to a totally clean toilet."

Outshines the rest in keeping your toilet totally clean and safe.

Harpic's powerful formula goes much beyond superficial cleaning. It keeps your toilet sparkling clean and safe by killing germs.

Outdates the rest in convenience.

No messy handling of harsh cleaners. So simple to use. Just spray Harpic. After 20 minutes lightly brush and flush. No mess, no fuss!
A clean, clean way to a totally clean toilet.

Outperforms the rest in killing germs.

Harpic's special nozzle helps kill germs lurking even under the rim of the bowl, where other cleaners just cannot reach.

Harpic's special nozzle.

New Harpic
SEAL OF HYGIENE

The international germ-killing formula that outdates the rest.

CLARION C-RCH-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'My new collection is an unusual one. And I'm proud of it!' 'One of the great joys in my life is being able to spend a little time in my library. In the company of the great masters. My collection includes books on Indian miniature painting, cricket, history, Indian classical music... the works! And all my favourite authors are present in this comfortable den of mine.

Some time ago, I put together a new collection. A Suiting one. I happened to see the Gwalior Suiting Range. And I fell in love with it at first sight. I was really impressed with the textures, the fall, the soft feel, the designs and the variety of shades. I heartily endorse this range and recommend it to everyone.

So here they are! Gwalior's Golden Glade Worsted Suiting and Dornfab. You'll adore them. And start a lifelong affair. Like I have. You know something? My wife doesn't mind at all. In fact, she liked the fabrics so much, she's going to get some for herself.'

Gwalior Suiting –
In a class of its own.

Gautam

MAPP-GR-85-90-ENG

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Only when you master the technology of perfection...

can you create colour that outperforms nature

ECtv
SPECTRA SUPER
SPECTRA SUPREME with Remote Control

इकाEC
Electronics Corporation of India Limited
Hyderabad-500 762

ECtv - truly SPECTRAcular !

A & M 85 ECIL 43 1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

football. Cricket stars like Kapil, Gavaskar, Shastri and Sandeep Patil became regular faces in advertising campaigns, endorsing everything from suitings to sportswear and shaving cream, apart from earning remunerative sums for appending their names to newspaper and magazine articles.

The result was that most sports officials and the sportsmen themselves are confused about the sensitive issue of amateurism with the dividing line between amateurism and professionalism becoming increasingly thinner. Cash incentives to sportsmen was disguised under the legal-sounding "scholarship", and job offers like the one made to sprinter Rami Reddy by the Food Corporation of India after his wins in the 100m and 200m at the National Games, or even instant promotions to athletes after a winning performance in the field, is merely thinly disguised professionalism. "Professionalism is the dirtiest word in Indian sports. In spite of that, organisers woo sponsors for money and other help. To accept money from a sponsor and pay the players from that is professionalism," says Jimmy George, former Indian volleyball captain who turned professional after an offer from the United Arab Emirates in 1978.

It was a decade that also saw the subtle introduction of professionalism into sport. Cricket stars like Gavaskar, Kapil, Shastri and Patil started endorsing everything from suitings to shaving cream.

HEADS OR TAILS?

Happily it was 'heads' for India who finished way ahead of the West Indies with a 43-run victory to claim the World Cup. But the fate of the 60 overs world cricket tournament is still a matter of heads or tails. Prudential Insurance have declined to sponsor it in the future. Does this mean the end of the 'World Cup'? Prudential or no Prudential — the one-day tournament is here to stay. India and Pakistan have, among others, volunteered to sponsor the event as reported by The Sunday Observer. 1987 will hopefully see us again defending the title.

The Sunday Observer discusses and debates topical issues of the day — Sunday after Sunday. So you can take

Yet, sponsorship became a growing phenomenon with more and more private companies like Cadbury's and Vazir Sultan joining the ITC in sponsoring sporting events and concepts, including less popular sports like motor rallies and chess. Companies like the Tatas and the JK group have set up exclusive sports foundations and ITC, in 1981, sponsored the $100,000 Tennis Classic which brought such international stars like Ivan Lendl, Vitas Gerulaitis, John Alexander and Wojtek Fibak to Calcutta and last month, Colgate-Palmolive sponsored the National Games in Delhi including the television coverage.

On the chess front, the Sakthi group of companies hosted the Asian Junior Championships and offers prize money for competitions as well as pays part expenses for Tamil Nadu chess stars like Ravi Kumar, Raja Ravisekhar and T.N. Parmeswaran, all three international masters. The new interest and money in chess has led to India having five masters, the other two being Pravin Thipsay from Maharashtra and prospective Grand Master Dibeyandu Barua from West Bengal. Earlier, the only Indian chess master had been Manuel Aaron back in 1961.

Similarly, the recent upsurge of interest in long distance running is mainly because of the makers of Rath Vanaspati, sponsors of the regular Rath

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sports, television and sponsorship form a triangle without which modern sport cannot grow and it has certainly helped in the growth and awareness of sport in India in recent years.

Marathon. And the Sports Authority of India getting into the act with their "Run for Fun" programme. Easily the most outstanding product of the new environment in long distance running is Asha Aggarwal, striding ahead of the rest with two Asian titles under her tiny belt and the promise of becoming a major force in international marathon events.

All this has been a welcome development. Sports, television and sponsorship from a triangle without which modern sport cannot function and grow and it has certainly helped in the growth and awareness of sports in India in recent years. Major international sporting events like Wimbledon and the World Cup football have become regular sponsored fare on Doordarshan and now various sports federations are demanding a share of the profits from Doordarshan for providing vantage location points for their sports coverage.

Despite that, the paradoxes that have dogged Indian sport remained intact. Players of the country's national game, hockey, are still the most neglected in terms of financial rewards and private and govermental aid. True, till last fortnight's win in Malaysia, Indian hockey has gone through a dismal patch since the 1975 World Cup—the 1980 Olympic Gold was of little international consequence because of the boycott. But the neglect of the sport's management and promotion is epitomised by the fact that the Indian Olympic Association (IOA) had to step in to take over control from the Indian Hockey Federation (IHF) thrice in the last decade. The bitter wrangles between the IHF led by Inder Mahajan, and the IOA had a disastrous effect on the game and the players with indiscipline running rampant. Six top Indian players were banned for five years for attacking an umpire during the Asian Championships in Dhaka in 1985. But industrialist and racehorse owner M.A.M. Ramaswamy, now back in the IHF saddle, is confident of recovering lost ground and says he has ambitious plans on the anvil.

Indian sports stars, however, continued to shine brighter as individuals than as a team. Badminton ace Prakash Padukone, nine times National champion, won the Commonwealth title in 1979 and the World Title in 1980 in the All England Championship. But it was in billiards, that India excelled with Michael Ferreira taking the world championship in 1977 and 1981 and Geet Sethi winning it in 1985.

In the final analysis, it has been an encouraging decade for Indian sports with the formation of a separate Sports Ministry and the Sports Authority of India entrusted with the task of talent hunting and setting up training schemes. The new policies and goals are no longer short-term ones as was the case earlier, but aimed at preparing a blueprint for the future. With the National Institute of Sports expanding from its base at Patiala to open regional centres in Calcutta and Bangalore, and two other centres for high altitude training in Himachal Pradesh and Manipur, the prospects for Indian sports look considerably brighter than at any previous time.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

THE NEW-LOOK INDIAN HOCKEY TEAM IN ACTION DURING THE ESANDA TOURNAMENT IN AUSTRALIA

The new policies and goals are no longer short-term ones but aimed at preparing a blueprint for the future.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cushionability.

Rilaxon.
The only mattress that cushions
your weight with comfort.

The feel of softness. Like lying on feather down. That's the promise of Rilaxon. Whatever position you sleep in, Rilaxon cushions the body curves with comfort. All night long. Because it is developed from high resilience fibres, researched for comfort.

RILAXON
cares for your comfort
Coir & Felt Division of
Shree Digvijay Cement Co. Ltd. 14, Netaji Subhas Road, Calcutta-700 001

SDCF/RIL/00/485

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A GREAT INDO-JAPANESE COLLABORATION

SANYO of Japan joins with BPL-INDIA.
In an exclusive Financial and Technical arrangement to create

BPL SANYO

companies in India

to manufacture and market
- Entertainment electronics products
- Office automation products
- Domestic appliances
- Electronic components & accessories
- Consumer durables

In Electronics, the only collaboration of its kind in India. Covering a wide range of Products, Projects & Technologies.

BPL SANYO

BPL/1548

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Hawkins
FUTURA
The space-age pressure cooker

Space-age Safety Features

Futura's new and unique safety and convenience feature is the cool, finger-tip control which provides instant, safe steam release after cooking. While cooking, it regulates pressure with greater efficiency than any other pressure cooker.

The Futura lid is pressure-locked from inside like a modern jetliner door. It cannot be forced open while there is pressure inside.

When needed, the safety valve operates automatically under the handle which deflects steam safely.

Good Value for Rs.500*

Futura is made by Hawkins, a name trusted by Indians for 25 years.

25 traditional Hawkins models are also available at lesser cost.

All are guaranteed by Hawkins. Go for the best according to your requirement.

For the address of dealers near you, write to Hawkins Dept. 323, P.O. Box 6481, Bombay 400 016.

* Maximum recommended retail price excluding all taxes for 5 litre capacity. With separators, Rs. 50 extra. ™ Trade Mark. Patent pending. © 1985 Copyright by Pressure Cookers & Appliances Ltd.

46% faster than microwave cooking

faster than Crowave

unbelievable though it sound, it is true! The kins test kitchen under- a series of comparative ing trials. 19 recipes soups to desserts, inclu- fish, chicken, lamb, beef, rice, pasta and tables, were cooked in al quantities in a mic- ave oven and in a Haw- pressure cooker. In cases, the food was d by an expert panel to re that it was cooked e same proper extent. total average cooking for these 19 recipes microwave oven was inutes per recipe and Hawkins pressure er, 24 minutes recipe.

t believe it? se write for a let showing the l cooking time for of the 19 recipes.

n Way to Tasty Food book given free with Futura contains 119 national and 18 Indian d and tasty recipes. Be ternational gourmet me!

Jewel-grey LON® Finish

ra has a beautiful, -grey Satilon finish n will not tarnish and rder than steel. It is r than stainless steel se it is stick-resistant has 13.7 times better al conductivity.

Greater enience

a has a wide mouth shallow body for easy ng and cleaning. It 6.3 mm heavy base stays flat on your and is ideal for frying ressure cooking.

Hawkins
FUTURA®
The safest, fastest way to tasty food.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kerala

WHEN THE NORTH WIND BLOWS KERALA GLOWS WITH WARMTH

October, November, December... Brrr... The temperature makes cold hearted plunges in Northern India, while KERALA bathes in sunshine and warmth.

Run away from dreary Winter chill and chilblain. Come to KERALA where there is no Winter. And the sky is blue, the Sun a mellow gold, and the beaches inviting.

KERALA lies hugged by the Arabian Sea down her full length. Dimpled with some of the best beaches, lagoons and coves on Earth. Not far from the coastline you have the breathtaking beauty of backwaters.

Kerala breaks the cold spell for you, with a gift of warmth this Winter.

For more details, contact: KERALA TOURIST INFORMATION CENTRE, (Department of Tourism, Kerala), 219, Kanishka Shopping Complex, Ashok Road, New Delhi 110 001 • 28, C in C Road, Madras 600 105 • Park View, Trivandrum 695 033, Tel. 61132 • Kerala Tourism Development Corpn. Ltd., P.B. No. 46, Behind Secretariat, Trivandrum 695 001, Tel. 64261, 64705 or your nearest Govt. of India Tourist Office.

Kerala
Sunny southern state

Topads T. DOT 3985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TELEVISION

THE SPREADING SCREEN

It started with a whimper but by the end of the decade, Indian television had arrived with a bang. The New Delhi Asian Games opened the floodgates for the small screen revolution, introducing new and far reaching horizons in communications and overnight altering priorities for sponsors and advertising agencies. In terms of sheer growth, the television industry had no equal.

AJIT NINAN

With two million sets—including 800,000 colour sets—crossing the shop counters this year, at least four Indian homes are acquiring TV sets every minute of the day.

WHEN the then prime minister Indira Gandhi declared a state of emergency at midnight on June 25, 1975, and went on television the next evening to justify her desperate action, only about five million Indians could have watched her in awed suspense. This year, when Rajiv Gandhi put up a virtuoso performance at the National Press Club in Washington, it showered down live on nearly six million TV sets with 60 million Indians watching and the setting ranging from rural community viewing centres to cozy living-rooms.

Ten years ago, viewers grew weary of watching Mrs Gandhi cutting ribbons and deplaning at airports, with the only respite being provided by the weekly Chitrahaar and the Sunday feature film. Caustic critics nicknamed it "Devidarshan" and sent up slogans like "Tedium is the message." Today, the range is phenomenally greater with the plethora of sponsored programmes—good, bad and indifferent. Indians are now witness to the television star phenomenon, something just not possible five years ago, and Indian children can now track the adventures of their favourite Walt Disney characters in live animation rather than from comic strips.

Ten years ago, TV sets were mere status symbols, to be shown off than to be seen. The

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Good programmes are like a habit-forming drug and we have injected that into society. Now watch the reaction."
V.N. GADGILL
minister of state for Information and Broadcasting presence of a lone TV antenna atop a building turned the neighbours envious. Today, even a slum like Dharavi is crawling with antennae and even colour television has ceased to be an oddity.

The statistics are mind-boggling. From a mere 404 licences issued in 1965 and 4,55,430 in 1975, the number of sets was counted at 5.2 million when the licensing system was abolished early this year. And, with two million sets—including 800,000 colour sets—crossing the shop counters this year, at least four Indian homes are now acquiring TV sets every minute of the day. Even in 1982, just before the Asiad, there were only 16 transmitters beaming programmes to less than 8 per cent of people who could receive it on their sets. Today, 180 transmitters raise their steel torsos across the country, transmitting signals or beaming them via satellite to a potential audience that is 70 per cent of the nations's population. From being a strictly evening ritual, the transmission hours now spill late into the night on weekdays and take up almost the whole of a Sunday. And the electronic deluge that has covered only 50 million Indians so far promises to swamp 300 million of them in another five years when an astounding 30 million sets will go into operation.

Few countries in the world have seen such expensive bouts of television expansion. The Indian television industry's rate of growth is nearly 50 per cent for this year alone. This, over an already impressive base of six million—only two million short of the number of TV sets in Britain. By 1990, India will have drawn close to China with its estimated 35 million sets. "The growth of the television medium in India," says Granada network chairman Sir Denis Forman, "is a stupendous phenomenon and the country has turned into a laboratory for communication experts."

But the real success of Indian television and Doordarshan, the Government authority that has been its midwife as well as possessive mother, lies in having turned the box from a propaganda platform into a major money-spinning entertainment arena. "Good programmes are like a habit-forming drug, and we have injected that into the society. Now watch the reaction," boasts Minister of State for Information and Broadcasting V.N. Gadgil, himself a TV addict. And the 'drug' is coming not in niggardly doses but in torrents, largely because of the involvement of the private sector in making programmes for the box.

YEH JO HAI ZINDAGI: RECORD AUDIENCES

In 1976, the Indian Market Research Bureau (IMRB), a prominent market research organisation, found only three programmes watched regularly by over 70 per cent of the viewers: Chhaya Geet (Bombay's name for Chitrahaar), a melange of clips from singing scenes in popular films; Phool Khile Hain Gulshan Gulshan, a trivial and tacky talk show on film personalities interspersed with film clippings, and of course the weekly Hindi feature film. But last fortnight IMRB published a new television ratings points study (TRPS) which showed even the light sitcom Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi making it to the top of the charts at many places, including Bombay. Meanwhile, the survey shows that the feature film has slid down the ladder to the ninth position in Bombay, eighth in Delhi, and fifth in Madras while Phool Khile barely makes it to the bottom rung and that too only in Calcutta.

"Television sneaked quietly into Indian life as a leisure alternative," says Amit Khanna, a

"The growth of the TV medium in India is a stupendous phenomenon and the country is a laboratory for communication experts."
DENIS FORMAN
chairman, Granada network

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sheer perfection. Worth its weight in gold.

24 Carats

A fan so splendid,
It would outclass all your exquisite possessions.

Only for those who have taste & money.

Created & Perfected by

POLAR

Polar Fan Industries Ltd.
World Trade Centre
Calcutta-700 001.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You never felt this free before!

OBM 9242

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

started to paint a portrait of me but decided the sunrise looked better. And you said he 'had eyes for no one else!'
Would love to write more, but he's honking the bike.
Have to rush now!
Maya

Explorer by ENFIELD

So safe to ride, so easy to handle

Explorer: 50 cc • 3.3 bhp • 3 gears • die-cast wheels • 65 kms per litre • Rubin Red or Strato Silver

CC-0.In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If the eyelashes of the news-reader are clearly visible

it must be Solidaire!

Yes, a claim Solidaire alone can claim. With confidence. Since it has won acclaim from its proud owners. Leading to make more and more people buy Solidaire. For its picture clarity, perfect colour and the right contrast.

And to judge the picture quality, you must do it when the news is being telecast. Because it's live and the news-reader faces the TV camera under proper lighting. It means there's no chance of bad focussing. Now watch the same on different TVs and compare it with Solidaire. On a Solidaire TV you can see every minute detail like the eyelashes of the news-reader. And all in the right, natural tones.

Such picture sharpness in Solidaire is the result of using error-free components from ITT & Preh, West Germany. For instance, components like the LOT, Electronic Tuner, Colour ICs, SMPS etc used in Solidaire are among the most advanced designs in the world.

Solidaire COLOUR
-that seldom fails!

Model Courtesy:
Gitanjali S. Aiyar, Newsreader, Delhi Doordarshan

Insight-DE-241

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The cash registers never stopped ringing. Doordarshan, which had netted only Rs 77 lakh ten years ago, recorded a commercial revenue of Rs 32 crore last year alone.

painstaking chronicler of the industry who himself makes television programmes now. "But when television came, the whole family was sold over to it. You watch as long as you like it. When you don't just flick the button."

But millions of families refused to flick the button when the possibilities of the medium first began to unfold. First came the coverage of the Montreal Olympics in 1976 and then the draw of the live telecast of cricket Test matches. For the first time film producers began talking about "low collection" because of cricket telecasts and started adjusting film release dates accordingly. The five-day match telecasts seemed boring to some but to many others it opened new opportunity for watching pleasure.

TV CRUSADER RAJANI: RAISING SOCIAL AWARENESS

"The live sports coverages were only a precursor, a sign of the times to come," says Harish Khanna, debonair director-general of Doordarshan who was imaginatively chosen by Indira Gandhi in 1984 so that he could apply to Indian television the broadcasting experience acquired by him in the BBC where he had worked. The real lift-off was in end-1982 when the challenge of telecasting the Asiad in New Delhi spawned all the trappings of a modern television society.

Enter colour, shakily at first with the intensity of definition often fluctuating, but more assuredly with time. The number of transmitters went up from 16 prior to the Asiad to 41 during the games. The camera units began moving out of doors, their mobility greatly enhanced by newly-acquired outdoor broadcasting (OB) vans.

Khanna recalls that the "insatiable hunger" for quality programmes was felt as early as 1975 when India decided to try the "slower option" by availing itself for one year only, the facility of satellite hook-up offered by the geostationary American satellite ATS-6. The programme called Satellite Instructional Television Experiment (SITE) was beamed to community sets in six rural clusters. It was an instant success.

Says Gadgil: "The writing on the wall was very clear. Through television we have always wanted to educate people, to entertain them, and to inform. But after the expansion during the Asiad we reached the conclusion that none of the objectives could be fulfilled if the programmes lacked life." But even after attaining a sizeable reach, tedium was the sum total of its message throughout 1983 and most of 1984. Its news broadcast was (and still largely is) a grim litany of ministerial activities and an unending catalogue of ribbons cut and homilies uttered by the political master of the day. Its documentaries, barring a few golden exceptions, reeked of mindless bureaucracy. Reminisces S.S.Gill, who retired as information and broadcasting secretary last fortnight, but not before he had played a pivotal role in changing the face of television in the country: "After the Asiad we began having everything for television except only one thing: soul!"

Two years later Gill was decorated with the Padma Bhushan for his epochal contribution to Indian television. It was during Gill's stewardship of the ministry that the biggest breakthrough came when Doordarshan started accepting privately sponsored programmes. The advertisers were not even curious in the beginning and were happy with a flood of commercial spots, all cluttered before and after the film-based programmes. Thus, when Hum Log began 16 months ago, Gill was camping in Bombay, imploring companies to sponsor it.

However, Hum Log caught the imagination of television viewers and triggered off a tornado of change. Software making companies mushroomed overnight. From virtually no takers in the middle of 1984, there are now 15 contenders on an average for each of the prime-time slots that Doordarshan can offer. From purely a buyer's market, air-time entered the seller's market. "It is the most persuasive, the most cost-effective and the quickest medium," says Mike Khanna, the chief of Hindustan Thomson Associates (HTA), the

"After the Asiad we began having everything for television except only one thing: soul!"
S.S. GILL
Former secretary, Ministry of Information and Broadcasting

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The small screen is big business today, bigger than the Rs 110 crore movie industry."

AMIT KHANNA
film maker

advertising agency which enjoys top billing in the country. "No other medium offers such a high recall value," echoes A.G. Krishnamurthy of Mudra Communications which sponsors Rajani. As late as 1983 Lakme Industries, one of the cosmetic leaders were spending only 25 per cent of their advertising budget on television campaigns. This year they are spending 80 per cent.

But while advertisers were chasing targets of sales—and a maddening assortment of consumer products—an altogether new range of sponsored programmes began unravelling on the box, some good, some not-so-good, but nearly all finding niches in the popular mind. "The small screen is big business today, bigger than the Rs 110 crore movie industry," quips Amit Khanna. But more than business the box began beckoning people to a new horizon of communication.

HUM LOG: THE PATH-BREAKING SERIAL

Ten years ago, it was an extended public address system for politicians. Today, it is a gigantic window through which 50 million Indians peer at the world.

The first and most direct impact of this change was on people's life-styles. The number of products jingling their way through ads saw the growth of an increasingly consumeristic social attitude. Things looked good up there and the new commercial idiom was hard-sell.

At the same time, TV and video dealt the cinema a blow from which it still has to recover. While the family clustered around the idiot box, movie halls began noticing a gradual but alarming drop in collections. The final proof of the film industry having succumbed to the threat of television came when established film makers like Mahesh Bhatt and Govind Nihalani premiered their Janam and Party respectively on television.

But particularly significant was its subtle impact on politics. Rajiv Gandhi realised it from day one, when the lingering last shot of Doordarshan's telecast of Mrs Gandhi's funeral, silhouetting the young and handsome new prime minister against the setting sun, formed an everlasting image. But propaganda was not its only use and thankfully so. A breakthrough of sorts came with Janvaani, an on-screen inquisition of ministers which had a cathartic effect on the audience, offering them a token reassurance that inefficiency would find no place under the new dispensation. The television camera followed the prime minister on his tours of tribal areas and foreign soil, admittedly with much more professional skill than in Mrs Gandhi's time. Television had come of age as the most potent tool for the manipulation of minds.

While the Government tended to handle it politically, flinching from every suggestion of granting it autonomy ("It is irrelevant," said Gadgil) air-time was choc-a-bloc with sponsored programmes—Khandaan, an Indian variant of Dynasty, a serial based on an adaptation of Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice, a private-eye serial called Karamchand, the news-based Newsline, a Sunday quiz show, Darpan—a serial based on short stories in Indian languages—and a host of other serials, besides the highly rated sitcoms, Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi, Rajani and Hum Log.

The private sector was cautiously allowed to nibble at current affairs, hitherto a closed preserve of Doordarshan. And the cash register never stopped ringing. Doordarshan, which had netted only Rs 77 lakh ten years ago, recorded a commercial revenue of Rs 32 crore last year alone. Doordarshan Director-General Harish Khanna forcefully argues that the revenue has grown without any strings attached. "Only 4.8 per cent of TV time is used for commercials," he says. But with the distinct possibility of nearly Rs 50 crore in revenue next year—a quarter of the money to be spent on advertisements for consumer products nation-wide—advertisers do not want to take chances. "As matters stand now," says Mike Khanna, "the agency and the advertisers are kept only on the fringe for sponsored programmes. The producers deal directly with Doordarshan, get concept approval and air time allotted and then shop around for buyers."

The advertisers want more of the "message", much more than what Doordarshan now allows by way of 90 seconds of free time for 25 minutes of sponsored programme. So far Doordarshan has resisted the pressure, but it cannot hold out for long if the gap in programme value between its own product and that implemented by the private sector widens. And to make it possible, Doordarshan has to yank itself out of the Government-job syndrome, paying its staff fair wages and not just government pay scales and raise their level of training and intellect.

But the winds of change are inexorable. Sponsored programmes with their sheer mass appeal have given Doordarshan a competitive edge. And the overwhelming power of the idiot box is being felt like never before. Ten years ago, it was an extended public address system for politicians. Today, it is a gigantic window through which 50 million Indians peer at the world.

—SUMIT MITRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

An extraordinary experience for the men in India Today

A NEW PRODUCT has just been introduced in the Capital. One of the most exclusive personal care products ever made for men.

ARAMUSK. A bath soap that is as uncompromisingly male as a Cuban cigar.

ARAMUSK. A bathing experience that will pleasure your senses. Envelop you in the timeless aroma of musk. Magic that's rarer and costlier than gold.

A Shaw Wallace offering happily in time for India Today's 10th anniversary

Aramusk

BATH SOAP FOR MEN

Now available at select stores in Delhi only

Response

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

nity of our nation as spun on wood

If we grow wood only for fuel, look what we lose

Where would we get wood for the necessities of life ?

For cradles.
Ploughs.
Doors and windows...

After all, nature does provide alternative fuels — but there is no substitute for wood.

So what can we do? The answer is simple.

We can — and must — grow more forests.

And when we do, we must concentrate not only on the number of trees we plant, but also on the species of trees we plant.

In short, we must go in for Mixed Forestry.

Mixed Forestry simply means planting a balanced mix of trees. To meet our undeniably important fuel and fodder needs — as well as our industrial timber needs.

And, to further enhance conservation, we must make the best use of our forest resources.

As plywood does.

Because one unit volume of plywood serves the purpose of three unit volumes of sawn timber — a saving of 200%.

This means in turn that pressure on the demand for sawn wood is reduced — and our forest resources conserved.

All over the world forestry is becoming a priority — let's act before it's too late

OBM 9772 A/1

Duraply

Plywood conserves forests

Sarda Plywood Industries Limited

Issued in the interest of national awareness

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

"Geometric designs have always been there. Right now they are on top."

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

078613

The geometry factor in art, introduced by early Egyptian architects and artisans, has had a g impact on aesthetic concepts of today.

In fashion, the elements of geometry come as a liberating relief from the dominance of floral rns. The geometric line becomes the fashionable stripe, the point and circle, a dot, the square, a k. Add to these the cube, zig-zag, diamond and arc and we have a panoply of shapes, simple ermanent. Since these shapes are fundamental, they allow ground colours to have full play. "Geometric" is the new story line for Garden-Vareli fabrics — trendy, futuristic...in keeping with hage of the modern woman as a liberated one."

Praful A. Shah, Managing Director, Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd.; Chairman, Vareli Group.

Rediffusion/G/3091

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEWSMAKERS

For all the dramatic highs and lows of the last decade, in the end it was the individuals who counted and made it the most newsworthy decade of all. Whatever their chosen field, Indian men and women succeeded in conquering new and uncharted frontiers. Below are pen portraits of the most prominent achievers.

AZMI: PLAIN TALENT

SHABANA AZMI

◆ Achiever of the Decade. Bulbous nose and ungainly pout notwithstanding she now stands at the commanding heights of Indian cinema. Unknown until her debut in Ankur as the Harijan mistress of a nawab, superstar Azmi has won the national award for best actress four times—first for Ankur, then for Arth in 1983, for Khandhar in 1984, and for Paar this year. In addition, Filmfare has heaped honours on her for her sensitive performances in Paar, Arth and Swami. Her private life spilled into the gossip columns after she married already married scriptwriter Javed Akhtar.

JAGJIT AND CHITRA SINGH

◆ Duet of the Decade. It's hard to believe that this dynamic duo of the Indian ghazal scene were unsung voices just 10 years ago. For even though they are still at their versatile best the very mention of their names conjures up the kind of old world nostalgia that it evoked by their haunting number, "Woh baarish ka paani". Before their debut the ghazal was in its death throes. Earlier Begum Akhtar had battled hard to bring ghazals out of the kothas and into the homes of ordinary people. But the art languished in limbo until Jagjit and Chitra breathed a new respectability and vitality into it. Ask any school or college boy who hums "ahista ahista" on his way to the bus stop, without of course understanding a word of it.

JAGJIT-CHITRA: GHAZAL POP

SALMAN RUSHDIE

◆ Child of the Decade. He carved out an unchallenged literary niche for himself in the world of serious contemporary fiction with the publication of his first novel Midnight's Children. The Bombay-born expatriate who now resides in London was showered with international honours including the coveted Booker Prize. The attention came as a surprise to Rushdie who hardly expected a book on the hopes and dreams and disappointments of post-Independence Indians to win awards, leave alone become the best seller that it did. His latest work Shame—a follow-up—has established Rushdie as the leader of the literary pack that includes Raja Rao, R.K. Narayan, Ruth Jhabvala, Anita Desai and Ved Mehta.

RUSHDIE: MIDNIGHT MIRACLE

RAKESH SHARMA

SHARMA: SPACE ODYSSEY

◆ Orbiter of the Decade. Jockey-like in stature, unassuming, almost shy in temperament but with a heart the size of the globe is how friends describe India's first man in space. Cosmonaut Sharma's week-long odyssey aboard the Soviet space laboratory Salyut 7 symbolised

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

dia's own take-off into the enty-first century. Travelling 24 times the speed of sound, pulse rate increasing by 30 ts within seconds after blast- Sharma became the 138th smonaut and India the 14th tion to have a man in space. his passes over india, Sharma mmented: "As we moved from th to north the blue of the an merged with the green of plains and the view turned wn over central India and o a glorious beauty over the caps of the Himalayas. But m here there are no borders. e whole planet is one."

SHYAM BENEGAL

Director of the Decade. Just en the afficionados of the seri- s cinema were becoming con- ced that in the absence of new ectorial talent the celluloid n, as it had risen, would also on Satyajit Ray, a new and dern film maker arrived on horizon. Shyam Benegal, for- r ad executive, burst on to the ge of modern Indian cinema h the release of his film kur—a phenomenal success t also made a star out of na Azmi. Benegal demon- ed with Ankur—and later h Nishant and Manthan that t" films need not be unprofit-

BENEGAL: A NEW VISION

able ventures catering to the selective tastes of coffee house intellectuals but that they can be entertaining and able to rivet the attention of mass audiences.

MOTHER TERESA

◆ Saint of the Decade. God's love won this Polish-born nun the Nobel Peace Prize for 1979 for caring for lepers, the dying and the wretched of the earth of Calcutta. She has become a familiar sight and landmark in her blue-bordered sari followed by her nun brigade on the streets or slums or during a gas tragedy in Bhopal or a massacre in Nellie. Her views on birth control—she condemns modern methods of contraception—has embroiled

RAGHU RAI

MOTHER TERESA: GOD's GIFT

her in mild controversy. But she is living proof that charity doesn't begin at home.

DHIRUBHAI AMBANI

◆ Tycoon of the Decade. Artful manipulation, a fierce doggedness of spirit and determination, and a visceral instinct for the megabuck catapulted Dhirubhai Hirachand Ambani to the top of the third largest but most profitable industrial empire in India. The son of a village schoolteacher, he started the Reliance corporation with Rs 15,000 in borrowed capital. Today the market value of Reliance shares is more than Rs 10,000 crore. Ambani's personal net worth is estimated at a whopping Rs 150 crore. Notwithstanding recent setbacks, Reliance is continuing with a multi-crore diversification plan and is likely to become the first Indian private company to figure among the Fortune 500.

AMBANI: BLUE-CHIP GROWTH

VERGHESE KURIEN

◆ Developer of the Decade. His tenacious travails in the field of cooperative dairy farming are largely responsible for making the automatic milk vending booths a familiar sight to millions of people. Kurien believes staunchly that economic development means the development of people and that the best instrument for this is not government but voluntary organisations. Using the National Dairy Development board as an umbrella Kurien has been able to organise millions of farmers into milk producing cooperatives and launch the white revolution. The crowning glory of his efforts is the 60-acre AMUL complex that has now become the nucleus for India's dairy industry.

KURIEN: THE DAIRY MAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

REKHA

◆ Heartthrob of the Decade. The eyes that launched a thousand sighs. When she sang and danced in Umrao Jaan, every member in the audience seemed to be personally transported into her alluring ambience. While hardly in the same histrionic league as Shabana Azmi or Smita Patil she has displayed a gripping dramatic ability in films like Khubsoorat, Kalyug and Utsav. For the better part of the decade she reigned alongside male counterpart Amitabh Bachchan as the matinee devi of Indian films. And when the two fell head over heels in affair, the Amitabh-Rekha-Jaya Bhaduri triangle created the true-to-life film version—Silsila. She recently anounced—and then recanted—her retirement, surely to public cries of, Dil chees kya hai aap meri jaan leejiye.

REKHA: SULTRY SUCCESS

S. PREMI

PRAKASH PADUKONE

◆ Racket of the Decade. He made shuttlecock smashing look like child's play. He won the National Badminton crown eight years in a row from 1971 to 1978 and then again in 1980. During the Commonwealth games in 1979, as a gangling lad of 23, he won a gold medal. The following year, in 1980, he scooped up the prestigious world title in the All-England Championship. He won the Arjuna award when he was barely a teenager. But his shuttle from victory to victory has gone into a recent slide from which he is still to recover.

CREATIVE EYE

PADUKONE: ACE RACKET

DATTA SAMANT

◆ Striker of the Decade. Make way George Fernandes Datta Samant is here. George the killer of the giants of Maharashtra's industries was always a tough act to follow. Until Samant started wielding his rhetorical prowess. The firebrand polemicist and orator—who gave up a flourishing medical practice and plunged headlong into trade unionism—was able to out-George George. He held Maharashtra's textile mills to ransom for the longest ever period of time—from 1981 to 1983—almost singlehandedly. He organised some 16 lakh workers in various sectors of industry and spearheaded several strikes, big and small, over the decade. After medical practice and personalised trade unionism, he now has a third career—politics as a member of the Lok Sabha.

RAGU

SAMANT: LABOUR PA

RAJNEESH

◆ Scream of the Decade. N amount of primeval scream ing—as the Bhagwan of the la back me first culture had a vocated to his chelas as a meth of overcoming odds—cou keep Rajneesh out of the clut hes of American law. Banish from America and from his as ram in Oregon after havi pleaded guilty to violations U.S. immigration laws, the Gu of the feel-good-about-sex cade returned to India a forlor bitter man, sneezing fitfu from chronic allergies trigger by stints in dusty American prison cells. He left behind orphaned American townsh of mourning disciples and a fl of 93 Rolls Royces which a now on the auction block. concocted prescription of b and hope kept him on the fr pages for most of the deca Now in Kulu the Bhagwan contemplating return to time godhood.

BHAWAN SI

RAJNEESH: ORANGE TRAIL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Computed
1999-2000

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri